

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

Mus 13.11 (29)

THIS BOOK IS FOR USE
WITHIN THE LIBRARY ONLY

DATE DUE

GAYLORD

PRINTED IN U.S.A.

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

mag

VOL. XXIX.

LONDON:
PUBLISHED BY MYERS AND CO.,
22, TAVISTOCK STREET,
COVENT GARDEN.
1851.

Mus 13.1.12*

Harvard College Library
Mar. 15, 1921
Neumann Fellowship fund

HARVARD UNIVERSITY

OCT 9 1961

EDA KUHN LOEB MUSIC LIBRARY

INDEX.

A Belgian Critic in London, 433
 A Chapter for Organ Blowers, 770
 Albert Smith and Mount Blanc, 552
 Alboni, 433, 484, 529, 581
 Alboni's Maria, 481
 American Magazine, 620, 715
 A National Opera, 289, 481, 531, 657, 723, 805
 Anecdote of Joseph II., 633
 A New Comic Opera, 581
 An Unacknowledged Reformer, 130
 A Plea for Operatic Basses, 617
 A Prophet in his own Country, 225
 A Royal Opera, 545
 A Village Oratorio, 675
 A Voice from the East, 133

Baden Baden, 497
 Balfé's Benefit, 481
 Barbieri Nini, 498
 Bath versus Liverpool and London, 114
 Beaupre, Madame, 35
 Benedict, 529
 Bennett, W. S., 65, 148
 Boosey versus Jeffreys, 341
 Bottesini, 259
 British Musicians in 1851, 257
 Buxton versus James, 772

Carlotta Grisi and Loder, 324
 Catherine Hayes, 532, in America 817.
 Cherubini, 644
 Clementi, 597
 Corbani, 580, 690

CONCERTS:—

Aguilar, Mr., 236, 343. Allcroft, Mr., 156.
 Alvars, Madame, 461. Amateur Musical Society, 140, 283. Anderson, Mr., 413. Appollonicon Rooms, 237, 282, 493. Athenæum, 141. Barkloni, Signor A., 447.
 Balfé, 87. Bassano, Miss, and Herr Kuhn,
 411. Beethoven Quartett, 214, 249, 280,
 277, 447. Bennett, (W. S.), Soirées, 132, 235, 190. Bensen, Mr., 412. Billet, Classical, 110, 122, 141, 142, 180, 221, 316, 364, 418. Blagrove, H. and R., 364, 412, 430,
 493, 510, 541. Bodda, F., Matinée, 349.
 Briccialdi, Signor, 492. British School,
 Pentonville, 637. Buckingham Palace, 307,
 437. Busby, Miss, Matinée, 412. Camberwell Athenæum, 766. Chatterton, Mr. F.,
 412. City Amateurs, 381. City of London
 Literary Institution, 765, 797. Cooper, H.

C., 398. Coulon, Madlle., 123, 397. David,
 Mr. Stanislaus, Matinée, 412. Day, Miss, and Mr. J. Day, 411, 461. Dando's Quartett, 50, 231. De Bernier and Verdavainne, 287,
 315. Distin Family, 461, 493. Dolby,
 Miss, and Lindsay Sloper, 397. Dolby,
 Miss, Soirées, 780. Ernst, Herr, 355. Eyles,
 Miss, 125. Ezekiel, M., 173. Female Musicians, 397. Field, Chas., 220. Garcia,
 Madlle., 446. Glee and Madrigal Concert,
 413, 461. Goddard, Miss, 414. Goffrie,
 Madame and Herr, 236. Graumann, Madlle.,
 188. Greenwich Subscription Concert, 316.
 Hayes, Miss C., 332. Holmes, W. H., Matinée, 173. Hennen, Herr, 589. Her Majesty's Theatre, 393, 425. Horsley's David,
 142. Hullah's Monthly, 40, 140, 189, 260,
 413. Jullien, 721, 744, 765, 770. Kauffman,
 Herr, 411. Kiallmark, Soirées, 157, 189,
 221, 397. Leys, Miss, 493. Loder, Miss Kate, 446. London Sacred Harmonic Society, 31, 82, 124, 221, 253, 315, 331, 457, 695, 739, 750. Macfarren, Mr. John, 254.
 Messent, Miss, and Mr. Herbert, 380.
 Muhlenfeld's Soirées, 189, 237. Musical Union, 231, 297, 312, 333, 402, 419. Newton, Mrs. A., 398, 462. Oberthur, Herr, 333. Osborne, Mr. G. A., Matinée, 430.
 Philharmonic, 161, 166, 200, 231, 275. Pitt,
 Miss, 510. Purcell, Miss A., 365. Rea,
 (W.), Soirées, 157, 189. Richards, B., Matinées, 420, 436. Ray, Academy of Music, 186. Ronfield's Soirées, 140. Sacred Harmonic Society—Elijah, 31, 49, 317, 294,
 581; Report, 55; Israel in Egypt, 72; Saul,
 157; Samson, 172, 220; Creation, 381, 398,
 429; Messiah, 461, 554, 556; Summary of Season, 629; Seasons, 706, 786. Schwab,
 Madame, 317. Sloper, Mr. S., 93, 122, 140.
 Stall, Miss, 429. Stocking, Mr., 461.
 Stoffregen, Herr, 412. Stuart, Miss, and
 Mr. Tedder, 365. Szakelley, M., 398, 430.
 Thomas, Mr. J., 460. Thursday Concerts,
 797. Turner, Mr. J., 301. Verdavainne,
 Madame, 381, 460. Wheatley, Miss, 765.
 Werner, Heinrich, 141. Zinggileir, Madlle., 172.

CORRESPONDENCE:—

Dusek, 24. International Copyright, 46,
 77, 309. Albert Smith at Manchester,
 50. English Professors and English
 Composers, 61. Charles Mathews on Methusalem, 61, 93. Death of Lortzing,

 73. Great Exhibition, 76, 364, 679. Sacred Harmonic Society, 77, 810. English Musicians, 78, 283. J. B. Cramer, 93. Home made Music, 106, 119. Reid Commemoration
 Concert, 115, 167. Mayo, mispelled, 119.
 Macready's Benefit, 119. Flute Controversy,
 135, 167, 180, 217. Franz Zellier, 136. A National Opera, 153, 168, 178, 299, 308, 331,
 375, 472, 487, 504, 519, 520, 537, 573, 584,
 695. Die Nachgall, 167. Royal Society of Musicians, 167. Costume and Mise en
 Scene, 181. Military Band of Royal Italian
 Opera, 208. Stage Fashions, 217. Mozart's
 Sonatas, 217. English Compositions, 217.
 "There's a Good Time Coming Boys," 219,
 233. Proportions of a Music Room, 219.
 Andante and Andantino, 233, 666, 696, 728,
 729, 747. The Guitar, 233. Major and Minor Keys, 233. Weber's Preciosa, 232.
 Thalberg's Age, 252, 269, 283. The Gol-itzka, 252, 282, 301. "I canna leave the Highland Hills," 252. Prize Anthems, 270,
 282, 301, 410. Horsley's David, 282.
 L'Enfant Prodiges, 283. Pianoforte Controversy, 290, 306, 323, 340, 600. Jenny
 Lind and English Opera, 308. Mendelssohn's Duets, 309. On the Binary Cadences of the Minor Mode, 363. Haydn and Mozart's Quartetts, 364. Organ Performance at Crystal Palace, 375. Encores at the Opera,
 375. Weippert and Bosio, 411. Alboni,
 457. Amateur Operatics, 473. London
 Sacred Harmonic Society, 504, 520. Handel's
 Sacred Songs, 505. Conservatory of Milan, 538. Worcester Musical Meeting, 574.
 Fidelio, 599, 634. Martha Williams, 599.
 Musical Modesty in India, 600. Mr. Bridge
 Frodsham, 600. Jenny Lind, 611. Teddy O'Toole, 621. Private Property in Literature, 633. Madame Evelina Garcia, 634.
 Mrs. Sigourney, 649. Our Greenwich Reporter, 649. Burney's History of Music, 667, 678, 679, 696, 729, 758, 774. Madame Dulcken, 696. Gregorian Chants, 712, 728,
 746, 793, 809. English Glee and Madrigal
 Union, 713. Brinley Richards and Welsh
 Melodies, 729, 747, 757, 794, 810. Ferdinand Reis's Works, 747, 757. What to Avoid, 747. Where Mr. Wilkins Lives?
 757. Cherubini, 667, 679, 758, 809. Soiled Music, 774. Organist's Manual, 774. The Double Bass, 794. Strauss, 794. Theatre Italien, Paris, 803. Music at Leeds, 809. Harmony and Composition, 810. Albert Kitter and Adolphus Schubert, 811, 822.

Copyright, 274, 421

Cruvelli, 241, 305, 321, 338, 353, 383, 401, 596

Cruvelli and Mozart, 530

Cruvelli's Cherubino, 449

Cruvelli's Elvira, 465

Cruvelli's Linda, 482

Curate of Oddingley versus the Worcester Festival, 584

Duprez, Madlle. Caroline, 198

Edinburgh Musical Chair, 4

English Music in High Places, 162

Ernst, 237

Ernst and Beethoven Quartett Society, 280

EXTRACTED ARTICLES:—

The Sonatas and the Reid Fund, 9. Rise and Progress of Music, by Joseph Catrafo, 51, 66. James Gordon Bennett, English Press, and Haynau, 58. Macready's Retirement, 76. Macready, 84. Edinburgh College Concert, 98. Macready's Farewell, 119. Mdle. Duprez, 217. Alexandre Billet, 248, 396. Cruvelli, 259. Musical Union, 277. Mendelssohn at Limerick, 311. Beethoven Quartett Society, 312. Formes, 327. Cruvelli and Fidelio, 339, 371, 407. 471. Cruvelli's Norma, 372. Ernst, 373. Enfant Prodiges, 387. Catherine Hayes, 388. Molière's Chamber Concerts, 293. Vieuxtemps, 420. Bust of Beethoven, 420. Command Night at Her Majesty's Theatre, Cruvelli's Norma, 425, 471, 493. Rentrée of Alboni, 451. Vivier, 467. Cruvelli in Ernani, 467. Formes, 481. Rachel, 503. Alboni's Figlia, 508, 516. Gounod's Saffo, 517. Cruvelli's Erminia, 524. Her Majesty's Theatre, 524. Romantic in Music, 538. Bettini, 532. Musical Fete at Kirkstall Abbey, 553. Cruvelli's Sonnambula, 619. Forrest at the Broadway, 648. Mrs. Warner, 650. Henri Herz in America, 665, 677, 693, 733, 740, 758. Candidates for Stage, 669. Bexfield's Israel Restored, 684. Music in Convents, 690, 706. Retirement of Mr. Murray, 710. Composers and Publishers, 710. Cruvelli in Paris, 738. Rival Houses Reconciled, 744. Carlyle at Her Majesty's Theatre, 753. Jullien in Labour, 774. Lola Montes and her Pilot, 775. Recent Events in Paris, 788. Baron von B—, 790. Characteristics of Beethoven, 792. Orchestral Society, 793.

Fandango, The, 821

Fidelio, 325, 353, 370, 394, 403, 417, 435, 452, 468, 484, 500, 514, 533, 554, 571, 581

Fidelio and the Chronicle, 561

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE:—

Amsterdam, 298. Angers, 135. Athens, 121. Basle, 749. Baltimore, 11, 183. Boulogne, 618. Bergamo, 617. Berlin, 120, 298, 602, 632, 647, 697, 749. Boston, 102, 183, 459, 749, 820. Carlsruhe, 171, 204. Cassel, 683. Charlestown, 268. Cincinnati, 299. Dusseldorf, 121. Dresden, 618. Erfurt, 684. Frankfurt, 121, 298. Ghent, 44. Hague, 684. Hamburg, 369, 283, 299. Havana, 76, 134, 183, 683. Leipzig, 120, 236, 602. Lille, 11, 26, 298. Lisbon, 121, 298. Lyons, 731. Madrid, 44, 298. Mannheim, 121. Marseilles, 617. Milan, 632. Naples, 298, 618. New York, 7, 23, 44, 75, 101, 182, 251, 268, 346, 647, 663, 681, 697, 717, 731, 775, 795. New Orleans, 202, 219, 268. Paris, 20, 43, 57, 75, 120, 135, 155, 171, 182, 219, 250, 298, 632, 647, 681, 697, 721, 733, 737, 748, 809. Passau, 683. Rome, 121, 183. St. Louis, 250, 268. St. Petersburg, 684, 821. Tour, 120. Turin, 298, 821. Venice, 346. Vicksburg, 268. Vienna, 120, 618, 821. Washington, 268. Weimer, 602. Alexandria, 821.

Geiger, Mdle. and Herr, 532

Geminiani, 709

Golitzza, 242

Gounod, M., 19

Gounod's Sappho, 258

Government School of Design, 649

Grand National Concerts, 1

Great National Exhibition, 17, 658. Proté of Jurors, 659, 725. Prizes, 659. Medals, 673

Gymnastics for Vocalists, 628

Harvey, Rev. Thomas, 46, 61, 106

Hoelzel, 356

Horsley's David, 129, 242

Hugo's Ernani, 645

Impromptu by Jenny Lind, 115

Jansa, Herr, 643

Jenny Lind in America, 386

Jeux d'esprit, 602

Joanna Baillie, 133

Jules Janin, 273, 337

Jullien and the Great Exhibition, 209

Jullien's Bal Masque, 798

Law as to Music and Dancing Licences, 587

Learned in Keys, 65

Literary Treaty between England and France, 773

Lola Montes, 502, 696

London versus Liverpool, 81

Lovers of Music, 818

Lucas versus Beale, 266

Macready and the Great Exhibition, 66

Macready's Retirement, 19

Marcello, 612

Martini, 745

Massol, M., 249

Mendelssohn's Posthumous Works, 417

Military Bands, 194

MISCELLANEA:—

14, 29, 45, 62, 93, 102, 108, 122, 140, 156, 172, 180, 188, 220, 236, 253, 270, 286, 315, 332, 349, 364, 380, 397, 411, 413, 429, 446, 460, 477, 492, 510, 521, 525, 541, 575, 589, 590, 605, 621, 637, 652, 655, 670, 687, 698, 702, 717, 734, 750, 780, 797, 814, 823, 824, 825.

Music in Arabia, 741

Music of the Anglo-Saxon Race, 755

Musical Education in England in the Sixteenth Century, 655

Musical Season of 1851, 369

Nott, Miss Cicely, 785

Opera at Drury Lane, 769

OUR SCRAP BOOK:—

Music and Prophecy, 14. On the Antiquity of Music and Dancing, 14. William Bird, 14. Melody, 29. Instrumentation, 29. Singing, 78. Musical Analysis, 78, 108. Influence of Music on Mind, 78. Music in Ancient Times, 78. Luther on Music, 78. Singers, 108. On the Organ, 125. On the Lyre, 125. Music, 125. Indian Music, 170. Malibran, 174. Musical Sentiment, 174. Benefactions to the Royal Society of Musicians, 174. Ancient Musical Jalousies, 179. Johnson a Beau, 179. Haymarket Theatre in 1749. Vocal Expression, 238. Homage to Haydn, 238. Church Music, 238. Proposed New Opera House, 254. Irish War, 254.

Pianoforte Question, 739

Playing at Sight, 772

POETRY:—

Acrotic, 46. Words for Music, 84, 270, 589. Love's Simile, 106. On the death of Mr. Murray Gartshore, 165. Farewell to Macready, 179. The Debutante, 181. Music, 219. Fidelio and Cruvelli, 407. Song, 589. To Catherine Hayes, 649. The Child's Song, 696. New Poem by Barry Cornwall, 780

Poetry for Music, 705

Prospects for Pianists, 30

Prospects of English Musicians, 193

PROVINCIAL INTELLIGENCE:—

5, 15, 24, 25, 28, 30, 42, 45, 54, 62, 73, 89, 103, 121, 139, 152, 170, 187, 215, 234, 251, 275, 284, 285, 297, 299, 317, 345, 362, 363, 380, 411, 563, 564, 571, 601, 623, 630, 637, 639, 647, 653, 660, 667, 685, 699, 715, 727, 732, 747, 755, 762, 777, 781, 787, 796, 802, 808, 811, 822.

Rachel and Macready, 4

Rachel's Morning Readings, .76

Reichart, 454

Regnier, 373

REVIEWS OF MUSIC:—25, 60, 69, 70, 85, 86,

107, 108, 117, 118, 138, 150, 163, 187, 201, 213, 226, 242, 245, 267, 295, 349, 363, 374, 389, 405, 445, 458, 471, 486, 508, 514, 537, 574, 586, 603, 619, 631, 653, 669, 679, 702, 714, 729, 748, 762, 765, 776, 795, 813, 821.

Richards, Mr. Brinley, 36, 82, 83, 150

Royal Italian Opera Orchestra, 225

Silas, M., 149

Smith in the Squares, 7

Spanish Music, 804

Spontini, 97, 113

Theatrical Prices, 753

The Dead March, a fantasy, 759

The Oaken Crown, 163

THEATRES.

Adelphi.—Tarantula King, 28. Belphegor, 39, 155. Disowned, 206. London Fog, 234. O'Flannagan and the Fairies, 265. Flowers of the Forest, 315. Green Bushes, 331, 492, 570. Good Night Signor Pantaloon, 349, 357. Paul Pry, 441. Road to Ruin, 457. Rory O'Moore, 521. Madame Celeste, 615. Forest Rose, 616. Bloomerism, 636

Covent Garden, Royal Italian Opera.—Programme, 177. Semiramide, 211. Masaniello, 230. Huguenots, 261. Robert le Diable, 262. La Donna del Lago, 292. Lucrezia Borgia, 311, 490. Der Freischutz, 329. Fidelio, 344. Norma, 360. Don Giovanni, 361, 394. Favorite, 378. Prophete, 409. Puritani, 443, 557. Zauberflote, 443, 456. Cenerentola, 455. Elisir d'Amore, 489. La Gazza Ladra, 507. Sappho, 513. Otello, 556. Summary of Season, 566

Drury Lane.—Love Chase, 13. Coriolanus, 26. As You Like it, 26. The Old Love and the New, 37. Cadi's Daughter, 71. Othello, 101. Azael, 115. Macready's Farewell, 131. Morning Call, 184. Queen of Spades, 233. Robbers, 263. Equestrian Troupe, 491, 505, 536, 635. Mr. Bunn's Management, Prospectus, 801

Haymarket.—Stranger, 27. Much Ado about Nothing, 71. King Lear, 88. Good for Nothing, 88. Presented at Court, 89. Don Cesar de Bazan, 154. Wild Oats, 154. The Wife, 154. Othello, 169. Macbeth, 184. Tartuffe, 205. Hamlet, 205. Make the best of it, 205. Lady of Lyons, 233. Arline, 263. Retired from business, 296. Crown Diamonds, 347, 357. The Cadi, 392. Merry Wives of Windsor, 408. Grimshaw, Bagshaw and Bradshaw, 423. Son and Stranger, 439, 462. Hunchback, 492. A Roland for an Oliver, 492. Queen of a Day, 521. Mr. Webster, 570, 551. Grandmother Grizzle, 585. Queen's Secret, 585. Closing Speech, 662. King Charles the Second, 742. Two Bonny-castles, 760. Beggars Opera, 760. Man of Law, 806. Story of May flowers, 807.

Her Majesty's.—Programme, 146, 184. Lucia di Lammermoor, 195. L'Île d'Amour, 197. Gustavus III., 210. Masaniello, 227. Sonnambula, 227, 614. L'Elisir, 260. Lucrezia Borgia, 278, 506, 622. Le Tre Nozze, 292, 310. Don Giovanni, 310. Fidelio, 328, 343, 566. Barbiere, 329, 534, 613. Norma, 358. Carlotta Grisi, 376. Il Prodigio, 376, 392. Figlia del Reggimento, 291, 507. La Prova, 426. Florinda, 496, 441, 535. Spanish Dancers, 441. Paul Jullien, 442. Nozze di Figaro, 442, 533. Les Trois Graces, 442. Ernani, 473. Zerline, 474. Linda, 488. Gazza Ladra, 489, 506. I Quattro Fratelli, 522. Cerito, 555. Anna Bolena, 555. Summary of Season, 577, 593, 609, 625, 641.

Lycera.—Cool as a Cucumber, 206. Game of Speculation, 635.

Marblebone.—The Slave, 28. Hunchback, 54. Stringer, 266. Wife's a Lottery, 380.

Day at an Inn, 492. Sonnambula, 586. Guy Manning, 617. Fra Diavolo, 637.

Olympic.—All that Glitters is not Gold, 38. Sixtus V., 116. That odious Captain Cutter, 136. Charles King, 184. Sir Roger de Coverley, 266. Ladies' Battle, 314. Hearts are Trumps, 408. Devil and Doctor Faustus, 408. Fire Eater, 424. Adrienne Lecouvreur, 441. I've eaten my friend, 585. Caught in his own Trap, 662. Azazel, 663. Lady of Lyons, 711. Merchant of Venice, 743. Romeo and Juliet, 761. Faint Heart never won fair Lady, 807.

Princess's.—Merchant of Venice, 40. Love in a Maze, 154. Pauline, 185. Alhambra, 264. Apartments, 314. Duke's Wager, 356. Town and Country, 616. Merry Wives of Windsor, 761.

Punch's Playhouse.—Shot Tower, 506. A Hopeless Passion, 599. Alderman's Gown, 651. Circumstantial Evidence, 698. Strollers and Stratagems, 743. Counter Attraction, 726.

Sadler's Wells.—Duchess of Malfi, 28. Feudal Times, 101. Werner, 281. Winter's Tale, 492. Timon of Athens, 598, 636. Much ado about Nothing, 698. Love Chase, 730. Three Weeks after Marriage, 743, 823.

St. James's.—French Plays, Programme, 249. Jobin et Nanetta, 281. Bataille de Dames, 281. L'Amour à la Veuglette, 281. Il faut qu'une porte soit ouverte ou fermée, 296. Le Mari la Campagne, 296. Le Roman d'une Heure, 29. Une Chaine, 313. Les Premières Coquetteries, 314. Romeo et Mariette, 330. Embrassons nous Folleville, 330. Une femme qui a jambe de bois, 331. Madame Bertrand, et Mademoiselle Raton, 331. Deux vieux Papillons, 347. Tih à la représentation de Robert le Diable, 347.

Rachel, Phadre, 356. Bajazet, 356. Levasseur's Heure de Recreation, 375, 391. Polyenete, 379. Adrienne Lecouvreur, 379, 491. Les Horaces, 390, 491. Mademoiselle de Belle Isle, 391. Andromaque, 407. Jeanne d'Arc, 407. Marie Stuart, 423. Valeria, 438. La Petite Cousine, 456. Horace et Lydia, 456. Les Horaces, 457. Angelo, 475. Michel Perrin, 505. Le Gamin, 505. Catherine, 505. La fille de l'Avaré, 521, 557. Le Chevalier St. George, 536. Summary of Season, 558. The Bateman Children, 558, 607, 651, 661.

Surrey.—Czarina, 265. Huguenots, 536. Don Giovanni, 599. Linda, 616. Dreaming and Waking, 678. Mountain Sylph, 698. Ernani, 730. Fra Diavolo, 730. Midas, 730. Macbeth, 796. Man of the World, 796, 823.

Theatrical and Operatic Record, 13, 26, 53, 101, 219, 234, 247, 261, 278, 310, 329, 344, 358, 377, 392, 408, 292, 424, 429, 443, 449, 455, 457, 475, 489, 507, 523, 535, 555, 566, 570, 580, 651, 744.

Theatrical Costume, 34.

Theatricals at Windsor Castle, 72.

Verdi and his Exponents, 483.

Verdi and the Morning Chronicle, 466.

Westminster Abbey, 584.

Winter Season, 689.

Wolf, Herr, 374.

Worcester Musical Festival, 465, 545, 561.

Yankee Fair Play, 36.

Zerr, Mad. Anna, 517.

The Musical World.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT NOON.

A RECORD OF MUSIC, THE DRAMA, LITERATURE, FINE ARTS, FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE, &c

Terms of Subscription, per Annum, 16s.; Half year, 8s.; Three Months, 4s.; to be forwarded by Money Order, to the Publishers, Messrs. Myers & Co., 37, King Street, Covent Garden.

No. 1.—VOL. XXVI.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 4, 1851.

PRICE FOURPENCE

NOTICE.

*. The charge for a number of the MUSICAL WORLD will henceforward be 4d. for town and country. Subscriptions, per annum, 16s.; per half-year, 8s.; per quarter, 4s.; delivered GRATIS on the day of publication.

TO TOWN SUBSCRIBERS.

*. The publication of the MUSICAL WORLD having changed hands, the proprietors respectfully solicit that all who desire to subscribe from the present time will have the kindness to notify the same to Messrs. MYERS and Co., 37, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, and to forward their Subscriptions in advance. A notification by letter, or verbal message, will receive immediate attention.

For the convenience of our West-End Subscribers, Advertisers, and Correspondents, Messrs. WESSEL and Co., 229, REGENT STREET, have kindly consented to receive Advertisements, Subscriptions, and Communications for the Editor.

TO COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS.

*. It is respectfully announced that all who wish to continue subscribers to the MUSICAL WORLD from the present time will forward, by post office order, payable at Charing Cross, in favour of MYERS and Co., 37, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, or otherwise as convenient, the amount of subscription for a year, half a year, or a quarter, in advance, in order that the names may be regularly entered on the new list of subscribers. Applications for the MUSICAL WORLD, unaccompanied by the subscription in advance, cannot be attended to.

CHANGE OF OFFICE.

*. The MUSICAL WORLD will henceforth be printed and published at the office of Messrs. MYERS and Co., 37, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, where Subscriptions, Advertisements, and all Communications for the Editor may be sent.

NEW ARRANGEMENTS.

*. Arrangements have been made to produce the MUSICAL WORLD for the future every Saturday morning at 10 o'clock, at which time it will invariably be ready for delivery.

Engagements have been entered into with several well-known writers, in the provinces and on the continent, who have undertaken to supply the MUSICAL WORLD with periodical correspondence on all subjects of musical interest. The services of a gentleman of high standing and ability have also been secured, for the purpose of reviewing such new publications as may be forwarded to the office with that view. This department will be strictly attended to. Original articles, from eminent pens, on general subjects of art, will also appear from time to time.

GRAND NATIONAL CONCERTS.

MR. BALFE's benefit having been abandoned for a performance at Exeter-hall, on the 27th inst., which we presume has no reference to the National Concerts, it becomes our task to offer some recapitulatory observations on the events of the first season of these entertainments, which began with such loud flourishes and terminated with so little eclat. We need only allude to the original prospectus, issued in October, for the purpose of calling attention to the fact, that the general policy which it advocated, in terms of such unmeasured bombast, has not by any means been carried out, while, in respect to details, many of the most important items have been unfulfilled. Instead of something unparalleled in its kind, there has been neither more nor less than a series of ordinary concerts, some good, some bad, and the greater number indifferent. That the management has been seriously defective is clearly shewn by the result. More varied and efficient materials have rarely been at the disposal of a body of concert directors, yet more signal failure—we need not mince the word—was never recorded. The Grand National Concerts have not adhered to the letter and spirit of their nomenclature. They have proved neither "grand" nor "national," if grand and national be, as we suppose, terms easily convertible into meaning. The performances of the Sacred Harmonic Society, and those of the Philharmonic, are entitled to the appellation of "grand," because the music performed is exclusively of the highest order, both in regard to choice and execution. With the National Concerts, however, this has not been the case. The large admixture of trifling and meretricious compositions with the works of the great masters, and the negligent style in which the latter were frequently produced, rendered the application of the term "grand" a plain absurdity; while, on the other hand, the inconsistent nature of the selections equally at nought the secondary title of "national." The strict sense of the word "national," indeed, which in England must have relation to native compositions and native performers, has been, with rare exceptions, altogether disregarded. Mr. Jullien himself, with quite as much reason, might have styled his entertainments "National Concerts." The Grand National Concerts have failed, moreover, to embody any definite object whatever. To the lovers of really fine music, and to those who merely seek a desultory relaxation in quadrilles and polkas, they were equally unsatisfactory. Appealing directly as little to one class of auditors as to the other, they pleased neither, and ultimately excluded both. In spite of the pompous style of the original prospectus, so curiously contrasted with its appeal to the "gents," in certain paragraphs relating to the "music de danse," it was worded so as to pledge the "executive committee, managers, and directors" to a wholly different sort of entertainment from that which they presented to the public; but the entire abandonment, at the first concert, of the principles disclosed, and the subsequent coquetting between two schools of art which are utterly irreconcilable, soon proved that the prospectus was nothing better than a preliminary puff—in vulgar parlance, a catchpenny.

Of the three serenatas, by Macfarren, Howard Glover, and Edward Loder, which, however we may differ from the wisdom of the original notion of presenting musical dramas in a concert-room, were anticipated with interest, as English compositions of length and pretensions, only the first was produced. Mr. Loder's Island of Calypso has been continually in the bills—now styled a "serenata," now "a musical romance," now a "masque"—and as continually withdrawn, until the concerts have terminated without a note of it being heard. Yet we have good reason for knowing that Mr. Loder's was the first work ordered by the committee and managers, and the first completed—that the score was engraved, and the orchestral and vocal parts nearly copied, a month ago. When we state, which we can upon authority, that the original cause of this delay was a dispute between the committee and the publisher who had purchased the copyright of Mr. Loder, as to which should pay for the copying of the parts, we have said enough, if we say no more, to show that some grievous want of system prevailed in the direction of the Grand National Concerts, which would have accounted for a more complete fiasco even than that we have recorded. Shortly after the production of the Sleeper Awakened, Mr. Howard Glover was said to have withdrawn his serenata; but it subsequently appeared that it never was composed. In its place, however, an overture (to Lord Byron's Man- fred), and a series of vocal pieces from various sources, scarcely any of which had connection with the story, were presented, under the title of "Mr. Howard Glover's grand selection from Hero and Leander," which led the public to suppose they were hearing portions of the new serenata, and the press to condole with the composer on the curtailment and mutilation of his work. Was this fair to the public, just to the press, kind to a young composer? Was it worthy the "executive committee, managers, and directors," of a "great national requirement?" Among the "principal composers," continually announced as attached to the Grand National Concerts, were M.M. Hector Berlioz, and Felicien David, neither of whom appeared, and not a fragment of whose works was brought forward. Among the executants, two highly distinguished artists were announced in every advertisement, almost up to the last few weeks of the concerts—Mr. Thalberg and Signor Sivori. The subscribers and the public, however, never had the advantage of hearing either of them. These were grave omissions, since they tended to compromise the names of eminent musicians, who have been noted for keeping faith with the public. We do not, for one instant, doubt that the committee had been in treaty with them, and indeed we have been credibly informed that Captain Harry Lee Carter, a gentleman to whose untiring zeal, active business habits, and conciliating manners the Grand National Concerts were seriously indebted, had secured their assistance, as he considered, on sure grounds; our only reason for noticing their absence was to strengthen our position with a weighty argument, and enable us to re-insist that there must have been some grievous want of system in the management of the concerts, to render such disappointments possible.

There is no palpable reason why the directors of the National Concerts should not, if they felt so inclined, have set up an opposition to Jullien's concerts. In a free country like England, fetters upon lawful speculation are not tolerated; and M. Jullien is no more exempt from the chance of rivalry than Mr. Lumley, or any other speculator in public amusements. But we object to what was simply another promenade concert, decked out in advance with such gaudy colours, heralded with such profuse eloquence, as to suggest the idea, that at least something better than the Philharmonic, Royal Italian Opera, and Sacred Harmonic Society, tria juncta in uno, and about a fourth part as cheap, was about to be instituted. That the Grand National Concerts were in opposition to Jullien, it is scarcely necessary to insist; a retrospective glance at the programmes of the season, at the daily and weekly announcements of the press, at the "Quadrille des Nations," and the "Crystal Palace," at the three military bands, and twenty other such matters, is enough to show it. These were all very well in their way, but they were not "great national requirements," and should not have been called so. As they turned out, they were great mistakes, and nothing more. All imaginable reasons have been assigned, by those connected with the Grand National Concerts, to account for their failure, and, among others, it was attributed to the unfavourable criticisms of the press. This was indeed but a poor plea for a feeble cause. No public amusement has for many years received more constant and serious attention; anticipations had been raised that even the vapid magniloquence of the prospectus was unable to dispel; and had the speculation been efficiently carried out, the criticisms of the press would have been as decidedly favourable as they have been indulgently remonstrative. For our own part, we are by no means shaken in our opinion, that first-rate concerts, on a grand scale, in a large arena, and at a moderate charge of admission, would be certain to succeed. The disasters of the Grand National Concerts have not shown the contrary, since they have not fairly tried the question. Of one thing, however, we feel assured, that in concerts where music is to be the principal attraction, and especially grand orchestral music, there should be no promenade. It demands a patience and endurance, more than human, to stand in an uncomfortable position throughout the performance of a long symphony. We have little doubt that, had the pit been disposed in stalls, and more care bestowed upon the preparatory rehearsals, Mr. Macfarren's Sleeper Awakened, instead of seven nights, would have had a fair chance of running seventy. For a promenade audience, it was at least twice too long. We hope, however, to see the day when one of the symphonies of Beethoven, or Mendelssohn, may be heard well performed, and under no conditions of personal discomfort, for 2s., instead of half-a-guinea. If the Messiah and Elijah can be heard for 3s. at Exeter Hall, we can see nothing extravagant in the hope. The population of London is becoming more musical every year, and something of the sort, ere long, is inevitable. The days of benefit concerts, with a pianoforte for the sole accompaniment, are, happily, going out of fashion. Such insipidities are never long-lived, and as they have done a vast deal of harm to the art and its professors, and very little good to the taste of their supporters, none will regret their total and irrevocable abolishment.

Having frankly animadverted upon the mistakes that characterised the management of the Grand National Concerts, let us not be blind to such good as they have really effected. Spohr's last symphony, The Seasons, a work full of beauties, if not one of its composer's best, has been heard frequently, and by the experience of repeated performances the band and its conductor were gradually becoming masters of all its details. Several of the symphonies of Beethoven have been continually presented, well played on the whole, and fully appreciated by the audience. Without specialising a long list of French and Italian overtures of a light character, the Isles of Fingal, perhaps the finest of Mendelssohn's orchestral works, has been repeatedly executed, until, although an unusually deep and imaginative composition, it became a great favourite with the public. We wish we could say the same of Melusina,—more delicate, refined, and elaborate; but, after being once very ill played, it was abandoned, as impracticable. From the other new instrumental compositions, an overture (MS.) by Mr. Balfe, a symphony by Taubert, and a battle overture by Lindpaintner, may be singled out. Mr. Balfe's overture was well received, and added to his reputation as an orchestral writer. Taubert's symphony, a work of more ambition than inspiration, was carelessly played, the scherzo omitted, and the whole scarcely better than rehearsed. It made no sensation. Lindpaintner's overture, founded on the theme of "God save the Queen," was the noisiest we ever listened to, but displayed no other particular attribute; it was given with such fire, however, and the National Anthem appealed so irresistibly to the loyalty of the audience, that it always received applause. The Stabat Mater of Rossini, and the Walpurgis Nacht of Mendelssohn, though frequently announced in the bills, were never produced.

The list of soloists was strong, and except the two we have mentioned elsewhere (serious exceptions, we admit) there were no disappointments. The "effects" were produced by M. Charles Hallé, in the pianoforte concertos of Beethoven and Mendelssohn, Herr Molique, in several of his own compositions for the violin, Sig. Piatti, on the violoncello, of which he is the most perfect master in Europe, M. Sainton, another violinist of high standing, always a special favourite with the public, M. M. Baumann (bassoon), and Richardson (flute). Among the English performers, Mr. H. C. Cooper, in Mendelssohn's violin concerto, and Miss Goddard, a young and rising pianist, who would have pleased us still more had she adhered less exclusively to the modern "romantic" school, which has neither romance nor poetry in it, also deserve to be distinguished from the crowd. The vocalists were not so strong, except in the instances of Mdlle. Angri and Mr. Sims Reeves. Mdlle. Angri was one of the chief supports of the concerts. She sang in English and Italian with equal facility and effect, and became an immense favourite with the public. In the Sleeper Awakened her dramatic feeling was of great importance, and her brilliant style of vocalising was frequently shewn to remarkable advantage in the bravura song, "Thou art gone," after the work itself had been laid aside. The 35 singers from the Berlin Chapél Royal, about half the actual force of the choir, drew a great deal of money, and made a decided sensation. Their performances were admired, as unique of their class, but it was complained that their repertoire was confined, and too much of one character. These were the principal features. Of the dance music, the less said the better. M. Bosio made but little effect, and Herr Labitzky did not mend the matter. The last named gentleman has had his day, and no one can deny him a large amount of merit, as a waltz composer in the style of Lanner and Strauss; but M. Bosio appears to have nothing to distinguish him from a hundred other manufacturers of quadrilles, &c. The selections, or pot pourris, were generally successful; the cleverest and the best were those by Signor Negri from the Tempesta, and Mr. Balfe from the Siege of Rochelle. Mr. Balfe had a difficult and laborious post, and filled it with unremitting zeal and his accustomed talent, in presence of the audience. How far he was answerable for the evidently defective system of rehearsals, we are unable to guess. The band, in the stringed department, was as fine as any we have heard; among the wind instruments, too, there were several first-rate artists; but here, in some points, it might have been certainly improved. The chorus was quite unworthy of an undertaking of such magnitude.

Should the "executive committee, managers, and directors," intend, next year, to resume proceedings at Her Majesty's Theatre, let us sincerely advise them to re-consider their system in toto.

RACHEL AND MACREADY.

AMONG the many and various novelties intended to signalise and give eclat to the forthcoming season, we know none more likely, if carried out, to prove a great event, in the highest acceptation of the term, and more entirely worthy of the occasion, than the bringing together, on the same stage and in the same play, and that a play of Shakspeare, the two most celebrated artists of modern times. At a first glance this desirable object might seem impracticable; but a moment's consideration, we fancy, would be sufficient to set aside all seeming difficulties. Mademoiselle Rachel, it is true, never appeared in an English play, and, doubtless, never contemplated doing so, and, it may be, cannot speak English; nevertheless, Mademoiselle Rachel may personate one of Shakspeare's characters without departing in the least from the spirit of the original, while the very fact of her being a Frenchwoman and unable to talk English, is an advantage to the part, and will add tenfold interest to the assumption. The character we allude to is that of Princess Katharine in Henry the Fifth, which every reader of Shakspeare will remember, is introduced as speaking alternately French and broken English. The part of Katharine is not paramount, but it is important, and, in the high and palmy days of the stage, was a favorite with Mrs. Siddons, whose portrait, in the character, may be seen prefixed to the play of Henry the Fifth, in Bell's edition of Shakspeare. To the grace, delicacy, sparkling vivacity and piquancy of Katharine, no actress who ever lived could render so much justice as Rachel, and we feel thoroughly convinced that among the numberless triumphs of the sublime artist, the personation of Katharine would be reckoned as one of her most finished and beautiful.

The notion of introducing Rachel and Macready to the public in the same play is not chimerical. The only serious obstacle presents itself in the fact that Macready is taking his leave of the stage, and has definitely announced his last performance at the Haymarket Theatre. But, for so special an event, we have no doubt that the great tragedian would preserve a mental reservation, and make an exception in favour of Shakspeare, the more especially as it would afford him an opportunity of exhibiting his transcendent talents in conjunction with those of the most accomplished and gifted actress of all times.

It is hardly necessary to observe, that Henry the Fifth is one of Macready's most striking and admirable performances, and that it is only not more frequently given, because the getting up of the play involves larger means and more copious resources than can be obtained at all times and in every theatre. Shakspeare's play, however, is singularly attractive in representation, and with Rachel, the cast would create an unprecedented effect!

We would strongly recommend Mr. Mitchell to consider this suggestion, for the originality of which we claim to ourselves some credit. Rachel comes to London in July. She will appear, most probably, at Drury Lane, when French plays will be given under Mr. Mitchell's management. The very theatre seems to invite to the performance. Henry the Fifth demands great splendour of scenery, dresses, and appurtenances, and a large stage is absolutely necessary to give the fullest effect to the spectacle. There is not an actor or actress in the kingdom who would not be but too proud to assist in filling up the cast, and every character might be sustained with first-rate ability. Such an event, indeed, might appropriately be termed "The Grand Dramatic Exhibition of 1851."

In conclusion, the placing in such amicable juxtaposition and noble rivalry the two great dramatic intelligences of the countries could not fail to promote still further the good feeling which lately, more than ever, has arisen between France and England.

THE EDINBURGH MUSICAL CHAIR.

We request the attention of our readers to an article, elsewhere quoted from The Scotsman, which will afford them an insight into one of the most notorious abuses (apart from some of our cathedral trusts) that our tardy and impotent Chancery Courts have rendered hitherto irremediable. The spirit of reform, however, is walking abroad, and we can admonish the Scotch professors, lawyers and physicians, that, before long, the mal-administration of one of the largest fund ever bequeathed by an individual for the advancement or benefit of a fine art, will be published and commented on, without reserve, from one end of the United Kingdom to the other. Our readers cannot have forgotten the events of 1844, when one of the most distinguished of living musicians (Mr. Sterndale Bennett) was an unsuccessful candidate for the musical chair of the Edinburgh University, which was voted to an unknown individual, who shortly abandoned it, and subsequently (Mr. Bennett having declined to appear as a candidate a second time) awarded the "legal" gentleman (Mr. Donaldson) who now occupies it. We are much gratified at the manner in which The Scotsman has taken up the matter. Such bold speaking from a leading journal can hardly fail to exercise a beneficial influence. For the present we are satisfied with reproducing the article from its columns; but we shall very shortly resume the subject ourselves, and we advise those who are concerned in the "job" to take counsel before it is too late. The contempt shewn by a body of dry pedants for an act which they want the enthusiasm and the poetry to appreciate, has become a crying insult to the age's progress; and it behoves them to make reparation gracefully of their own free will, unless they hold public opinion as a matter of sheer indifference, in which case they must not be astonished at another coup de "Town Council."

JULLIEN AT MANCHESTER.

(From an occasional correspondent.)

Manchester, Dec. 27.

In case your usual correspondent, for whose ability I have a profound respect, and whose enthusiasm for high art is always the subject of my esteem, should not have transmitted you an account of Jullien's first concert, I forward you a few hurried remarks, which, I trust, may be not less acceptable than those of last year. Jullien's coming is always a grand event for musical Manchester. No one is more popular, no one more highly thought of. Nor is it astonishing, since no one has done more to create and foster a taste for music among the crowd. Not less in the provinces than in the metropolis has his influence been felt, and perhaps in Manchester it has had a stronger influence than in any other city, after London, Dublin, and Edinburgh, the three great capitals of this mighty empire.

The bill of fare announced by "the most favoured of public caterers" was of an order to attract universally. Not only was there Jullien's band, strengthened by some new performers of eminence; not only was there Jetty Treffz, the admired of all admirers, the best "lied-singer," according to the authority of Mendelssohn (not a mean one), in all Germany; but Vivier, the astonishing performer on that difficult instrument the French horn—Vivier, whose fame in England is but the echo of his fame in the other countries of Europe—Vivier, one of the most remarkable artists now living, was added to the list of performers. But this was not all. In a department less purely artistic, though "violently popular," quite a novel attraction was provided—the famous French drummers, under the guidance of their chief, M. Barbier, "Tambour-major," of whom the London papers have spoken in such glowing terms of homage. I need hardly say that such an appeal was irresistible, and that, in spite of the inauspicious weather, the Free Trade Hall—the vastest music-room in Manchester—was attended by a dense and excited multitude.

The programme, chiefly in the popular style, was such a one as might have been expected from M. Jullien—in its way first-rate. True, I should have liked to hear a symphony, or (in the teeth of your anathema) a part of a symphony. By a part I do not exactly mean a single movement, for that we had on two occasions—the andante from Beethoven's No. 2 (in D), and the scherzo in Mendelssohn's No. 3 (A minor). I mean either a first movement entire, or the last three movements. Of this, I am aware, you disapprove, but you will own that to one hurried, like myself, in a provincial town, and, in spite of that, a great enthusiast about orchestral music, the chance of hearing a good symphony, or a part of a good symphony, is sufficiently rare. I am not a subscriber to the Gentlemen's Concerts, and there alone can a symphony be heard in Manchester. Even there, until M. Charles Hallé took the direction, the band was very mediocre, or, at all events, not to be compared with what he has since made it. The arrival of M. Jullien; therefore, whose taste for this elevated kind of music has become notorious, through the medium of his Mendelssohn and Beethoven festivals in London, was, I thought, an excellent opportunity; and my disappointment was great not to hear a complete symphony by one of the famous masters.

To leave the language of complaint, however, let me state that the concert began with a capital performance of Rossini's picturesque and brilliant overture to "Guillaume Tell," in which the various obligato parts for violoncello, oboe, flute, and trumpet, were remarkably well played by Mr. G. Collins, M. Lavigne, Mr. Pratten, and Herr Koenig. After this, Jullien's own characteristic and spirited quadrille, the "Hibernian," (composed in honour of Her Majesty's visit to Ireland) with flageolet variations by M. Collinet, was enlevé by the band, in the most sparkling manner, and Collinet's variation encored. After this, the Manchester audience had to welcome the return of an old favourite—Jetty Treffz—and they did it right handsomely.

Jetty Treffz has lost none of her good looks since she was here last; and what is better, if possible, she has preserved all the beauty and timbre of her remarkably sweet voice; which, moreover, seems to have considerably gained in power, if I be not mistaken. She was enthusiastically received when she made her appearance in the orchestra; and her first song, a charming lied by Mendelssohn, "The first violet," which she gave with exquisite simplicity, was unanimously encored. Nothing could be more touching than the manner in which she gave the minor phrase, on the words "The spring changed to summer," one of the loveliest passages in the song.

After a lively new polka by Koenig, "The Postillion," which had its due effect, another great star came forward. Vivier, the master of the French horn, is already known, and highly esteemed in Manchester. He was received, therefore, with the homage usually paid to well-merited celebrity. His Cantabile is one of the most melodious things ever composed for a solo instrument, and its attractions are by no means diminished by the rich and ingenious manner in which it is harmonised. It created a furor, more especially in the piano passages, over which Vivier has an entire mastery, and in the unexpected modulation which occurs near the middle of the morceau, and surprises as often as it is heard. Vivier was rapturously encored, but could not be persuaded to return. At length an excuse was offered for him, of which I was unable to catch the sense; but the audience, as it appeared, were satisfied with its reasonableness, and the clamor was silenced.

The first part concluded with the "Great Exhibition Quadrille," by Jullien himself, to write you an account of which would be much the same as sending coals to Newcastle. Suffice it that there was not a second opinion on the matter; every one pronounced it the chef d'œuvre of Jullien. A happier choice of national airs, or a more effective distribution and arrangement of them could not be desired. The interest goes on, "Crescendo," until the National Anthem arrives, and here the connoisseurs were much pleased with the humorous bit of counterpoint that accompanies the introduction of the long anticipated tune. The subject of the "March of all Nations to London" was also much commended, for its spirit and character, and its effective application as a ritornella to the alternating themes that represent the coming of the various nations. The solos, played by Lavigne (oboe), Pratten (flute), Collinet (flageolet), in the Spanish "Sapatiedo," and by Herr Sommers (bombardon) in the French air, "Partant pour la Syrie," were severally applauded with the greatest warmth. Of course "God save the Queen" was redemanded with acclamations. We are as loyal in Manchester as you are in London. As for the French drummers, with their Tambour Major, I cannot describe to you the effect they produced. They were generously welcomed, and loudly applauded in whatever they had to do.

The second part began with the grand selection from Robert le Diable, in which the solos for oboe, clarinet, and bassoon; were perfectly rendered by M. Lavigne, Herr Sommers, and Mr. Winterbottom, and applauded immensely. Mr. Winterbottom was never heard here before—at least as a “celebrity”—and his tone and style, in “Robert toi que j’aime,” were equally commended. A valse à deux temps, “The Mandolina,” by Karl Buller, made no particular sensation, but this was amply atoned for by the delicious allegretto vivace from Mendelssohn’s symphony in A minor, which, like the andante from the No. 2 of Beethoven, in the first part, which I forgot to mention, was exceedingly well played by the band, and thoroughly appreciated. Another hit was made by Jetty Treffz, in Linley’s ballad of the “Mountain Daisy,” which was encored by the entire audience. Loud calls, however, for “Trab, trab, trab,” induced the charming singer to substitute that popular ditty, much to the general delight. Jetty was in great favor, and, as usual, won the hearts no less than the ears of her audience. M. Lavigne, in a solo for the oboe, entitled “Souvenir des Montagnes,” in which he introduced a graphic imitation of the French mountaineer’s bagpipe, sustained the reputation he has acquired as first oboe, under Mr. Balfe, at Her Majesty’s Theatre; and Jullien’s dashing “Review Galop” brought the concert to a brilliant termination. Every one remained to the end, and every one was delighted.

Jullien’s reception was according to his deserts—tremendous. Great as his London popularity undoubtedly is, it is not greater, I think, than in Manchester. He goes to Liverpool to-day, and returns again to Manchester to-morrow, for another concert. I trust the weather will improve.

Before concluding, I must transcribe a few extracts from the Manchester Examiner and Times, which appears to have a lively sense of Jullien’s merits; if words may go for anything, the following remarks are sufficiently characteristic and sufficiently true:—

“There may be some of our musical friends who remember the first visit to Manchester of M. Jullien, when he found himself and his clever band of instrumentalists wasting their sweetness on the desert air at the Corn Exchange, to an audience most limited in numbers, and not over liberal in applause. The gentlemen who can find nothing good but in what they pronounce the classical, sneered, and have, to a certain extent, been sneering ever since,—but those who looked deeper into the mysteries of humanity, had faith in the efforts of an intelligent man and a clever musician, felt assured that the light and pleasant character of the music which he presented, with all its apparent simplicity, was fully up to the standard of musical education to which he addressed himself, and that the very tricks to which he occasionally resorted were only a means to an end,—which end, we have reason to believe, he is attaining. Civilization is not advanced by one magician alone,—but springs from a multitude of sources, each and all emanating from individual energy and judgment. M. Jullien is certainly among the number of modern schoolmasters who are abroad in this busy nineteenth century,—‘teaching the young idea how to shoot,’—bringing man more in harmony with man,—raising his taste, and making him a more congenial companion. We do not say that M. Jullien pursues this course exactly as we would pursue it, but he has a large share of good qualities, put forth with an earnestness of purpose and a business tact, which have brought him from an arena of empty benches to the largest audiences in the kingdom.”

The same journal thus eulogises Mr. Winterbottom:—

“A Mr. A. Winterbottom exhibited great talent on the bassoon, an instrument which has only been made a prominent feature in solo playing within a very recent period. His tone is as delicate and resonant as the violoncello, of which instrument it occasionally reminded us. He played the romanza, “Robert toi que j’aime,” from Robert le Diable, with a purity of style that claims the title of the beautiful, and we may venture to say that he has established his position in the opinion of a Manchester public.”

Of M. Lavigne, also, the opinion of the Examiner merits quoting:—

“Monsieur Lavigne was equally successful in his oboe solo, Souvenir des Montagnes, the tone deliciously sweet, and as expressive almost as the violin playing of Ernst—we know no higher compliment that we could pay to M. Lavigne—his execution brilliant and imaginative, and the whole admirably in keeping with the instrument and the piece to which it was devoted. In common phraseology, it was a decided hit.”

To compare M. Lavigne, or indeed anybody, to Ernst is certainly a compliment “of the highest.” About the admirable Vivier the Manchester critic is most eloquent:—

“Then came the inimitable Vivier, with his “magic horn”—one of the most extraordinary instances of persevering effort to attain a mastery over a most impracticable instrument that modern times, with all its musical ingenuity, has accomplished. But it is not mere mechanical difficulty that Vivier has conquered: the beauty of tone, and charm of expression, which he threw into the “cantabile,” were as prominent a feature as the ingenuity and dexterity of his performance. Vivier is a man of genius, and not merely a horn player. He is a wit, and a humorist of the first order; with powers of mimicry, and admirable story-telling, he is a true descendant of “poor Yorick,” and, like him, wont to set the table in a roar. We could tell some strange stories of his practical joking, and of his blowing of soap bubbles, to the no small mystification and annoyance of municipal authorities; but we must hasten on to other business, our limited space forbidding further episode.”

But enough, for the present, of extracting. You will possibly say “too much;” but pray excuse my loquacious minuteness. “A happy new year” to you and your readers.

P. S.—Wednesday, Jan. 2.—Since writing the above, three more concerts have been given—one on Saturday, one on Monday, and one last night. On each occasion the Free Trade Hall was crowded. As there were no remarkable novelties in the programmes I shall not trouble you with further details. I am pleased, however, to send you the following sensible remarks which I have extracted from the Manchester Examiner and Times:—

“M. Jullien, as we remarked in a previous notice, appears to have the peculiar faculty of addressing himself to the tastes and sympathies of the people. He takes care that at least a part of his programme, and that not a slight part, shall be of a nature to be understood and felt by his audience; his melodies are of a national character, or bring with them some agreeable association, and he then ventures to add to their intrinsic value a magic of his own through the means of varied harmony with curious and exciting instrumentation. His latest production is a particular instance, and altogether one of the best efforts of his ingenuity. It improves upon acquaintance,—the best proof that could be offered of its merit. Means of illustration are resorted to which some of our classic friends would consider not amongst the legitimate, but it is a picture well executed, almost a dramatic picture, and he must be dull indeed whose imagination it does not excite, or whose feelings are not roused by the shadowing forth which it presents to us of that coming time from whence so much that is great and good is anticipated. The Exhibition Quadrille, therefore, we must pronounce a decided hit in the popular sense of the term, and no doubt will be heard again and again by thousands, as much delighted as have been the audiences at the Free Trade Hall during the recent performances. The opinion we ventured to propound of the solo players, as well as of the orchestra generally, appears to find popular acknowledgment, if we may judge by the applause and the nightly increasing crowds who have been present. On Monday evening—the third concert of the series—the audience was immense, scarcely less, we should calculate, than between five and six thousand, whilst from first to last the utmost attention was given, and very frequently the most judicious approval expressed. The singing of Jetty Treffz is of a high character, and the solo playing of Vivier, Lavigne, Winterbottom, Jarrett, Pratten, and König, not to be surpassed in any orchestra in the kingdom. With such a band, we can only regret that M. Jullien has not given us one of those rare treats which we have had from him on previous occasions; a night with those lofty spirits, Beethoven and Mendelssohn, would have been duly appreciated by his numerous patrons, whilst strengthening the position we have ventured to assume for him as one of the true educators of the people.”

On the Grand Bal Masqué, which comes off to-night (Thursday), the same paper speaks as below:—

"This fairy scene, so appropriate to the merry, cheerful season which this locality is in the present year celebrating so earnestly, is to come off to-morrow night; a large number of tickets are already taken, and the prospects of success are most promising. Several individuals, we understand—as many as twenty and thirty in a group—are joining together with the intention of forming select parties; by this means avoiding any chance of annoyance from the intrusion of strangers, and securing the opportunity of enjoying a quadrille, or waltz, or polka, as agreeably as in their own drawing room. Many applications having been made to M. Jullien in reference to the requirements of mask or otherwise, we learn that no decided stipulation is made, but that ladies and gentlemen may act quite in accordance with their own taste or feeling, masked or unmasked; but it would be quite as agreeable, we venture to suggest, that the small black mask, half-covering the face, were resorted to where disguise is more particularly desired, not only for general appearance, but for the general comfort of the wearer. Large numbers of very beautiful fancy costumes have already arrived from London, and are on hire in the town. The decorations of the hall will be under the immediate superintendence of Madame Jullien, whose good taste in such matters is universally acknowledged. Music, light, and flowers, are the great leading features on such occasions, and for such purposes; and these we feel quite sure will be arranged, if we may judge from the description we have received, with a nice feeling for the elegant and graceful. A most brilliant affair may be anticipated—one in character with the prosperous condition of all classes in this dense community of industry; and in no point of view can the beneficial evidences of free trade become more transparent, than in the fact of such large masses of people seeking amusement at the Christmas time of 1850. May the year which dawns upon us to-day with such hopeful prospects, leave behind it remembrances as cheerful and happy to all."

With an echo of the wish contained in the last paragraph, I once more bid you "farewell."

SMITH IN THE SQUARES.

The vivacious Albert has imposed his Overland Journey upon the wooden apprehensions of the inhabitants of the north-eastern squares of London. Russell, Brunswick, Bedford, Bloomsbury, Mecklenburgh, Queen, Tavistock, Gordon, Euston, Torrington, and Burton Crescent itself, which is not a square, incontinently emptied themselves of their living freight of retired merchants and comfortable craftsmen into the Store Street Rooms, which could hardly contain them. Listening to Albert, they became, as it were, sponge, and sucked in his funny anecdotes and tripping phrases with thirsty interstices; or, as the mouthy polyp, their lips were widened into one broad and general grin, that, stolid and despotic, only allowed them to close for the entire and more savoury ingurgitation of the feast of good things that flowed from the tongue of the fluent novelist, essayist, burlesquist, poetastist, dramaturgist, humoresquist, and sophist, as manna to the hungry and hail-drops to the droughty. In few, Albert was sublime. In short, Albert was himself, accompanied by Beverley, who was not, as Barnum, "nowhere," but there, upon the platform, giving binocular interpretation to the Smithian wanderings and ventures. For, as Albert travelled much, so dared he much, and suffered much privation. He also saw much, and accomplished much; and, taking notes of more than he achieved and saw, returned, Me Hercle, (which is a Latin conjuration gone into misuse,) safe and sound, with glabritous visage and nimble gait, with all his faculties and functions, not "smothered in surprise," and all his powers of pleasing, which are sundry; whereof, Per Jovem, (another Latin oath grown something musty,) we of the British empire, cockney, provincial, penal, and colonial, have greatly to be thankful.

MUSIC IN NEW YORK.

(From our Correspondent.)

THE Promenade Concerts of Madame Bishop and Mr. Bochsa have succeeded, not less on account of their novelty, than of the spirit with which they are carried on. In spite of the furor created by "Barnum's Lind," to use the language of the posters on the wall, "Bochsa's Bishop," the retort courteous of the antagonist posters, continues to be as popular as ever with the music-loving inhabitants of New York. Nor has the new phenomenon, the dramatic Parodi, with all her rapidly-acquired vogue, at all shaken Madame Bishop's position. And wherefore should it? If Jenny Lind sings à ravir, and if Parodi display no end of intensity on the stage, that surely does not make Madame Bishop sing worse than she did before? On the contrary: if Madame have anything to learn—which, mind, I do not insinuate—and if Jenny Lind and Parodi have any new qualities worth appropriation—which, mind, I fully believe—Madame Bishop, who has as much judgment as cleverness, would, in all probability, like any other sensible and talented artiste, appropriate them in her own manner to her own advantage; and vice versa may be presumed of Jenny Lind and Parodi. But, speculation apart, Madame Bishop is at present, and is likely to remain for a long time to come, in every respect as popular as during her first visit to New York. Her singing could not easily have improved in its own particular style, but her voice, while it retains all its sweetness of quality, seems to me to have gained in force. I have little doubt indeed that her long tour through the States and in the south has been materially beneficial to her general health; since, moreover, her looks are as much improved as her voice. I know from historical records that she must be considerably more, but I can assure you, that when she came on the other night at Tripler Hall to sing her first song, had I been asked to guess her age, I should have said twenty-five, with an intimate conviction in my own mind that I was overstating it.

In respect of the Promenade Concerts, the idea is due to the indefatigable Bochsa, who, by the way, looks thirty years younger than when I last saw him; he directs the orchestra with greater energy than ever; retains that precision and extraordinary quickness of ear for which he has ever been noted, and all that vigour and seeming enthusiasm to which he owes the commanding position he has so long maintained in the musical world of Europe. I speak by the card. The New York Herald, notwithstanding that it is a zealous supporter of all Barnum's speculations, has by no means withdrawn its countenance from its ancient protegée, Madame Bishop, and Mr. Bochsa, has given a powerful stimulus to the Promenade Concerts. In its last article, the Herald advocates the wholesome influence of these entertainments—the first notion of which originally, as I am told, sprang from the pregnant brain of the enormous Jullien, like Pallas from the occiput of Jove—in the following philosophical strain:—

"Since the fair musical lessee of Tripler Hall, Anna Bishop, and her energetic maestro, Bochsa, have given an impulse to these transatlantic and most sociable entertainments, the question has been in the mouths of all who have not yet visited Paris and London—What is a promenade concert? In answer to this a few words from one who has been a looker on in both these cities, may, perhaps, be not without a degree of interest. A promenade concert is a sort of sans facon, musical, merry-making re-union, comprising the pleasures of both concert and ball, though without being so formal as the former, or exacting toilettes of such a recherche order as the latter. The scene which they present is motley and exciting, and fashionables as well as the million, enjoy themselves just as they please, and according as the spirit moves them—some being attracted by the charms of inspiring music, some by the delightful prospect of a dance to the arousing strains of a fine band! while others are there to see and to be seen, or to kill time, and numbers of the haut ton, after a stroll or two through the mazy crowd, retire to choice seats in the upper circles, and levelling their lorgnettes upon the promenaders and dancers beneath, are very apt to wish themselves down again in their midst. Thus it will be seen that the feeling of exclusiveness is by no means incongruous with such a popular assemblage, and may be indulged or thrown off at the pleasure of the wearer. The promenader's etiquette is, to begin to move about the rooms (a most delightful manœuvre in Tripler Hall) from the moment of his entrance, talking to everybody he knows, and admiring every belle he pleases. Silence is not necessary during the performance of any piece, except as a mark of respect to a singer, or instrumental solo. Suddenly the first chord of one of Musard's or Jullien's quadrilles shoots through the merry assemblage like an electric shock, and "place aux dames!" the dancers secure their places, while the less active promenaders arrange themselves round about the seats, or loiter onward as the intoxicating sport goes on. This is what it is truly to enjoy a promenade concert. True, the Londoners themselves could not at first understand it; but look at the success of Jullien now! Why then, should not we, who have a public formed of almost all civilized nations in a mass, go in for something of the same sort?—when it is known that we have Tripler Hall besides, a perfect fairy place in the air, compared with what Jullien or Musard ever dreamed of, as the great foyer of their attractions—which, by the way, include some of the finest vocal artistes in the land; and, in this respect too, do we find Bochsá following their example."

One feature of these concerts seems to be disapproved of by many otherwise very friendly to them; I mean the dancing, which certainly, in my opinion, lowers them as elegant social recreations, and brings them within the category of the Casinos of London, and the Jardins of Paris. Bochsá would do wisely to reconsider this question. Saroni's Musical Times, a journal which exercises considerable influence on art matters in New York, in its notice of a recent concert, discusses the point in a moderate and sensible tone. You may as well insert the whole of the article, which is not long, and will save me the necessity of entering into the particulars of the programme:—

"PROMENADE CONCERTS.—Bochsá is triumphant at last. Tripler Hall, on Thursday last, was crowded by one of the most enthusiastic audiences ever assembled there. Galleries and parquette were filled to overflowing, and it was with difficulty that room could be found for the dancers. We have, from the very first, disapproved of the dancing part. The Americans are not fond of dancing; or, if they are, they do not like to make an exhibition of it. It is more than likely, too, that a class of society, which had better be as far as possible from these concerts, will be induced by it to patronize them, and make the whole enterprise a public nuisance.

"The programme of the evening was well calculated to please a miscellaneous audience. The ballads introduced by Madame Bishop helped no little to give eclat to the affair; in short everything was as it should be. Madame Bishop sang "The Banks of Guadalquivir," and "Home, Sweet Home," two ballads, which were deservedly encored. Novelli, too, met with much applause. The instrumental music consisted of Overtures, Waltzes, Polkas, Quadrilles, Galops, and a battle symphony, arranged for this occasion by the indefatigable Bochsá himself.

"People little know how much Bochsá is doing to diffuse a love and taste for music. Let these concerts be attended by the middle classes, and soon they will be able to appreciate the music of the best masters, while their brethren of the Upper Ten will still be satisfied with Verdi and Donizetti."

I cannot speak very warmly about the orchestra, or, indeed, about American bands in general; but if any man can bring about improvement by the united means of energy and scientific acquirements, that man is surely Bochsá, the first creator of that magnificent army of instrumentalists under the present direction of Mr. Costa at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, whose fame is not confined to Europe, but has travelled to every corner of the globe where music has its votaries.

In my next I shall write more fully on this and other subjects of peculiar interest, since the taste for good music is, I can assure you, rapidly spreading throughout the United States. The hearts and the ears even of the anti-abolitionists—those monstrous anomalies in a social communion which professes freedom for its basis, and brags more loudly of its liberty and privileges than England and all the other nations of the earth put together—are not closed to the influence of sweet sounds. Read, for instance, the following, to which I do not draw your attention as a specimen of poetry—Longfellow and Washington Irving forbid it!—but as one out of endless examples of the kind with which the American periodical press is for ever teeming. It is from the pen of Jonas Peter Phillips, a free citizen of New York, and doubtless, from the tenor of his writings, a boisterous abolitionist. He, indeed, upon whose tongue the grand word "Free" can sit without choking him; he, from whose pen it can drop without flooding the entire foolscap in one huge blot of defacing ink; he who can read it in his daily sheet of information without his eyes being put out by the piercing light of its irresistible truth, can never be an advocate of slavery. No, the sight of an oppressed black—black though he be, a fellow man, with all the godlike attributes of manhood, lacking but education and the unfettered use of his faculties, to ripen them into vigorous maturity, would inspire him with indignation and pity, loathing and sickness of heart. It is whispered, indeed, upon what foundation I am ignorant, that the messenger who delivered the verses below, on the part of Jonas Peter Phillips, free citizen of New York (and doubtless an abolitionist), into the hands of the fair and warm-hearted Swede, was neither more nor less than an emancipated negro. I should wish to believe it.

TO JENNY LIND.

A SALUTATION TO AMERICA.

(From Saroni's "Musical Times.")

"A song bird left her parent nest,
And flew across the deep blue sea,
Until she saw the golden west
Where birds and men alike are free.
She found a generous welcome there
And warbled gaily all day long,
And vocal made the balmy air
With this, the burden of her song:
Hail! to the clime where starry flag
Protects the wanderer and oppress'd,
Hail, to Columbia's fair land,
By FREEDOM and BY VIRTUE BLESS'D.

"Thus from my fatherland I come,
A child of song, to dwell awhile,
In this fair Freedom's happy home,
Where nature's blessings ever smile.
'Twas here my youthful fancy rovd,
And long I sigh'd to gaze upon
The land which early childhood lov'd,
Which gave the world a Washington.
Then let me sing Columbia hail!
Home of the great, the good, and brave,
AND O'ER A FREE UNITED LAND
For ever may thy banner wave!"

By the way, talking of Jenny Lind, her reception at Baltimore appears to have been enthusiastic. The Baltimore American, of Dec. 10, has just reached me, and I have cut out the following short, but highly favourable account of her first concert, which, if you have no other communication on the subject, may serve your purpose.

JENNY LIND'S FIRST CONCERT IN BALTIMORE.—The first concert by Miss Jenny Lind took place in the Front-street Theatre last night, and the enthusiasm with which the fair songstress was greeted, and the eclat which attended the whole affair, must have fully equalled, if not surpassed, the most sanguine expectations. The house, an hour before the commencement of the concert, presented a most brilliant spectacle. In the parquette and first and second tiers every seat was occupied by an audience largely composed of ladies, whose fashionable and becoming attire added much to the elegance and beauty of the scene. The two pieces which preceded the appearance of the gifted cantatrice passed rapidly off, though not without Signor Belletti receiving from the audience the warm applause to which his fine voice and brilliant execution so well entitle him. On Miss Lind's first appearance she was received, as she advanced rapidly and gracefully down the stage, with a perfect storm of applause, almost the entire audience rising from their seats and joining in the welcome. The applause continued for several minutes, during which she bowed repeatedly, and seemed to exert herself to recover from a momentary feeling of timidity and embarrassment—the evidence of which seemed to give a renewed impulse to the enthusiasm of the audience. We have not time at the late hour at which this is necessarily written, to speak of the effect of each of the pieces which she sang. In all, she received from the audience the most rapturous tokens of gratification, whilst in the flute trio, the bird song, and the herdsman's song, the audience seemed entirely carried away by their feelings, and by their continued applause gained the repetition of the two first. The bird song was decidedly the favorite of the evening, and by its wonderful beauty and surpassing execution will certainly justify all that has been said of Miss Lind's extraordinary powers.

Maertzek's Italian Opera is enjoying undiminished prosperity. Parodi's success is unequivocal, and unanimous opinion pronounces Lucrezia Borgia to be her best part. I myself prefer it to her Norma.

On Saturday last Bettini, a tenor from the Royal Italian Opera at Paris, was to have made his debut, but being prevented by indisposition, his place was supplied by Lorini, the ordinary tenor (and a very ordinary tenor he is), who played Gennaro to Parodi's Lucrezia. This is the second time Bettini has disappointed the New York public. A great deal of ill-feeling was occasioned, and the third not-coming might be fatal. This would be a pity.

You will be pleased to hear that an edition of Beethoven's sonatas is in course of publication at Boston, and, to show that classical chamber music is on the advance in the same city, a society has been instituted, under the significant title of the "Mendelssohn Quintet Club." (Why not "Quartet?") On a subject of general interest, that of a National Musical Academy, or Conservatory, Saroni's Musica! Times makes the following cogent observations:—

MUSICAL CONSERVATORIES.—We have fully made up our mind not to lose sight of this important subject. We know that it needs but to be kept before our readers to find at some time or other, an echo in the breast of some energetic and enterprising lover of the art, whose fostering care will call an institution into existence worthy of the art, and of the country.

There is no necessity of having one on as large a scale as the institutions of Europe. An experienced teacher of thorough bass, and one or two of practical instrumentation will be sufficient for a beginning. Nor is it necessary that the number of pupils should be very large to make the establishment of a conservatory a paying speculation. But something ought to be done. Year after year passes along, and we, with all our musical talent, still remain behind the age.

Thus you will perceive that we are anxious to progress in the "divine art" on this side of the Atlantic. And so much for the present.

P.S. I unseal my packet for the purpose of adding the following account from the Baltimore Sun of Dec. 12, of Jenny Lind's second concert in Front-street:—

JENNY LIND'S SECOND CONCERT.—The inimitable Jenny gave her second concert in this city last night, at the Front-street Theatre. The immense building was, as might have been expected, crowded to excess, every seat being occupied. We have never seen the theatre present a more interesting and beautiful appearance, the ladies being scattered everywhere and without bonnets.

We shall not attempt to criticise that which, to an unprofessional ear, would seem to be beyond criticism. Suffice it to say, so far as the orchestral arrangements were concerned, we have never, in Baltimore, heard anything equal to it. It appeared to us to be perfect throughout. Signor Belletti, in the several pieces which he sang, gave most unbounded satisfaction. Messrs. Benedict and Burke, in the piano and violin duett, elicited the greatest applause. Mr. Kyo, in the flute solo, also drew down the applause of the whole house.

But what shall we say of the idol of the night, the unapproachable Jenny! She exceeded, if anything, her first night's performance. She was introduced in Casto Diva, from Norma, and it is enough to say that she sang it. The duett, Per piacer alla signora, of Rossini, between her and Belletti, was so beautifully executed as to call for a repetition. The Aria, from Lucia di Lammermoor, was also encored; but she merely curtsied her acknowledgments.

The Bird Song and the Herdsman's Song were both given with peculiar beauty, and both were encored, though she only sang the Bird Song a second time. The ballad of Home, Sweet Home, was sung only as Jenny Lind can sing it. It was inimitable. We have heard this melody on many occasions, but never before as it ought to be given. It was, of course, encored. There was a degree of soul thrown into it, such as we never before listened to. It was soul itself embodied in song.

Miss Lind, on this occasion, was habited in a pink satin dress, with bertha of the same, the skirt having two broad gossamer lace flounces. Her head-dress was of green, with a twig of green leaves also adorning her bust. She wore on each arm two bracelets, and around her neck was suspended a diamond medallion. The tout ensemble was very neat, and well befitted the pure and expressive beauty of which the idolized songstress is the embodiment.

The extraordinary excitement consequent upon the arrival of Made-moiselle Lind in this city, probably exceeds any feeling of that character which has ever been experienced. Hundreds and thousands of cards, notes, invitations, and presents are being sent to her, and crowds may be seen at almost any time in the vicinity of her apartments, anxious to behold her smiling face. The milliners, dressmakers, and fancy dry goods dealers are doing an immense business, as purchasers of concert tickets supply themselves with the "latest styles," and most fashionable wearing apparel, in order to cut a dash in the great assemblies. During the whole of last evening the various avenues to Front-street Theatre were filled with the most elegant carriages, and the crowds which assembled in front of the building rendered access to the doors possible only through the exertions of a large body of police, who kept the sidewalks clear at times.

And so once more adieu!

THE SENATUS AND THE REID FUND.

(From the "Scotsman.")

THE action of count and reckoning, which the Town Council have raised against the members of the Senatus Academicus of the University, has thrown some light on the manner in which the bequest left by the late General Reid, for the establishment of a Professorship of Music, has been administered. The disclosures made are not so complete as could have been desired, although, we believe, they are a great deal more so than the Senatus either wished or expected. Imperfect as they are, however, they are more than sufficient to show, as has been held by Lord Robertson, that the fund has been intrusted with in a way not warranted by the will of the testator.

The Senatus thought at once to put the Town Council out of court by disputing their title to sue. "We," said they, "have in ourselves a separate status as a minor corporation; and as General Reid has bequeathed the fund to be administered by us in such way and manner as we shall, in our discretion, think most fit and proper, you, the Town Council, have no right of interference or control whatever in regard to it." Lord Robertson, however, has thought otherwise; and while he has admitted the title of the Town Council to the fullest extent, he has decided that the three trustees, under General Reid's will, were not entitled to assign any part of the estate to the Senatus, to be disposed of by them "in promoting the general interest and advantage of the University," until a fund had been "invested and secured for the endowment and maintenance of a Professor of the Theory of Music." This decision, sustained by the Judges of the Inner House, to which the case has, within the last few days, been taken by a reclaiming note, will lead to a thorough investigation with respect to whether the 11,000*l.* or 12,000*l.*, which the Senatus have expended otherwise than upon the chair of music, can form a legitimate charge upon the fund. Some of the members of the Senatus have threatened, we are informed, if defeated in the Inner as they have been in the Outer House, to take the case to the House of Lords. This persistency in litigation, which seems to have been growing on the Senatus for some time, cannot be altogether unconnected with the fact that they have the Reid fund to fall back upon for any expenses so incurred. Law expenses, indeed, have hitherto formed a prominent item in the accounts of the Reid fund; and the justification for them is that they were incurred in promoting the "interest and advantage of the University," and therefore fell quite appropriately under this clause of the General's will. This liberal construction of the will the Town Council dispute; and laying other considerations aside, who can wonder at it, seeing that all the litigation entered into by the Senatus has been for the ostensible purpose of curtailing the rights and privileges of the Council, as patrons of the University. And here it is deserving of remark, that a professor in posse is a very different sort of person from a professor in esse. As the one, he is proud of the notice of the Council, and will even exert all the influence of his friends to secure it; but as the other, he is too dignified for such vulgar acquaintanceship, and has been known, in one case at least—in imitation, we suppose, of Napoleon when expressing his contempt for the English nation—to speak of our municipal authorities as "a parcel of shopkeepers!" and also as a body "of tradesmen and half-educated lawyers." The shopkeepers, however, have hitherto proved themselves to be more than a match for the professors; and we shall be very much surprised if, as regards the Reid fund, to which we intend more particularly to allude, this shall not also turn out to be the result.

General Reid, it appears, died in 1807, after having, by a will dated three years previously, left the bulk of his property, in the funds and other Government securities, to three trustees, who were to see the interest accruing therefrom paid to his daughter, Susannah, the wife of Mr. John Stark Robertson, during the term of her natural life. Failing issue on her part, the whole of the General's property, with the exception of some trifling legacies, was, at her death, to be applied by the trustees in establishing and endowing a Professorship of Music in the University of Edinburgh, where the General states "he had his education; and passed the pleasantest part of his youth."

Some time before his demise, he added a codicil to his will, declaring it to be his wish that the Professor of Music should, every year after his appointment, "cause a concert of music to be performed, on the 13th of February, being my birthday, in which shall be introduced one solo for the German flute, hautboy, or clarinet; also one march and one minuet, with accompaniments by a select band, in order to show the taste of music about the middle of the last century, when they were by me composed, and with a view also to keep my memory in remembrance." The expense of this concert was to be defrayed out of the general fund left by him to the College.

After making provision for the expense of this annual concert, and the salary of the Professor of Music, the remainder of the General's personal estate was to be handed over by the trustees to the Senatus, to be by them disposed of in making additions to the library, or in otherwise promoting the general interest and advantage of the University.

Mrs. Stark Robertson, the daughter of General Reid, died without issue in May, 1838, when the trustees (Mr. George Kinloch, Mr. Edward Majoribanks, and Sir Edmund Antrobus), without making any arrangement whatever for endowing the Professorship of Music, or defraying the expense of the annual concert, went to the Court of Chancery along with the Senatus, and, upon an ex parte statement, obtained leave to hand over the whole of the money to the latter. The sum conveyed to the Senatus amounted to 68,876*l.*; and it appears that the very first act of that body was to convert the Government stock into cash. They allege that they did so "in the view of investing the fund on landed securities in Scotland of the best description;" but it is shrewdly suspected that the more likely reason for adopting this course was the greater freedom which it gave of intramitting with the money. Be this as it may, they state that the sum so invested was 58,000*l.*; and that the total available amount of the fund at present is 60,000*l.*

Their next act was to fix the salary of the Professor of Music; and, as the preliminary step in that process which Lord Robertson has appropriately styled "starving music down to the lowest pitch," they fixed the salary at the minimum amount allowed in the will of General Reid—namely, at 300*l.* per annum. They then went to the Town Council, as patrons of the University, and requested them to sanction the institution of a Chair of Music. In their letter to the Council, the Senatus evince much anxiety that the professorship shall not "degenerate into a mere sinecure;" and they express a hope that it shall "add a new and efficient department of study of a highly interesting description, and calculated greatly to contribute to the cultivation and knowledge of a singularly refined, delightful, and elevating art." Their subsequent conduct has not done much for the realisation of this hope; for the truth is, that ever since it became anything else but a mere sinecure, they have done all that they could to prevent the chair from being conducted with that efficiency and completeness which it was the design of the testator to secure. It has been their desire rather to make the Professor a mere singing-master, than a teacher of the theory of music. The act of the Town Council establishing the chair made it incumbent on the Professor to give a course of lectures "on the phenomena and philosophy of sound, in so far as connected with musical intonation—the laws of harmonics, with their application to the theory of music—the explanation not only of the ordinary rules of thorough bass, but also a clear exposition of methodical composition in double, triple, and quadruple counterpoint; and the practical application of all the principles and doctrines appertaining to the science," &c. This extensive classification of duties was copied into the act by the Town Council from the Professor's own letter; and quite in accordance with this is a report from a committee of the professorial body about the same period. This committee, which consisted of Professors Moir, Cheape, Bell, and Napier, remarks that music "is a science deeply founded on the principles of physical philosophy, and for the illustration and study of which, as become a University, we have reason to believe a curious and rather expensive apparatus will be necessary." With such a distinct perception of what the Professorship of music should be, and with that perception embodied in their own words in the act of the Town Council establishing the chair, we yet, singularly enough, find them in the very first appointment which they make, utterly disregarding that arrangement by which alone they could have any guarantee that the chair would be conducted upon the comprehensive principles which they themselves had laid down. From the commission of Mr. Thompson they excluded the conditions by which it became obligatory upon him to give the course of lectures, above referred to, upon "the phenomena and philosophy of sound" and "the practical application of all the principles and doctrines appertaining to the science," and they, at the same time, limited the designation of the chair simply to that of music. The Town Council, however, firmly resisted this limitation of the object of the chair; and refused to proceed with the induction, until the Senatus had passed an act, declaring that such a form of appointment should not be held as a precedent. and until Mr. Thomson had subscribed a declaration, that he accepted of the Professorship subject to the conditions set forth in the act instituting the chair.

When Professor Donaldson, the present occupant of the Music Chair, entered upon his appointment, he applied to the Town Council to alter and seat his class-room, and to make other repairs absolutely necessary to enable him to open his class; and the Council did so, on the understanding that the expenses thereby incurred, amounting to 251*l.*, formed a proper charge against the Reid fund, and would be paid by the Senatus as soon as a meeting of that body could be conveniently held. The Professors, however, refused to reimburse the Council for this outlay; and this consequently forms one of the conclusions in the action which the Council have raised against the Senatus. Here, then, we find this learned body, with a fund at their disposal, which it is calculated yields them an annual return of about 3000*l.*, so stingy—we were almost going to say so mean—that they will not consent to repay the Town Council the comparatively insignificant sum of £251 which was legitimately expended in promoting the interest of the Music Chair. But this is not all; for the present Professor, although exceedingly anxious to secure such an apparatus as would enable him, in the language of the Professors' own committee, to teach music as "a science deeply founded on the principles of physical philosophy," has only, with great difficulty, obtained the sum of £950 to be applied for this purpose; and this, we believe, is all that has yet been devoted out of the Reid fund for the benefit of the Music Chair, although the Senatus have, since the money came into their possession, given, without hesitation, the following among other grants—namely, £883 to Professor Jamieson for the purposes of his class; £200 for apparatus for the Anatomical Chair; £250 for the Natural Philosophy Chair; £150 for paintings for the Agricultural Museum; and £120 for the Military Surgery Chair. These grants we admit to have been all fairly enough applied under the will, which gives the Professors the right to allocate the fund "in promoting the general interest and advantage of the University, in such way and manner as they shall in their discretion think most fit and proper;" but in so acting they were bound at the same time to see that adequate provision had been made for the endowment of the Music Chair, and having refused to do this, they cannot be said to have faithfully executed their trust.

It is not to such allotments of the fund as the above that the Town Council object; nor do they object to the Senatus in having granted £2844, to extinguish a debt contracted in 1825 by the removal of the library; or a debt of £3130, incurred in 1819, in purchasing the Dufresne Collection for the Museum of Natural History, &c.; or a debt of £883, subsequently contracted by the keeper of the Museum for its preservation and enrichment; but they do object to the Reid fund being applied to the payment of retiring allowances to Professors, one of which allowances amounts to £250, or only £50 short of the entire salary which the Senatus considered it requisite to give to the Professor of Music. We perceive that even some of the members of the Senatus themselves have objected to such an appropriation of the fund; for, when it was proposed in 1842, we find that it was met by a counter-motion from the late Dr. Welsh, and supported by Professors Brunton, Chalmers, Wilson, Henderson, and Sir William Hamilton. It may be also curious to know that when the Senatus consulted Mr. Kendersley, an English barrister, to ascertain if it would be competent to apply the Reid fund in this way, he gave it as his opinion, on the memorial submitted to him, that it would not be illegal so to devote it, although it might lay them open to the imputation, however unjust, of "having been swayed by a motive of personal interest, which it would be right to guard against." The Senatus do not seem, however, to have been very sensitive about the imputation of motives, as we find that a sum of £750 per annum has actually been set apart for retiring allowances. But there are more doubtful applications of the fund than this; and among the rest we may mention the sum of a hundred guineas, voted to defray the expenses of Professor Christison, in proceeding to London to oppose a medical bill in 1842; and the sum of thirty guineas, voted to Principal Lee, to defray his expenses on a similar journey to oppose the Episcopal College in Perthshire.

By far the most objectionable allocation of the fund, however, was a vote of £909 to defray a debt incurred in an action as far back as 1824, to limit the powers of the Town Council, as patrons of the University, in regulating the curriculum. The Senatus state that "they consider it a right and proper exercise of their power, under General Reid's will, to pay this debt out of the fund; which, though not paid over to them when the action was going on, had been conveyed to them at that time under the burden of a life rent." This is certainly a very amusing way of disposing of the objection to the Reid fund being squandered in defraying the expenses incurred in a most untenable and preposterous action with the Town Council—an action which was thus alluded to by Lord Glenlee, in giving judgment on it in 1829:—

"It is notorious that formerly the Universities of Europe assumed great and sometimes dangerous powers, and have occasionally given rise to much turbulence, under pretence of their privileges. It is not likely, perhaps, that this should again happen; but I do not see any good reason for indulging the defenders in the fancy that they have now taken to vindicate their independence."

This, though certainly severe enough, was perhaps surpassed in that respect by what fell on the same occasion from Lord Allo-way:—

"I must agree with the opinion expressed by Lord Glenlee, that men of learning have not always been the best judges for directing the course of University study. In the histories of the Universities of Europe, I find that, at different periods, they have been the greatest literary tyrants in the world."

There are other items for law expenses; but we have not space to refer to them. We have also not left ourselves room to allude to the amount that has been granted out of the fund for the Reid concert; but for the information of our readers we may mention, that the amount applied, at one time, for that purpose was £140, and it is now said to be increased to £200.

Foreign Intelligence.

LILLE.—The great attraction at the Opera here, for some weeks past, has been Mdle. Charton, one of the best artistes of French comic opera. This charming lady, who is not merely an admirable singer, but an excellent actress, has been playing most of those parts in which she has so highly distinguished herself in Brussels, Paris, and London. She has entirely won the hearts of the public of Lille, who have attended her performances in great numbers, and have feted her assiduously. The operas in which Mdle. Charton has produced the greatest sensation—if preferences may be said to exist where all is so good, are the Domino Noir, the Diamans de la Couronne, and the Caid. The composer of the last mentioned opera, (one of the liveliest in the modern French repertoire) M. Ambroise Thomas, has been on a visit here, and expressed himself quite enchanted with Mdle. Charton's representation of the heroine in his new opera, Le Songe d'une nuit d'été. The Journal de Lille, our first authority in musical matters, writes as follows, à propos of the benefit of Mdle. Charton, which took place on Thursday:—

"On Thursday, for the benefit of Mdle. Charton, the first performance of Ambroise Thomas's last opera, Le Songe d'une nuit d'été, took place. This will turn out, we predict, a brilliant success, in which every one concerned will have a share. The beneficiaire, Mdle. Charton, on her appearance before the footlights, was saluted with a triple round of applause, and covered with bouquets. Our great cantatrice acted and sang with the utmost perfection all the striking points of the part of Elizabeth, and excited immense enthusiasm. It was impossible to express the various nuances of the part allotted to her with more skill and effect than did Mdle. Charton. It seemed as though the music and the piece had been written purposely for her. Intelligent in the highest degree, the eminent artiste thoroughly appreciated the thoughts of the composer and author."

This high praise, I can assure you, was richly deserved Mdle. Charton remains at Lille until the end of the month (January), after which she doubtless goes to London, as Mr. Mitchell's prima donna, since I hear the indefatigable and much respected impresario is now in Paris, making preparations for next season—the eagerly anticipated 1851, when the whole world is to meet at the Great Exhibition of All Nations.—(From our correspondent.)

BALTIMORE.—JENNY LIND.—We must speak of this matchless songstress, and generous, high-souled woman, under a sense of the impossibility of saying anything which would be accepted by one who has heard and felt her singing and her presence, as a fit expression of the emotions of delight he has experienced. Critical remarks upon quality of voice, execution, school, we should feel to be an impertinence, and will not therefore inflict them upon others. Criticism should be dumb in the presence of JENNY LIND. The primal element of her power comes from a sphere which criticism has never presumed to invade, and appeals to a part of one's being which it cannot instruct. What has criticism to do with feminine loveliness and goodness of heart? With the gushing joyousness of a spirit as happy as a wave that dances on the sea? These it is that pour into her song, and with her song into the hearts of all who are open to such influences, stirring a feeling there that would vent itself only in a shower of blessings upon the head of the lovely being that calls it forth. It is absurd to say in the hearing of those who can feel, that astonishment predominates over other emotions. Listen to the "Bird Song". The notes are laughed out—shaken from her soul by a fullness of joy that will not be repressed. "My heart is full, yet glad"—"I must, I must be singing." What has art to do with the effect of that song? All the critical notices we have read of Jenny Lind's singing are about as suggestive of the reality as the shop window engravings of the "sweet records—promises as sweet" that meet in her countenance. We have not seen her likeness—but old Wordsworth suggests it, in the thoughts and melody of his lines:—

"The stars of midnight shall be dear
To her; and she shall lean her ear
In many a secret place,
Where rivulets dance their wayward round,
And beauty, born of murmuring sound,
Shall pass into her face."

Blessings on her, wherever she goes! She sings and looks like the being who has found her greatest joy on earth, in planting flowers of happiness where grew the weeds of poverty and suffering; as she has done, wherever her path has been.

A word or two of the Concert of Monday evening. The selection of music was unexceptionable; a rare feature in public concerts. Signor Belletti is a superb singer. In quality of tone and perfect artistic finish of execution and style, superior to any bass we have ever heard, and deserving of all that has been said of him. Two of his songs, the Barcarole and the Tarantelle were heartily enjoyed by the audience and were encored. The orchestra, under Mr. Benedict's consummate direction, were more effective than their hasty assembling gave us reason to expect, and delivered the overtures of Zampa and the Crown Diamonds, with admirable precision. The movement from Beethoven's Septet was injudiciously introduced immediately after Jenny Lind's first song; when every body would be talking. The Concert Master Mr. Jules Benedict, is eminent by his compositions above all musicians who have visited this country, and needs no word of praise from any one.—(American Advertiser, Dec. 11.)

(From the Baltimore Republican).—The lovers of music, and the admirers of female grace and loveliness, are by no means the monopolists of the delight spread abroad in our patriotic city by the advent of the idolized Jenny. The worshippers of the God of Fun—the wide-mouthed haw! haw-ers! have had enough of the farcical to make laughter itself hold its sides. One of the most amusing incidents connected with Mademoiselle Lind's first concert was the elaborate critique in the "Sun" of Tuesday morning. "At 8 o'clock (quoth the Luminary) the entire orchestra, forty-two in number [how particular!] had taken their places, when Mr. Benedict, the conductor, appeared, and stepping upon the stand, [how graphic!] gave signal for the commencement of Auber's grand overture to Massaniello, which was executed in beautiful style, the instruments all being in fine tone, and the performers observing excellent time; [how scientific!] indeed it was plain to perceive from the approving smile of the leader, that the performance was most perfect." [How discriminating!] Now, all this is exceedingly droll, and beyond measure, amusing, when it so happened that no such overture was performed at all, but that subsequently to the publication of the programme the overture of Zampa was substituted for that of Massaniello. But how can our laughter-loving readers repress a hearty ha! ha! upon reading the following exquisite morceau in the same critique?

"After the lapse of a few minutes, the second part of the evening's entertainment commenced with Rossini's grand overture, La Gazza Ladra, performed by the entire orchestra. The introductory concerto passages, which were promptly taken up by the brass and stringed instruments, formed a brilliant part of the programme, in the performance of which the greatest skill was developed. The flute, trumpet, and horn solos, particularly excelled."

In this paragraph the graphic, scientific, and profound critic, not content with generalities, condescends to particularize the exact portion of the overture to La Gazza Ladra which made the most favourable impression upon his deep musical erudition—and not only this, but, (admitting the impolicy of instituting comparisons,) reluctantly—coily—gives the preference to the dulcet tones of the "flute, trumpet, and horn solos," which it is authoritatively announced, "particularly excelled."—This is a little too much of a good thing. The overture to La Gazza Ladra, unfortunately again for the critic of the Sun newspaper, was not performed, but withdrawn, and that to the "Crown Diamonds," by Auber, substituted. Yet he learnedly discriminates between the performers in a piece, the playing of which only existed in the imagination of the critic himself! Was the writer unable to distinguish between these overtures, or was the whole critique written before the performance commenced? Our contemporary is welcome to either horn of the dilemma.

(Baltimore Sun, Dec. 14.)—At the instance of the Board of Public School Commissioners, the Mayor yesterday addressed a note to Jenny Lind, requesting her to meet the children connected with the public schools of the city, and so far gratify them as to allow them to see and hear her. She very promptly and cordially responded, and expressed her desire to meet them this morning, at the Front Street Theatre, at 10 o'clock, or at least as many of them as can be crowded into the building. It will be an epoch in their lives. To have seen Jenny will live in their memory as long as life lasts. No one will be admitted except those having special charge of the children.

The Lind Auction Sale.—Yesterday morning, agreeably to public announcement, the Front Street Theatre was opened for the purpose of offering the Jenny Lind concert tickets at auction, and the number present could not have been less than 7 or 800, each of whom paid an admission fee of 12½ cents, which will be given to the poor of this city. The minimum price of tickets was fixed at 6 dollars, except the front seats in the parquette, the back seats in the second tier, and the gallery. The seats in the parquette were rapidly sold, some at par, whilst others commanded a premium of from 12½ to 87½ cents each, and the average price of the whole may be put down at 6 dollars 37½ cents per seat. The southern stage-box (10 seats) was then sold at 57 dollars net—the stage-box opposite obtained 54 dollars. The seats in the dress circle were then offered, and were nearly all sold at an average price of 7 dollars. Those above, also, commanded small premiums. It may be fair to estimate the proceeds of this concert at a sum exceeding 10,000 dollars. During the sale Mr. Barnum stated that this mode of selling tickets had been specially resorted to for the express purpose of avoiding speculation, and that neither Miss Lind nor himself desired that the price of tickets should be raised above the fixed rates, but that they were compelled to offer them at public sale, so that the public should have a fair chance of obtaining them without being cheated by speculators. He was then very warmly applauded by the entire assemblage and the bidding grew more spirited than ever.

Jenny Lind an Auditor.—The fair Swedish songstress being last evening relieved from entertaining others became herself the entertained, and was auditor at the fine concert of the "Germania," at Carrall Hall. Her intended presence having, to a great extent, become known, there was a most crowded and brilliant assemblage on the occasion. Miss Lind was attended by Signor Belletti, and was ushered into the hall by Mr. Helmsmuller, the gentlemanly manager of the "Germania," and welcomed with a glad enthusiasm by the whole audience. She remained during the performance of several of the best pieces, and left about half-past eight o'clock. Her departure was signalled by another pleasing demonstration on the part of the audience. They evidently parted from her with regret.

Dramatic Intelligence.

HAYMARKET.

MACREADY'S FAREWELL PERFORMANCES.

MR. MACREADY resumed his series of farewell performances on Monday with King Lear. The new burlesque, and the comedy of Every One has his Fault, constituted the attractions of Boxing-Night and the two following nights. The comedy appears to have very little attractions for the public; but the new burlesque is quite another thing; and so, during the three non-Macready nights, the theatre was but thinly attended until half-price, when there was a rush to see Brough Brothers' new annual, Christmas offering, or what you will. The "what-you-will" decidedly improves on acquaintance, and we strongly counsel our laughter-loving and novelty-seeking friends to go and see the Second Calendar, were it for no other purpose than to hear Buckstone in the travestie of "In my Cottage near a Wood;" and the charming Annie Romer in the new edition of the Yankee ballad, "Where the Poor Niggers Go."

But this is not apropos of the "Farewell Performances."

Mr. Macready now plays five nights a week, and will continue to do so during the remainder of his final engagement. Besides performing in King Lear on Monday, he appeared in Henry IVth and The Jealous Wife on Tuesday; in Richelieu on Wednesday; in King John on Thursday; and in Virginius last night. Of each of these we have had our say, and it only remains to observe, in the way of news, that the house has been crowded every night, and the performances received with rapturous applause.

DRURY-LANE.

VARIETY is the order of the day with Mr. Anderson. The Love Chase has been revived for Mrs. Nesbitt; The Wife of Mantua has been recalled for Miss F. Vining; while Hamlet has been produced with a very efficient cast, and Henry IV. (Part I.) has introduced to the London public a new candidate for histrionic honours in the person of Mr. Barrett, who played Sir John Falstaff—all within a week.

The Love Chase, on Saturday, was a capital performance. Mrs. Nisbett was as charming, as buoyant, and hilarious as ever in Constance, and converted the audience into a perfect laughing chorus whenever she indulged in one of her ringing laughs. Mr. Walter Lacy, one of the most gentlemanly and intelligent of modern comedians, after an absence of some years from the stage, made his first appearance in Wildrake, and was welcomed back to his old place among the theatrical confraternity with an amount of applause, which proved the public had not forgotten their universal favourite. The return of this gentleman must be accounted a decided boon to the stage. In light and elegant, and occasionally in eccentric comedy, his services will be found invaluable. The Wildrake of Mr. Walter Lacy was an admirable performance. The genuine good nature and heartiness of the part were rendered in the happiest manner, while the simplicity, without bordering on the rustic, far less the boorish, was given with the nicest discrimination. He was received throughout with great plaudits.

The novelty of the week has been the Sir John Falstaff of Mr. Barrett. This gentleman comes from the provinces, where, we understand, he has been playing for years. While it speaks little for the foresight of managers, that so much real talent should be suffered to remain unnoticed, it holds out a hope that other talent may be in existence, which, ere long, will tend to revive the falling fortunes of the Drama, if theatrical speculators will only open their eyes. Mr. Barrett made a decided, nay, a great hit, in Sir John Falstaff; and has fixed himself in public estimation as a comic star of no mean magnitude. We shall not now criticize his performance in detail, but shall rather reserve our criticism until a second seeing shall enable us to point out his merits, and confirm our first impressions. It will suffice, on this occasion, to observe that Mr. Barrett is possessed of a capital physiognomy for comedy, that his voice is rich and flexible, and that in everything that relates to the business of the stage, he displays the practised artist. His conception of glorious old Jack was admirable, and his execution scarcely less praiseworthy. He was liberally applauded throughout, and was honoured with a separate recall at the end. Our praise is due to Mr. Anderson for his discrimination in finding out the talent of Mr. Barrett, and we have to congratulate him heartily on such an acquisition to his company.

The other characters in Henry IV. were, in general, well supported. Mr. Anderson's Prince Hal was exceedingly spirited. His scenes with Sir John and his satellites betokened genuine humour; while, in the graver scenes, his deportment and bearing were dignified and imposing. The Hotspur of Mr. Vandenhoff lacks fire. It is a character quite out of this gentleman's line, whose forte lies not in the assumption of impetuous and passionate personages. Nor can we bestow much praise on the Mrs. Quickly of Mrs. Parker who has neither figure nor face, powers nor energy for the part. The rest of the performers are entitled to honourable mention.

The Pantomime has been curtailed, and is vastly improved in consequence.

MARY-LE-BONE.

THE holiday folks continue to assemble here in great numbers, and the pantomime, which is the best we have yet seen, is likely to run its merry round successfully against most of its rivals. It contains some excellent things, and among these are the Tableaux Vivans in the first scene, their only fault being that they are too few. The famous Tom Matthews is full of fun and humour—the harlequin is active, efficient, and, in the fair Louise Blanche, provided with as pretty, graceful, and nimble a companion as a harlequin need have to go about the world, and disprove Shakspeare's famous apothegm, that

"The course of true love never yet ran smooth."

Our Scrap Book.

MUSIC AND PROPHECY.—[On the Great Antiquity of Music, shewing it was as nearly allied to prophecy as poetry; also its beneficial effect in tranquillizing the mind.]

After Samuel had secretly anointed Saul king, he instructs the new monarch in the measures he is to pursue for establishing himself on the throne, and says,—“It shall come to pass, when thou art come to the city (Bethel), that thou shalt meet a company of prophets coming down from the high place, with a psaltery and tabret, and a pipe, and they shall prophesy; and the spirit of the Lord will come upon thee, and thou shalt prophecy with them.” Also a very striking example of the custom practised by the Prophets, of tranquilizing their minds, and exciting in themselves divine inspiration by means of music, is in the 3rd chap. 2nd Book of Kings, 15th verse, where the sovereigns of Israel, Judah, and Edom, were on the point of being destroyed by thirst, as there was no water to be found. “And on Jehoshaphat inquiring if there was not a prophet of the Lord, of whom they might inquire of the Lord by him, and on being informed that Elisha was there, they went down to him, and Elisha said, ‘bring me a minstrel.’ And it came to pass when the minstrel played, that the hand of the Lord came upon him, and he said ‘Thus saith the Lord, make this valley full of ditches.’” We are however not to suppose that the gift of prophecy was the natural effect of music, but that by its means the whole mind and spirit of the prophet was prepared to receive the supernatural impression. There is also another instance which exhibits wonderfully the power of music over the human mind, and its beneficial effects in soothing the evil spirit, or troubled conscience of Saul; for, “when the evil spirit from God was upon Saul, David took a harp, and played with his hand, so Saul was refreshed, and was well, and the evil spirit passed away from him.” From which we may conclude that music removed his melancholy, calmed the feelings, and enabled him to forget the apprehension that he had of being dethroned, and put to death by his competitor; it also quieted the remorse of his conscience, caused the blood and spirits to return to their natural and equal motion, and was the means of allaying and composing the passions of the mind, and occasioning joy and self-complacency.—From T. H. Tomlinson's Lectures on Ancient Music.

ON THE GREAT ANTIQUITY OF MUSIC AND DANCING.—Strabo tells, that it was customary among the Greeks, as well as other nations, to use music and dancing in the processions before their gods: (lib. 1). Callimachus mentions the Chori, and Dancings of the youth at the altar of Apollo. Plato observes, that among the Egyptians, all kinds of music, songs, and dances, were consecrated to their gods (De Legibus, lib. 3): and even Lucian (de Saltatione) expressly says, that among the ancients, no ceremonial of religion, no expiation, no atonement was accounted rightly accomplished without dancing—so that David was far from being singular in his behaviour when he danced before the ark: nor was there any disparagement, or any diminution of his regal dignity, for what he did was done in honour of that God, who had chosen him to govern Israel; and his dancing, i.e. his moving in certain serious and solemn measures, suited to music of the same character and tendency, was an exercise highly conducive to the purposes of piety, and his mixing with the public festivities of his people, was a condescension (as Tacitus relates of Augustus the Roman Emperor,) not unbecoming the greatest monarch. Piety taught Augustus to put himself upon a level with his subjects in their public rejoicings: piety taught David that all men are upon a level in the solemnities of religion—therefore David was not singular in his behaviour on this occasion.—From T. H. Tomlinson's Lectures on Ancient Music.

WILLIAM BIRD composer, died 1623. In a collection of music by this writer (dedicated to Sir Christopher Hatton) there are the following reasons why people should learn to sing:—

Reasons set down by th' aucton to persuade everie one to learn to sing—

1. It is a knowledge easilie taught and quicklie learned, when there is a good master and an apt scholar.
2. The exercise of singing is delightful to nature, and good to preserve the health of man.
3. It do strengthen all parts of the heart, and doth open the pipes (sic).
4. It is a singular good remedie for a stuttering and stammering in the speech.
5. It is the best means to preserve a perfect pronunciation, and to make a good orator.
6. It is the onlie way to know when nature hath bestowed the benefit of a good voyce; which gift is so rare, as there is not one among a thousand that hath it: and in mannie that excellent gift is lost, because they want the art to express nature.
7. There is not any musicke of instruments whatsoever comparable to that which is made by the voyces of men, when the voyces are good, and the same well sovled and ordered.
8. The better the voyce is, the sweeter it is to honour and serve God therewith; and the voyce of man is chiefly to be employed to that end—omnis spiritus laudet dominum.

Since singing is so good a thing,
I wish all men would learn to sing.

Miscellaneous.

RACHEL,—A brilliant French journalist (Jules Janin, we are sure) remarks in one of his feuilletons, that the great tragedian “conquered Germany, and like Napoleon entered Berlin and Vienna in triumph.” If this be J. J. why then J. J. is right; only that Rachel's triumphs are “more sweeter” to be borne than those of Napoleon; a glance from those dark eyes, and a smile from that eloquent mouth, are certainly preferable to a cannon ball and bayonet, even directed by the genius of Napoleon. On the other hand, Rachel's conquests are likely to be more enduring than those of Buonaparte, since their recollection is at once more grateful and less humiliating.

JENNY LIND has £150,000 in the British Funds, the three per cents., and pays to the British government annually £4,000 income tax. She has given away about £48,000 in charity. The whole amount of her European wealth is estimated at one million of dollars.—(New York Paper.)

JENNY LIND'S TOUR IN SOUTH AMERICA.—The movements of Mlle. Lind, after leaving Baltimore, will be as follows:—A Concert in Washington on the 16th. and probably 18th. She will then proceed to Richmond, and sing there on the 20th; thence to Charlestown, S. C., and give concerts on the 26th and 28th. On the first of January she will sail from Charlestown, in the steamer Isabel, for Havanna, and remain there from the 8th of January to the 1st of February; thence to New Orleans, and remain in that city from the 4th to the 16th of February. She will return on the western route, visiting Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, &c., and start for the World's Fair (Great London Exhibition, we suppose), in June. Such is the present determination.—(Baltimore Sun, December 14.)

A GOLDEN NEWSPAPER.—In compliment to the Swedish songstress, a Boston publisher has issued a paper, the Jenny Lind, on the pages of which the life and doings of the "Nightingale" are chronicled in letters of gold.

VIVIER.—"The great feature of the concert was Vivier, whose wonderful solos on the French horn must be heard, as no description can communicate a full idea of their extraordinary character. While everything else is most attractive, this is wonderful. Eugene Vivier has learnt, in the woods of his native Ajaccio, in Corsica, to imitate the sounds of nature, animate or inanimate, in a style of most wondrous closeness. We listened on Thursday night, until we fancied we heard from that difficult instrument only some soft, dulcet note, wafted from a distance, and gradually dying away as it receded from spots where harmony alone was paramount. The moaning of the wind, the light breath of a summer day, the fuller but more soothing utterance of autumn breezes, the rough blasts of December, were imitated with closeness and felicity; harmonies of the most entrancing character poured from his instrument unusual sounds, doubled and apparently tripled, at the same time, of most mystic character, bewildered the ear with the diversity of parts that were so clearly uttered. Strains he had that would have proved a gentle lullaby for the sleeping infant, imitating the mellifluousness of the flute. The soft sighing of the Æolian harp was not more gentle; but never was the heart of the warrior roused by more boldly defiant trumpet notes, or marshalled for the conflict, than those which, easily and by the merest transition, Eugene Vivier drew from the wonderful circles of brass through which this magic sound-painting was brought before the audience. As he made his retiring bow, a loud and simultaneous burst of applause came from the audience, and it was sustained until the announcement that M. Vivier's exertions were so fatiguing that he could not possibly repeat it. The announcement met with the approbation of a large portion of the audience, who felt that with such unworked combinations of conception and practice, it could not be otherwise."—(Manchester Courier, Saturday, Dec. 28. From a notice of Jullien's first concert.)

M. ALEXANDER BILLET.—The lovers of good pianoforte music will be pleased to learn that this gentleman intends renewing his classical performances at St. Martin's Hall very shortly.

M. SILAS, the composer, has taken up his residence at Edinburgh for the winter.

YORK.—Jullien's Masked Ball, announced for the 14th inst., promises to be the most splendid ever given in that city.

A MUSICAL BED.—One article of luxury that we hear of as in preparation in Germany for the Exhibition, will be a curiosity in its way. This is a musical bed, which, the moment it is pressed, begins to play soft and soothing airs that "lap" the sleeper "in Elysium."

DEATH OF MR. OSBALDISTON.—Mr. Osbaldiston, for many years manager of the Surrey, and lately of the Victoria Theatre, died a few days ago. The most remarkable feature in his theatrical career was his undertaking the management of Covent Garden Theatre, some twelve years since, and making a considerable reduction in the prices of admission. The experiment was not a failure, though Mr. Osbaldiston had an expensive company, which numbered in its corps the names of Macready, Charles Kemble, Vandenhoff, J. Wallack, Mrs. Warner, Mr. W. Farren, Mrs. Glover, &c.

SCHILLER'S DAUGHTER.—The eldest daughter of Schiller, Mme. Caroline Junot, died suddenly, on the 19th, at Wurtzburgh, in Bavaria.

MISS RANSFORD gave her fifth musical soiree on Monday evening week. She was assisted by Miss Bassano, Mr. Land, Mr. Ransford, Mr. W. E. Ransford, and Herr Bruno Bruckman, as vocalists. Mr. W. H. Palmer played some pieces on the piano. Kate Loder was announced, but was prevented from appearing by indisposition. Miss Ransford's singing was much admired. She was encored in "The Gipsies' Home," and in an aria by Mercadante. The soirees given by the fair artiste have been all successful, and have caused a stir in her own immediate circle. We are pleased to announce the success of so young and promising a vocalist.

EGHAM.—The first of a series of three subscription concerts, given by Mr. S. Smith (resident musical professor and organist of Egham Church), took place on Friday evening, December 27th, at the Assembly Rooms, which were attended by a fashionable audience. The vocalists were Mrs. Alexander Newton, Miss Lizzy Stuart, Mr. J. W. Hobbs, Mr. Knowles, and Mr. Whitehouse. Messrs. Sainton and Chipp were the instrumentalists. The encores, ten in number, need not be specified separately, nor is it necessary to speak of the singing of Mrs. A. Newton or Mr. Hobbs, who both exhibited their usual talent. Miss Lizzy Stuart deserves mention in "Land of my dearest," by Keller. With study and attention this young lady will rise in public favour. Mr. Whitehouse sang Czapek's song, "King Seyfrid," with energy; his voice told remarkably well. Mr. Knowles was much applauded in his song. The glees were well rendered; and, in fact, it must have given as much pleasure to Mr. Smith (who conducted the concert), to see his efforts crowned with such success, as to his patrons, who enjoyed the entertainment.—(From a Correspondent.)

CORK.—Madame Anna Thillon, and Mr. Hudson, accompanied by Mr. Edward Loder, the eminent composer, have been giving their new entertainment here, with success. On Monday they appear at Limerick.

BIRMINGHAM.—The Messiah was performed on Thursday night, by the members of the Festival Choral Society, assisted by a few professionals, the proceeds being applied to the purposes of the benevolent fund, in connection with that society. In addition to the choir the following artistes were engaged:—Miss Bassano, Miss Amelia Hill, Miss Bull, Mr. Shoubridge, and Mr. Frank Bodda. Mr. Munden conducted, and Mr. Stimpson presided at the organ. One or two points in the performance may be mentioned. The air "O Thou that tellest," was the best of Miss Bassano's pieces. "Rejoice Greatly" suited the flexible organ of Miss Hill. She sang the allegro with ease and considerable effect. The air in the second part, "Why do the Nations?" has tested the powers of more experienced singers than Mr. Frank Bodda, and with the recollection of some other renderings of this grand passage, we must give him praise for the spirit and correctness of his performance. His articulation was very distinct. We were pleased by his always correct, often forcible expression, in the difficult solos allotted to the principal bass voice. Amongst the most pleasing points in the oratorio may be ranked those pieces allotted to Mrs. Bull. On the whole the choruses were well performed. The bass voices were effective, and, with the exception of some weakness in the volume of the counter-tenors, the choir was well balanced. The difficult chorus, "He trusted in God," was particularly well given. To Mr. Stimpson praise is due, for his effective management of the organ throughout. Mr. Munden also discharged his duties ably.—(Abridged from the Birmingham Journal.)

MR. W. H. SEGUIN.—This gentleman, well known to the profession, as an excellent master, and a popular concert singer, died on Sunday last, at his residence, in Curzon Street, aged 36. Besides being a man of talent, Mr. W. H. Seguin was of a kindly disposition, and in every respect a gentleman. He was esteemed by all, and will be regretted by all with whom he came in contact, either in public or private life. He has left a wife, also distinguished in the musical profession, and several children.

JULIEN AT MANCHESTER.—On Tuesday night large numbers arrived at the Free-trade Hall, having mistaken the announcement of the fourth performance. The original advertisement certainly announced it for Tuesday, but in every advertisement since the 11th of December, this evening (Wednesday) was substituted. This fact shows the difficulty of reaching the public in all announcements by those who cater for the popular eye and ear. We allude to the circumstance, that no further disappointment may occur. To-night (Wednesday), as we have before said, is announced as the last of the concerts, and to-morrow night (Thursday) the ball is to take place.—Manchester Examiner and Times.

WINDSOR CASTLE.—On Monday evening, the 30th ult., a cantata, composed by Dr. Elvey, on the birthday of her Majesty Queen Victoria, was performed before her Majesty and H. R. H. Prince Albert, at the Castle, by the Queen's private band and the gentlemen of St. George's Chapel choir, with the choristers, assisted by several of the amateur Windsor and Eton Choral Society, and by Mr. Rowley and some of the members of the Sacred Harmonic Society, Exeter Hall. The solos were sung by Mr. Lockey and Mrs. Alexander Newton.

MAIDSTONE.—(From a Correspondent.)—Mr. Ireson, band-master of the cavalry depot, gave his annual concert at the Corn Exchange, on the 18th ult., under the patronage of Colonel Middleton, and the officers of the cavalry depot. The spacious room of the Exchange was filled in every part by an audience who encored nearly every piece in the programme. The presence of the military staff in their uniform added to the brilliancy of the scene. The vocalists were Miss Ransford, Miss Norman, Mr. Ransford, and Mr. Land. Miss Ransford was encored in "Smiling Faces," (S. Glover,) and, with Miss Norman, in the duets of "I would wear my love," (Mendelssohn,) and "From our merry Swiss Home," (C. Glover.) Mr. Land was called on to repeat Lover's Irish ballad, "Sally, why not name the day," which he sang with excellent effect. Shield's song of "The Wolf," sung by Mr. Ransford, was also redemanded. The band was numerous and complete, and the manner in which they performed the overtures to La Gazza Ladra, Zampa, the march from Le Prophete, and Labitski's Quadrille of All Nations, reflected credit on their master and conductor, Mr. Ireson. Mr. J. E. Field was leader, and Mr. Tolhurst accompanist.

CATHERINE HAYES.—Letters have been received announcing the safe arrival of this distinguished vocalist in Rome, in excellent health and spirits.

M. MAGNUS.—This well known composer and pianist has arrived in London from Paris.

PRIVATE THEATRICALS AT WOBURN ABBEY.—The Duke and Duchess of Bedford, as customary at this festive season of the year, are dispensing their princely hospitality at the ancient family seat, Woburn Abbey, Bedfordshire, to a distinguished circle of relatives and friends. Among the guests of the Noble Duke, are Lord and Lady Russell and the Hon. Miss Lester, Viscount Anson, Viscount Maldon, Viscount Valletort, Sir John and Lady Georgiana Romilly, Lady Frances Hope, Lady Frances Russell, Lady Elizabeth Bulteel and Miss Bulteel, the Right Hon. T. B. Macaulay, Mr. Cornwall Lewis, M.P., and Lady Theresa Lewis, Lady Foulis, Mr. and Lady Caroline Sanford, Gen. Hare, Capt. Brooke the Hon. G. Byng, Mr. Augustus Stafford, M.P., Mr. R. W. Grey, M.P., Mr. Arthur Russell, Mr. H. Greenfell, Mr. Bulteel, &c. Last week, "Woburn Abbey theatre" (according to the programme) was opened for the first, we believe, of a series of amateur dramatic entertainments, for which the Abbey has long enjoyed a high reputation. The piece selected was the well-known farce of Turning the Tables, and the following was the cast of characters, named in the order of their appearance:—Old Knibbs, Mr. Ayshford Sanford; Miss Knibbs, Miss Bulteel; Edgar, Mr. H. Greenfell; Jack Humphries, Mr. Augustus Stafford, M.P.; Thornton, Viscount Valletort; Patty, the Hon. Miss Lister; Bumps, the Hon. George Byng; Mrs. Humphries, Mrs. J. Bulteel. At the conclusion of the farce the company partook of refreshments in an adjoining saloon, the gaities being prolonged to rather an advanced hour.—Bath and Cheltenham Gazette.

MANUEL MORENO.—We have heard the most favourable report of a new five-act tragedy which this gentleman has in manuscript. M. Moreno will be agreeably remembered as the English adapter of a clever French piece, under the name of My Wife's Husband.

Mrs. W. H. HOLMES.—This accomplished pianist and composer has announced a matinée musicale at his residence, this day. A real treat may be expected by the amateurs of good pianoforte playing.

Mrs. WALLACE.—This highly esteemed lady, wife of the eminent actor Mr. James Wallace, died recently at her house in Tavistock Street, Bedford Square.

Advertisements.

NEW PIANOFORTE PUBLICATIONS.

WESSEL and Co. beg to announce the publication of a New Work for Piano Solo, in twelve numbers, price One Shilling each, entitled—

"YOUTHFUL DAYS."

No. 1. "Nursery Tale."	No. 7. "The Dance on the Lawn."
" 2. "The Clock."	" 8. "Hoisting on the Lake."
" 3. "Sunday Morning."	" 9. "The Birdie's Death."
" 4. "Playing in the Meadows."	" 10. "The Water-Mill."
" 5. "Grand Parade."	" 11. "Skating."
" 6. "Lullaby."	" 12. "The Evening Bells."

Composed by

THEODORE KULLAK, OF BERLIN.

Theodore Kullak ranks among the best composers of Germany. His Pianoforte Compositions, for the concert room and for the study, are eagerly sought after, both by professors and amateurs. Kullak's "Youthful Days" (Kinderleben) is written extremely in an easy form, and makes an acceptable present to young pupils because it is useful practice together with pleasing themes: "The imagination of a poet combined with the science of a musician."

WESSEL and Co., 229, Regent Street, Corner of Manchester Street, Publishers of all the Pianoforte works of Theodore Kullak.

M. ALEXANDER BILLET

Begs to announce that he intends to RESUME his Performances of CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC

IMMEDIATELY.

Full particulars will be immediately announced.

MR. BRINLEY RICHARDS

Begs to inform his Pupils and Friends that he has REMOVED to

No. 6, SOMERSET STREET, PORTMAN SQUARE.

THE PATENT PORTABLE METRONOME,

(REGISTERED ACCORDING TO G & 7 VIC., C 65),

IS a very Complete and Perfect Instrument for measuring "time" in music. It is the size and form of a small watch, and may be carried in the waistcoat pocket, being similar to a spring measuring tape, having marked on one side the number of vibrations in one minute (as in Maelzel's Metronome), and on the other side the Italian musical terms in general use. From its moderate price, small dimensions, and practical usefulness, it is adapted for all classes of musicians and singers.

Sold by all music-sellers in town and country.

Price, including morocco case and suspender, from 5s. to 10s. each.

EDWARD GREAVES, 56, South Street, Sheffield, registered proprietor.

Printed and Published, for the Proprietors, by MICHAEL SAMUEL MYERS, of No. 3, Studley Villas, Studley Road, Clapham Road, in the parish of Lambeth, at the office of MYERS and Co., 37, King Street, Covent Garden, in the parish of St. Paul, where all communications for the Editor are to be addressed, post paid. To be had of G. Purke, Dean Street, Soho; Allen, Warwick Lane; Vickers, Hylton Street, and at all booksellers.—Saturday, Jan. 4, 1851.

The Musical World.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

Terms of Subscription, per Annum, 16s.; Half year, 8s.; Three Months, 4s.; to be forwarded by Money Order, to the Publishers, Messrs. Myers & Co., 37, King Street, Covent Garden.

2.—VOL. XXVI.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 11, 1851.

PRICE FOURPENCE.

NOTICE.

- The charge for a number of the MUSICAL WORLD will henceforward be 4d. for town and country. Subscriptions, per annum, 16s.; per half-year, 8s.; per quarter, 4s.; delivered GRATIS on the day of publication.

TO TOWN SUBSCRIBERS.

- The publication of the MUSICAL WORLD having changed hands, the proprietors respectfully solicit that all who desire to subscribe from the present time will have the kindness to notify the same to Messrs. MYERS and Co., 37, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, and to forward their Subscriptions in advance. A notification by letter, or verbal message, will receive immediate attention.

For the convenience of our West-End Subscribers, Advertisers, and Correspondents, Messrs. WESSEL and Co., 229, REGENT STREET, have kindly consented to receive Advertisements, Subscriptions, and Communications for the Editor.

TO COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS.

- It is respectfully announced that all who wish to continue subscribers to the MUSICAL WORLD from the present time will forward, by post office order, payable at Charing Cross, in favour of MYERS and Co., 37, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, or otherwise as convenient, the amount of subscription for a year, half a year, or a quarter, in advance, in order that the names may be regularly entered on the new list of subscribers. Applications for the MUSICAL WORLD, unaccompanied by the subscription in advance, cannot be attended to.

CHANGE OF OFFICE.

- The MUSICAL WORLD will henceforth be printed and published at the office of Messrs. MYERS and Co., 37, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, where Subscriptions, Advertisements, and all Communications for the Editor may be sent.

NEW ARRANGEMENTS.

- Arrangements have been made to produce the MUSICAL WORLD for the future every Saturday morning at 10 o'clock, at which time it will invariably be ready for delivery.

Engagements have been entered into with several well-known writers, in the provinces and on the continent, who have undertaken to supply the MUSICAL WORLD with periodical correspondence on all subjects of musical interest. The services of a gentleman of high standing and ability have also been secured, for the purpose of reviewing such new publications as may be forwarded to the office with that view. This department will be strictly attended to. Original articles, from eminent pens, on general subjects of art, will also appear from time to time.

THE GREAT NATIONAL EXHIBITION.

WHAT will the Great National Exhibition do for music? What will it do for English music? What will English musicians do for the Great National Exhibition?

The three questions posed, it remains to find the answers. The first presents less difficulties than the two last. Inasmuch as music is concerned, purely as an art, we doubt if the Great Exhibition will do anything at all; we doubt, indeed, if it can do anything. We are sure, in fact, it will and can do nothing. But, as music is connected with the invention and improvement of musical instruments, it may do much. There are certain prejudices, bound up with recent experiments, which, if the judges be competent, may in all possibility be set at rest. It may also, perchance, be solved, who makes the best pianofortes, who the best violins, who the best harps. We have our own opinions on each point, but shall be pleased to stand corrected by our betters. We shall, indeed, be delighted if the flute controversy—the “Boehm flute” controversy—be settled, to the satisfaction, real or assumed, of the disputants. It is to be presumed that every man who has made a flute, after the fashion of his heart's desire, will offer up a sacrifice of his darling manufacture at the shrine of “collective wisdom;” it is to be hoped that he will make up his mind to submit to the verdict; and a faint wish may be cherished that the vanquished may not openly repine, whatever their inward chagrin. Another interesting matter will possibly come before the grand tribunal—the matter of M. Saxe's instruments of brass and silver. For our own parts, we have unlimited faith in them, and are satisfied that, for what they are intended, nothing could possibly be better. M. Saxe looks for success and remuneration to the military bands of Europe. Only one or two of his instruments aim at ultimate connection with the regular orchestra, in which the "strings" play the principal character; and to say truth, only one or two are fit for such alliance. But, as adjuncts to military bands, we own a strong bias in their favor. The opponents of M. Saxe complain of monotony—of a certain similarity of tone, which, according to their argument, causes all the various instruments of his manufacture to sound alike, differing only in pitch and extension of register. This difficulty, we expect, the judges appointed at the Great National Exhibition will clear up. To adjudicate effectively, however, demands, not only scientific attainments, but a quick ear, a fine taste, and large experience.

It is reported that Sir Henry Bishop has been appointed first referee in the musical department of the Exhibition. That Sir Henry ought to form one of whatever conclave may be instituted, there can be little doubt; but we are bound to consider him a very improper person to entrust with the chief, much less the sole management. Calm in council, his presence will be useful in restraining the enthusiasm of younger coadjutors, and his example strong in defence of the truths inculcated by our predecessors, which the zealous partisans of modern supremacy may be apt to overlook. But, invested with absolute power, his influence would be the very opposite to beneficial. A man of the past, without sympathy for the transformations that have gradually developed themselves during the last twenty years, with no knowledge or love of the present style of music, his natural impulse would warn him to distrust innovation, to regard the signs of progress with indifference, and to check the aspirations of more youthful professors. If, then, it be true that to Sir Henry Bishop alone is consigned the task of advising the Commissioners upon questions connected with the art of music, an error has been committed which will go far to render the Great National Exhibition utterly impotent in reference to that particular department of human ingenuity and science. It would be easy and advisable to select a committee of ten from among the most eminent musicians resident in this empire, to legislate upon a subject which, of late years, has assumed a high position among the acknowledged media of civilization, and which, moreover, has risen to the grade of our chiefest popular amusement. Such a committee would really exercise a wholesome influence, and the public might rely upon the wisdom and justice of its decisions. Without such a committee we mean a committee composed, for the greater part, of men of the day, for whom the question of music has an active and immediate interest—we should not be surprised if the triple harp of a Welch singer of "Pennillion" were promoted before an Erard's "Improved Patent," or a harpsichord of the last century preferred to a Broadwood's "Grand." Such, in spite of its engrossing hold upon the public mind, is the anomalous position of music in Great Britain, owing to the apathy and ignorance of those in high places. But in what a contemptible light would such a specimen of arbitration place the Great Exhibition of London, before the eyes of musical Europe. And yet nothing is more probable.

In regard to matters of pure art, we cannot suppose the Exhibition will have any direct influence; but its indirect influence, with good generalship, may turn out of immense advantage. With a million, or more, of foreigners, eager to see and hear all that can be heard and seen in London, what a field is open for legitimate enterprise! Now is the time for an English Opera, now the time for a real Society of British Musicians (not a sham one), to give a series of concerts, on a large and effective scale, and show the universal foreigner that we are not quite undeserving of respect; while to the Italian and Frenchman in particular, our composers and players might honourably demonstrate that they do not merit the contempt with which they have been treated. This is what English musicians may do for the Great National Exhibition, and this the Great National Exhibition for English music. Our singers too could prove to the astonished ears of the French that they have voices; and explain to the Italians how well they can sing much to which the "land of music" is entirely stranger. The Germans, as umpires, and the "Yankees," who have lately talked a great deal about the subject, as auditors, would constitute a fair and not incompetent tribunal. We see no other way in which the Great National Exhibition can benefit the art of music in this country; but if English musicians would avail themselves of it they must be up and stirring. There is no time to be lost. Visitors are already pouring into London; and unless measures be speedily taken, the market of speculation will be choked, and a golden opportunity lost for ever.

Since writing the above the following has appeared in the Exhibition Express, a special journal, issued every Saturday, by our contemporary, the Daily News:—

"We understand that metropolitan musical instruments will occupy about 3,400 feet at the Exhibition. There will be various specimens of organs, from the various London builders; among the rest there will be one gigantic church organ, containing upwards of thirty stops, with an independent pedal organ, upon the largest scale. The cost of this instrument will be several thousand pounds. There will also be an interesting instrument, designed by Colonel P. Thompson, M.P.—an enharmonic organ—the object of which is, by minute subdivision of the scale, to attain a perfect intonation. The ingenious Colonel will also exhibit an enharmonic guitar, the design of which is somewhat similar. No class of musical instruments will, we believe, be unrepresented. As might be expected, pianofortes will be most numerous. In this department the most eminent manufacturers are exerting their utmost powers to exemplify the superiority of native instruments. There will be several improvements exhibited, both as regards tone and mechanism. The number of exhibitors, it is anticipated, will amount to about seventy."

The organs, pianofortes, violins, &c., are all very well; but let us hope that time and space may not be occupied, to the detriment of things more useful and essentially musical, by inventions that are merely curious, and have exclusive relation to acoustics. To confound the abstract science of sound, a matter of dry mathematical calculation, with the art of music itself, which appeals no less to the heart and the imagination, in its highest manifestations, than to the ear alone, in its lowest, is to confound the science of verbal derivation with the magnificent art of poetry. We have reason, however, to fear that the Commissioners are just as likely to make this mistake as another, equally absurd—that of confounding “music” with “instruments of music,” though the latter are to the former no more than bricks and mortar to a monument. We own that twice perusing the name of Colonel Thompson, M.P., has nearly thrown us into a fever.

MACREADY'S RETIREMENT.

THE dramatic career of this great tragedian is drawing to a close. On Monday next, Mr. Macready commences the first of the final performances of each of his characters. These will continue for three weeks, and terminate on February the 8rd, with King Lear. Such is the sad conclusion set forth in the bills, of the sincerity of which we cannot entertain a doubt. We fancied we espied of late a swerving from the original announcement. Certain small deviations from the spirit of the advertisement held out a faint hope that Mr. Macready might be persuaded to revoke his expressed determination. His last performances of each of his great characters were promised immediately after Christmas; but they have not yet taken place. Several parts were announced “for the last time but one,” and these have been repeated more than once, leaving the exceptional one still unfulfilled;—while, more recently, the “farewell performances” have not been insisted on and reiterated in the same explicit tone which we had been accustomed to in preceding bills. From all this, and from, perhaps, a wish that was “father to the thought,” we augured and hoped that the actor's resolution was giving way before an unexpected combination of circumstances. Knowing that one cause for the retirement of Mr. Macready existed in the decline of the legitimate drama, we were led to presume that his recent immense success had shaken his resolution, and induced him to believe in a better future for the stage. The contemplation of such a change would be sufficient excuse for any infraction of a pledge, contracted without consideration of what might arise in consequence. In the next place, we were aware Mr. Macready had selected a most extraordinary period for his leave taking; and as it was probable that many of his friends would counsel him to postpone it to the end of the present eventful year, so it was reasonable to hope that he himself might be influenced by arguments of such weight, and reasons so evident and unsophisticated. But, alas! despite the coquetting of bills, the sweetness of triumph that might have given birth to a dream of the stage's regeneration, and the golden gatherings to be counted on from the Great National Exhibition—which would have brought nations to pay homage to his genius—Mr. Macready stands fast to his intention, and retires from the stage on the very day proposed in his first announcement.

In taking his last farewell of the stage, we cannot help suggesting that Mr. Macready has left unperformed some characters which he ought to have played, and performed some characters which might have been omitted without loss. About the latter we shall be silent, but in respect to the former, the reasons which induced him to pass over such parts as Coriolanus, Henry the Fifth, Hotspur, Jacques, and others, do not at present appear. Not, however, to use the language of reproach, when it is our chief business to deplore the loss of a great actor, let us, in all sincerity, advise the lovers of Shakspeare not to lose the chance of witnessing, for the last time, Mr. Macready's illustrations of the mighty bard. In one short month, nay, in less than one month, the greatest of modern actors will have left us for ever. A few years hence, his living glory will have sunk into the past—his name the sound of a tradition for unborn scepticism, perchance, to doubt and question. But by those who have seen and understood him he can never be forgotten.

M. GOUNOD.

WHO is M. Gounod? The question will be partly solved, next Wednesday night, when Mr. Hullah, at his third Monthly Concert, intends to produce some new sacred compositions at St. Martin's Hall. If we may credit the Athenæum, the world will shortly be presented with a new composer, in the person of M. Gounod, about whose “striking and original genius” that journal has been preaching, for nine months past. Madame Pauline Viardot Garcia, too, a great authority, has shewn extraordinary confidence in the promise of M. Gounod, to whom she has, in a measure, entrusted her own reputation. M. Emile Augier having written the libretto of a two-act opera, to which M. Gounod composed the music, a part being expressly dedicated to his celebrated patroness, Madame Viardot has used her influence in procuring a hearing for it, at the Grand Opera. With such encouragement, and such prospects, it will be strange if M. Gounod fails to make a bold stroke for a triumph, even should his talents have been overestimated by his intimate friends. But what we hear, and from credible authority—independent of the Athenæum, with whose musical opinions we are not always in accord—leads us really to hope for something remarkable, if not something absolutely new. The name of M. Gounod's opera is Sappho. It is, we believe, already in rehearsal, and, if report may be trusted, will shortly be produced.

Our only doubt as to the issue of M. Gounod's dramatic essay is founded on the fact of his already having passed that time of life at which genius or distinguished talent is commonly declared. Many years ago, a pupil of the Conservatoire, in Paris, he gained the “Prix de Rome,” since which event he has not shewn a disposition to venture into public life, or, if so, without result. It is true the “Prix de Rome” can scarcely be considered a distinction, having so often been the reward of mediocrity, or of a certain facility, common in youth, which sparkles for a time and deceives, then flickers, and soon goes out altogether, like the lamp when the oil is exhausted. But it is difficult to imagine one, gifted with genius, so indifferent to praise, so apathetic, or so unimpulsive, as to let the fairest years of life pass away in comparative inaction. Perhaps, however, M. Gounod has produced much, although he has published little. We are glad to surmise it, in spite of our strong objection to the Latin maxim, entailing disdain and want of love for those earlier inspirations, which come when the blood is warmest and the invention freshest. Had Mendelssohn regarded this cold and repulsive system, we should have lost the overture to A Midsummer Night's Dream (composed at eighteen), and a host of beautiful things; had Sterndale Bennett been a martyr to it (disciple is not the word), we should have been robbed of the overture to The Naiades (composed at nineteen), and indeed of almost everything of his that is published. Auber, who began writing for the theatre at thirty-five, is an exception, and a singular one; but Auber printed a trio for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Op. 1) forty-seven years ago, which we have seen, and can vouch for being one of his most graceful and attractive compositions. Nor must this exception be cited as a precedent.

Until we have oral proof of M. Gounod's capabilities, we shall, therefore, retain a certain doubt and apprehension, which mere hearsay, from quarters however entitled to attention, is incompetent to quell. If M. Gounod, at upwards of thirty, does as much as Bennett at nineteen, or half as much as Mendelssohn at eighteen, we shall be eager to admit his legitimate claims to all the eulogies that have been lavished on him in advance, by his friends, his friends' friends, and the friends of his friends' friends.

AUBER'S ENFANT PRODIGE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Jan. 8.

As I know the admiration felt for Auber in London, I am sure that a short account of his new and highly successful opera, L'Enfant Prodigue, will not be unwelcome to your readers. Auber has brought out nothing at the Academie since his ballet-opera, Le Lac des Fees. The interval has been filled up, and the public amused, by the successive productions of Meyerbeer and Halévy, with the intervention of some works by minor pens, which have not had the effect of diminishing in any wise the acknowledged supremacy of the other two. When, therefore, it became generally known that Auber had commenced another score for the "Grand Theatre," curiosity was as rife to hear it as the satisfaction was unanimous at the news. Auber is a universal favourite, and as the greatest and most gifted of French musicians, he holds no more than his proper place in the general esteem. How well he is understood, and how warmly admired, in England, Germany, and even America, it is not necessary to insist. That the Enfant Prodigue would be successful every one believed, and its having been found worthy of its celebrated author has enhanced the undivided feeling of gladness with which its announcement was received.

It is not the first, nor I believe, the twentieth time, Scribe and Auber have worked and triumphed in fellowship. May it not be the last, by still many more occasions. That the new opera was baptised by the direction of the Grand Opera, involves merely another addition to the list of triumphs recorded in the annals of that noble establishment, one of the greatest centres of polite and intellectual recreation in the civilised world. I shall not trouble you with an account of the brilliant assembly that honored the first night's performance. Suffice it, all Paris was present to do honor to Scribe and Auber, and all Paris, now a month has flown, is still not tired of going. If M. Gounod, with his *Sappho must wait until the public feeling has cooled into indifference towards the Enfant Prodigue, then M. Gounod, with his Sappho, will have a long time to wait. I presume, however, that it will be brought out to back up Auber's success, a judicious stroke of policy, which seems to be certified by what I have since heard—that Sappho is already in rehearsal. One thing is certain—that the beautiful theatre of the Academie has been nightly crowded with all that Paris possesses of notability, all that is illustrious by genius or "by courtesy," as your great orator, Lord Brougham, once said, in puffing a military duke at the expense of a royal one. By the bye, Lord Brougham was at the Opera the other night, looking exceedingly well. At least, if it were not he, I am much mistaken; and it is more than probable that it was, since he has been reading (as, doubtless, the French journals have informed you) one of his papers on Light, about which phenomenon he has recently been experimentalising frequently and laboriously, to the Academie des Sciences, with a green shade over his eyes. But this has nothing to do with the Enfant Prodigue, which is quite a different thing from the Enfant Gâté of England and Europe.

Allow me to be as brief as possible in my notice of M. Scribe's book, the subject of which is familiar to you as a reader of the Evangelists. Of its origin and genealogy an account would therefore be superfluous. It is enough to say that M. Scribe has accepted the subject almost precisely as it stands in the divine text. He has in no way departed from its unaffected simplicity, and has added nothing except what was absolutely necessary to complete, or rather develop the parable of our Saviour. Do not start at this. There is nothing in the book that may not with propriety be placed on any stage in Europe. Scribe has invented all the characters, and imagined all the incidental details. No scriptural personage, word, or passage is introduced, although the real moral of the parable is thoroughly worked out. The story, as arranged by the versatile Frenchman, may be shortly narrated. Azraël (the prodigal son) asks permission of his father, Ruben, to leave the land of Israel, on a visit to the celebrated city of Memphis—the Paris of the old Egyptians, if we may draw comparisons by the aid of the Greek historians. He departs in company with two voyagers, who have obtained hospitality at his father's house—the one a beautiful woman, the other a young man who passes for her brother. The second act finds Azraël in the capital of Egypt, where he abandons himself to every kind of folly, extravagance, and dissipation. He plays and loses. He loves and is deceived. In all Azraël's adventures his two false companions—one of whom, Nefté, turns out to be a courtesan, the other a swindler—play the part of tempters, and profit by his follies. In the third act, pursuing a beautiful bacchante, who has attracted his attention, he finds himself in the interior of the temple of Isis, where he is discovered, seized, and cast into the Nile, by the infuriated priests, for violating the sanctuary of their religion. A camel-driver picks him up, a long way down the river; and in the fourth act we find Azraël in bondage, the camel-driver having exacted his perpetual services in return for saving his life. On the point of yielding up his existence to despair, a sudden and a happy thought determines Azraël once more to seek the paternal roof, and implore his father's pardon. In the fifth act we find him at home; recognized through his miserable garments, he is reconciled to his father, and united to

* See our leading columns :—Ed.

Zephthè, his betrothed wife, who, always faithful, had herself escaped the most imminent perils, in company with Ruben, at Memphis, where she also had penetrated into the dangerous sanctuary of Isis, in search of Azraël. The action, thus summarily sketched, is complicated, and relieved by a variety of dancing and spectacle. There are the mysteries of Isis, represented after the manner of Scribe, in plain contradistinction to the theory of Jamblichus—naughty and dissolute enough to have shocked Pythagoras himself out of his belief in the holiness of Egyptian priesthood—such a representation of those renowned and hidden ceremonies, in short, as would have delighted the Baron d'Holbach, or Voltaire himself, the arch-mocker of both priests and Pagans. The picture drawn of the High Priest of Isis might find a place in one of the brilliant Frenchman's "Romans et Contes," so exactly does it square with Voltaire's alleged opinions. The charming "alma," legere et folatre, who inspires Azraël with one of his fleeting passions—who, generous and good-natured, in those scenes of debauch and profligacy, proves to be as much the good genius of Azraël, as Nefthè, his fellow voyager, and her pretended brother are his evil angels—is an exquisite bit of sunshine in the heartless epithalamium, and worthy of Scribe's happiest invention.

Out of these materials, as romantic as they are essentially lyrical, M. Scribe has constructed the poem which has been married to the latest inspiration of Auber. The task of animating such a story into vigorous and poetical life, by means of music, was not, on the whole, an easy one. Immense resources were offered, it is true, to the genius of the composer, but counterbalanced, on the other side, by no ordinary difficulties. Auber, however, never knew, or never acknowledged an obstacle. The composer of La Mulette, Gustave, Le Dieu et la Bayadère, who for the last 30 years has enriched the repertoire of the Opéra Comique with more than thirty chefs d'œuvre, demonstrating, on this occasion, that his invention was as fluent and sparkling, his taste as elegant, his dramatic perception as keen and brilliant and glowing as ever. In short, Auber has only given a fresh proof of his inexhaustible fecundity—or, in words as true and more emphatic, his eternal youth? The Enfant Prodigue has sprung from his imagination, as full of sap and vigour, as dazzling in variety of colour, as energetic in expression, as irresistibly "entraînant d'allure," as captivating and instinct with the warm pulse of life, as though it had come into the world twenty years ago, when those prodigies of fancy and effect, those cups overflowing with the wine of melody, La Mulette de Portici and Fra Diavolo, were almost simultaneously immortalizing their author, and filling the coffers of the two great lyrical theatres of Paris. This verdict, on the last production of the glorious chief of our French school of dramatic music, is not alone the echo of the feelings of the too-easily-led crowd, which allows itself to be deceived often by a false light, and often even by a mere name; it is the feeling of the learned and accomplished in the art, the feeling of the denizens of the old school and the new, the feeling of professors and pupils, in short, the unanimous opinion of musicians and amateurs. Every one, if he tells truly, must tell you the same thing, must give a tongue to the same impulses of admiration. Auber, with consummate art, has united and contrasted the severe simplicity of patriarchal life in the desert, with the intoxicating enchantment of the vast luxurious and popular city, the glittering paraphernalia of sumptuous fetes, the manifold attractions of the lively and fascinating dance being adroitly brought into play. His Egypt, the libertine, is set in the austere and virtuous frame of Israel, the pastoral and pure, with an elevation of conception and a finish of execution that the union of genius and extraordinary experience alone could have accomplished.

As I am not going to offer you a critical analysis of the music I shall not detail, one by one, all the morceaux in the Enfant Prodigue that excited transports of enthusiasm on the first night, and have continued to excite them ever since. After the rising of the curtain, the air sung by Ruben (Massol) gave birth to the first lively sensation among the audience. I have heard few airs in a style more essentially pure, or more touching in expression. The duet of father and son, Ruben and Azraël (Massol and Roger); the cantilena of Nefthè (Madame Laborde) apostrophising the delights of Memphis; the romance of Ruben (Massol) enquiring for his lost son, of every passer by; the duet of the High Priest of the temple, (Obin) and Zephthè (Mlle. Dameron); the quintet in the temple of Isis; the couplets of the young camel-driver; the second air of Nefthè (Mad. Laborde); the vision of Azraël (Roger) and the pathetic exclamation of mingled grief and hope that follow; the scene of the return and reconciliation—all these are treated in a solemn and masterly manner; there is not a superfluous note, nor is the inspiration once in the rear of the situation to be illustrated. Let me add that the airs de danse—and dancing abounds in the opera—are the perfection of grace, freshness, character, rhythmic charm, sparkling and ingenious orchestral treatment. Were I a king, as the kings of old, and could dance like Louis XIV, for example, I would never dance to any other music than that of the composer of the bal masqué in Gustave, and the boleros in the Domino Noir.*

Roger, our admirable Roger, plays the Prodigal Son, and is as prodigal of his voice and sentiment as the composer of his ideas. Massol, you will be pleased, though not surprised, to hear, made a triumphant rentrée in the part of Ruben. Never did his splendid voice exercise so entire an empire, so completely fill with its rich and mellow sonority, the vast theatre of the Opera. Massol was welcomed with a triple salvo of plaudits and cheers, proceeding from all parts of the crowded theatre, and recalled with enthusiasm after the second act. Roger was recalled after the fourth. Obin, a young bass-singer of merit, was very efficient in the part of the High Priest.

Mlle. Dameron, and Mad. Laborde, in the parts of Zephthè and Nefthè, each shone conspicuously—the former in her resigned and feminine tenderness, which was equally charming and true; the latter in an artificial coquetry, becoming and artistically assumed. Mlle. Plunkett, as the "alma," was agile, graceful, vapoureuse, and light as a gazelle that scarcely touches the earth while it runs, but which creates an incessant desire, on the part of the beholder, to chase and catch it—alas! how quite in vain!

The mise en scène, costumes, and decorations—displaying the finest taste and the most lavish magnificence—are worthy the management of M. Roqueplan.

By repeated performances the artists and all concerned have now become so thoroughly at home in their parts, that the whole opera and spectacle seem to "go" as if by magic.

Thus has our winter season been inaugurated most auspiciously by a great success, on our first lyric stage, and achieved by our most popular dramatist and our most gifted composer. Six months of good receipts and brilliant "soirées" may be counted on.

I have a great deal of news, but my letter is already so long that I must defer all further particulars till my next. Meanwhile I may tell you that the new opera of Scribe and

* Our enthusiastic correspondent has surely overlooked the Mulette, the Bayadère, and Guillaume Tell, in all of which the dance music is perfection.—Ed.

Halévy, La Dame de Pique, has been entirely successful at the Opera Comique. Your popular composer, Balfe, was present at one of the representations. I could not get near enough to him to ask his opinion; but he seemed delighted.

JENNY LIND IN AMERICA.

(From our Correspondent at New York.)

New York, Dec. 24.

HAVING letters and papers from Baltimore, Washington, and Richmond, I can send you a little news, and an extract or two about "Jenny," who, wherever she goes, seems to sing away the hearts and the heads of the people. You know how she vanquished Webster. Well, at Baltimore she completely won over the most rabid of the religious monomaniacs, who are more rabid here than any where else in the world. A Yankee methodist would roar half a dozen London Irvingites into silence; and as for his prejudices, they are more intolerable than anything that can be dreamed of non-tolerance in its most intolerable guise. So if Jenny Lind cannot be said to have brought "Church and State" to her feet, since in these parts Church is not, she has at any rate conquered State and Pulpit—which was still more difficult. Read the following dolorous bit, cut out of a letter from Baltimore:—

"Baltimore, Dec. 16—5 p.m.

"We have a dull, gloomy day, with an incessant and soaking rain, which adds to its cheerless aspect. The change of weather and the departure of Jenny Lind are the constant themes of conversation; and, indeed, it will be some time before the remembrance of her concerts in this city ceases to afford a subject of admiration. But she is now in Washington, and I doubt not has already commenced to exercise that charm over the minds of the people that attends her presence every where.

"Several of our ministers of different denominations attended her concerts here, while some refused to attend on account of their being given in a theatre, and others refused to attend them any where. As there was considerable diversity of opinion as to the propriety of attending them among the church membership, especially when given in a theatre, some going and some refusing to go, the subject bids fair to cause considerable stir. It seems, however, to be a subject on which each ought to be permitted to judge and act for himself. I saw, on different occasions, a Methodist, a Baptist, a Presbyterian minister, and a Catholic priest, each listening with profound admiration to the great vocalist."

A proof that ranters have ears, after all, if they lack souls. Or, perhaps, the contrast with their own mouthy music made them more keenly relish the soft tones that flow from Jenny's pretty throat.

The Washingtonites are enthusiastic about her, actually mixing up apostrophes to her and the metropolis itself—the metropolis of the greatest and rawest nation on the earth. Jenny gave two concerts—on Monday, the 16th (Dec.), and Wednesday, the 18th—both crowded and both brilliant. Benedict seems popular every where. I do not wonder at it; he is as thorough a gentleman and scholar as he is an accomplished and gifted musician. The Daily Union, a local paper, writes thus, in anticipation of Jenny's first concert:—

"The enchantress stole a march upon us all on Sunday evening. We understood that she would not reach Washington until Monday morning, but she arrived about eight o'clock on Sunday night. She puts up at Willard's Hotel, where, we have no doubt, she will have comfortable and elegant quarters—although thirteen or fourteen thousand dollars have not been expended on her furniture, as the landlord at Boston is said to have done. Jenny has already won the heart of our honest host by her cordial manner. The rumour of her arrival soon spread among the dilettanti; for soon after 12 o'clock (i.e. on Monday morning) the Marine Band gave her a splendid serenade.

"Yesterday she did not rehearse in the National Hall, but she visited the gallery of the Senate Chamber during the session; and though she attempted to pass incog. by seating herself on the back bench, and was ensconced behind her pocket handkerchief, yet she was soon discovered and became an object of intense curiosity. She slipped out of the Senate Chamber without venturing into the House of Representatives.

"As we write this hasty article (five o'clock on Monday evening), the prospects of a large audience at the concert are cheering. We have no doubt she will have a brilliant company to listen to her strains; and though it may not be as much crowded as in some of our populous cities, yet no audience in this country can be more élite. Some of the most distinguished men in this nation will be present—among them the President and his cabinet, and some of the most celebrated members of both Houses of Congress.

"She gives another concert in this city on Wednesday night. It is a compliment she will pay to the metropolis of the Union, standing here among so many elevated associations, and amid the living great men and the ashes of the great dead, to sing for the first time in America a national air. She will sing 'Hail Columbia.' She assigns the most delicate and considerate reason for preferring it to the 'Star-spangled Banner,' one of the most popular and beautiful of our national airs, though she duly appreciates all its touching beauties."

The last bit of patriotic bathos is thoroughly sublime—a mixture of Irish, French, and Yankee. I subjoin the same writer's impression of the first performance:—

"Monday night—10 o'clock.

"The first concert is over, and the brilliant concourse which assembled to hear the Queen of Song is rapidly dispersing. The dying notes of the 'Echo Song' are still vibrating on our ears; but we have scarcely time to re-echo the praises which her brilliant exhibition has called forth. It was a noble gathering, worthy of her whose silvery tones called it together—and worthy, too, of the metropolis of a great nation. In spite of the lowering skies, the vast hall was crowded, not by fashion and youth alone, but by legislators, warriors, and statesmen—men who have grown gray in the public service, and won laurels in the cabinet, the forum, and the field. The President and his cabinet were present. The colossal brow of the Massachusetts statesman was there, and by his side the marked and unmistakable features and spare form of the Kentucky orator. In another part of the hall was seen the stalwart figure of Winfield Scott. The acting Vice President, William R. King, Esq., of Alabama, honoured her by his presence. Senators and representatives of high distinction, and talent of all sorts, and beauty of every description, were there to catch the sweet and thrilling accents which fell from her lips. Jenny Lind has doubtless seen more brilliant audiences, in one sense of the word—audiences glittering with gems and emblazoned with orders of nobility; yet, national vanity apart, we doubt whether she ever has appeared or ever will appear before such an audience in Europe as greeted her last night in the city of Washington."

"National vanity apart." (!) I doubt if Jenny ever read such a criticism on her performances as that of "Monday night—10 o'clock," in the great paper of the great metropolis of the "mighty nation." I, for my own part, remember nothing to equal the "colossal brow," by the side of the "marked and unmistakable features and spare form"—not to speak of "the stalwart figure." One would think the Massachusetts statesman, the Kentucky orator, and Winfield Scott were the prominent subjects in a rare collection of wild animals. But, for heaven's sake, lose not a word of the Washington critic. Take all he says, and be thankful:—

"It is not our purpose to present a critique on the performance. We are not skilled in the terms of music, and we feel but little admiration for the descriptions of those whose critical skill consists in a dexterous use of a dictionary of phrases. Our anticipations were raised to the highest pitch—we expected to hear notes the like unto which had never before fallen upon our ear. We might occasionally have heard a few strains superior to hers; but our anticipations were more than realized by the whole performance. It was scarcely possible not to be pleased—indeed, enchanted; and the enchantment was told by the breathless stillness which settled on the audience when the first notes of the songstress were heard, succeeded only by murmurs of applause when the last note had died away: then the pent-up feelings found vent in a way that tested the solid foundations of the vast hall. It is not the vocal powers of Jenny Lind alone which call our people around her; nor is it her genius alone that commands their admiration; nor is it among the inhabitants of great cities alone, thirsting for excitement, that she is most esteemed. Her unobtrusive modesty—her meek virtues—her open-handed charity—were known among us before she ever saw the shores of the Western World. The people of America have been told these things. They have read her history, and they have seen how she has arisen from obscurity to fame; yet carrying all her homely virtues with her—clinging to them amidst scenes of splendour that have dazzled many and made them dizzy. Had we “no music in our soul”—if we were not “moved by the concord of sweet sounds”—we would still pay her our homage; for she is the representative in Europe of REPUBLICAN VIRTUES. Titled vice has felt abashed before their pure lustre; and hereditary rank, tricked off with garters and ribands, has been made to give place to a superior nobility.”

It would surely have been more discreet in the Editor of the Daily Union of rhodomontade and spare intelligence, to have sent some person to the concert who was “skilled in the terms of music,” and who did feel some “admiration” for those whose “critical skill” enabled them to write upon a matter of art, without exhibiting an enormous amount of impertinence and ignorance, like this swaggering booby, who styles poor Jenny (God bless her!) “the representative in Europe of REPUBLICAN VIRTUES.” Does the ninny-hammer imagine, forsooth, that there is no virtue but in republican America, some of whose states, by the infamous, disgusting, loathsome and black-hearted traffic in human beings, are degraded far below the level of cannibal countries, where men eat men, being ignorant and uncivilized? Until this huge and pestiferous cancer be cut away from the body corporate of the (dis)United States, let not an American dare to wag his tongue about virtue, freedom, and that sort of thing. While this filthy blotch remains unscorched by the caustic of self-condemnation, let those of the states who feel that it is sinful, blasphemous, and cruel, go down on their bended knees day by day, and petition that their CHRISTIAN land be not speedily destroyed by fire and brimstone, or overrun by locusts and flying lizards. Slavery, in a country where the religion of the gentle Christ is practised, would appear at first sight inconceivable—as hard to believe as that those who tolerate, much less who practise it, are Christians. But in America there are many singular anomalies—anomalies for which another nation would be hooted. And now for the criticism of the Washington man.

“Were we to specify particular beauties, we would say that the Bird Song, the last half of every stanza of “Home, Sweet Home,” the Swedish Herdsman’s or Echo Song, were the most striking strains. Jenny Lind has a very agreeable person, and a countenance of singular sweetness. In singing the Bird Song, there was an archness of manner about her that was irresistibly winning.

“It would not be just to close these hasty remarks without mentioning the splendid manner in which Mr. Burke performed the important part allotted to him: nor the plaudits won by the Germania Band, under the able management of Benedict; nor the admirable manner in which all parts of the entertainment were conducted. (!)

“The next concert will be on Wednesday night. Miss Lind will then sing, for the first time, our national air, ‘Hail Columbia.’ The programme of proceedings will be found in another column. It is useless to invite a crowded house.

“The beautiful National Hall, which has risen like an exhalation, has approved itself not only for its strength, but for its musical adaptation. It was as clear as a bell—and not an echo returned to vex the most critical ear. We congratulate the city upon such an acquisition.”

It appears pretty certain, that among “republican virtues” the intelligent appreciation of music does not take rank. Perhaps, however, friend Barnum may reform the Washingtonians in this particular. He, after all, (as Shelley said of the poets) is the “unacknowledged legislator of the (American) world.”

Richmond is not behind hand, by any means. I send you the briefest notice of the “Lind concert” that I can find among my papers. It is from the Daily Dispatch of the 21st December—a local paper:—

“The concert last night was indeed, taken altogether, the grandest affair of the kind ever beheld in this city. The house was crowded with the largest and gayest audience ever congregated in the Richmond Theatre. It was worthy of the term brilliant. The stage alone had a large audience. On either hand, (a space being left in the middle for the orchestra), the benches rose the full width of the stage, and were crowded with spectators.

“The performances were admirable. Jenny Lind’s voice was in fine condition, and she did herself full justice. Her artless and gentle manner won for her the admiration of all. Her ‘Home, Sweet Home,’ and the ‘Swiss Herdsman’s Song,’ as in other places, were the favourites.

“Belletti elevated himself greatly in our estimation. The building enabled him to be better appreciated than when we heard him in that vast round house, Castle Garden. His ‘Largo al factotum,’ was most excellent.

“Burke’s solo was most capitally performed. The orchestra was grand, and led with his wonted skill by that great master, Benedict.

“We have not time to say more in the way of ‘criticism.’ Every body seemed delighted. If any of those present should ever regret the money they paid for the entertainment, we are sure a feeling of regret did not get a chance to enter their minds until the concert was over.”

Did they regret it “when the concert was over?” I hope not!

In the same paper we have more accounts of the “Nightingale’s” benevolence, with other curious matters:—

“NOBLE CHARITY OF JENNY LIND.—We have authority for saying, that Jenny Lind yesterday gave One Thousand Dollars to the ‘Female Orphan Asylum’ of Richmond. Charities like this show the benevolent disposition of this sweet vocalist, and constitute a large share of the claim to that astonishing popularity which she has gained in the world. This humane tribute will cause her to be gratefully remembered in Richmond years after she is gone.

“A beautiful bouquet was thrown on the stage last night, just after the song of ‘Home, Sweet Home.’ It was prepared by the little hands of the Orphans, and presented through their matron to Jenny Lind.

“Jenny Lind yesterday visited the Asylum and sang for the Orphans.”

“PICKPOCKETS (Republican).—Our caution yesterday did not fully effect the object we desired. Several persons were relieved of their pocket-books at the Theatre yesterday morning while passing through the crowd which had assembled there for tickets. One of our friends called at our office yesterday to inform us that he also had his pocket-book stolen at an early hour in the morning, while purchasing a railroad ticket at the depot office on Broad Street.

“Burglars are also about, and have commenced operations. The particulars have been furnished us, but we have been requested to suppress them for the present.”

On the evening of Thursday, the 19th, Jenny was serenaded at her window, by a party of Germans, who advanced and departed in procession, by torch light. They sang a harmony lied, in the German tongue.

“Jenny Lind Opera Glasses,” and “Jenny Lind Opera Sacks,” are prodigally announced, besides Jenny Lind all sorts of matters. Here is one of the advertisements, from the Daily Union of Washington:—

“Jenny Lind Opera Sacks.”

WE will open on Monday, the 16th instant, a splendid assortment of Jenny Lind Opera Sacks; also the latest Paris styles of velvet, cloth, and silk elocks. These choice articles are consigned to us from the North, and will be for sale only for a few days. Great bargains will be given. They will be exposed for examination in the room over our store.

P. H. HOOE & CO.,

Pensylvania Avenue, between 7th and 8th streets. Dec. 15, d4tif. [Intel. & Repub.]”

Hoe, dear! The others are longer, but much of a colour. If you would like to see the kind of programme Jenny gives, here is one of the second concert at Washington. It may serve as a good specimen. You may as well quote it entire; as it stands, preserving the Italian orthography, which I have no time to correct.

Mademoiselle Jenny Lind

Will give her forty-third grand concert in America, and positively her last in Washington, at the new National Hall, on Wednesday Evening, December 18th, 1850.

PROGRAMME.PART I.

Overture - - - (Zampa) - - - Herold.
Cavatina—"Viraiviso"—(La Sonnambula)—Signor Belletti Bellini.
Aria—"Perche' nor ho del vento"—(Lucia de Lammermoor)—Md'le JENNY LIND - - - Donizetti.
Fantasia on the flute—Mr. Seede - - - Briccialde.
Ballad—"Take this lute"—Md'le JENNY LIND. - - Bendite.

PART II.

Overture - - - (Crown Diamonds) - - - Auber.
Scena and Aria—"Casta Diva"—(Norma)—Md'le JENNY LIND - - - Belini.
Aria—"Mili rampolli"—(La Cenerentola)—Signor Belletti - - - Rosini.
Ballad—"Home, Sweet Home"—words by John Howard Payne—(Clari)—Md'le JENNY LIND - - - Bishop.
Grand March from the Prophete - - - Meyerbeer.
The Bird Song—Md'le JENNY LIND - - - Taubert.
Il Portezlione—Signor Belletti - - - Balf.
Horn obligato—Mr. Schmitz.
"Hail Columbia," which will be sung for the first time in America by Md'le JENNY LIND.

Conductor—Mr. BENEDICT.

An orchestra, composed of the most eminent solo performers, from the Jenny Lind Concerts, New York, led by Mr. Joseph Burke, and the whole of the Germania Musical Society, has been engaged for the occasion.

Doors open at 6 o'clock; concert to commence at 8 o'clock.

No checks will be issued.

The grand piano used upon this occasion has been kindly furnished by Mr. Fischer, at Stationers' Hall, on Pennsylvania Avenue, where it will be offered for sale after the concert.

The price of seats has been fixed at 7 dol., 5 dol., 4 and 3 dol. Diagrams of the hall may be seen at Willard's Hotel, where an office has been opened, and where seats may be secured. Every Ticket sold will have a number, which will secure the purchaser a specific seat.

Programmes containing the words of the songs in Italian, German, French, and English, have been prepared, and may be obtained in the hall. Price, 25 cents.

The public are respectfully informed that this is positively the last concert which Md'le Jenny Lind can possibly give in Washington, as she is announced to sing in Richmond on Friday evening, the 20th instant. Dec. 17—2t.

And so, enough for the present. Next week I shall have plenty of news.

P.S.—Don't put my initials. I am going to Washington to-morrow, and am afraid of the anti-abolitionists.

Original Correspondence.

DUSSEK.

To the Editor of the "Musical World."

DEAR SIR,—Some years ago I had the pleasure of sending you a memoir of my uncle, J. L. Dussek, which was honoured with your approbation; but I can remember now that I did not sufficiently expatiate on his lighter works, which ought first to be given to the student, before he attempts any of the grand sonatas or concertos.

Will you allow me, now, to recommend his op. 6 (six airs with variations) op. 9, No. 1; op. 12, No. 1; op. 14, 16, 19, 24, (the sonata, dedicated to Mrs. Chinnery), 25, 31, and 62—the "Consolation." After having mastered them, the student may venture on op. 35 and 44 (dedicated to Cleменти), the Fantasia and Fugue op. 50, dedicated to Cramer—"Le Retour a Paris," op. 64, (in A flat—known as "Plus Ultra") the grand concerto in G minor (op. 49), and last, not least, "L'Invocation." The "Student" having become thoroughly familiar with these need not be afraid of any modern fantasia of Thalberg, Chopin, Henselt, or Liszt.

Wishing you, dear sir, the compliments of the season,
I remain, yours, sincerely and obliged,

P10 CIANCHETTINI.

Cheltenham, 5th Jan., 1851.
7, Northwick Terrace, Montpellier Grove.

JULLIEN—JETTY TREFFZ—VIVIER.

WE cite with pleasure the following glowing apostrophe to the merits of three popular artists, well deserving of the public, and not unworthy the praises so lavishly distributed by our seldom transported contemporary, The Manchester Courier.

"M. Jullien has successfully proved the hold he has upon the goodwill of the musical people of Manchester, by assembling in the Free-trade Hall, despite the soaking rains and muddy streets which the last few days have been distinguished for, immense congregations of people, varying from 3,000 to 4,000 nightly. He has continued that fulness of attraction, which we noticed last week in referring to the first concert, judiciously chequering his entertainments with works by such masters as Beethoven and Mendelssohn, to suit the taste of those who, content with lighter strains, occasionally have a relish for and an appreciation of music of the highest class.

"Madlle. Jetty Treffz, the vocalist who accompanies M. Jullien on his provincial tour this year, has so won on the feeling of her audience by her style of ballad-singing, effective and beautiful in its unadorned simplicity, that she has not yet sung a song without being encored, and on Wednesday she excited quite a furor. With "Home, sweet home," and the not a whit less charming "Trab, trab," in her repertoire, Jetty Treffz will long hold her place among those vocalists of the present day, who win public favour and approbation through the display of feeling and sentiment, rather than by the elaboration and ornament of all they undertake. It is not often we see an audience wrought up to such a pitch of enthusiasm as on Wednesday night, when "Trab, trab," was repeated for the second time; and the lady left the platform amid the vociferous plaudits of the whole assembly.

"Vivier's horn-playing is so absolutely wonderful, that sceptical people have denied the possibility of such sounds being produced from the instrument on which he is now, for a time, displaying his powers. But such persons should suspend their judgment, or, at least, withhold the expression of it, until an opportunity is afforded the artist, which we hope soon will be, of exhibiting his equal power over the violin, an instrument that in his hands, we are assured by authorities of high standing, seems to laugh at the limits men have set to its powers, and in mere vagrant humour utters unheard-of melodies and harmonies. He gave Schubert's serenade on Wednesday night, and on being encored he re-appeared and substituted his own wondrous accumulation of difficulties. It was superior to the serenade, which was marred by injudicious piano-forte playing, several of the passages, that require profound silence to give them effect, being lost amid the loud tinkling of the other instrument."

Those who know him intimately will at once respond to what the Courier has so eloquently set forth in respect of that peculiar style of "fiddling," which is one of the most singular endowments of Vivier—musicien universel de naissance, preux chevalier d'origine, homme aimable et spirituel (qui chevauche en devisant gaisment) par excellence.

LIVERPOOL.—"The Infant Marie," as she is termed, made (according to announcement, at least) her last appearance at the Concert Hall last evening, before a numerous company. The efforts of Mr. Graham's little pupil upon the piano included a fantasia on English airs by Czerny, "Non Piu Mesta," and other pieces. The songs she gave were "Haunt ye the Mountain," the "Trab, Trab," of Jetty Treffz, "Home, sweet home," &c., while she accompanied her elder sister in the sparkling duet of W. H. Holmes, called "The Swiss Maidens." The songs of "Jenny Jones" and "I'm Ninety-five," Marie sang in costume. Mr. Graham, also, gave several of Russell's songs.—Liverpool Times.

Reviews of Music.

"ANTHEM,"—IN THAT DAY.—Composed by Dr. G. J. Elvey.
J. SURMAN.

WE mentioned the fact, in our last number, of this anthem having been performed at St. George's Chapel, Windsor, before the Queen, Dr. Elvey himself, organist of the chapel, presiding. The composition is dedicated to H.R.H. Prince Albert, K.G., and is a worthy offering to that illustrious amateur. The aim of Dr. Elvey, in writing this anthem, has evidently been to bring into prominence the contrapuntal element of the church style. Besides two carefully worked choral fugues, in which the clearness of the four-part writing and the absence of superfluous modulation might be advantageously consulted by some composers of the present day whom we need not mention, the whole of the opening chorus is cleverly constructed according to canonic form, the imitations being all in the strict manner of those esteemed Italian masters who may be said to be represented by Leo, Porpora, Durante, and Clari, and who are justly considered the patriarchs of vocal counterpoint. Dr. Elvey excels more—at least as well as we may judge from the specimen before us—in effects derivable from the combination of voices than in solo songs and recitatives; and his bias is shown by the short duration of the two or three solos to be found in the present anthem, the only exception being the alto air in E flat, "The Lord is exalted," which being very smooth and melodious, would have admitted, we think, of longer development. Even in this instance the tune is most effective when accompanied by the harmony of the chorus. As coda to this accompanied air the second and, in our opinion, best, because closest and briefest of the fugues we have mentioned, appears. The only objection we have to Dr. Elvey's anthem, the perusal of which has afforded us much gratification, is that it ends in the subdominant of the tonal key; the opening recitative and chorus being in B flat, while the final chorus is in E flat. Probably, however, Dr. Elvey may have a theory of his own, to colour and excuse this deviation from the rules laid down by the great masters. We should be glad to be made acquainted with his views on the subject, and take leave of his anthem with the hope that Mr. Surman will give us an opportunity of hearing it with a competent chorus and orchestra.

Provincial.

MUSIC AT MANCHESTER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

M. Charles Halle's sixth and last Classical Chamber Concert took place at the Assembly Rooms, Manchester, on Thursday, the 26th ult. The Programme was as follows:—

PART I.

Second Grand Trio—Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello,
In A Flat, Op. 52. - - - Mayseder.
Grand Sonata—Pianoforte, in D Minor, Op. 49 - - - Weber.

PART II.

Grand Trio—Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello, in D,
Op. 70, No. 1 - - - Beethoven.
Variations—Pianoforte and Violoncello—(Sur un Theme de Handel.) - - - Beethoven.
Miscellaneous Selection—Pianoforte—Prelude and Fugue
In F Minor - - - Mendelssohn.
In B " " "Poeme d'amour" - Henselt.

Again we had novelty, and variety, the entire of the above being quite different from any former programme this season. The taste of the selection cannot be disputed, yet the pieces given possessed fewer charms, or touching interest, than those of any preceding concert of the series. Mayseder, Weber, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and Henselt, made a formidable array of names, and the selections from their works called for qualities in their execution, as great as any of them. Still, there was a want of warmth, as though they lacked the fire of inspiration; the mechanical difficulties and combinations were but too apparent, and the skill no less so, in the composition and performance; but we did not feel those glorious harmonies and strains, that are so difficult to describe, yet so continually occurring, in most of the chamber compositions of the "great masters." The result was evident in the applause, which was scant, and given more in justice to the faultless execution of the three clever players, than to the stirring power of the music.

With all this, however, be it understood, the concert was of a high character, and only suffered in comparison with its precursors. It would be difficult to hear such a programme, and such a performance elsewhere in the Provinces. Mayseder's Trio is perhaps as good an example as could have been selected of his style; the subjects are pleasing enough, especially in the adagio and finale. It was very finely played, and as warmly received as anything during the evening. Hallé, Baetens, Lidel, were all good, as usual; the violin was prominent, and Baetens played his part in excellent style; we fancy however, that he was again troubled with a refractory first-string, the only drawback being now and then a slight whistling in the higher stops. Hallé gave the pianoforte part most brilliantly. We never liked Lidel better; his tone, when taking his turn at the melody with Baetens (the pianoforte giving the accompaniment) was all that could be desired, his playing throughout being distinguished by high finish.

Weber's sonata requires to be better known to be appreciated. It did not fall so gratefully on our ear, or reach the mind in the satisfactory way that Beethoven's do. It is immensely difficult, yet Hallé gave it entirely from memory, and his great talent had ample room for display in the fire demanded by the allegro, the delicacy of touch and expression in the andante, and the rapidity and brilliancy of finger in the finale. Beethoven's Trio was nobly played, and the theme, with variations, a treat not often afforded at these concerts—a theme with variations—but the variations by Beethoven, and on a theme by Handel, the well-known subject from Judas Maccabæus, "See the Conquering Hero comes." It was finely executed by both performers. What a loss to the musical world of Manchester, if Charles Hallé leave us! Hallé's final display was an interesting selection, which would have been more worthily received and applauded, had the preceding Sonata and Trio not been so long and trying. Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in F minor—and Henselt's melody were both well given; the latter winds up with the subject, à l'arpeggio for both hands, in the Thalberg style. Hallé, no doubt, would have received a cordial farewell cheer on retiring from his ardent admirers, but for the fact, noticed at the foot of his programme—that there is to be one more Concert—the last before the beautiful Assembly Rooms are pulled down (to build warehouses on the site)!—on the 11th of January.

Jullien—"the mighty Jullien," made his appearance the same night (as Hallé's Concert), at the Free Trade Hall—and, as usual, had a bumper.—Again on Saturday, the 28th, and on Monday, the 30th (when we had the pleasure to assist), and on New Year's Day,—winding up with a Bal costumé, on the 2nd instant.

Jullien never had a more successful trip to Manchester; but how is it he only gives us five nights in all (including the Bal) when he first announced seventeen? He assigns a reason, certainly,—that the French Drummers could not get so long a leave of absence. But was it not a piece of finesse on the part of the clever conductor?—The seventeen nights thus dwindling into five, caused every one to be anxious to go—and a regular cram every night was the consequence at the Free Trade Hall. Jullien so well understands the art of attracting John Bull, that we are surprised at nothing he does: his tact is consummate—his address popular. What can be a better example than his Great Exhibition Quadrille? As we were present on Monday Evening, we can speak in the highest terms of his orchestra—than which, he never had a better in Manchester. Besides the French Drummers and their Tambour

Major, both unique in their way, there were, Koenig, Winterbottom, Pratten, Jarrett, Summers, Collinet, Viotti, Collins, Lavigne, Sonnemberg, Baker, &c., besides the inimitable Vivier, and the ever charming Jetty Treffz. We were glad to see the new members of the Concert Hall Orchestra doing duty as seconds—oboe (Mr. Jennings), second clarinet (Mr. Sorge), and Mr. Waud amongst the violoncellos.

A more exciting scene than during the performance of the national anthem we never beheld—the vast body of the hall presented a sea of human heads (“hats off,” of course), every body standing, and every corner filled, even to the remote extremes of the galleries. The applause was rapturous and prolonged. Jullien now seldom omits something of the classic in his programme, and on this occasion we had the andante from the C Minor Symphony of Beethoven, and the Allegro and Storm from the Pastorale of the same composer. Monsieur Vivier's solos on the horn are enough to convince the veriest sceptic of his amazing power over that intractable instrument. To describe his performance technically is impossible—we can but express our admiration of his expression and tone, the finest we ever listened to on a brass instrument. Jetty Treffz' songs, especially the “Trab, Trab,” are pre-eminently her own. Anything more charming in its simple way we would not wish to hear. Everything she sings is encored.

Foreign.

LILLE.—The performances of Mlle. Charton continue to attract the amateurs of Lille to the Opera, and to ensure a prosperous state of affairs to the treasury. The Song d'une Nuit d'Eté of Ambroise Thomas has proved a great hit, and some connoisseurs, who have seen the original representative of Queen Elizabeth at the Opera Comique, the celebrated Madame Ugalde, do not hesitate to say that Mlle. Charton is as good in every respect. It is not yet known who will succeed our charming prima donna. She positively leaves us at the end of the month.

ROME.—Miss Catherine Hayes made her debut at Rome on the 26th ult., at the Teatro Apollo in the Puritani, with brilliant success. The cavatina, “Qui la voce,” and the “polacca” both created a furor. Miss Hayes was recalled thrice after the performance of each. The Romans find that the voice of the charming Inglese has wonderfully improved in strength and quality, and with respect to her singing, in the present state of the art in Italy, they very rarely hear any thing so good.

VIENNA.—The Italian Opera opens in March. The engagements are already made, and consist of Madame Tadolini, prima donna, Fraschini, primo tenore, Bordas, second tenor, and De Bassini, barytone. The contralto and basso are not mentioned.

Dramatic Intelligence.

DRURY LANE.

No one can complain that Mr. Anderson does not labour to produce variety. To back up the new pantomime, Humpty Dumpty, the vast improvement of which, owing to judicious curtailment, we have already noticed, he has changed the performance almost every evening; in addition to which, a great attraction is announced at the foot of the bills, in the shape of a new comedy, called Old Love and the New, from the pen of Mr. Sullivan, the intelligent author of The Beggar on Horseback, which produced so favourable an impression at the Haymarket, three or four years ago.

On Monday, Shakspeare's Coriolanus introduced Mr. Anderson, for the first time, in a part, which, since the days of John Kemble, no one but Mr. Macready has successfully impersonated. Mr. Vandenhoff has been highly praised, it is true, in the character, by some who profess to remember the “immortal John” and are eloquent about the Kemble “sweep.” But let that pass. “Sweep” apart, Coriolanus is, beyond controversy, one of Mr. Vandenhoff's best Shaksperian assumptions; and though to our way of judging, certainly not the Roman patriot-despot, as Shakspeare imagined and painted him—covering the meagre skeleton of Plutarch with natural flesh and blood, and making a fire-eyed hero out of a philosophical abstraction—we have little doubt it was the Coriolanus which John Kemble conceived and acted, and as such, acceptable to those in the habit of rating the Kemble school higher than the Shakspeare genius. That we are not of these our readers must have been long aware; and Kemble being no longer living, while the text of Shakspeare has been in numerous instances restored by Mr. Macready—for which all honor to him, were he not the great actor he is—it seems hardly probable we shall now be converted. Mr. Anderson's view of Coriolanus appears to partake of the Kemble tradition, the Vandenhoff actuality, the Macready heat, and the Anderson manner, in quantities of equal weight, which render it extremely difficult to analyse. His carriage combines the dignity of the man with the haughtiness of the despot, and his aim, indeed, throughout the play, is apparently to elaborate and bring out in strong relief the tyrannical element of Coriolanus's character. In the scene with Aufidius, the way in which, as it were, he spiritually towered above Mr. Cooper, the representative of that personage, whose stolid and more tranquil demeanour formed an effective contrast, demonstrated this in a strong light. His attitude when shrouded in the cloak, in the Volscian temple, at the foot of the statue of Mars, was graceful and imposing; while his hesitation in advancing toward his ancient enemy, Aufidius, was unaffected, manly, and correct. In his scene with the “voices,” his contempt was so vividly depicted, that it almost assumed the hue of disgust; still further exposing his peculiar interpretation of the Coriolanian monomania—a hearty loathing of the plebeian nature. In the last scene, with his mother, wife and child, before Aufidius and the Volscian army, Mr. Anderson displayed more pathos than we ever remember him to have shown; and his ultimate concession to the family of petitioners shewed an easy abandonment of Roman stoicism. After the tremendous altercation with Aufidius, when smitten by the Volscian daggers, he falls at the feet of his destroyers, his death was wonderfully sudden, and managed with singular adroitness. Mr. Anderson was applauded in all the great points of the play, and of course recalled at the end, by his pleased and enlightened auditors.

Mr. Cooper's Tullus Aufidius was judicious in the beginning and energetic at the conclusion; but we should have greatly preferred this eminently serviceable actor in the part of Menenius Agrippa, which was laboriously played by Mr. Emery, who had evidently studied it intently and by the lamp. Mrs. Weston, as Volturnia, spoke the dialogue with Coriolanus in the last scene with an immense deal of spirit and emphasis; Miss F. Vining was pleasing and intelligent in the little part of Virgilia; Mr. Cathcart put himself into a variety of attitudes, and essayed a number of vocal inflections “after Macready”—exhibiting, nevertheless, his usual earnestness and discrimination; and the first and second “voices” were embodied with a great deal of rough character and natural humour, by Messrs. Artaud and R. Romer. We should add that the Tribunes of Messrs.—we forget their names—were eager and tribunely.

On Tuesday, As You Like it was given, with a cast that embraced the élite of the company, Mr. Anderson alone being absent. Mr. Vandenhoff was the Jacques, Mr. Cathcart the Duke, Mr. Emery the Touchstone (for the first time), Mrs. Nisbett, Rosalind, Miss F. Vining, Celia, and Mrs. Walter Lacy, Audrey. Mr. Vandenhoff's Jacques is well known as one of his most studied and finished performances. The two famous speeches—that which belongs to the Duke, but which the modern stage distribution has transferred to Jacques, to render the part of more importance—(we mean the speech commencing, "Now, my co-mates, and brothers in exile")—and the still more celebrated "A fool, a fool, a motley fool, I met a fool i' the forest"—were both careful specimens of elaborate reading and pointed elocution.

Mrs. Nisbett's Rosalind is still better known than Mr. Vandenhoff's Jacques; not that we feel inclined to say that the vivacious actress fulfilled the brilliant conception of the author completely; but there was a laughing grace, a fund of spirits, and a glow of life in all she did and said which charmed the spectator and disarmed criticism. Mrs. Nisbett was heartily applauded throughout, and the audience seemed to be perfectly satisfied.

Mr. Emery essayed "Touchstone" for the first time, and displayed a thorough familiar acquaintance with the traditions of the part, allied to a close application of its quaintness and humour. "Touchstone," however, is not a character to be mastered at one attempt, and we expect, from what we saw on Tuesday night, to welcome a still further improvement in Mr. Emery.

We must speak in unmeasured terms of Mrs. Walter Lacy's Audrey, which was conceived in the genuine spirit of the comedy of Shakspeare, and acted to the very life. In the hurry of the pantomime week we omitted to notice the first appearance, for some years, of this accomplished lady on that stage of which she was a few years only the chief ornament. Mrs. Walter Lacy made her rentrée (as the French term it) at Drury-lane, as Ophelia, in Hamlet, and was welcomed with enthusiasm by the whole audience. Her performance of the gentle daughter of Polonius was signalised by exceeding grace and gentleness, and that unaffectedness which so essentially appertains to that exquisite creation. Audrey, in As You Like It, is a character so totally different from Ophelia, that it is sufficiently remarkable for an actress to assume both even respectably. But Mrs. Walter Lacy's performance of the simple country girl was not less artistic and engagingly true than her impersonation of the court-maiden, who runs mad for love of Hamlet. We have seldom seen more effect produced in the dialogue, although Audrey has from time to time brought out the genius of the greatest of comic actresses. The costume of Mrs. Walter Lacy was the most appropriate for the character we have ever seen. Nor was it the less effective for being correct. Nothing in the way of dress could be prettier or more striking.

The Love Chase and the Lady of Lyons have also been played during the week. The entertainments continue to prove attractive, and the public has no cause to complain of the efforts of the management to cater for its amusement. The only thing we would suggest is an occasional extra attention to the mise en scene, which, though sometimes unexceptionable (as in the last scene of Coriolanus), is at other times indifferent. All the acting business is in such condition as might be expected under the supervision of Mr. Anderson himself, assisted by so old and experienced a performer as Mr. W. Bennett; and on the other side, the stage directions could not be in abler hands than those of Mr. W. West.

HAYMARKET.

MACREADY'S FAREWELL PERFORMANCES.

THE novelty of the week has been the Stranger, in which Mr. Macready personated the hero for the first and only time during the series of his farewell performances. Kotzebue's drama has ever been a favourite with the public, and has engaged the attention of all the great actors of the present era, from John Kemble downwards, who have successively and successfully delineated the principal personage. If the legitimate object of tragedy were to draw tears from the auditors, then indeed might the Stranger rank with the most touching plays of Shakspeare; but the legitimate object of tragedy is to do something more in the way of touching the feelings than to draw tears—of which a great variety exists, from crocodile's to baby's—and as the play of the once praised, now despised, German dramatist and politician, does little or nothing more than make the audience "blubber," it has no pretensions whatever to the name of tragedy, which, as Aristotle says, should "shake the soul to purify it." The story is cleverly worked out, and domestic misery tolerably painted; but when the performance is over, we discover that our time has been expended in listening to a quantity of maudlin twaddle, a sort of puling logic that descends no further than the eyes, an impotent defence of connubial aberration, a weak shield, which the sword of true faith would shatter at one touch into a thousand fragments. Nor can we recal a single poetic thought, or natural sentiment in the whole of the five acts. Yes—there is one line in the play which always pleased us:—when Mrs. Haller says, "And has Saturday come back so soon again?"—which nevertheless is the very quintessence of weak bathos.

Of Mr. Macready's performance, however, we cannot speak too highly. It was intensely earnest and life-like throughout, and made a deep impression on the audience. The scene in which he recounts the story of the abduction of his wife—though intrinsically mawkish and contemptible—was acted with admirable skill and intense feeling. The last scene, as well as the sophisticated position would admit, was a masterpiece of pathos, and left few "dry eyes" in the house, except those of some modern philosophers who liked not Kotzebue. The applause was extravagant, both during the performance and at the end, when the great actor, who so soon will vanish from the mimic scene, was recalled with a voice of thundering unanimity.

Mrs. Warner appeared to remarkable advantage in Mrs. Haller. The character of the frail wife, whom circumstances adverse to her illicit joys have made repentant, is certainly one of the happiest assumptions of this very careful and artificial actress, who rarely fails to impress us with the certainty that it is a real play we are beholding, and not a passage of life in action. Mrs. Warner, as well as Mr. Macready, was profusely applauded.

Mr. Buckstone was deliciously, nay convulsively, humorous, as Peter; and Mrs. Fitzwilliam's Charlotte, as upstart, pert, and prettily saucy, as the author could have desired. Miss P. Horton, the Savoyard Minstrel, sang the old song, "I have a silent sorrow here," with much sweetness and expression.

The other performances of the week have been Macbeth (Monday); Henry the Eighth (Wednesday); Richelieu (Thursday); Henry IV. and The Jealous Wife (Friday).

On Tuesday, Mr. Macready commences the first of the series of his final performances of each of his most celebrated characters, at the conclusion of which the "last of the Romans" will no longer exist, but as a pleasant and impressive image in the memory of the play-goer.

SADLER'S WELLS.

We hold it to be very doubtful whether the revival of Webster's tragedy, The Duchess of Malfi would have obtained the same success at any other theatre that it has met with here, where it has already been performed some five and twenty times, and continues to be played to nightly overflows. In what way the theatre has obtained this singular prestige we must leave to the speculation of the reader. The chief fault of the piece—which acts like a ghastly and sublimated melo-drama—is the catastrophe, which, had it been equal to the rest, nothing could have prevented the tragedy, with all its barbarous and dreamy horror—from becoming, like Beaumont and Fletcher's Bridal—a stock piece of the modern stage. As it is, we go with the "Ayes" so far as to hope that Mr. Phelps will give us another play from the same author.

The new Pantomime promises to have a long run. In fact, Webster's tragedy and the Christmas festivities—strange and unnatural alliance—have been mutually supporting each other.

MARYLEBONE.

The musical play, The Slave, has been revived here, with Miss R. Isaacs as Zelinda. This young lady is a pupil of Miss Kelly's. Her talent, however, is rather vocal than histrionic; she has a pleasing though not powerful soprano voice, and obtained encores in two of her songs. She possesses also a considerable share of personal attractions, and acts with intelligence, if not with any great degree of spirit. As The Slave has evidently been revived as a "fill up" during the holiday season, criticism would be superfluous, especially since the performance seemed highly gratifying to the youthful visitors who crowded the theatre.

We are glad to say that the business has been good ever since Mr. Stammers undertook the management. His Pantomime is the best produced this Christmas, which is not surprising since it is by the author of Bluff King Hal, &c., &c., (Mr. Rodwell).

ADELPHI.

The new Christmas piece here, the Tarantula King, by Albert Smith, is as pleasant a thing of the kind as the festive season has produced. It is tersely written, admirably acted, and well supplied with those indispensable requisites on such occasions—music and dancing. Madame Celeste dances with as much grace and agility as the most active Columbine. Miss Woolgar, the "Hero" of the piece, with her intelligent face, and quaint and sparkling humour, is as full of genial vivacity as ever, and looks irresistible in her picturesque peasant's costume. Mr. Wright, of course, came in for a share of the honours. Among the subordinate performers, we must not omit Miss Collins, who has a nice voice, and sings a very clever ballad very cleverly. The music is well selected, and arranged with taste and fancy. Mr. Mellon, the adaptor and musical director, is an excellent musician. Hence the invariable efficiency of the musical business at the Adelphi.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

M. Jullien's last concert at the Philharmonic Hall, on Tuesday evening, was attended in such numbers, that difficulty was experienced in seating them. The hall looked warm and agreeable; and Jullien, accustomed to crowded houses, appeared more serene than at the first concert. I do not insinuate that he was not previously as affable as conductor possibly could be, but Jullien is mortal, and we fancied that the unwonted sight of one or two unoccupied rows of seats disturbed the philosophical current of his ideas. However, the fact is, that Jullien, used to be spoiled, would fain have the elements themselves at his beck; the rain and clouds would then be obliged to "keep off" until his concerts were over. There was a densely crowded hall on Tuesday, and the performance, the first part of which was entirely devoted to the works of Mendelssohn, went off to the manifest delight of all present. The first piece was the symphony in A minor, composed after a visit to the Highlands of Scotland, one of the most characteristic effusions of his genius. The Adagio Cantabile, rendered with delicious smoothness, contrasted admirably with the fiery energy of the Allegro Guerriero. Mr. Viotti Collins increased our admiration of his talents by his spirited execution of the violin concerto in E minor. He was listened to most attentively by the audience, who frequently greeted him with well-deserved applause. Jetty de Treffz sang "The First Violet" in her usual charming and unassuming style; after which came the great treat of the evening—the whole of the incidental music to the Midsummer Night's Dream. The overture, so full of poetical fancies, was given with the utmost taste and smoothness, and the scherzo descriptive of the assembly of the fairy court, was played with vivacity and precision. The Interlude in A minor, the "Comic March," and the "Notturmo," equally indicated, on the part of Jullien and his excellent band, that close appreciation of the intentions of the composer, so necessary to the proper understanding of Mendelssohn's illustrations of Shakspeare. In the "Notturmo," Mr. Jarrett had an opportunity of displaying to the public of Liverpool his distinguished talent as a horn-player, so well known and appreciated in the metropolis. The "Wedding March" brought the first portion of the concert to a conclusion, amidst enthusiastic applause.

A striking novelty in the second part was Vivier's magical execution of a composition entitled "La Chasse," decidedly the most astounding of his musical feats; for in it he imitates three different horns with so much exactness that the listener can scarcely credit his senses. Jetty de Treffz sang Donizetti's "Bay of Naples," and was of course encored. On her re-appearance she sang "Home, sweet Home!" so sweetly that the unrelenting but delighted audience called her again, and only relapsed into quietness as the band commenced the accompaniment to "Trab, Trab!" which Jetty sang with so much archness that the audience, unwilling—though half inclined—to call upon her for the fourth time, gave vent to their enthusiasm in repeated salvos of applause.

The receipts of the last concert will, I trust, repay M. Jullien and the Philharmonic directors for the great trouble and expense they have encountered, and induce the popular conductor to pay us another visit as early as possible. "May he live a thousand years," to compose the most spirited of quadrilles and the most fascinating of polkas.

The first concert of the season of 1851 takes place on the 11th of February, for which Madlle. Angri, the only rival of Alboni, Mdle. Graumann, Signor Tamburini, jun., Mr. Frank Mori, pianist, and Herr Ernst, the great German violinist, are engaged.

On Wednesday, the most fashionable and delightful Dress Ball that ever took place in this town was held by M. Jullien in the Philharmonic-hall. The great attraction was, of course, the popular conductor, and his band, renowned for the unequalled style in which they play dance music. The body of the hall was entirely cleared of the seats, and presented a space for dancing which cannot be found in any other public room in England. Spectators were admitted to the galleries and boxes, and the dancers, when fatigued by their exertions, reclined in the damask covered fauteuils placed so invitingly in the saloon. The company began to arrive rapidly shortly after ten o'clock, and kept up the dancing till about half-past two in the morning. The élite of the resident nobility and gentry of Liverpool and its vicinities were present. Some objection was made to there being no lady patronesses, but as the committee only gave vouchers to those whom they knew, it was just as impossible for any unqualified person to obtain tickets. In effect, the company was as "select" and "elect" as could have been desired. Rank and wealth and beauty (which should have come first) were abundant. The "Great Jullien" was all himself, while Koenig was, as ever, king (König) of his instrument. Lord and Lady Sefton were conspicuous among the company.

The Oratorios at the Collegiate Institution are progressing satisfactorily. Elijah was performed on Wednesday; Thursday, the Messiah; Friday, Israel in Egypt; and Saturday, Judas Maccabeus. The audience, more numerous than on the former occasions, was highly gratified. Miss Ellen Lyon was encored in "From mighty kings," and would have been in "Come, ever-smiling liberty," but the same subject was repeated in a duet with Miss M. Wells, immediately following. Miss Wells was very successful in "Wise men flattering," and Mr. M. Smith in "Sound an alarm," acquitted himself well. Mr. Barnby did justice to the air, "With pious hearts." "See the conquering hero comes," as a duet between Miss E. Lyon and Miss M. Wells, as a trio with Miss Linacre, and as a chorus created an equal sensation. The choruses went, on the whole, very steadily. The duet, "O lovely peace," was carefully sung by Miss E. Lyon and Miss M. Wells. Altogether this was the most gratifying performance that has been given, and we look forward with satisfaction to a repetition on Friday. On Monday evening Deborah was performed.

The new Christmas pantomime continues to attract at the Theatre Royal, and will continue the chief feature for weeks to come. The regiment of people, visible and invisible, who take part in its active and various machinery, are now well drilled; all works smoothly, and a right merry entertainment is the result.

Mrs. Fanny Kemble Butler is going to give four Readings from Shakespeare at the Philharmonic Hall—rather a large arena, by the way. Her engagement is with the committee of the Philharmonic Society.

Messrs. Saqui and Miranda, two young vocalists of considerable local fame, gave their first concert at the Concert-hall, Lord Nelson-street, on Tuesday evening. The attendance was but middling, the body of the hall being the only place well filled. The beneficiaries were well received by their friends, and encored several times. Mr. Miranda promises well. The other artists were Miss Whitnall, Mrs. Geo. Holden, Mrs. McDougall, Mr. Wallworth, and Mr. Percival. The programme was too long.

M. Franconi's troupe continues to attract at the Royal Amphitheatre. During the week the performances have been novel and varied. Herr Maus's feats on the slack-wire are incredible: he balances himself on one foot, and, in this astonishing position, juggles with brass balls and twirls a hoop holding a glass filled with water round his head, without spilling a drop. M. Franconi's beautiful and docile steeds, "Mazagran" and "Waverley," and Mr. Stonette's dog "Hector," appear to be endowed with something more than instinct. The clowns vary the equestrian performances with hits and counter-hits, both spiritual and physical. The last tell best with the audience.

Liverpool, Jan. 9th, 1851.

J. H. N.

Our Scrap Book.

MELODY.—It is remarkable that the people of Europe are the only ones who have made use of the union of harmony and melody since the middle ages: antiquity seems not to have had any knowledge of it, and the Orientals do not understand it when they hear it. It would be easy to shew that the arrangement of the musical scale of some nations does not admit of harmony; and, on the other hand, that it is almost the necessary result of our gamut. Melody is of all countries and of all times; but its forms are variable, like the elements which enter into its composition. We must not imagine that melody, such as is heard in popular songs and at the theatre, has no other rules than those of fancy. The freest and most original genius, when it invents airs, obeys, unconsciously, certain laws of proportion, the effect of which is no more conventional than that of the drum upon the masses of soldiers that move at its beat. Let it not be supposed that this regularity of form affects those only who have studied the principles of music: whoever has an ear not absolutely insensible or rebellious, perceives its effect, without analyzing his sensations.—(Extracted from —; by Aurelian.)

INSTRUMENTATION.—Instrumentation is the art of employing instruments in the manner best adapted to derive from them the greatest possible effect in music. This art may be learned with time and experience; but it requires, like every other branch of music, a particular talent, and a certain instructive presentiment of the result of combinations. A composer, in arranging his music, or in making what is called the score—that is, a union of all the parts which are to concur in the general effect,—would write only at random, if he had not present to his mind the qualities of the sounds of each instrument, their accent, and the effects which result from their partial or entire combination. Sometimes, it is true, the composer obtains effects which he did not foresee; and, in other cases, those which he strives to produce, do not succeed; but, if skilled in his art, he generally attains the end which he proposes in the arrangement of the instrumentation. This faculty of foreseeing, by means of the intellectual powers alone, the effect of an orchestra, of which one is arranging the instrumentation, as if that orchestra were actually playing, is not the least of the marvels of music; it is nevertheless what always takes place, when a composer conceives any piece whatsoever; for the melody, the voices which accompany it, the harmony, the effect of the instruments, every thing, in short, is conceived at one gush, if the musician is born truly worthy of his name. As to those who only imagine these things in succession, we may be assured that their musical conception will always remain within narrow limits. Such was Grétry, who had a genius for dramatic expression and for happy melodies, but who, being but a second-rate musician, could never conceive, at once, the whole idea of a piece; whereas Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Cherubini, and Rossini, never failed to conceive, at a single attempt, the effects which they wished to produce.—(Extracted from — by Aurelian.)

Miscellaneous.

ERNST.—This celebrated violinist has gone to Manchester to play at one of the classical soirées of M. Charles Hallé. He returns to London immediately.

BALFE'S CONCERT.—All the available talent in London, including, among other talent, Mdlle. Angri and Herr Ernst, will assist, on the 27th, as we are informed, at the benefit concert of this popular composer. Balfé is still at Paris.

WASHINGTON.—Mr. Henry Burton, lessee of the Holliday and Front-street theatres of this city, has leased National Hall, and will have it fitted up immediately for a theatre, to be opened in a few weeks with Miss Davenport.—Baltimore Sun.

MR. BALFE has taken advantage of the closing of the National Concerts to take a short trip to Paris.

M. SAINTON has gone to Toulouse, his native place, on a short visit to his family.

SIG. ROMMI.—This useful and intelligent member of the Royal Italian Opera troupe has returned to London for the season.

MR. RICHARDSON.—This eminent English flutist had the honour of performing before her Majesty and Prince Albert, on Friday last, at Windsor Castle, on "Siccama's Patent Diatonic Flute."

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—The concerts next season will take place as follows:—March 10th and 24th, April 7th and 28th, May 12th and 20th, and June 9th and 23rd. Mr. Hogarth was elected secretary at a general meeting of the society, held on the 4th ult., vacant by the death of Mr. George Budd.

LIVERPOOL ASYLUM FOR ORPHAN BOYS.—Haydn's Creation will be performed at the Philharmonic Hall, on Tuesday, the 14th, for the benefit of the above-mentioned institution. The choir, band, organist, and conductor of the Philharmonic Society, with Miss Stott, Mr. Alfred St. Albin, and Mr. Armstrong, have offered their gratuitous services, and we trust that the public will come forward on the occasion.

RACHEL.—Mr. Mitchell, of the St. James's Theatre, it is said, has offered to engage Madlle. Rachel, the celebrated French actress, for the whole time of her congé (fifteen months), at the enormous sum of 800,000 francs, for St. Petersburg and the United States. As Mr. Mitchell would have to engage actors to accompany her, the total risk to him would not be much less than 50,000*l*. [We cite this anecdote for what it is worth, with the proviso that we do not believe there is any foundation for it.]

PERLET.—This most celebrated of the Molierean actors of the present century, died recently in Paris. He was interred in the church of the Notre Dame de Lorette. His funeral oration was spoken by Mons. Simson, of the Theatre Francais, one of the most legitimate of his successors.

BALFE AND BUNN.—It is said that these ancient collaborateurs and popular servants of the public, have just completed a new opera. We know not how true the report may be. One thing is certain, that Balfe appears to be the only composer who can produce out of Bunn's librettos the entire musical effect of which they are susceptible.

THE SHAPCOTT FAMILY.—This family, consisting of Mr. Shapcott and six sons, gave a concert on the sax-horns, last evening, in the Corn Exchange, which was well filled. The performance consisted of selections from Earl Mornington, Bellini, Avison, Harwood, Handel, Rossini, Jullien, Horn, Donizetti, &c., many of which secured the plaudits of the audience. A little fellow, of six years old, who played the drum in the "Drum Polka," was encored.—Maidstone Gazette.

WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—The following gentlemen have accepted the office of stewards, in addition to those already announced:—The Right Hon. The Earl of Harrowby, W. S. P. Hughes, Esq., (Mayor of Worcester), the Hon. G. Rushout, M.P., and William Hancox, Esq., of Blakeshall House, Kidderminster.—Gloucester Journal.

BATH.—On Tuesday evening Madame Anna Thillon and Mr. Hudson gave their new entertainment before a tolerably large audience. Their performances were received with considerable applause. Mr. H. C. Cooper played a fantasia at the Pump Room the same evening, the talented violinist obtaining the loudest demonstration of approval from his auditors. A series of entertainments, to be called "The Operative Concerts," are in contemplation at the Pump Room.

JULLIEN AT LIVERPOOL.—M. Jullien's second concert in the Philharmonic Hall was principally devoted to the compositions of Beethoven, the performance of which reflected great credit upon the intelligence and talents of himself and his band. The concert commenced with the overture to Fidelio, played in a highly effective manner; this was followed by Schubert's waltz, "Le Desir," one of the most simple and charming effusions of his pen (erroneously attributed to Beethoven). It is the beau ideal of a German dance tune, and was received by the audience with great delight, the variations of M. Jullien being deliciously played by the first violins, violoncellos, tenors, second violins, and contrabasses. Selections from the well known "Pastoral Symphony" followed next, after which Jetty Treffz was encored in the lied "Kennst du das land," which she sang to perfection. Mr. Viotti Collina's performance of "Il tremolo," an absurd caricature of one of Beethoven's best slow movements, was nevertheless applauded. The first portion of the concert concluded with the grand symphony in C minor, which was played entire, and listened to with attention throughout. In the second part of the concert, the performance of Jullien's chef d'œuvre, "The Great Exhibition Quadrille," in which the French drummers appear, created a furor, the audience being absolutely astounded by the volume, multitude, and novelty of the combinations. The national airs, forming solos for various instrumentalists, were listened to most attentively. The gifted Vivier was, of course, encored in his horn performance, and a similar honour was paid to Jetty Treffz, after her singing of "The Mountain Daisy," to which she replied by giving "Trab, trab," amidst boisterous manifestations of delight. The other pieces comprised a variety of polkas, valsees, &c. "Mendelssohn concert" was to be the next treat of Jullien's providing.

THE FRENCH DRUMMERS IN MANCHESTER.—Wherever they go in England, the French drummers must prove extremely attractive, as they have done here. M. Jullien, who knows well (no man better, perhaps) the direction in which the taste of the multitude goes, has not failed to make the most of the fine form of the drum-major, Barbier, and when the tambour corps are in the orchestra his noble figure is prominently displayed on a red baize platform. Barbier is a tall man, and when his head is covered by the enormous bear-skin shako, he towers to colossal proportions, realizing to us the beau ideal of those warriors with whom, in years gone by, we found it so difficult to cope. That the drummers of France, especially those who are attached to any of the Paris battalions, have vast practice upon an instrument which seems to belong most properly to martial music, no one will be disposed to deny, when they remember how greatly its use enters into their military discipline; and we certainly were prepared to witness a display of skill that has not been disappointed. Decidedly the most novel feature their performance presents, is the system of leading to which they have to attend. Their chief rises, and with an eccentric motion of his silver-headed staff of rank, sometimes not unlike an evolution in the Indian exercise, he directs the character of the roll, which bursts forth simultaneously from all at once. Another evolution of the staff in the air, to the imminent danger of those behind him, and an obedient change to some other "chant," as these exercises are named, follows; a different motion, and a consequent change, and then a gradual lowering of the uplifted arm is the signal for a corresponding softening of tone, until at last it sinks to nothing. This last is a most beautiful effect, perfectly giving the idea of a corps receding in the distance, and it has been received with delight every evening. The facility of execution and the precision possessed by these men appears to be almost perfect; and certainly the tone of their instruments is very exciting. The politesse of the corps, it should be named, has been displayed more than once by the removal of their hats during the performance of our National Anthem, and of the major, by his military salute on their behalf, in acknowledgment of the plaudits.—Manchester Courier.

LITERARY PENSIONS.—The Queen has granted pensions on the civil list of £100 a year each to Mrs. Belzoni, the aged widow of the celebrated traveller, and to Mr. Poole, the author of "Paul Pry," and of several contributions to periodical literature, who is, we regret to hear, a great sufferer from bodily infirmities.—Observer.

ORATORIO AT ST. JOHN'S, DUKINFIELD.—We scarcely know anything more interesting than the spectacle of a poor congregation seeking to help themselves, and putting into operation plans enabling them to secure the aid of the wealthy in the attempt, when receiving it as patronage or eleemosynary relief. The church of St. John's, Dukinfield, has been burdened with a debt of considerable amount, ever since its erection, some five years ago, while the congregation, with only two or three exceptions, is composed of labouring men, whose earnings do not permit deductions to any large amount for charitable purposes. To rid themselves of the incubus they have projected an oratorio to be held in the church on the 20th instant, under the patronage of Mr. F. D. P. Astley, the lord of the manor. Haydn's Oratorio of the Creation has been selected, and Mrs. Sunderland has been engaged as principal soprano with other singers of talent.

PLYMOUTH.—Miss Newcomb has engaged Jullien, with Jetty Treffz, Vivier, and all the band, including the Drummers, &c., to give two Concerts, at which she herself will assist, on the 26th and 27th of February, at the Theatre Royal, Plymouth. Notwithstanding the enormous expense, Jullien's popularity and the young lady's widely circulated connection, will, there is little doubt, ensure the success of the speculation. Some of the artistes engaged at "The National Concerts," give a Musical Entertainment at Plymouth, on the 25th instant, under the direction of Captain Harry Lee Carter.

A CHORAL SOCIETY has been formed in the village of Upton St. Leonards, and it gave its first concert in the New School-room, on Thursday, the 26th ult., under the patronage of the Countess Dowwager Done.—Gloucester Journal.

THALBERG.—This eminent pianist has lately been fathered with an opera by some of the public press, which is said to be destined for the lucky Mr. Lumley, who is, peradventure, wholly unaware of the good fortune in store for him. If M. Thalberg have really written an opera it is to be hoped that he has not taxed the vocal and instrumental performers as severely as he has taxed the whole race of modern pianoforte-players, ladies and gentlemen, amateur and professional, who consume so many hours out of the twenty-four in vain endeavours to execute fantasias that should have been consigned for the especial amusement of Madame Pleyel, Liszt, Leopold de Meyer, and the composer himself, since no others can possibly accomplish them, except some few who never try.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—After three performances of the Messiah, Mendelssohn's Elijah was given by this Society, under the direction of Mr. Costa, with Misses Birch, E. Birch, Dolby, and M. Williams, and the Messrs. Lockey, Whitworth, A. Novello, &c., as principal vocalists. On this occasion, we shall content ourselves with acknowledging the very great improvement, both in voice and singing, of Miss Eliza Birch, who promises to become one of our most available concert sopranos in a very short time, if she keep pace with her recent progress. Good sopranos are rare; and there is a position open to this young lady which it depends upon herself to occupy with profit and honour. Of the general performance we shall take occasion to speak when the oratorio is repeated on the 20th. Meanwhile, it is only fair to Mr. Whitworth, who has been severely criticised by some of the journals, to state the fact that he undertook the music of Elijah at a very short notice, in consequence of the indisposition of Mr. H. Phillips, who was to have sung it.

LONDON SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—A muster of the members of this Society took place at Gerard's Hall last week, to celebrate a public anniversary. The Rev. G. Roberts presided. "Non nobis Domine" having been sung, and the ordinary toasts duly honoured, the Chairman, after proposing "Success to the London Sacred Harmonic Society," gave a summary of the progress of sacred music, and pointed out the highly beneficial effects produced by its agency throughout the civilized world. After a long and eloquent discourse, in which he freely descanted upon the growth and improvement of the new Society, and paid flattering compliments to Mr. Surman and Mr. Perry for their indefatigable exertions in its support, the reverend gentleman concluded by indulging in the hope that, as Prince Albert was a musical scholar, so also might "England's future king" love and be schooled in the "art divine," and that the day might not be very remote when their illustrious names should stand enrolled on the pages of their institution, and when, too, Exeter Hall should be honoured with their company. A number of routine toasts being disposed of and responded to, the company separated. The musical arrangements were under the supervision of Mr. Lawler.

LONDON SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—On Friday, the 27th ult., the Messiah was given by this Society to a crowded hall. The soloists on the present occasion were Mrs. Sunderland, Miss M. Williams, and Miss Henderson, Messrs. Lockey and Lawler. The merits of Mrs. Sunderland's singing are well known to the visitors of the Hall. She was most successful in the recitative, "There were Shepherds," and the song, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." She also gave "Rejoice Greatly" effectively. Miss Henderson, who made her debut here two years ago, took the soprano division of "He shall feed his Flock;" but as her exertions during the evening were confined to this one song, and as she was evidently nervous, we cannot venture to say more at present than that she has a nice voice, and is very prepossessing in appearance. Of the rest of the performers, including the chorus, it is needless to say more than that they exerted themselves zealously to promote an efficient ensemble. Will the directors inform us why it is that the beautiful duet, "Oh, Death, where is thy sting," and the chorus that follows it, are invariably omitted?

HASTINGS.—(From a Correspondent.)—A concert, the second of the season, took place on Thursday evening, at the Assembly Room, Swan Hotel, before a very crowded and elegant audience. The vocalists were Miss Dolby, Mrs. A. Newton, Mr. Bridge Frodsham, and Mr. Frank Bodda. The instrumentalists were confined to Mr. Ward (concertina), and W. H. Acraman (piano). The performers in general acquitted themselves admirably. The encores were Miss Dolby in "I would be with thee," Mrs. Alexander Newton in "Lo! here the gentle lark," Mr. Frank Bodda in "Molly Bawn" and "Largo al factotum," two compositions of different kind and merit—and Mr. Bridge Frodsham in Nelson's "Madoline." Mr. Bridge Frodsham substituted the "Lass o' Gowrie" in the repeat, which was received with marked favor by the entire audience. The entertainments afforded unequivocal satisfaction throughout.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

BULLY.—Yes.

Advertisements.

MR. BALFE'S GRAND CONCERT

WILL take place at EXETER HALL, on MONDAY Evening, JAN. 27. All the greatest talent in London will be heard on this occasion. Full particulars at Cramer, Beale, and Co's, 201, Regent-street, and all the principal Musicians. Tickets, 4s. and 2s. each; Stalls 7s.; Upper Platform, 1s.

Just Published,

BARRETT'S COMPLETE METHOD FOR THE OBOE,

COMPRISING all the New Fingerings, New Tables of Shakes, Scales, &c., with a Concise Method of making Reeds; adopted by the Royal Academy of Music, the Conservatoire Militaire of France, &c. By A. M. R. BARRETT, Professor of the Oboe at her Majesty's Theatre, the Royal Italian Opera, Le Conservatoire de Paris, &c. &c. Price 31s. 6d. London: Jullien & Co., 214, Regent-street.

VOCAL MUSIC.

Just published,

SCIPION ROUSSELOT'S new version of "TRAB, TRAB," as a Duet, Trio, Quartett, or Chorus. The celebrated Echo Chorus arranged as a Duet, with Pianoforte Accompaniment; and also his Grand Quadrille Fantastique, "THE CRYSTAL PALACE," for one two Performers on the Pianoforte, at Messrs. Rousselot and Co., 66, Conduit-street, Regent-street.

M. ALEXANDER BILLET

Begs to announce that he intends to RESUME his Performances of CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC

IMMEDIATELY.

Full particulars will be immediately announced.

BLANDFORD—MRS. OAKLEY'S CONCERT

WILL take place on the 16th. The Vocalists engaged for the occasion are Herr and Madame Brandt, from London.

DENT'S IMPROVED WATCHES AND CLOCKS.

E. J. DENT, Watch and Clock Maker, by distinct appointment to the Queen, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and his Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia, most respectfully solicits from the public an inspection of his extensive stock of Watches and Clocks, embracing all the late modern improvements at the most economical charges. Ladies' Gold Watches, with gold dials, jewelled in four holes, 8 guineas; Gentlemen's, with enamelled dial, 10 guineas; Youth's Silver Watches, 4 guineas; warranted substantial and accurate-going Lever Watches, jewelled in four holes, 6 guineas.—E. J. Dent, 23, Strand; 23, Cockspur-street; and 24, Royal Exchange (Clock Tower Area).

MISS CATHERINE HAYES

AND

MIDLE. JENNY LIND.

THE only English Ballads sung by the above distinguished vocalists are, "Take this lute," by Benedict; "Oh, summer morn," by Meyerbeer; and the "Lonely Rose," by Balfe, sung by Middle Lind; "Those happy days are gone," by Lavenue; "Why do I weep for thee," by Wallace; "O, sing to me," by Osborne; and "My last thoughts are of thee," by Maynard, sung by Miss Hayes.

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street.

DIATONIC FLUTE.

BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

THE merits of this Instrument have now been fully tested, and its adaptation by the most eminent Professors in town and country, is the best proof of its superiority. Amateurs may hear this flute played by Mr. Richardson, by Mr. Pratten, and at M. Jullien's Concerts; Mr. Nicholson, Leicester square; Mr. Percival, Liverpool; Mr. Creed Ryel, Manchester; Mr. Sykes, Leeds; Mr. Jackson, Hull; Mr. Coram, Bristol; &c.

Description, with testimonials, &c., forwarded free. Manufactory, 135, Fleet Street.

A. SICCAMI, Patenteo.

THE FLUTE.

H. POTTER, Musical Instrument Manufacturer to the Honorable Board of Ordnance, begs respectfully to call the attention of Amateurs and Professors to CLINTON'S NEW FLUTE, which will be found to possess all the advantages of the modern improvements in Tone, Tune, and Equality; while at the same time the old and long established system of fingering is retained in all its purity. These instruments are made of the best seasoned materials, and by the most able workmen, they are extremely elegant in appearance, and free from that complicated mechanism which renders the other modern flutes so objectionable. Prices, from Seven to Fifteen Guineas, according to the style of ornament or finish. A full explanation of the above, together with a description of the general principles upon which all flutes are constructed, entitled, "A Treatise upon the Mechanism and General Principles of the Flute," by J. Clinton, is just published, price One Shilling. May be obtained of H. Potter, 2, Bridge Street, Westminster, or (by order) from all Musiciansellers.

M. JULLIEN'S
ANNUAL GRAND YORKSHIRE BALL

WILL take place at the GREAT ASSEMBLY ROOMS, YORK, on TUESDAY, January 14, 1851, under the following distinguished patronage:—

LIST OF LADY PATRONESSES.

Her Grace the Duchess of Leeds	Lady Clifford Constable	Mrs. Elmsall
The Countess of Harwood	Lady Amcotts Ingleby	Mrs. Lisle
The Countess of Zetland	Lady Dodsworth	Mrs. Lane Fox
The Viscountess Neville	Lady Radcliffe	Mrs. Fairfax
Lady Greenock	Lady Lawson	Mrs. Fairfax
Lady Londesborough	Lady B. Johnstone	Mrs. Garforth
Lady Mary Thompson	Lady Cooke	Mrs. Grimstone
Lady Mountgarrett	Lady Hoynton	Mrs. W. G. och
Lady Elizabeth Lascelles	Hon. Mrs. Beaumont	Mrs. Danby Harcourt
Lady Augusta Milbanke	Hon. Mrs. Duncombe	Mrs. Vernon Harcourt
Lady Arrabella Ramsdell	Hon. Mrs. Smythe	Mrs. Hatfield
Lady Elizabeth Spencer Stanhope	Hon. Mrs. Clifford	Mrs. Hawkins
Lady Mary Wood	Hon. Mrs. Van Straubenzel	Mrs. Hackett
Lady Louisa Cator	Hon. Mrs. Middleton	Mrs. Hall
Lady Armitage	Hon. Mrs. Vavasour	Mrs. C. Johnstone
Mrs. Athorpe	Mrs. Elmsall	Mrs. Lawson
Mrs. John Agar	Mrs. Lisle	Mrs. Lunley
Mrs. Benford	Mrs. Lane Fox	Mrs. G. J. Lloyd
Mrs. Barnett	Mrs. Fairfax	Mrs. Constable Maxwell
Mrs. Bland	Mrs. Fairfax	Mrs. Henry C. Maxwell
Mrs. Barstow	Mrs. Garforth
Mrs. Bower	Mrs. Grimstone
Mrs. Brown	Mrs. W. G. och
Mrs. Currer	Mrs. Danby Harcourt
Mrs. Clifford	Mrs. Vernon Harcourt
Mrs. Clough	Mrs. Hatfield
Mrs. Croft	Mrs. Hawkins
Mrs. Coore	Mrs. Hackett
Mrs. Chorley	Mrs. Hall
Mrs. Darley	Mrs. C. Johnstone
Mrs. Denison	Mrs. Lawson
Mrs. Dalton	Mrs. Lunley
Mrs. Dowker	Mrs. G. J. Lloyd
Mrs. Dayrell	Mrs. Constable Maxwell
Mrs. Duncombe	Mrs. Henry C. Maxwell
	Mrs. Morrill
	Mrs. Martin
	Mrs. Palmes
	Mrs. Preston
	Mrs. Fenton Scott
	Mrs. Saltmarsh
	Mrs. Swann
	Mrs. John Swann
	Mrs. Stephens
	Mrs. Strangeways
	Mrs. Shawe
	Mrs. Clough Taylor
	Mrs. H. Thompson
	Mrs. G. H. Thompson
	Mrs. Widdoughby
	Mrs. Wainman
	Mrs. Worley
	Mrs. H. W. Wickham
	Mrs. York

Vouchers to be obtained only from one of the Lady Patronesses.

Vouchers to be exchanged for tickets (10s. 6d. each) only at Mr. Robinson's Music Warehouse, 39, Stonegate, York.

No money taken at the door.

Vouchers to be exchanged from the 1st of January to 11 o'clock on the evening of the 14th of January, after which the sale of tickets will be closed.

THE LONDON PSALMIST.

JUST PUBLISHED, Parts 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, One Shilling each, arranged for the Organ or Piano-forte, with vocal score, adapted to the Selection of Psalms and Hymns for the use of the Church of England, by the Rev. W. J. Hall, M.A., and edited by Joseph Surman, Conductor of the London Sacred Harmonic Society, Exeter Hall, upon a new and improved principle. This work is recommended to all ministers desirous of obtaining congregational singing. Published at 9, Exeter Hall, and may be obtained of all Music and Booksellers. Single Vocal parts for the use of Choirs and Sunday Schools, 6d. each.

Just Published,

THE ANTHEM "IN THAT DAY,"

To be performed at Exeter Hall, January 31st, Conducted by the composer. Composed and respectfully dedicated by permission to His ROYAL HIGHNESS, PRINCE ALBERT, by George J. Elvey, Mus. Doc. Oxon, Private Organist to Her Majesty, and Organist of St. George's Chapel, Windsor. Price 4s. Single Vocal Parts, 3s. 6d. Orchestral parts printing.

Persons wishing to have the Music as performed by the London Sacred Harmonic Society, should order SURMAN'S Exeter Hall Edition, Office, No. 9, in Exeter Hall.

NEW PIANOFORTE PUBLICATIONS.

WESSEL and Co. beg to announce the publication of a New Work for Piano Solo, in twelve numbers, price One Shilling each, entitled—

"YOUTHFUL DAYS."

No. 1. "Nursery Tale."	No. 7. "The Dance on the Lawn."
"2. "The Clock."	"8. "Boating on the Lake."
"3. "Sunday Morning."	"9. "The Birdlet's Death."
"4. "Playing in the Meadows."	"10. "The Water-Mill."
"5. "Grand Parade."	"11. "Skating."
"6. "Lullaby."	"12. "The Evening Bells."

Composed by

THEODORE KULLAK, OF BERLIN.

Theodore Kullak ranks among the best composers of Germany. His Pianoforte Compositions, for the concert room and for the study, are eagerly sought after, both by professors and amateurs. Kullak's "Youthful Days" (Kinderleben) is written expressly in an easy form, and makes an acceptable present to young pupils, because it is useful practice together with pleasing themes: "The imagination of a poet combined with the science of a musician."

WESSEL and Co., 229, Regent Street, Corner of Hanover Street, Publishers of all the Pianoforte works of Theodore Kullak.

MR. J. FULLER is directed by the Trustees of Mr. Charles Coventry (late Preston) to submit for unreserved SALE BY AUCTION, on the Premises, 71, Dean-street, Soho, on Wednesday, January 22, and following days, the entire STOCK of well-manufactured MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS, 18,000 engraved music plates, comprising a valuable collection of instrumental and other music, in score and parts, with many valuable copyrights by the most eminent composers. The Lease of the very capacious Premises, subject to a low rent, will be submitted on the first day. Specimens of the works may be seen on the premises, 71, Dean-street, two days before the sale. Catalogues had on the premises, and at the auctioneer's offices, 161, Albany-street, Regent's-park.

CURES FOR THE UNCURED!—HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.

MENT—Cure of a Bad Leg of more than sixty years' standing.—Mr. Barker, of No. 5, Graham's Place, Draypool, near Hull, had ulcers on his leg from the age of 18 until upwards of 80, and although for many years he had sought the first advice in the country, nothing was found to cure them. He often suffered excruciating pain for long periods together, which incapacitated him from attending to his business. He had given up all hopes of getting a cure, when at last he was persuaded to try Holloway's Pills and Ointment, which he did, and however wonderful it may appear, the leg was thoroughly healed by their means, and by continuing to use the Pills alone after his leg was well, he has become in health so hale and hearty as now to be more active than most men of fifty. N.B.—The truth of this extraordinary statement can be vouched for by Mr. J. C. Reinhardt, 22, Market Place, Hull. February 20th, 1850.

The Pills should be used conjointly with the Ointment in most of the following cases:—

Bad Legs	Coco Bay	Contracted and	Lumbago	Scurvy
Bad Breasts	Chiego-foot	Stiff Joints	Piles	Sore-heads
Horns	Chilblains	Elephantiasis	Rheumatism	Tumours
Bunions	Chapped hands	Fistulas	Scalds	Ulcers
Bit of Mosche-	Corns (Soft)	Gout	Sore Nipples	Wounds
toes and Sand-	Cancers	Glandular Swell-	Sore-throats	Yaws
Flies		ings	Skin-diseases

Sold by the Proprietor, 244, Strand, (near Temple Bar,) London, and by all respectable Vendors of Patent Medicines throughout the Civilized World, in Pots and Boxes, at 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each. There is a very considerable saving in taking the larger sizes.

N.B.—Directions for the guidance of Patients are affixed to each Pot or Box.

Printed and Published for the Proprietors, by MICHAEL SAMUEL MYERS, of No. 3, Studley Villas, Studley Road, Clapham Road, in the parish of Lambeth, at the office of MYERS and Co., 37, King Street, Covent Garden, in the parish of St. Paul, where all communications for the Editor are to be addressed, post paid. To be had of G. Purkers, Dean Street, Soho; Allen, Warwick Lane; Vickers, Holywell Street, and at all Booksellers.—Saturday, Jan. 11, 1851.

The Musical World.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

Terms of Subscription, per Annum, 16s. ; Half year, 8s. ; Three Months, 4s. ; to be forwarded by Money Order, to the Publishers, Messrs. Myers & Co., 37, King Street, Covent Garden.

No. 3.—VOL. XXVI.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 18, 1851.

PRICE FOURPENCE.

NOTICE.

. The charge for a number of the MUSICAL WORLD will henceforward be 4d. for town and country. Subscriptions, per annum, 16s. ; per half-year, 8s. ; per quarter, 4s. ; delivered GRATIS on the day of publication.

TO TOWN SUBSCRIBERS.

. The publication of the MUSICAL WORLD having changed hands, the proprietors respectfully solicit that all who desire to subscribe from the present time will have the kindness to notify the same to Messrs. MYERS and Co., 37, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, and to forward their Subscriptions in advance. A notification by letter, or verbal message, will receive immediate attention.

For the convenience of our West-End Subscribers, Advertisers, and Correspondents, Messrs. WESSEL and Co., 229, REGENT STREET, have kindly consented to receive Advertisements, Subscriptions, and Communications for the Editor.

TO COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS.

. It is respectfully announced that all who wish to continue subscribers to the MUSICAL WORLD from the present time will forward, by post office order, payable at Charing Cross, in favour of MYERS and Co., 37, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, or otherwise as convenient, the amount of subscription for a year, half a year, or a quarter, in advance, in order that the names may be regularly entered on the new list of subscribers. Applications for the MUSICAL WORLD, unaccompanied by the subscription in advance, cannot be attended to.

CHANGE OF OFFICE.

. The MUSICAL WORLD will henceforth be printed and published at the office of Messrs. MYERS and Co., 37, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, where Subscriptions, Advertisements, and all Communications for the Editor may be sent.

NEW ARRANGEMENTS.

. Arrangements have been made to produce the MUSICAL WORLD for the future every Saturday morning at 10 o'clock, at which time it will invariably be ready for delivery.

Engagements have been entered into with several well-known writers, in the provinces and on the continent, who have undertaken to supply the MUSICAL WORLD with periodical correspondence on all subjects of musical interest. The services of a gentleman of high standing and ability have also been secured, for the purpose of reviewing such new publications as may be forwarded to the office with that view. This department will be strictly attended to. Original articles, from eminent pens, on general subjects of art, will also appear from time to time.

PROSPECTS FOR PIANISTS.

It is generally conceived that the year 1851 will make every body's fortune. In our musical sphere this persuasion obtains more strongly, perhaps, than in any other. With how much reason time will show. For our own parts, we have no great faith in the result. Out of the vast tribe of foreign artists who project a trip to London, during the period of the Great Show, how many will return home satisfied? How many, indeed, will realize even so much as would amount to the expense of their journey here and back? The Illustrated London News prints a list of composers, singers, and instrumental performers, who have expressed their intention of coming to London this season. We shall not reproduce it, since it would occupy nearly a column of our space, and further, because the advent of not a few of them is, to use a mild expression, apocryphal. Imagine Liszt, Leopold de Meyer, Thalberg, Henselt, Dreyshock, Döhler, Wilmers, Prudent, and Madame Pleyel—all in London, at the same time. What an army of pianists hors ligne! What a shower of fantasias!

But where will they give their concerts?—where find their pianos? Ay, and where find their audiences? When they come, if they come, they will find the Hanover-square Rooms, and Willis' Rooms, and Wornum's Rooms, and Blagrove's Rooms, and the Princess's Concert Room, and Exeter Hall, and St. Martin's Hall, and even Crosby Hall, already engaged for entertainments of various kinds, well nigh up to the end of September. The "natives" will have forestalled them. They cannot hire a church, like Barnum. Mr. Gye will not let them Covent Garden. M. Jullien keeps the keys of Drury Lane, doubtless ruminating, even at the present moment, on some great scheme, some embryo triumph of his teeming imagination, which, ever busy, acts upon events as the sun of old upon the muddy chaos, breeding monsters.

Allowing all the music rooms of London to be open to their disposal, where, we repeat, are their pianos? Will Broadwood, or Erard, with generous zeal, submit their instruments to the wear and tear of ninety fingers, each as strong as ten? It is scarcely probable. Enough to withstand the brunt of one lion-pianist at a time, as any tuner will attest. The hammers themselves would rebel at the repeated thumps, and, not waiting to be disabled, refuse to assail the wires; while the sounding board, struck mute with wonder, would cease to be a conductor—like the haunted Westphalian hill, under the influence of a thunderstorm.*

However, to drop metaphor, let the pianofortes be accorded. Broadwood empties his vast manufactory of its choicest wares; Erard sends to the Paris establishment for foreign reinforcement; allow it, for argument's sake; and where are the audiences? Madame Pleyel would, in all probability, "make the town run," as the French say, (faire courir la ville), as she did in 1846, and divert the attention of some thousands of amateurs from the doings in the gay Park. But Madame Pleyel, being a woman, and a handsome woman, and a woman of esprit, (without venturing on comparisons which might tell equally in her favour,) would have the game to herself. The other eight pianists, unless inclined to exhibit themselves as "échantillons" of modern mechanical skill, at the Exhibition, would be compelled to walk about London with their hands in their pockets, or to give lessons to aristocratic young ladies, ambitious to shine in the drawing-room by scrambling through impossible fantasias, for the edification of their friends, admirers, and parents. It is true this pays better than concert-giving; but there is no glory in it; and a "lion" biped without glory is no better than a lion quadruped without his tail.

We shall not discuss the chances of the violinists, vocalists, harpists, flutists, cornists, oboists, trombonists, violists, clarionetists, bassoonists, violoncellists, contrabassists, &c., who are all packing up their instruments and preparing to sail for England. Let them rest assured, however, that the only part they will be able to play, in the great assembly "of all nations," will be the simple one of spectators. If they be fond of sight-seeing, let them come. But, if they look for gold in exchange for their notes, let them go to California, where the "diggings," hard by, will doubtless present a far more curious spectacle than anything to be found in the Crystal Palace. If one out of twenty returns home richer than he came—if one out of ten does not find himself poorer—if one out of five can boast of having earned a hundred pounds—or if one alone be lucky enough to reap a harvest worth his "travel" and his honour, we consent to break our wand, like Mother Goose, scatter the pieces to the winds, and give up prophesying. Time will decide.

THEATRICAL COSTUME.

UPON visiting Drury Lane Theatre, a few nights ago, to witness the representation of As You Like it, we were much struck with the singular appropriateness, as to time, place, and character, of Mrs. Walter Lacy's dress, as Audrey. Unlike other artists we have seen in the part, this lady appeared to disregard the idea of setting off her person to advantage at the expense of the character, or of enticing the gaze of the beholder by piquancy in the disposition of her garments. The dress was in every respect such as might have been worn by a person in the same rank of life as Audrey, and at the same period of time to which the drama may be referred. From the simple head-gear to the wooden sabot, every article of attire was in perfect keeping. The low dress, laced apron, fringed mittens, and silk stockings of modern actresses, who simulate characters in humble life on the stage, were carefully avoided. In their place we beheld the portrait of an unsophisticated peasant girl, dressed with propriety and in conformity with real life. The contemplation of Audrey's habiliments led us into a train of thought concerning the costume of the stage in general, and after revolving the subject in our minds, we came to the conclusion that this department of theatrical affairs required a thorough and sweeping reformation. Indeed, when we consider the vast improvements, made within the last fifty years, in all matters connected with the decorative arts; and bear in mind how sedulously and zealously, year after year, managers and actors have applied themselves to the realization of scenic effects on the stage, we are totally unable to account for the anachronisms, discrepancies, and improprieties to be found in modern theatrical costume. It is true that every effort is made in the production of new works, to dress up the personages of the drama with fitness and propriety. The French have set us the example, and as we borrow their plots, we cannot well avoid borrowing their costumes. But in the plays of Shakspeare and the elder dramatists, and, indeed, in all the old comedies, we find little but contradictions and incongruities in whatever has relation to dress.

Few are ignorant of the manner in which Garrick, and actors before his time, were accustomed to dress some of Shakspeare's characters. The pictures of the little great man in Macbeth present him as pranked out in brocaded damask coat, with broad lappets, black or pink silk breeches, and wearing a bob wig. John Kemble, following Garrick, for many years adorned Hamlet in a modern court suit. Edmund Kean, up to his last performance of Othello, persisted in considering the Moor as an African warrior, and decorated him accordingly. John Kemble was, nevertheless, the first who aimed at remodelling the stage uniform. He stripped Hamlet of his English garments and English pigtail, and restored him with his "inky cloak" and "suit of sables"—his Danish identity. By the way, how strange Hamlet's speech to his mother must have sounded, in the ears of the audiences of the days of Garrick, when the actor alluded to the "inky cloak," which he did not wear! Macready effected even more for the improvement of the stage in this respect than Kemble. He attired Othello, for the first time, as a Venetian General, and made many other important changes, now universally accepted as precedents. Mr. Phelps, likewise, at Sadler's Wells, introduced some alterations, which were decidedly called for; while Mr. Anderson, in his later management of Drury Lane, has displayed an evident desire to follow in the steps of his predecessors.

* Lurley, on the Rhine, celebrated for its echo, and which promised to acquire a still higher renown, had Mendelssohn lived to complete the opera which was to bear its name.

Notwithstanding, however, all that has been effected, much remains to be done. There is hardly a tragedy or comedy produced on the stage which does not present some strange anomaly of dress. In the Jealous Wife, revived lately at the Haymarket theatre, while Mr. Macready and Mr. Buckstone appeared in the costume of the present day, Mr. Selby borrowed his attire from the era of George II. We have seen plays in which the dresses of the actors illustrated five distinct reigns. Even when the characters are correctly dressed, we often find the changes necessitated by time and circumstance overlooked. Let us take Othello as an example. The Moor and Desdemona are summoned to the councils of the senators in the middle of the night. The general wears his Venetian robes of state, and the gentle Desdemona appears radiant in silk and satin. This may be all very well, although still open to criticism; but when the Moor is commanded to Cyprus, and arrives there after defeating the Ottoman naval force, we do not expect to find him decked out in the very habiliments he wore before the "Magnificos" at the Sagittary. Desdemona, too, exhibits no alteration in her attire on arriving at Cyprus, although it is hardly to be imagined that the gentle lady would have braved a sea voyage so delicately clad, unless the unromantic idea be accepted, that in flying with the Moor from her father's home, she was unprovided with a change of clothes. Iago, Cassio, and Roderigo, also, land at Cyprus in the same uniform in which they first appear, though they are supposed to have encountered perils and extremities of war after leaving Venice. The modern dress of Hamlet is, doubtless, correct; but, when King Claudius dismisses him to England, and again when he returns, after being ransomed from the pirates, we are much surprised to see the Prince of Denmark in "silken hose and velvet shoon," in jewelled cloak and bonnet plumed. The custom of making kings and queens, upon almost all occasions, wear their crowns and robes of state, is equally questionable; and so indeed are many other conventional fashions of the stage, which we shall not at present stop to notice. Enough if we have shown that there is room for improvement, and a fair occasion for some enterprising manager to undertake the task of renovation.

MADAME BEAUPRE.

AMONG the new stars whose advent may be shortly expected in the dramatic horizon, is Mademoiselle Beaupré, who, if she realize half what is predicted of her, will be likely to make the fortune of Mr. Mitchell, as well as her own. Mademoiselle Beaupré, French by birth, is a lineal descendant of one of the most celebrated actors in the history of the French stage. Her bis-aïeul, or something near it, was no other than Beaupré. Who that interests himself in theatrical "annals," does not know that Beaupré was the actor of popularity and talent who sacrificed himself to the vanity of Richelieu, and distinguished himself as the representative of Pyramus, in the memorable play of that name, which has furnished so fertile a theme for the manufacturers of the French "Memoires Secrètes?" With such a prestige in her favour, we are greatly mistaken if, judging from all we have heard, Mademoiselle Beaupré do not win for herself another name even more brilliant than that of her great-great-grandfather, in the repertoire of Scribe and his followers—a more grateful path to glory than the mazy labyrinth of the Cardinal's stage rhetoric, in which there were so many passages that the meaning lost its way—as though in his dramatic writings as in his diplomacy, it was the wily statesman's aim to illustrate a favourite maxim of certain notorious politicians, inculcating that "words are given to hide thoughts," and thus to mystify his audience as he mystified the representatives of rival powers.

Mademoiselle Beaupré's gifts and accomplishments are sufficiently evident, and require little more than their frank and zealous manifestation to arrive at the desired end. Extreme youth, and personal attractions of an uncommon kind, will at once enlist public sympathy in her favour. But these, and a voice of remarkable power and sweetness, are gifts from heaven and it devolves upon the manner of their employment to shew whether they are worthily bestowed. Mademoiselle Beaupré has been for some time studying assiduously, under the superintendence of M. Rommi, and with the aid and counsel of this intelligent master—whose acquaintance with the art of declamation gained for him, some time ago, considerable reputation in Paris, until his friend, Nourrit, persuaded him to quit the histrionic profession and essay his talents on the operatic boards, has, we are assured, made progress little short of astonishing. Mr. Mitchell has already heard her go through some scenes of Rachel's part in Adrienn Lecouvreur, and that wary and experienced judge expressed himself in unmeasured terms of approbation, and immediately concluded an engagement, by which the English public will shortly have the opportunity of estimating Mademoiselle Beaupré's pretensions. If expectation be not deceived and Mademoiselle Beaupré's friends egregiously mistaken, the French stage will, probably, in the person of the young and interesting debutante, be enriched by the acquisition of another Madeleine Brohan.

The peculiar line of business to which Mademoiselle Beaupré's taste and inclination lead her is high comedy and mixed drama of the school, already mentioned, of which Monsr. Scribe is at once the originator and most illustrious example. We shall watch her debut with anxiety.

MR. BRINLEY RICHARDS.

WE invite the attention of our professional readers to the list of pianoforte compositions in our advertising columns, by this clever artist, who is fast gaining a well deserved popularity. We have already, in a recent notice, expressed our high opinion of their merits, and of their peculiar excellence as teaching-pieces, at once elegant and light, and brilliant without being difficult. We are pleased to remark a growing disposition on the part of our own professors to give their pupils music written by Englishmen. We are quite sure that whatever may be the elementary value of the works of Czerny, Rosellen, Gorla, and other foreign composers much in vogue, they are not in any degree superior, as media for imparting mechanical skill and fluent execution to the learner, than those of Mr. Brinley Richards. The lighter pieces of Mr. Vincent Wallace and Mr. Osborne have lately encountered an extensive patronage at the hands of our professors and amateurs, and those of Mr. Richards promise to rival them in general estimation. We cannot but rejoice in this, and strongly exhort our musical compatriots to "put their shoulders to the wheel." The advantage that must accrue will be exclusively their own. The music publishers will be eager to purchase copyrights of English music, if English musicians will only support them, by adopting what they print, for the use of their pupils. But if, on the other hand, English professors confine themselves, out of some petty or mistaken feeling, to the music of foreigners, they cannot blame the publishers for being "shy" of their manuscripts. Commerce is commerce all over the world, and it were unreasonable to expect a publisher to lay out capital on an article that brings no profit to his business. He would most probably be laughed at for his folly, rather than lauded for his patriotism. But let English musicians uphold each other, and they need not be in apprehension about foreigners. We are of those who believe that art has no country, and that merit should be the only test; and we by no means advocate or desire the exclusion of foreign compositions; but we must say, that where a piece of music by an Englishman is as intrinsically good and serviceable as a piece of music by a foreigner, the English professor ought to give his fellow countryman the benefit of his choice. We detest cliquetry of all kinds; but this is not cliquetry; it is the sublime maxim, Do as you would be done by, put into action.

YANKEE FAIR PLAY.

UNDER the head of "Fair play on all sides—The Great Managers and their Great Operas," the New York Herald, that purest and most unsophisticated of sheets, publishes the following eager protest against puffing in general and Mr. Barnum in particular—à propos of Jenny Lind on one side, of Parodi and Manager Maretzek on the other, and of "the boots" on both. We cite it with a profound feeling of reverence for the bias towards justice and virtue, "immaculate," which it struggles to make apparent, however clumsily expressed, however clouded in obscure verbosity:—

"We perceive an almost universal effort made on the part of the press, through correspondents of various qualifications, and by means of fulsome panegyrics, to magnify the enterprise of Barnum in bringing Jenny Lind to this country. There seems to us to be no want of appreciation of his services in the matter. But why is it that in all that is said of Barnum's risks and enterprise, not a solitary allusion has been made to the bold and adventurous spirit of the gifted, artistic, and amiable Maretzek, who has imported a ballet troupe, the most magnificent vocalist of the day—the charming Parodi—and Nathalie Fitzjames, one of the most popular dancers of Paris? Some of these encomiasts forget altogether Maretzek, in their ecstasies about the daring and skill of Barnum, whose merits no one will dispute. We do not object to praise being lavished in one quarter, where it is deserved, but it should not abridge the justice deservedly due in another place. Barnum merits much credit for introducing Jenny Lind, and also is entitled to a full recognition of his services for making a show of the Fejee Mermaid—for trifling with the memory of Washington, in instructing Joyce Heth to tell the American people that she was the nurse of the sage of Mount Vernon—and for other enterprises of equal value, not easily to be forgotten in the atonement made by the advent of Jenny Lind. We have no objection to give Barnum full credit—or a full dinner—and to have a speech from him, in which he may have an opportunity to explain and illustrate, and to tell us of the new elephants he intends to import; but we do contend for the enterprise of the youthful and polished Maretzek, who seeks for no distinction but such as legitimately may arise from his honest exertions—that there should be a cordial and unanimous feeling of respect, and an earnest desire for his perfect success. He has been opposed, however, and those who listen, but never learn, have stabbed at the peerless Parodi, in order that their weapons may scathe Maretzek. Parodi, however, by her acting and singing, has interposed her great power, as with the shield of Medea, and has turned these adversaries into stone—for they are incapable of hearing or feeling, under any circumstances. Fair play—fair play."

The writer of this mouthy diatribe would have made his position stronger by some endeavour to illustrate, in his own person, the doctrine he maintains with such convulsive eloquence. But professions of this nature from professors of his kidney have ever a doubtful look. The pen, freshly nibbed for the occasion, spurts and sprawls, unwilling and unable. The ink, strange to its office, mistrusts the paper, and smothers half the periods, or falls in ugly drops upon the words, like Mammon's tears, to blot them out for ever. There is as much difference between truth felt and truth feigned, the sentiments of the heart and the sophistries of the head, as between a pearl and a perriwinkle. Jenny Lind cannot feel offended, nor Parodi pleased, by an advocate who aims at two opposite marks, and misses both.

Dramatic Intelligence.

DRURY LANE.—We commence our notice of the new comedy produced at this theatre on Thursday night with an a priori argument:—the comedy in which Mrs. Nisbett appears cannot prove a failure. Any play in which this most delightful actress supports a part must, of necessity, contain the very quintessence of comic spirituality, and, by consequence, possess one of the first elements of success. Wherefore, we repeat, the comedy in which Mrs. Nisbett undertakes a part carries with it an antidote to failure. Be there nothing else worth listening to, Mrs. Nisbett has a charm in her voice, which, independent of the words, carries poetry and music in its very sound. Be there nothing else worth looking at, Mrs. Nisbett's face has an unspeakable beauty, and her figure an ever-escaping and ever-renewing grace, which fascinates the eye and fills the one sense to completeness, leaving the others powerless. In her grace and in her beauty; in the ringing of her laugh, which sounds like the echo of the heart's true gladness; in the music of her voice which, in its cadence, rises and falls like the breathings of the sweet west wind amid the chords of an Æolian harp; in her eyes which, in their looks, speak from the unimagined depths of emotion; in her swan-like gait; in her proud head and bending neck, she looks, and moves, and talks the very incarnation of the comic muse. How then could any comedy prove unsuccessful in which Mrs. Nisbett bore a part? No comedy ever yet failed of success in which she played, nor can fail while interfused with the spirit of so much vitality and beauty.

From the above mode of reasoning, or sophisticating, it must not be inferred that we wish it to be understood the new comedy failed. We wish no such thing to be understood, since the comedy succeeded without a dissentient voice; but we were desirous of impressing upon our readers the fact, that the acting of Mrs. Nisbett had made a deeper impression upon us than the composition of Mr. Sullivan, and that the author was in no small degree indebted for his success to the actress. Mr. Sullivan's comedy, The Old Love and the New, was, in fact, a genuine success, although the applause throughout the play, and at the conclusion, was by no means uproarious. If we were asked to name the sources whence sprung this success, we should perhaps find ourselves at fault. There is little constructive power evinced in the plot, the characters are loosely drawn, the incidents not particularly striking, the dialogue devoid of brilliancy or piquancy. Was the success deserved? We answer unhesitatingly in the affirmative. If the author displayed no superior powers of construction, he at all events presented us with probabilities of circumstances, and situations that were not to be disputed for their reality. If the characters were mere sketches, they displayed occasionally a freedom and boldness of outline which made much amends for their want of finish. If the incidents were neither novel nor surprising, their want of originality and effect was counterbalanced by an earnest mode of treatment, and a thorough sincerity that sacrificed nothing to the temptations of the moment. Found we fault with the dialogue for its lack of brilliant sayings and epigrams, we could not fail to discover sound sense conveyed in smooth words, and philosophic reflections invested with a poetry not their own. The principal deficiency of the comedy, we mean in the writing, appeared to us to consist in the diversity of styles shown in the earlier and later acts, as if they had been written at different periods. We fancied we discovered in the first act an attempt to catch the subtle wit and pinched pungency of the Colley Cibber school, which was afterwards abandoned for a more natural and liberal mode of expression. The dialogue was sometimes forced, and on two occasions we felt that a speech or a dialogue had been introduced which, with great propriety, might have been omitted. The dialogue, also, in its aim, savoured too much of the wit-encountering essays of the school of Charles the Second's time, and fell flat upon the ear of an audience who were unaccustomed to far-fetched similitudes brought out in a long duet of words. The alternated comparisons of Jack Falstaff and Prince Hal we endure for their propriety in tempo, as well as their exceeding wit, but neither qualification did we find in Mr. Sullivan's dialogues to warrant their introduction.

If the author of the Beggar on Horseback have not, in his last comedy, written a great work, he has certainly given birth to a highly amusing and entertaining one. The scholar, the observer, and the poet, are discoverable throughout, while the analyser and philosopher are not entirely kept in the back ground. What we particularly admire in the new comedy is its tone of heartiness and its entire freedom from bitterness of feeling. The humour is always frank and genial, and even the satire is stripped of its acrimonious poison.

We shall endeavour to lay the plot before our readers, though we cannot promise to give the details with distinctness, as on some occasions the gist of the story escaped us altogether.

Sir Algernon Courtoun (Mr. Cooper) is an old bachelor of large fortune, who had been a roué in his youthful days. He is captivated by Camilla (Mrs. Nisbett); the daughter of Haythorn (Mr. Barrett), a squire of the Western school. Camilla and her father are staying at the baronet's country seat, and the free manners of the young girl are translated into an encouragement of his pretensions by Sir Algernon. The father, who thinks of nothing but broad acres and broad pieces, is delighted at the prospect of becoming father-in-law to a large estate and well-paid rental. The gentlemen, however, reckon without their host. Camilla has a younger lover in her affections. This is no other than Sydney Courtoun (Mr. Anderson), the nephew of Sir Algernon, and an officer in the "Piebalds," a reputable corps, the type of which, we suspect, can only be found at Astley's. Camilla and Sydney have long seen and loved each other. Sydney comes on a visit to his uncle, but before he arrives at the Hall has an interview with his lady-love, which is observed by Miss Trimmer (Mrs. Ternan), who the author evidently intends should be emphatically the character of the drama. Miss Trimmer is certainly an original draft upon nature, although, now and then, we find reminiscences of Betsy Trotwood, in David Copperfield, and Harmony, in Every One has his Fault, suggesting comparisons. Miss Trimmer is an old maid verging on fifty. She has been disappointed in affection in early life, but instead of suffering her spirits to sink beneath the blow, she determined to turn her sorrow even into a blessing. From the ashes of a broken heart has sprung up the phoenix, universal benevolence. With a kindly feeling, but a tongue none of the sweetest, because conveying honest truth, in homely phrase, she goes about doing all sorts of good. She is, indeed, the ministering angel of the drama. She has heard of Sir Algernon's projected marriage with Camilla, and knowing Camilla's inclination in another quarter, would fain save him from degradation. Seeing no other mode of bringing all things to a prosperous issue, she acquaints Sir Algernon with the secret attachment of Camilla, and points out his nephew as the likely object. Sir Algernon is indignant. His indignation, however, is appeased by a stratagem concocted between Camilla, Sydney, Cherry Bounce, (Mrs. Walter Lacy), the housekeeper, and Miss Trimmer, in which Sir Algernon's suspicions are transferred to a certain Major Stock (Mr. Emery), who belongs to the same regiment as Sydney. The baronet, who was about to disinherit his nephew, in his delight at finding the old Major his rival, falls into a sudden fit of affection, and makes over all his possessions to Sydney. When Sir Algernon again learns that his nephew is the real Simon Pure, his rage returns with redoubled fury, but his wrath is directly appeased by certain miniatures handed to him by Camilla and Sydney, in which he sees his own face, as it was thirty years before, and the face of Olivia, as it was thirty years before, and his memory, with guano quickness, makes his heart expand, till it becomes so large that it has room for two more besides himself, and so he takes the youthful pair to his middle-aged bosom. But fancy the astonishment of the now worthy baronet at finding the long lost Olivia in no less a personage than Miss Trimmer. To be sure, the days of transport are long past and gone, and hope is vain ; but contentment and mild friendship are compatible, and so, the OLD LOVE may be yet renewed in tenderness, if not in transports, and all their wishes fulfilled in contemplating the happiness of the youthful pair in the progress of their NEW LOVE ; and so—the moral is told, and the curtain falls.

We have already said enough to give the reader an idea of Mrs. Nisbett's exquisite personation of Camilla Haythorn. Seldom has the charming and accomplished actress exhibited to greater advantage the graces of her natural endowments, or the perfection of her art. The fact of Mrs. Nisbett being on the stage should, of itself, be enough to inspire all extant writers of comedy to infuse tenfold power into their pen.

Mr. Cooper played the old beau-baronet admirably. In this performance he demonstrated, beyond the possibility of contradiction, that there was still remaining on the stage one of the good old school, who could realize an author's conception to the fullest extent.

Nor can we speak in terms of sufficient praise of Mrs. Ternan's Miss Trimmer, which was a masterly piece of acting throughout, and, as far as the character went, was worthy the best days of the stage. When we see suitable parts entrusted to such artists as Mrs. Ternan and Mr. Cooper, we begin to have hopes for the drama.

Mr. Anderson's is not a congenial part—indeed there is not metal enough in it for him—but he played it with great spirit and vivacity. Mr. Barrett did not please us as much as Sir John Falstaff—that may be in his favour—and Mrs. Walter Lacy had a part quite below her capabilities. Mrs. Walter Lacy has too much intelligence not to invest any character with interest ; nevertheless, we could have wished that the housekeeper had been written with a keener eye to the powers of the artist. We were sorry to perceive that Mrs. Walter Lacy had received a hurt in her foot, and was compelled to have recourse to a staff for support during the performance. How many actresses for the sake of art would have done the like ?

The scenery was exceedingly beautiful—more beautiful by far than what we have yet beheld at Drury Lane, under Mr. Anderson's management ; and the dresses were all new and appropriate.

OLYMPIC.—On Monday evening a new two-act drama from the fertile pens of the Messrs. Morton, entitled All that Glitters is not Gold, was produced with every demonstration of the most perfect success. We have seldom listened throughout to a more neatly constructed, or a better written piece. Although restricted to the space of two acts, the first by no means "long," the incidents are numerous, and the story brought out with great completeness. The closeness with which the chief points of interest are brought together is remarkable, and displays a considerable degree of ingenuity. Indeed, for conciseness, if not aptness of construction, the new drama, All that Glitters is not Gold, might be cited as a model. The characters are well drawn and contrasted with effect. The heroine, Martha Gibbs, is a charming portrait, and draws very largely upon the sympathies of the audience. If we were called upon to point out defects in the new piece we should refer to the too frequent inculcation of truisms, and the loud vauntings in praise of the virtues, compliments to their own moralities, which the gods in the gallery are ever on the look out for in any serious character. The Messrs. Morton were not sparing of their truisms or their blessings, and so the gods were mightily taken, and roared lustily. But, to our thinking, it made the judicious grieve, and did not at all tend to elevate the tone of feeling which the authors were desirous of imparting to their drama. With this exception we were entirely pleased, and are inclined to pronounce the last production as the best which has proceeded from the pen of the Messrs. Morton.

The plot is simple, and runs as follows:—Old Plum is a wealthy proprietor of a cotton-spinning establishment at Bristol. He possesses sufficient pride to ape the gentleman, has a hankering after high society, and entertains a strong desire to elevate his family by means of his riches. His eldest son, Stephen, escapes the high-reaching ambition of his father, sticks to his bobbins and reels, and falls in love with one of the factory girls, Martha Gibbs. His second son, Frederick, is brought up as a gentleman, imbued with classical notions, and shares with Old Plum in the desire for the family elevation. By some means or other a marriage between Frederick and a titled lady is brought out and concluded. The ceremony takes place at the end of the first act. Little seeming happiness is in store for the young couple. The Lady Valeria, the youthful bride, recognizes in Martha Gibbs the daughter of an old servant of her mother ; and Martha, on her side, sees in the Lady Valeria the daughter of one who conferred life and blessings on her mother. Despite their difference of rank, a mutual sentiment of friendship springs up in their breasts. Valeria confides to Martha the secret of a former attachment, which, even at the moment of yielding her hand to another, she cannot overcome. The object of this attachment, a most unworthy one, is Sir Arthur Lassell, who happens to be the friend of Frederick Plum, and the appointed bridesman at the marriage. To excuse the Lady Valeria for entertaining a feeling of affection for Sir Arthur, a profligate and seducer, the author has made her romantic, youthful, and confiding. But all this while another love affair is going forward, and far more interesting than that just named. Stephen Plum loves Martha Gibbs, and Martha Gibbs loves Stephen Plum ; but Stephen fears to open his mind to Martha, and Martha knows her place too well even to entertain a thought of Stephen beyond that of a kind friend. At last, Stephen is determined that Martha shall be his wife at any risk ; and, without telling her, acquaints his father with his intention. Old Plum at first is indignant, but, after consulting with his son Frederick, gives his consent, on condition that Martha's propriety of conduct shall be tested for three months, and that Stephen will keep her in ignorance of his intention. Stephen agrees joyfully to the proposition, and Martha is inducted into the house as one of the family. At the marriage feast, Martha discovers that Sir Arthur Lassell is the former lover of Valeria ; and conceiving that there is danger in the proximity of the pair, determines to watch over her friend and shield her.

An interval of three months elapses between the first and second acts. To send Frederick out of the way, the authors have conferred on him a situation attached to a foreign embassy. Frederick goes : Valeria is exposed to the fascinations of Sir Arthur, who remains a guest at old Plum's. Martha observes all, and sees all ; and determines to rescue Valeria at any expense. For this purpose, she draws Sir Arthur into an assignation with herself, and contrives that Valeria shall overhear his protestations. Valeria's eyes are opened, and her infatuation cured. But both her trial and that of Martha have yet to come. A prying old lady, who fancies Sir Arthur is attached to her, overhears the conversation between him and Martha ; but hears it in such a manner, that the girl alone appears to be the criminal person. Old Plum is informed of the meeting, and glad of any pretext to break off the projected nuptial between his son and her, dismisses Martha from his house. The explanation is brought about by Valeria making a full confession, whereby the cloak of reconciliation is wrapped round all the personages of the piece, with the exception of old Lady Leatherbridge, who, being disappointed in her attempts on Sir Arthur and old Plum, retires crest-fallen, and Sir Arthur, who is dismissed with scorn and contempt.

Although we have minutely described the plot of All that glitters is not Gold, we have omitted mentioning the best character, or, at least, the best played character in the piece. This is Toby Twinkle, one of the head men of the factory, whom Stephen takes into his confidence, and treats in every respect as his equal. Toby is a caricature, and has little or nothing to do with the texture of the story; but Toby has his humours, and his good natures, mind you, and his quaintnesses, go to, and Compton plays Toby inimitably. Yes, inimitably; and let no one gainsay our dictum; and whoso doubts the inimitability of Compton—but stay, no one could doubt the inimitability of Compton, who is one of the greatest of living comedians; and whose real excellence, we fear, is but too often hidden under a bushel.

The piece in general was well performed. Mr. Leigh Murray sustained the roughness and honesty of Stephen Plum with nice discernment. Mrs. Sterling was highly effective in Martha Gibbs, and played the last scenes with great delicacy of feeling. We did not like her earlier scenes so much. A little more quietude, to our thinking, would have suited the factory girl better. Miss Louisa Howard looked extremely lady-like in Valeria; and Mr. W. Farren made the most of old Plum. The piece was received with peculiar favour, and announced for repetition every night.

ADELPHI.—Why does the village of Montroulade rejoice? wherefore are its denizens thus vigorous in their gladness? Bonaparte has been overthrown, and the Bourbon has been restored; somebody has perished; some one has succeeded; and the people, your only true philosopher out of this mixed fortune, choose the better part, and therefore it is that the village of Montroulade doth rejoice. This village is in France, but whereabouts it were difficult to say, for France is disturbed, and knows not whether she is in provinces or departments; but on a settlement of the dregs which always rise in public commotions, Montroulade will be found somewhere near Angoulême. It is the month of June, 1814, and the principal street is crowded with booths, stalls, and peasants, and returning émigrés. The inn bore the sign of Napoleon, and a good likeness it was, but the provident innkeeper is also a timekeeper, and very properly paints out the words Napoleon Bonaparte, while under the hero's portrait he contents himself with writing Louis the Eighteenth. This picture will be doubtless found for centuries hence, and will afford ground for ample discussions amongst learned men, as to whether Louis and Napoleon were not one and the same person, subsequently known as Louis Napoleon. But this is speculative and not critical.

What is a village holiday without a mountebank, with his van and seats of tumbling and legerdemain?—the idea is as absurd as a session without a Chancellor of the Exchequer without his budget. So we understand the delight with which the inhabitants of Montroulade crowd round the vehicle entering the town, with drums and cymbals beating, and flags streaming. Belphegor, the inimitable Belphegor the paillasse, arrives with his wife Madelaine, his two children, and Ajax the funniman, D.C.L. (defier of the sheet lightning). Let no one class Belphegor with the clowns of the ordinary raree shows; beneath this dress of the buffoon is concealed the most kind and tender of hearts. His devotion to his wife, his innocent and playful attachment to his children, may surprise at first, coming from such a source, but once that strangeness past, the character of this simple-minded being ingratiates itself in a most extraordinary manner—it becomes a reality. This little family, in its misery, in its abasement, vagrants, outcasts, fawning for permission to win a dinner at the risk of limb and life, and yet so full of love and happiness, forms a most touching contemplation. But this happiness is doomed to be crossed by calamity, which comes in the shape of a certain newly returned émigré, called De Rollac, who is in search of a child which had been confided to a cobbler at Lamballe, during the reign of terror. The father of the child was a noble who perished in the perils of the times. The cobbler dies also, so the infant struggles on as best it can through life, but in ignorance of its noble birth. De Rollac traces this child to the home of the mountebank, Belphegor—in short, it is his wife, Madelaine, the daughter of a duke! rich, noble, great!—who can express the joy of the buffoon? But De Rollac arrests his delight with a sad piece of news. It is quite impossible that Belphegor should share the good fortune of his wife. She must change her name—the wife of a buffoon could never be admitted to court—the children of a buffoon could never inherit the illustrious ancestry of the Montbazon. This family hereupon indignantly refuses to accept this fortune which threatens the disunion of their hearts, and the simple-minded father, in terror at the very idea, bundles his dear one and his chattels back again into his crazy vehicle and flies away from the spot where such a calamity was hinted by Providence.

Now let it not be thought that De Rollac is De Rollac. No such thing. He is no more nor less than that escaped convict Savarennes, who “has been wanted” for some fifteen years previously, but escaping to America, there met a M. De Rollac, who died, and whose papers unfortunately fell into the hands of this scoundrel. Savarennes personates De Rollac, returns to France, and finding amongst these papers the details which refer to the lost child of the Duc de Montbazon, he searches for her, in hopes of marrying her himself, and securing her fortune. For such a rascal the poor buffoon is no match. De Rollac pursues him, and by playing on the maternal feelings of Madelaine, proves that one of her children is dying, and induces her to accept the offers of her family, who can provide the only means by which the precious life of the infant can be saved. The mother yields—the wife quits her husband's roof—Belphegor returns and finds it desolate. The scenes of anguish which succeed are almost too painful for contemplation. The buffoon sets out with his son in pursuit of his wife, who has carried away his daughter. Then begins that life of harrowing misery—obliged for common sustenance to do his tricks and perform antics to a grinning circle, while his own heart is breaking—uttering and exchanging with his starving boy those hackneyed jokes and quodlibets, while the tears roll down his smeared and painted face; at last, arrested, thrown into prison, and nearly executed in the place of this very Savarennes, while his wife refuses to acknowledge him as Belphegor, or as her husband, for she is under the impression that such confession will consign him to certain death.

Such is the drama entitled Paillasse, now playing at the Gaité theatre in Paris, where Lemaitre, that Prince of melodrama, moves to hysteria the crowded audiences which hail this great creation. This piece, under the title of Belphegor the Mountebank, was produced at the Adelphi Theatre last Monday night. We say nothing of the attempt made to introduce a comic underplot, as we suppose it is necessary that Messrs. Wright and Bedford should appear in all important pieces produced at this theatre. Suffice to say the audience were good enough to be amused, but as what these people said and did has nothing to do with the piece, we congratulate them sincerely on their success. Mr. Webster's performance of Belphegor was evidently founded on the delineation by Lemaitre; and with this great master in his mind he attempted an elaboration of which no English actor is capable, and if he were, no English audience could efficiently appreciate. But enough was exhibited by Mr. Webster to shew that when the piece is condensed, there will remain a dramatic picture which for truth and originality, has seldom been equalled in the annals of English melodrama, and assuredly has seldom been surpassed. We speak now of the character of Belphegor and the thread of interest which follows here throughout.

As a piece the merit is not great—and what goodness there is in it, belongs purely to the French authors, Messieurs Marc Fournier and D'Ennery. We reverse the order of their names, as we have reason to believe the credit of the idea is due to the former gentleman.

PRINCESS'S.—The Merchant of Venice was given here last Saturday, and will be repeated to-night. The chief attraction of the performance is the Portia of Mrs. Charles Kean, a part which requires in the actress an unusual combination of the attributes of comedy and tragedy, and hence this lady is the best representative of the character that the stage at present possesses. If the famous appeal to the Jew's humanity, in the court scene, was given with somewhat less elevation and dignity than the situation and language require, it was yet, by the aid of the eloquent countenance and manner of the fair delineator, impassioned and true; and her banter of her lover in the last act was equally characteristic in its social ease and vivacity. There is no actress who so eminently possesses the ars celare artem as Mrs. Charles Kean; the unconscious grace with which she sinks the artiste in the woman, being, in fact, the principal charm of her acting. The house was, as usual, quite full, and the new Pantomime has as yet moulted no feather of its popularity.

MR. HULLAH'S MONTHLY CONCERTS.

The third monthly concert of ancient and modern music took place on Wednesday evening, at St. Martin's Hall. It is evidently Mr. Hullah's wish to endow his programmes with as much variety as possible. The selection on Wednesday night was a strong case in point. There were two pieces by old masters, and two pieces by modern masters, and all strongly contrasted, as much in the form of composition as in style. The first piece was Handel's fourth oboe concerto, for two solo oboes, accompanied by a stringed band. It is hardly necessary to say that the full development of Handel's immense genius was chiefly evinced in his choral works, and that his instrumental compositions hold comparatively a subordinate rank in the list of his productions. It was for Haydn to do for the orchestra what Handel did for the choir; nevertheless, it must not be forgotten that, in the instrumental works and especially in the concertos of Handel, may be traced the first idea of the symphony, which other masters, led on by Haydn, afterwards developed to ripe maturity. The embryo was in the giant's fertile brain; but it is not for one man to accomplish everything; and as far as Haydn has soared above Handel in the regions of instrumental art, so far beneath him is he in his choral music; not solely in variety and richness of invention, but in masterly and elaborate workmanship. And for example, what the symphony in E flat, No. 10 of the Salomon set, is to one of the concertos of Handel, so is the Messiah to the Creation. From this it is reasonable to infer, since Handel lived long before Haydn, that he was by far the greatest genius of the two. Having said this, it is unnecessary to criticise the fourth oboe concerto, which, though spirited, and in many places effective, we do not think is one of the best. It was admirably played, and we much doubt if the obligato oboe parts could possibly be made more telling than by Messrs. Nicholson and Horton on Wednesday night. Mr. Hullah, by his precise and intelligent manner of conducting, shewed an evident intimacy with this particular school of music. The concerto, nevertheless, did not appear to impress the audience greatly, and, in plain truth, its introduction was chiefly to be commended as affording to modern hearers a specimen of what was regarded as "display-music" in Handel's time.

The "Frost Scene," from Purcell's King Arthur, bears even stronger traces of what our contemporary, the Morning Herald, quaintly terms, "the bag-wig," than Handel's concerto. But then it must be remembered, that Purcell was Handel's predecessor. The style generally of this, and indeed of most that remains to us of Purcell's dramatic music, is monotonous. Time has done its work upon it; yet the eager student, the inquiring critic, and the impartial philosopher cannot fail to detect, and detecting to admire, the many points of harmony, the many and unexpected progressions of modulation, and other such matters, which shew how diligently he had explored these magnificent branches of art, and how deeply he felt their beauty, importance, and inexhaustible resources; and, indeed, it must be laid down as an incontrovertible truth, that to this early and distinguished musician, to this unmistakeable genius, the science of harmony is prodigiously indebted. Perhaps it may not be too bold an assertion, perhaps it may not be deemed a paradox by those who weigh the matter seriously, and with a fit knowledge of its general bearing and significance, to declare that Purcell was the first of the three composers who may be strictly called discoverers, if inventors be not a better term, in this particular domain of the art; the other two being John Sebastian Bach, almost a contemporary of Purcell's, and Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy, who has lived among us. In another grand element of musical expression, which may be termed the basis of the dramatic vocal art, Purcell is equally to be cited as a discoverer, and to be studied as an example—we mean, the recitative; and here, even to this day, he seems to march with the strides of a giant. The "Frost Scene" of King Arthur, although the verdure of youth be no longer on it, although its forms of melody have become antiquated, and its cadences rusty, abounds in points which, did occasion serve, might stand for illustrations of our argument. It was remarkably well performed on the whole, under Mr. Hullah's direction, on Wednesday night, although Miss Kearns, who took the soprano solos, did not exactly come up to our expectations, her intonation being at times defective. Miss Kearns must be careful of this quicksand, or she may flounder on her voyage towards eminence. Mr. H. Phillips, in the bass solo, exhibited his usual steadiness and experience.

The Walpurgis Night might, and indeed should, have gone better. It would have gone better, no doubt, had it been properly rehearsed. But we presume Mr. Hullah was engrossed by the compositions of M. Charles Gounod, who, being a stranger and a debutante, so far as London and St. Martin's Hall were concerned, claimed more than ordinary care and attention. We have rarely to find fault with Mr. Hullah for want of zeal where Mendelssohn has been in hand, but on this occasion the composer of the symphony in A minor was certainly sacrificed to M. Gounod.

It is never an agreeable task to record a disappointment following on the heels of unbounded expectation; but it is our duty at present, and we must not shrink from it. M. Gounod has been so lauded, and by creditable authorities—as was stated in our last number—that we looked, at least, for an original, if not for a great musician. We found neither one nor the other. M. Gounod, in short, is a French composer in all that belongs to a French composer, except that grace and prettiness of melody which is the gift of so many French composers, and more especially of the best of them all—Auber. In this point he is singularly deficient—so much so, indeed, that he appears unable, or unwilling, to define a phrase. That, like M. Hector Berlioz, he may entertain exclusive views on the subject of melody, and be ruled by a system of his own invention, which regards “tune as a common-place expedient to tickle vulgar ears,” is not impossible. But our ears, being vulgar enough to yearn for this particular “tickling,” they are unsatisfied and unedified without it. Mozart has tune, and Beethoven, and Handel, and Haydn, and Mendelssohn, and Weber, &c., and they are not small men, nor bad models, nor despicable authorities, but the great lamps that illumine the palace of art. Nor does M. Gounod exhibit any of that daring novelty, that vast outline, that rugged and, at times, grandly poetical conception, for which Berlioz is so constantly to be admired, that no work of his can be listened to without an interest, which, while it alternately rises and falls, is never quite extinct. M. Gounod has notions of harmony and instrumentation which dissatisfy without exciting surprise. His treatment of the orchestra is singularly monotonous and tame, in the midst of a general tendency to extreme noise. In his sacred music there is nothing to impress the hearer with a deep emotion. Occasionally, indeed, (as in the “Sanctus,” from a mass, which was the third piece on the list of Wednesday night,) it is common and theatrical, not to say vapid. At other times, (as in the “Hosanna in excelsis,”) its distinguishing trait is a sort of pedantic triviality—pedantic, because making a pretence to a quality it does not possess—trivial, because destitute of all evidence of elaboration and depth. We may say, indeed, without fear of refutation, that M. Gounod has neither the learning, nor the dignity of style, which have always been regarded as indispensable in the music of the Church. Not only does he lack ideas, but the science that may sometimes hide a poverty of thought. The first piece on Wednesday, for example, a chorus, “Libera me,” from a Requiem, is literally no more nor less than a collection of chords, progressions, and modulations. The voices have no melody to sing, the instruments no figure to display the resources of counterpoint, and relieve the ear by variety of accent and rhythm. In the second piece, a motet, “Thou wilt content them, O Lord,” without accompaniments, the ambitious expedient of a double choir is resorted to, with a result absolutely abortive, since not a vestige of cleverness or contrapuntal skill is offered as an excuse for this pompous pretext.

M. Gounod cannot surely have studied the motets of Mendelssohn—much less those of Bach, in which the choir is divided to good purpose, and eight vocal parts consummately developed. The “Sanctus” begins with a tenor solo, which would serve for the commonest French opera tune, were the melody more rounded and finished. The “Benedictus,” after the “Hosanna in excelsis,” opens with a solo for soprano, which has about as much tune in it as a Gregorian canto fermo (to which, by the way, our contemporary, the Daily News, in a most unaccountable article, compares it). What follows this solo is all froth. We need add no more to make it sufficiently clear that we did not admire the examples of M. Gounod’s sacred composition with which Mr. Hullah favored us on Wednesday night. Yet (except the motet, which being long and wholly without accompaniment, exposed the choral executants to imminent peril, and before the end left them a tolerable distance from the key in which they commenced) the performance was good, and the “Sanctus,” owing to the boisterous passage, on the words, “Pleni sunt cœli et terra gloriâ tuâ,” evidently suggested by the “Robert toi que j’aime” of Meyerbeer, obtained an encore.

The selection from M. Gounod’s works concluded with a dramatic scena, entitled “Peter the Hermit,” which it grieves us to be obliged to condemn as unconditionally as the sacred pieces. The nearest resemblance to this scena—for bass solo (Mr. H. Phillips), semi-chorus, and full chorus (an imposing display of resources, out of which no legitimate effect is obtained)—may be detected in some of Verdi’s theatrical music, and especially, if we are not deceived, in the opera called Attila. It is true Mr. Phillips had an air to sing which was really a tune, but this tune, the first complete one we had heard, we are sorry to say we did not admire. Like the solos in the “Sanctus” and “Benedictus” it is unvoiced and unmelodious. The semi chorus is employed most inartificially, with that absence of ingenious contrivance which seems to be a characteristic of M. Gounod’s music—while all that comes from the grand chorus is a certain brilliancy, which can hardly fail to accompany the employment of the unison, but which too often presented, and with no orchestral devices to adorn it, becomes common and tiresome in the end.

We have stated our opinion on M. Gounod’s music without reserve, the more so because he was so lavishly praised in advance, that the advent of a new and original composer was anticipated. On a former occasion we felt it our duty to animadvert severely on the too flattering estimate that has been pre-administered in favour of another composer, M. Silas—who was ushered into this country as a sort of acknowledged successor of Mendelssohn, whereby in the end, M. Silas was the sufferer, even to an unjust extent, since we feel bound to assert that his pretensions as a musician, inasmuch as we can be allowed to form an opinion from the works we have heard at Mr. Hullah’s concert—are very far above those of M. Gounod, who is by some years his senior. Had we spoken more guardedly, had we insinuated the probability of M. Gounod ever being able to soar to the height to which the imagination of his admirers have lifted him, we should have done the public an injustice, and M. Gounod himself but doubtful service. At the same time let us not conclude without a pledge, due to our readers and ourselves, that we shall lose no occasion to hear more of M. Gounod’s music, in the sincere hope that we may be able to write, without violation of conscience, another and a better account. It is possible the works introduced by Mr. Hullah may be very early efforts. If so, however, it was indiscreet to introduce them, on such an occasion—that of his débüt before a London audience—the calmest, the most independent, and the most difficult in the world; an audience upon whom the “prix de Rome,” or even the prestige of a triumph at the Académie Nationale de Musique does not necessarily force conviction, as has been exemplified on more than one occasion. If they be early compositions, his advisers should urge M. Gounod at the earliest opportunity to give the English public some specimens of his more recent workmanship. Mr. Hullah himself might be consulted on the matter. That gentleman is too sincere a lover of his art to refuse M. Gounod the chance of a second hearing, on such a just and reasonable plea.

MR. FREDERICK GYE is at Berlin making arrangements respecting the Royal Italian Opera.

Provincial.

JULLIEN AT MANCHESTER.

(From the Manchester Examiner and Times.)

This gentleman gave the last of his very brilliant and interesting concerts to a crowded audience, in the Free-trade Hall, on Saturday evening last, the occasion being graciously appropriated to the benefit of Madlle. Jetty Treffz. If we may judge from the large audiences attracted by M. Jullien, his visit to Manchester, this Christmas, must have been particularly successful; and we think we may venture to say that the faith he has kept with the public, by presenting them with one of the most complete orchestras, whether we speak of individual or collective talent, will long be remembered by vast numbers of our musical public; whilst it will give him a marked position in any future visit. If rumour be true, however, the visits of M. Jullien are approaching their close in Manchester. His talent, his ingenuity, and his enterprise, are made known in other countries beside England; tempting offers have arrived from America, France, Germany, and even from Russia. "How happy could I be with either, were to their dear charmer away."—Monsieur Jullien is no doubt somewhat "in a fix," if we may be allowed a vulgarism, looking north, west and south, and waiting for the fates on "golden opinion" to decide where must be the move. It is very possible, therefore, that we may soon lose him, and that his next visit may be that of a "farewell." We almost venture to hope not, for considering him, as we have done, among the "schoolmasters abroad," as one helping on the move towards refinement and better taste on the part of the people, we shall, indeed, be sorry to bid him adieu. He is an active spirit to whom certain classes look, at particular seasons of the year, for a graceful and a gratifying amusement. In London he indicates that Christmas is coming, in Manchester he tells us it is come, and we have learned to look upon him as one of the happy symbols of a right merry time. He has done much good in his day and generation,—though he does not talk like an oracle, but merely gives utterance by the magic of his baton to "most eloquent music?"—he has excited many a generous sentiment, called forth many a beautiful aspiration; and he has taught a lesson to vast numbers, whether artists or artizans, that industry and a strong faith in our calling will carry us through many difficulties, and do much to land us safe at last. Wherever he shall go, we are satisfied he will have the admiration of all who can appreciate these very valuable qualities.

MENDELSSOHN'S ELIJAH AT MANCHESTER.

(From the Manchester Examiner and Times.)

We have so often commented in these columns upon the genius displayed in this the greatest of the great master's sacred compositions, that we need scarcely enter into any detail of its many and extraordinary beauties. Mendelssohn has contrived, with rare artistic power, to combine the solemnity of the Messiah with a graphic illustration of his subject that may be called dramatic, in the most refined sense of the term. That such a work should have been produced at the aristocratic musical locality of the town for the first time on Thursday night, must be traced to some of those unaccountable motives which occasionally regulate the acts of public bodies. "Better late than never," says the adage, and with this spirit we congratulate the subscribers to the Concert-hall, not only upon the production, but, all things considered, upon the very respectable performance of Mendelssohn's Elijah. M. Charles Hallé, in his position as conductor, must have been gratified with the discipline of his local troops;—band and chorus showed the advantages derivable from rehearsals and public performances, and he directed them with the tact of a sound musician; albeit, there were one or two points leading us to presume that he is less familiar with the sacred oratorio, than with some other classes of composition.

Miss Birch, as the principal soprano of the evening, gave satisfaction in those parts of the work which demand beauty of voice rather than intellectual power; but those who remember the splendid performance of the oratorio at the Free-trade Hall, with Jenny Lind as the heroine, will readily perceive how much the latter quality is necessary for the faithful illustration of such music as the great opening air of the second part, "Hear ye, Israel," and "Be not afraid." It is in the word-painting of such compositions that greatness is shown by the vocalist, and this Miss Birch certainly did not accomplish—her performance was pleasing rather than great. There was a nearer approach to the lofty order of singing in the efforts of Miss Williams, who, with a voice not to be surpassed in the charm of its tone, read as well as sang the celebrated air, "Oh, rest in the Lord," with a fine intelligence. Admirers as we are generally of Mr. Lockey's vocal powers, he still possesses faults it would be as well if he could abandon, particularly a throatiness of voice which, without great care, will increase rather than diminish as he advances into years. In the air, "If with all your hearts," he showed more judgment than feeling; it wanted the mingled delicacy and fervour which we can imagine a singer of Mario's capacity throwing into it; and the same may be said of "Then shall the righteous," which we know Mario does sing as no other tenor has yet sung.* In making these comparisons, however, we would rather desire to point out to our own artists what may be accomplished by study, under the influence of a just spirit of emulation, than from any wish to condemn what in itself was highly creditable and praiseworthy. Mr. Phillips having recently recovered from a severe indisposition, naturally claims every indulgence. There were evidences of weakness occasionally in the upper range of his voice, but his intelligent reading was always conspicuous, and in the air "It is enough," he showed how comparatively valuable are his services in the present dearth of sterling English vocalists. Some of the concerted pieces were finely given, particularly the quartet, "Cast thy burden," and the trio, "Lift thine eyes," the latter by Miss Birch, Miss Williams, and Mrs. Thomas; the former by Miss Birch, Miss Williams, Messrs. Lockey and Craig. The chorusses were admirable, but had less effect upon the audience than might have been anticipated. There were few evidences of enthusiasm either in reference to "Thanks be to God," or the concluding chorus, a deficiency not usual when we have had the good fortune to hear this noble piece of musical writing elsewhere. Praise is due to the orchestra, from which we should be unjust not to select for particular remark the execution of two obligato passages for the oboe, by Mr. Jennings; we allude to the extraordinary accompaniment in the dialogue between Elijah and the Youth, and the beautiful obligato in the air, "For the mountains shall depart." Both of these points were given by Mr. Jennings with a fine appreciation of their importance, and with a beauty of tone that we have rarely heard surpassed. Let us, in conclusion, repeat that the performance, as a whole, was a very agreeable indication of our musical progress.

MANCHESTER.—(From our own Correspondent.)—M. Charles Hallé's extra Classical and Chamber Concert took place at the Assembly-rooms, on Saturday. The following is the programme:

PART I.

Grand Trio—Pianoforte, violin, and violoncello—(In D Minor, Op. 49) - Mendelssohn.
Adagio, in A Flat, from Op. 10, and Finale from Op. 27, - Pianoforte - Beethoven.
Song—Miss M. Williams.
Grand Sonata—Pianoforte and violin—(In G, Op. 96) - Beethoven.

PART II.

Grand Trio—Pianoforte, violin, and violoncello—(In E Flat, Op. 70) - Beethoven.
Song—Miss M. Williams.
Solo—Violin - Elégie - Ernst.
Pensée's }
Fugitives. } "Lied." }
Pianoforte and Violin. } "Adieu." } St. Heller and Ernst.

We never experienced more delightful sensations in listening to an entire public concert, than to the one of which the above is a programme—it was not alone that the talent engaged, both vocal and instrumental, was first rate—it was not that such a duo can scarcely be found in Europe as Ernst and Charles Hallé, but it was that all were in good and happy vein—the selection was not only good—it was beautiful—the performance was more than excellent, for there was a spirit of enjoyment in it to the gifted artistes themselves, which became quite contagious, and communicated itself to the select audience. Mendelssohn's trio made an admirable opening. The first movement—allegro agitato—shewed the master hands that were rendering it. The second, a most lovely andante—got most rapturously applauded. The fantastic scherzo and the impassioned finale were pre-eminently beautiful. We shall exhaust superlatives were we to speak in adequate terms of this recherche concert! Let any one who has ever had the chance of hearing three such players as Ernst, Lidel, and Hallé, in a moderately sized room, engaged in the execution of that fine music, gainsay us if they can!

* Always excepting the introduced cadenza going up to the high A flat.—Ed.

Hallé next gave us two of the choicest movements—from two of the best solo sonatas of Beethoven—the adagio from the one in A flat, Op. 10, and finale from Op. 27—wondering, comment, and enthusiastic plaudits, express all that can be said. Hallé surpassed himself. Next appeared our favourite, Miss Williams, in that fine old song of Gluck's, "Che Faro;" she was, perhaps, never in better voice—never sang better—and was never listened to by a more appreciating audience. The song just suited her deep full tones; she evidently felt herself mistress of it, and revelled in it accordingly—to the no small gratification of all in the room. Then came the sonata (in G. Op. 96) for pianoforte and violin—by Beethoven—a masterly display of talent by both Ernst and Hallé. They played the music con amore—but to attempt to describe the passionate expression which they infused into the adagio—the playfulness of the scherzo—or the allegretto finale—with its quaint Scotch jig sort of subject, is beyond our power. Suffice it to say, it was glorious music, gloriously performed.

Next came the grandest piece of the night. Beethoven's trio (in E flat, op. 70)—and perhaps one reason for our enjoying this so much, as well as most of the pieces given—was, that we had heard them all before; for we were not in a peculiarly happy mood for enjoyment, and went solus to the concert, determined not to miss our only chance at present of hearing Ernst. We came away, however, delighted beyond all former precedent. Every movement of this splendid trio was charmingly given by the three; but if anything was superlatively fine, where all was so great, we must say it was the minuet "allegro ma non troppo." The way this was sung on the first violin by Ernst, and accompanied by the other two, was incomparable; yet what could be grander than the "Finale Allegro?" Its harmonies and joyous melodies, reminded one, for fulness and grandeur, of the finale to "Fidelio"—one can only compare Beethoven with himself.

Miss Williams then delighted the audience with another display of her rich deep notes in a song called "Lovely clouds," by Reissiger; to show how her voice and style were appreciated by perhaps the most fastidious audience in Manchester, this, her second song, met an unanimous encore,—a very rare occurrence at these classical concerts. After this, Ernst gave us his own expressive "Elegie" on the violin—which he made eloquent to painfulness, almost—so intensely mournful was its appeal. By way of contrast, and as a wind up, a well known German "lied" by Heller and Ernst, was sung on his truly vocal violin, and accompanied by Hallé, followed by an "Adieu"—both from the "Pensee Fugitive." And an adieu it certainly was, for it was the last night we shall ever hear such magic strains in those beautiful rooms; the auctioneer has since been awakening its echoes with his hammer; and soon after this meets the eye of your readers, the Assembly-room will be razed to the ground. Well, we must hope Hallé will revive his concerts in some other locale. The worst of it is, there remains no other so fit in Manchester. Jullien returned again; first, for a "Beethoven," then a "Mendelssohn" Festival, the Jetty Treffz Benefit, on Saturday last. He has had a famous harvest in Manchester, this Christmas.

M. Gounod, the French composer, some of whose works were introduced by M. Hullah, at his last monthly concert, has been in London for a few days.

Foreign.

PARIS.—(From a Correspondent).—The season is now in its meridian. Its course has been signalled by the production of two successful operas. L'Enfant Prodigue of Auber is running a prosperous career at the Académie de Musique. General opinion rates the music highly. There are not wanting some who find it too "biblical" and heavy, while others depreciate it as too "profane" and trivial. Auber, no doubt, consoles himself with the reflection that both of the demurring parties cannot be right, although it is very possible that both are wrong. The piece is one of the most ingenious of M. Scribe, while the scenery and the decorations surpass anything that has previously been seen, even at the Grand Opera. The only drawback is the want of some premier sujet of celebrity in the cast; for, though Roger is an excellent tenor, and Massol has proved himself an actor and singer of high pretensions, the want of a first-rate female singer is severely felt. Mdle. Dameron, who plays the part of Zephthra, is a young artist of decided promise, and Madame Laborde, a clever vocalist in the French bravura style; but neither can claim to a place in the premier ligne, which militate in some degree against the attraction of the Enfant Prodigue.

The Prophète and Guillaume Tell have been recently played. Madame Viardot has lost none of her hold on the public mind as the representative of Fides, notwithstanding the immense and deserved success of Mdle. Alboni. In Guillaume Tell M. Mairalte made his début as Arnold, and was well received, while M. Massol restored the part of Guillaume to the importance which it had lost for some years, by being consigned to inferior performers. M. Mairalte is the same gentleman who, as M. Meerelt, was first tenor at the Ghent Opera, and, as Signor Maralti, proved eminently successful last season in a more subordinate position at the Royal Italian Opera. A new opera by M. Gounod, called Sappho, is in the course of preparation. M. Gounod is an untried man, but his friends have blown loud anticipatory flourishes in his praise, of which, it is to be hoped, he may not be found undeserving.

The concerts of the celebrated Société des Concerts will shortly commence at the Conservatoire. The new rival association, at the head of which is M. Berlioz, and the Union Musicals, over which M. Seghers presides, have achieved a "succès d'estime," but have not turned out profitable in a pecuniary sense.

At the Opéra Comique another opera by Scribe and Halévy, Le Dame de Pique, has been brought out with entire success. The libretto, taken from a Russian tale, translated by M. Merimée, is one of the most fantastic that Scribe has constructed. It is founded on an old story about the Russian Empress, Elizabeth, who had found out the secret of invariably winning at play by means of three cards, of which the Queen of Spades (La Dame de Pique) was one. The music of M. Halévy is praised for its couleur locale—a quality in which he is generally deficient; but the wonderful singing of Madame Ugalde—or rather her wonderful roulades and passages of bravura, for therein lies her real strength—together with Condésc's picturesque and forcible acting, aided by gorgeous scenery and decorations, according to some critics, have had a main influence in this last triumph of MM. Scribe and Halévy.

Meanwhile Mr. Lumley is getting on exceedingly well at the Theatre Italien. Madame Sontag's brilliant reception in the Figlia del Reggimento has been followed by equal good fortune in the Barbiere di Siviglia and Don Pasquale, to both of which operas the return of Lablache has given additional eclat. Ivanhoff, the tenor, once so well known in London, has made a "quasi fiasco," and, it is to be feared, will not be of much use to Mr. Lumley; Colini, the new baritone, was not much more successful. Opinions are divided as to his merits, but few venture to assert that he is destined at any future period to occupy a high rank in his profession. Madame Fiorentini has added greatly to the strength of Mr. Lumley's troupe, which the arrival of Madame Barbieri Nini, who has been long promised, will complete.

Mlle CAROLINE DUPREZ.—The latest event of interest at the Theatre Italien has been the début of Mlle Caroline Duprez, who appeared in company with her father, in the part of Lucy, in Lucia di Lammermoor. The critics are unanimous in praise of the young aspirant; but, of course, their favourable notices must be accepted with caution, since they have naturally been influenced by the respect so justly due to the veteran Duprez, one of the greatest singers of the French stage, who, in the part of Edgardo, (composed expressly for him by Donizetti), was himself received with the utmost enthusiasm. The acquisition of these two artists has greatly strengthened Mr. Lumley's company.

Every foreigner in the habit of visiting the Parisian theatres must be pleased to hear that M. Carlier has issued an ordinance by which the organisation of that extreme nuisance, the "claque," will be materially changed for the better. The superintendent of police has wisely resolved to deprive the "claque" of the privilege they have so long enjoyed, of entering the theatre before the public, and appropriating to themselves the most conspicuous and comfortable places in the parterre. It is a pity such a monstrous absurdity, such an insult to common sense and just appreciation, cannot be done away with altogether. It is degrading to a civilized community.

A new one act comedietta, by M. Emile Augier, has been received with the utmost favour, at the Théâtre Français, where the performances of Mlle. Rachel continue to engross public attention to the exclusion of all minor attractions. Frederick Lemaître has made a sensation in a piece called Paillasse (an adaptation of which was produced on Monday night at the Adelphi), scarcely inferior to that created by Robert Macaire or the Dame de St. Tropez. The Vaudeville and the Théâtre Historique are both closed, and the vain chimaera of a third lyrical theatre has again been haunting the minds of disappointed musical composers and singers. It is to be hoped, if any one else essays the speculation, that he will make a better hand of it than M. Adolphe Adam at the Théâtre National. The house of Leroy and Chabrol have failed in the attempt to make a bankrupt of Signor Ronconi, the celebrated actor and singer, late impresario of the Théâtre Italien. Their claims have been reduced by the Tribunal of Commerce from 150,000*fr.* to 87,000*fr.*, and Signor Ronconi is allowed two years to acquit himself. Mlle. Charton, Mr. Mitchell's intelligent and popular prima donna, is at Lille, where she has been playing all her favourite characters with the greatest success. She remains until the end of the month, and will then go to London.

(Extract from a Private Letter.)—"Some musical news from Paris I am to give. Where shall I begin? Halévy's La Dame de Pique has—so says Adolphe Adam, in his evidently well-intentioned "critique"—the same musical merit and success as the Tempesta had in London. The libretto of the Dame de Pique, by Scribe, is the most racy, spirited, and interesting comedy imaginable, and even without the music would have the greatest success. I do not doubt but it will be soon performed on all the London stages. Madame Ugalde is enchanting as a singer and actress, and the mise en scène is of the most costly kind. I heard, at a soirée "distinguee," a young Englishman, Mr. T. Ascher, pupil of Mendelssohn and Moscheles; he is not only an excellent pianist, but a composer of some graceful and clever "morceaux de salons." At another soirée we went through the piano-forte score of Macfarren's Charles II., and notwithstanding that our public did not understand the libretto, it obtained the greatest enthusiasm for its charming melodies, which speak to the heart. I heard much in favor of an English lady, a pupil of M. Alphonse Re-vial, who is said to have become, under his teaching, a first-rate singer. I shall hear her soon, and then speak from facts. Erard is preparing a magnificent piano for the forthcoming London Exhibition. I have taken out several patents for new and important inventions. I long for the next concert of Berlioz—his concerts take the shine out of the "Conservatoire," as I hear from good judges. To-night is the first début of Mlle. Duprez. I will tell you of her success in my next epistle. On dit, "Thalberg writes an opera." Moi je laisse dire. Henry Smart has been here, and played on several of the most celebrated organs. I was delighted to hear his praises from the amateurs of this king of instruments."

MADRID.—(From a Correspondent.)—Mlle. Alboni has created a furor in the Favorita and Sonnambula. The latter opera pleased so much that it was played five times in succession (contrary to the general rule), and the Queen has been a constant visitor. Alboni played the part of Amina, for the first time, at Birmingham, in 1849, at the time of the festival; and an account of her performance appeared in this journal. The other artists at Madrid are Madame Frezzolini, Signor Gardoni, and Herr Formes. Frezzolini has pleased very much, and Formes has been completely successful in all his parts. Ronconi, who has left Paris altogether, having declined an engagement at the Théâtre Italien, will shortly make his début at Madrid, in the Barbiere, with Alboni and Gardoni. At Lisbon, the lovers of the opera are all on the alert, in consequence of the engagement of Madame Stoltz, who will make her first appearance in her celebrated part of Leonore in La Favorite.

GHENT.—Zelger has returned to the opera here, and is as popular as ever. He made his rentrée in the Prophete, in the part of the chief Anabaptist, and has subsequently appeared in La Juive as the Cardinal, and as Moise in the Moise. In all he has been eminently successful. He is a great favorite with the public of Ghent. The theatre is doing very well, and we have plenty of music and in all varieties.

NEW YORK.—We owe Madame Bishop a musical debt for her Sunday evening concerts, in Tripler Hall. With the assistance of a large and good orchestra, and a chorus which will undoubtedly improve, she is giving a series of Sacred Concerts no less profitable to herself, we fancy, than agreeable and useful to the public. She has already produced Beethoven's oratorio of the Mount of Olives, Haydn's Creation, and Rossini's Stabat Mater, and is so rendering a most essential service to the cause of musical art and cultivation in New York.

We wish particularly to notice the fact that Madame Bishop has sung at two of her concerts, and on both occasions with encores, and the greatest applause, Schubert's "Ave Maria"—one of the most profoundly beautiful works of that rare genius. This fact indicates that music of the highest worth, when discreetly selected, is not lost upon a popular audience; and in singing that and simple arias of Handel's and Haydn's, Madame Bishop has shown the way which, we trust, other artists will follow—of benefitting the true musical taste of the community, no less than themselves—by presenting the very best music. The Italians, rich and mellifluous as they are, do not monopolise melody or exhaust it. The Germans, Mozart, Weber, Spohr, Mendelssohn and others have written songs and scenes that will not alone strike the general ear, but please the general heart. And while the Opera continues with increasing success to spread for us a feast of sweet Southern blooms, let the single artists regale us with Northern fruit.

We thank Madame Bishop for this attempt, and congratulate her upon the result—for every Sunday evening the throng at Tripler Hall has confirmed what we say.—New York Daily Tribune.

Miscellaneous.

ERNST.—The great violinist has returned from Manchester. He is announced to play once in London previous to his tour in the provinces with Mdle. Angri. His name is in the programme of Mr. Balfe's forthcoming concert at Exeter Hall.

MR. BALFE has come back from Paris, in anticipation of his concert on the 27th, which promises to be a brilliant affair.

MR. MITCHELL, the enterprising ex-(esperons non-ex)-lessee of St. James's Theatre, has returned from Paris. What views and arrangements Mr. Mitchell's are for the season will appear in good time. Meanwhile we hold fast to the hope that he will not abandon his old patrons, the public, but yet for another season officiate musically and dramatically as one of the most zealous and favoured caterers for their amusement. Be it at the St. James's, or Drury Lane, it is all one provided we only have Mr. Mitchell once more with his Charton, his Couderc, his Guichard, his Chateaufort, his Nathalie, his Reguier, and last, not least, his Rachel.

WARRINGTON.—Miss Sinclair has opened the pretty little theatre of this place for a short season.

MR. WILBERFORCE has been appointed organist to Christ Church, Liverpool.

MISS DURLACHER, the vocalist, has returned to town for the season, after a most successful provincial tour.

BERWICK.—A meeting of members of the congregation attending the parish church was held in the vestry on Wednesday, for the purpose of devising means for reviving and maintaining the practice of singing the psalms and other parts of the church service during the period of public worship, the discontinuance of this practice having of late occasioned so much remark among the general community and regret among the congregation. Captain Smith, R.N., was in the chair, and the meeting comprised a number of ladies. A list of suggestions was presented by Mr. Hixson, the organist, from which a series of resolutions was prepared and agreed to. These were—first, that a calendar containing a list of the proper singing psalms for every day, with the names of the tunes attached, be adopted, and in no case to be deviated from—the calendar prepared by the Rev. Dr. Millar to be the one selected; second, that four leading singers (two males and two females) be engaged to lead the vocal department of the service, and that two collections throughout the year be made in the church to remunerate these parties for their services; third, that the ladies of the congregation be recommended to form private musical parties for practice at which the organist is willing to give a gratuitous attendance if required; fourth, that a committee be appointed to draw up a memorial, to be signed by the congregation and presented to the Vicar, for his concurrence in the arrangements proposed. All of these resolutions were unanimously adopted, and we hope they will be successful in remedying a defect which all seem to regret. One lady at the meeting said she was always unwilling to bring a stranger with her to the church, for she was aware of the remark that would be subsequently made, namely, the omission of the congregation in joining in the services, either in the singing or the responses—an omission which she was neither able to excuse nor apologize for.—Berwick Advertiser.

SURREY CHAMBER CONCERTS.—The first of a series of concerts under the above title, and which, judging from this specimen, promises to be very attractive, took place on Monday evening at the Lecture Hall, Walworth, under the direction of Mr. G. J. Lake. The programme was exceedingly well selected. The vocalists and instrumentalists were Miss Poole, Miss Messent, Madlle. Lavinia, Mr. Herbert, Mr. Leffler, Mr. Sedgwick, (concertina), Mr. S. G. Callcott (pianoforte). The encores were for Balfe's cavatina, "Sweet Maid when thou art Sleeping," beautifully rendered by Mr. Herbert; "The Lost Heart," given with that purity of intonation which makes Miss Poole so charmingly effective in all that she undertakes; an English version of "Non piu andrai" by Mr. Leffler; "Jock o' Hazeldean" sung to perfection by Miss Messent; a delicious unaccompanied quartette, "Dream the dream that's sweetest," by Mr. G. H. Lake, exquisitely interpreted by Misses Messent and Poole and Messrs. Herbert and Leffler; and Balfe's "I'm a merry Zingara," sung with great spirit by Mdle. Lavinia. The latter young lady also achieved a triumph on this occasion by her delivery of "Una voce." Her voice is a clear, ringing soprano. The floriture introduced by her into the cavatina embraced a compass of more than two octaves—from the G to B. A potpourri, selected from Der Freischütz, for the pianoforte and harmonicon, and performed by Mr. Callcott and Mr. Lake, gained immense applause, the adagio movement being given most exquisitely by the latter gentleman on the harmonicon. Mr. Lake conducted, playing also with Mr. Sedgwick a Duo Concertante for the concertina and pianoforte. The concert appeared to afford the greatest satisfaction, which promises well for the deserved success of the series. We understand the second concert is to be given shortly at the Horns, Kennington.

A WORD ABOUT THE LADY OF LYONS.—I went the other night to see the Lady of Lyons at Drury Lane, partly because Claude is one of Anderson's best parts, and partly because the drama is the most successful of modern plays, and amuses the critic by showing what wretched attempts at wit and what poetry will pass current with an audience, provided the story have movement, the situations interest, and the construction be skilful. I was more than ever impressed with what struck me from the first in the strange mistake made with Beauseant. It was originally given to Elton, and, consequently, has ever since been played by one of the "heavies." Thus is the whole force of the character destroyed. Beauseant is, at least, a gentleman—a man of high breeding, and excessively proud of his birth—he offers his hand to Pauline, with a coxcombry so insolent in its assertion of superiority that she herself remarks that he does it as if conferring a favour. Does any actor represent that coxcombry? Does any actor show us the insolent aristocrat—or even the manner of a gentleman? No; Beauseant is cast to a tragedian, and he contrives to make it as scowling and offensive as possible. It seems to me that if the part were played by Charles Mathews it might be one of the most effective in the piece: a cool, self-sufficient, polished scamp—not a fop, but yet so obviously on shaking-hand terms with himself as to colour his whole manner. In a word, it should be a bit of light comedy, and, oh, heavens! given to any one but Mr. Cathcart, who in appearance, gesture, tone, deportment, and reading, was just the very opposite of what Beauseant ought to be. But actors are such sticklers for "tradition," that Elton's having once played the part in a certain way will most likely prevent any one else from venturing on a new reading.—Leader.

SHEFFIELD.—On Friday week the Misses Ryalls gave a concert in the Music Hall, which was crowded in every part. The principal attraction of the evening was the singing of our old favourite. Mr. William Ryalls, of Liverpool, whose qualifications as a ballad singer were agreeably displayed in "The Maid of Kildare," "The Village Maid," "Twas Post Meridian," "The Irish Emigrant," "Tom Topsail," and "White Blossomed Sloe." The Misses Ryalls sang two duets, in one of which, "What's a' the Steer," they elicited a deserved encore; and were assisted by Mr. Ryalls in several duets and trios. Both ladies are young, and we doubt not that time and practice will improve them considerably. The concert was varied by one of the pieces of Herz, played as a duet on the pianoforte by Miss and Master Parry Jones, very cleverly.

Mr. T. H. TOMLINSON delivered a very interesting lecture on ancient music on Tuesday, commencing from the antediluvian period, tracing its origin and progress in the darker ages, describing the kinds of music used in savage nations, and following its progression until the destruction of the temple of Jerusalem; he then pointed out the principal effects attributed to the music of the ancients, and closed with an account of its supposed influence on the human mind in exciting or repressing the passions. The lecture was illustrated with diagrams.

Mr. J. R. NEWCOMBE.—(From a correspondent.)—The benefit of this public favourite, at the Theatre Royal Plymouth, on Monday evening, presents a great variety of attractions. The pieces chosen for representation are the drama of Giralda, to be followed by a divertissement, after which the farce of the Practical Man, in which Mr. Newcombe will play Cloudsley, "a gentleman of imaginative tendencies," the whole to conclude with the new tale of enchantment called "The Seven Castles of the Passions." A "bumper" may be counted on.

DUBLIN.—The last of the series of concerts given by Mr. Scates, at the Rotunda, came off on Saturday evening, and was attended by a highly respectable audience. Mr. Ryalls, of Liverpool, was encored in all his songs through the evening, and in the old ballad, "Sally in our Alley," twice—giving, on the first encore, an Irish melody. Mr. Buckland also sang in a pleasing manner, "Philip the Falconer," and the buffo song, "Young England," in which he was much applauded. Miss Balfie, in the solos and concerted music, sustained her reputation as a tasteful concert singer. Nothing could be more effective than the concertina performance of Mr. Scates, to which the audience awarded unqualified approbation.

THE REVEREND THOMAS HARVEY.—(From a correspondent.)—We are informed that the Rev. Thomas Harvey, who recently took up his temporary residence at Boulogne, has just arrived in England. Mr. Harvey is known to the public as the object of a systematic persecution, during many years, at the hands of a dignitary of the church. Mr. Harvey has opposed a manly yet temperate resistance, aided by the press of all shades of politics. Unable, however, to contend longer against irresponsible power, and seeing no hope of reparation, Mr. Harvey retired to Boulogne early in 1849, and became the proprietor and minister of the oldest English church in that city, situated in the Upper Town; and although a certain reverend gentleman saw fit to omit all notice of this church, in his Enquiry into the state of the continental churches, Mr. Harvey has a numerous and highly respectable congregation, much increased since he entered upon the office. He is, moreover, esteemed both as a minister and as a man, by all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance, and who enjoy the privilege of his public ministrations. The estimation in which he is held is evident from the fact that the members of his congregation have prevailed upon him to sit for his portrait, which has been just completed by an eminent London artist. It is also in contemplation to raise a fund for the purchase of a new organ for his church, the present one being out of repair. Indeed a subscription has been already commenced. We trust that Mr. Harvey's former public and private friends will co-operate in this work—for we are convinced the better the minister in a church, the more zealous the devotion—and that they will rally round him during his visit to England, giving him all the encouragement and consolation in their power. Though only a private grievance, this case involves a public principle, in which Mr. Harvey has manfully contended, at much personal sacrifice. The case has been recently much served by two able pamphlets, the first entitled, "Charles James, Bishop of London. What he can do, and what he has done," and the second, "The signs of the Times," in which, amongst many other exposures, the authors set forth the unjust oppression to which Mr. Harvey has been subjected in forcible and touching language, illustrating the effects of the present system of irresponsible spiritual power.

SINGLE STAGE DANCING.—We can strongly recommend M. Silvain, who, besides being an excellent professor, is a single, and a single-minded man, of singular ability.

CIANCHETTINI AND DUSSEK.—We believe that Mr. Pio Cianchettini, although Dussek's nephew, has no other interest in his uncle's works, than what every true lover of music must necessarily possess.

CHELTEMHAM.—Cheltenham has been more than usually busy with musical matters of late. Madame Anna Thillon and Mr. Hudson gave their popular entertainment on Thursday evening, which was announced for repetition on Friday morning, but owing to Mr. Hudson having a severe hoarseness and cold, it was postponed till a future time. The attendance was good and the entertainment itself gave great satisfaction. It was under the superintendence of Messrs. Hale and Son, who likewise engaged John Parry to give his entertainment last Friday, which was attended by a most brilliant and fashionable audience. Messrs. Hale and Son have also announced a Grand Concert to be sustained by the principal artistes from the Grand National Concerts, including Pratti, Richardson, Miss Goddard, and many other of celebrity.

Original Correspondence.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT.

To the Editor of the "Musical World."

SIR,—It has struck me that an invitation to authors, composers, publishers, to embody their ideas in print, on the justice, policy, and general operation of the above subject, would serve much to enlighten your readers on a point but imperfectly understood even among the legal profession; and if you would open your columns to a fair and free discussion, I have but little doubt that the matter would be interesting to the majority of your readers.

A CONSTANT READER.

ACROSTIC.

S till bards may warble of the "Hayes"—the "Lind,"
I n strains extatic. Let the Songstress find
M an doing homage ever at her shrine.
S ongstler of England! Woman bows at thine.

R are power kind Nature gave thee; Science, Art,
E ach to enrich thee hath performed her part;
E ach with the laurel wreath thy brow surrounds.
V ain are the efforts of thy envious foes;
E ver for thee the stream of Triumph flows.
S ing then, while thirsting ears imbibe sweet sounds.

LISA.

NOTICE.

In consequence of an unusual press of matter the "Reviews of Music," prepared for this week, are unavoidably postponed until our next.

Advertisements.

MR. LINDSAY SLOPER

BEGS to announce that he will give THREE SOIREES OF CHAMBER MUSIC at the NEW BEETHOVEN ROOMS, No. 27, Queen Anne Street, Cavendish Square on the following Tuesdays:—JANUARY 26th, FEBRUARY 11th and 25th. Mr. Lindsay Sloper will perform Selections from the Pianoforte Works of the best Composers, and will be assisted by distinguished vocal and instrumental talent. Tickets for the series, one guinea each; or for single evenings, half-a-guinea each. May be had of all the principal Music-sellers, and of Mr. Lindsay Sloper, No. 7, Southwick Place, Hyde Park.

MESSRS. BENEDICT AND LINDSAY SLOPER'S PIANOFORTE CLASSES,

Conducted by Mr. Lindsay Sloper and Mr. E. Schulz (during Mr. Benedict's absence).

FOURTH SEASON.—These Classes (for Ladies) will be resumed on FRIDAY the 24th instant, at No. 2, Hinde Street, Manchester Square. Prospectuses may be had at all the principal Music Warehouses, and of Mr. Lindsay Sloper, No. 7, Southwick Place, Hyde Park.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL, 89, LONG ACRE.

M. ALEXANDRE BILLET begs to announce a series of THREE EVENING PERFORMANCES OF CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC, in illustration of the Works of the great Composers, on Tuesdays, January 28, February 11 and 25. To commence at Eight o'clock precisely. Tickets for a Single Concert, 2s.; Reserved Seats, 4s.; Subscription to Reserved Seats for the Series, 10s. 6d. To be had at St. Martin's Hall; of WESSLE and Co., 229, Regent Street, and the principal Music Publishers.

PROGRAMME OF THE FIRST PERFORMANCE.

1. Sonata in F sharp major, Op. 78 BEETHOVEN.
Adagio Cantabile, Allegro.
Allegro vivace.
2. { Prelude & Fugue in A flat BACH.
 Prelude & Fugue in F HANDEL.
3. Sonata in C minor WOLFF.
Introduzione, Adagio, fugue, C minor.
Allegro molto, C minor.
Adagio, A flat major.
Allegretto, C minor.
4. Andante con Variazioni in E flat, Op. 82, (Posth.) } MENDELSSOHN.
Works, No. 10)
5. Sonata in B minor HAYDN.
Allegro Moderato, B minor.
Tempo di Minuetto, B major and minor.
Presto, B minor.
6. Selection of Studies—
A minor STREIBELT.
D major CRAMER.
" " ST. HELLER.
G major MOSCHELES.
C sharp minor CHOPIN.

PROGRAMME OF THE SECOND PERFORMANCE.

1. Sonata in E flat minor PINTO.
Allegro Appassionato, E flat minor.
Andante, A flat major.
Allegro molto, E flat minor.
2. Prelude & Fugue in G minor (Cat's Fugue) SCARLATTI.
Prelude & Fugue in D major MENDELSSOHN.
3. Fantasia in A, Op. 16 (Dedicated to ROBERT SCHUMANN) } W. S. BENNETT.
Moderato con Grazia in A.
Scherzo Presto, in F sharp minor, D major.
Canzonetta Andantino, A major.
Presto Agitato, A minor.
4. Sonata in C minor, Op. 35 (Dedicated to CLEMENTI) DUSSEK.
Allegro ed assai Agitato, C minor.
Adagio Patetico ed espressivo, E flat major.
Finale grotesque, Allegro molto e giocoso, C major.
5. Allegro di Bravura CIPRIANI POTTER.
6. Lieder ohne Worte { MENDELSSOHN.
No. 4, Second Book.
No. 6, Sixth Book.
No. 1, do. do.
No. 4, do. do.

PROGRAMME OF THE THIRD AND LAST PERFORMANCE.

1. Sonata in B minor, Op. 40 (Dedicated to CHERUBINI) CLEMENTI.
Molto Adagio e sostenuto.
Allegro con fuoco.
Largo mesto e patetico.
Allegro.
2. { Prelude & Fugue in F BACH.
 Prelude & Fugue in E minor MENDELSSOHN.
3. Grand Sonata in B flat, Op. 106. BEETHOVEN.
PART 1st. { Allegro, B flat.
 { Adagio appassionato con molto sentimento, F sharp minor.
 { Scherzo assai vivace, B flat.
PART 2nd. { Introduzione Largo, B flat.
 { Fugue Allegro, B flat.
4. Andante con Variazioni in B flat, Op. 83 (Posth.) } MENDELSSOHN.
Works, No 11)
5. Rondo in A minor MOZART.
6. Selection of Studies:
C minor HUMMEL.
E flat MACFARREN.
D minor HILLER.
D flat major HENSELT.
" " THALBERG.

MR. BALFE'S GRAND CONCERT

ON MONDAY Evening, JANUARY 27, at EXETER HALL.

Mlle. Angri, Mlle. Graumann, Mlle. F. Lablache, and Miss Poole. Signora Lucciola (the celebrated female tenor) will make her first appearance in London on this occasion. Mr. and Mrs. Sims Reeves, Signor F. Tamburini (his first appearance in London), M. Jules Stockhausen, and Signor F. Lablache, also M. Ernst (his first and only appearance this season), and other eminent artists. Leader, Herr Molique; Conductor, Mr. W. Balfe. Stalls 7s.; Tickets, 4s. and 2s.; Upper Platform, 1s.; at Cramer, Beale, and Co.'s, 201, Regent-street, and all the principal music-sellers.

THE FLUTE.

H. POTTER, Musical Instrument Manufacturer to the Honorable Board of Ordnance, begs to call the attention of Amateurs and Professors to CLINTON'S NEWLY IMPROVED FLUTE, the only perfect instrument with the old fingering throughout. Every note is equal in power and quality, and can be produced with the utmost ease and certainty. It is well in Tune in every key in Music, and offers immense facilities to the performer. All the fingerings for C natural and C sharp are preserved, with Tone equal to the other notes, and which cannot be obtained on any other flute. These instruments are very superior in workmanship and materials, and the mechanism free from complication; consequently they are desirable and extremely moderate in price. Description and price lists may be obtained at the manufactory, No. 2, Bridge Street, Westminster.

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC

BY

BRINLEY RICHARDS.

- Angela. Romance. Dedicated to the Lady Robert Grosvenor 2 6
"Mr. Brinley Richards' "Angela," though essentially popular in style, yet strongly indicates the hand of an accomplished musician."—Morning Post.
- Mendelssohn's "First Violet." 1 6
- Mendelssohn's "Maid of the Ganges." Dedicated to Sterndale Bennett, Esq. 2 0
"In the arrangement of these two charming melodies by the lamented Mendelssohn for the Pianoforte, Mr. Richards has very effectively adopted the style of the celebrated Lieder ohne Worte."—Herald.
- The Fairy's Dream. Romance 2 6
- Picciola, ou le Chant du Captif. Dedicated to Mrs. Anderson 2 6
- Sybil. Romance. (Second Edition) 2 6
"The style of these compositions is the most attractive of modern Pianoforte music,—and whether for variety and sweetness of effect, or for frequent indication of a graceful elevation of musical thought, combined with a moderate degree of difficulty in execution, we have never met with three pieces by a native composer which were calculated to give so much satisfaction to a candid reviewer. Nothing can be more useful to young students of the modern school of Pianoforte playing than such compositions as the above."—Dramatic and Musical Review. September.
- Premier Nocturne. (Second Edition.) 2 6
- The Irish Emigrant. Arranged as a Rondo 2 6
"Among the recent examples of the style of Pianoforte music at present in vogue, few more successfully appeal to the exigencies of popular taste, and more thoroughly realize the beau ideal of fashionable elegance than the above-named publications. Sybil, Picciola, Premier Nocturne, and The Fairy's Dream, are all specimens of Mr. Brinley Richards in his most happy and fluent manner. They abound in ad captandum melody, and are overrun with passages both brilliant and neatly turned. The principal objection to the modern Pianoforte music of the drawing-room is a certain affectation of sentiment, from which Mr. Richards is entirely free. In his lightest passages there is a certain refinement, which indicates a desire to satisfy the amateur and the professor simultaneously, and must render his pieces acceptable to both."—Musical World. December 7.

CHAPPELL, 50, NEW BOND STREET.

HEALTH WHERE 'TIS SOUGHT!—HOLLOWAY'S

PILLS.—Cure of a disordered Liver and Stomach, when in a most hopeless state.—Extract of a letter from Mr. Matthew Harvey, of Chapel Hall, Airdrie, Scotland, dated the 15th of January, 1850.—To Professor HOLLOWAY, Sir,—Your valuable Pills have been the means, with God's blessing, of restoring me to perfect health, at a time when I thought I was on the brink of the grave. I had consulted several eminent Doctors, who, after doing what they could for me, considered my case hopeless. I had been suffering from a Liver and Stomach complaint of long standing, which during the last two years got so much worse, that every one considered my condition as hopeless. I, as a last resource, got a Box of your Pills, which soon gave relief, and by persevering in their use for some weeks, together with rubbing nght and morning your Ointment over my chest and stomach, and right side, I have by their means alone got completely cured, and to the astonishment of myself and everybody who knows me. (Signed) MATTHEW HARVEY.

These celebrated Pills are wonderfully efficacious in the following complaints:—

Ague	Constipation of the Bowels	Fevers of all kinds	Liver complaints	Tumours
Asthma	the Bowels		Lumbago	Ulcers
Bilious Complaints	Consumption	Fits	Piles	Worms of all kinds
Debility		Gout	Rheumatism
Blotches on the Dropsy		Head-ache	Serofula or King's Weakness, from whatever cause
Skin	Dysentery	Indigestion	Evil
Bowel complaints	Erysipelas	Inflammation	Sore Throats	&c., &c.
Colic		Jaundice	Tic-Douloureux

Sold at the Establishment of Professor HOLLOWAY, 244, Strand, (near Temple-bar,) London, and most all respectable Druggists, and Dealers in Medicines throughout the civilised World, at the following prices—1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box. There is a considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.

N.B.—Directions for the guidance of Patients in every Disorder are affixed to each Box.

CATALOGUE OF
M. HENRI PANOFKA'S
VOCAL COMPOSITIONS,

PUBLISHED IN LONDON AND PARIS.

THE PRACTICAL SINGING TUTOR,

Containing 43 progressive Studies from the commencement, for SOPRANO, CONTRALTO, TENORE, BASSO.

IN FOUR BOOKS.

Published by EWER & Co. 72, Newgate Street, City.

- | | |
|---|-----------|
| BOOK I. Eighteen Elementary Studies for SOPRANO or TENORE | price 5s. |
| BOOK II. Six Studies for the Style and Execution for SOPRANO or TENORE | 4s. |
| BOOK III. Eighteen Elementary Studies for CONTRALTO or BASSO | 5s. |
| BOOK IV. Six Studies for the Style and Execution for CONTRALTO or BASSO | 4s. |

TWELVE TWO PART STUDIES

For SOPRANO and CONTRALTO, Price 6s.

Published by JEFFERIES, 21, Soho-square.

SONGS AND DUETS,

With Italian, English, and French words.

			PUBLISHER.
La Sguardò	Canzonetta	(C.A.)	BOOSEY and Co.
La Lira	id.		id.
Diletta chimera	id.	(S. or T.)	id.
Son lieti i fiori	id.	(MS.)	id.
La Rimembranza	id.	(MS.)	id.
La Barca e pronta	Duo	(2 MS.)	id.
L'amor felice	Duo	(2 MS.)	id.
Le due amiche	Duo	(S. & C. A.)	id.
A Weera Canzone	(T.) composed for Signor MARRAS		LONDSDALE
La Veneziana Barcarole	(MS.) sung by Mdlle. JETTY DE TREFFZ		EWER and Co.
Susanna	a sacred song, composed for Miss DOLBY, words by Fitzball, Esq.		id.
Our Forest Home	Duet (S. & C.) written by D. Ryan, Esq.		id.
The Veneziana	Barcarole, with English words. Sung by Mdlle. de TREFFZ.		id.
The Mountain Flower	Ballad, (M.S.) written by Fitzball, Esq.		JEFFERIES.
Le Pelerin	Ballade, (C. A. or Basso)		BOOSEY and Co.
La Paysanne Coquette	Ballade (S.)		id.
Rebecca	scene dramatique (S.)		BRANDUS and Co.
La Fiancée	id. (C.A.)		id.
Haldee	id. (MS.)		id.
Le Naufrage	id. (C.A. or B.)		id.
La jeune fille	Romance (MS.)		id.
La Gondole	Duetino (2 MS.)		id.

N.B.—Applications for M. PANOFKA'S private Singing Lessons and Vocal Classes to be made to M. PANOFKA, 20, Nottingham Street, near Devonshire Terrace, Regent's Park. (If by letter, prepaid.)

NEW PIANOFORTE PUBLICATIONS.

WESSEL and Co. beg to announce the publication of a New Work for Piano Solo, in twelve numbers, price One Shilling each, entitled—

"YOUTHFUL DAYS."

- | | |
|--------------------------------|---------------------------------|
| No. 1. "Nursery Tale." | No. 7. "The Dance on the Lawn." |
| " 2. "The Clock." | " 8. "Boating on the Lake." |
| " 3. "Sunday Morning." | " 9. "The Birdlet's Death." |
| " 4. "Playing in the Meadows." | " 10. "The Water-Mill." |
| " 5. "Grand Parade." | " 11. "Skating." |
| " 6. "Lullaby." | " 12. "The Evening Bells." |

Composed by

THEODORE KULLAK, OF BERLIN.

Theodore Kullak ranks among the best composers of Germany. His Pianoforte Compositions, for the concert room and for the study, are eagerly sought after, both by professors and amateurs. Kullak's "Youthful Days" (Kinderleben) is written expressly in an easy form, and makes an acceptable present to young pupils, because it is useful practice together with pleasing themes: "The imagination of a poet combined with the science of a musician."

WESSEL and Co., 229, Regent Street, Corner of Hanover Street, Publishers of all the Pianoforte works of Theodore Kullak.

Just Published,

BARRETT'S COMPLETE METHOD FOR THE OBOE,

COMPRISING all the New Fingerings, New Tables of Shakes, Scales, &c., with a Concise Method of making Reeds; adopted by the Royal Academy of Music, the Conservatoire Militaire of France, &c. By A. M. R. BARRETT, Professor of the Oboe at her Majesty's Theatre, the Royal Italian Opera, Le Conservatoire de Paris, &c. &c. Price 31s. 6d. London: Jullien & Co., 214, Regent-street.

DENT'S IMPROVED WATCHES AND CLOCKS.

E. J. DENT, Watch and Clock Maker, by distinct appointment to the Queen, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and his Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia, most respectfully solicits from the public an inspection of his extensive stock of Watches and Clocks, embracing all the late modern improvements at the most economical charges. Ladies' Gold Watches, with gold dials, jewelled in four holes, 8 guineas; Gentlemen's, with enamelled dial, 10 guineas; Youth's Silver Watches, 4 guineas; warranted substantial and accurate-going Lever Watches, jewelled in four holes, 6 guineas.—E. J. Dent, 82, Strand; 33, Cockspur-street; and 34, Royal Exchange (Clock Tower Area).

MISS CATHERINE HAYES

AND

MDLLE. JENNY LIND.

THE only English Ballads sung by the above distinguished vocalists are, "Take this lute," by Benedict; "Oh, summer morn," by Meyerbeer; and the "Lonely Rose," by Balfe, sung by Mdlle. Lind; "Those happy days are gone," by Laveru; "Why do I weep for thee," by Wallace; "O, sing to me," by Osborne; and "My last thoughts are of thee," by Maynard, sung by Miss Hayes. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street.

VOCAL MUSIC.

Just published,

SCIPION ROUSSELOT'S new version of "TRAB, TRAB," as a Duet, Trio, Quartet, or Chorus. The celebrated Echo Chorus arranged as a Duet, with Pianoforte Accompaniment; and also his Grand Quadrille Fantastique, "THE CRYSTAL PALACE," for one two Performers in the Pianoforte, at Messrs. Rousselot and Co., 60, Conduit-street, Regent-street.

MR. J. FULLER is directed by the Trustees of Mr. Charles Coventry (late Preston) to submit for unreserved SALE BY AUCTION, on the Premises, 71, Dean-street, Soho, on Wednesday, January 22, and following days, the entire STOCK of well-manufactured MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS, 18,000 engraved music plates, comprising a valuable collection of instrumental and other music, in score and parts, with many valuable copyrights by the most eminent composers. The Lease of the very capacious Premises, subject to a low rent, will be submitted on the first day. Specimens of the works may be seen on the premises, 71, Dean-street, two days before the sale. Catalogues had on the premises, and at the auctioneer's offices, 161, Albany-street, Regent's park.

Printed and Published, for the Proprietors, by MICHAEL SAMUEL MYERS, of No. 3, Studley Villas, Studley Road, Clapham Road, in the parish of Lambeth, at the office of MYERS and Co., 37, King Street, Covent Garden, in the parish of St. Paul, where all communications for the Editor are to be addressed, post paid. To be had of G. Purkiss, Dean Street, Soho; Allen, Warwick Lane; Vickers Holywell Street, and at all Booksellers.—Saturday, Jan. 18, 1851.

The Musical World.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

Terms of Subscription, per Annum, 16s.; Half year, 8s.; Three Months, 4s.; payable in advance, to be forwarded by Money Order, to the Publishers, Messrs. Myers & Co., 37, King Street, Covent Garden.

No. 4.—VOL. XXVI.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 25, 1851.

PRICE FOURPENCE.

NOTICE.

. The charge for a number of the MUSICAL WORLD will henceforward be 4d. for town and country. Subscriptions, per annum, 16s.; per half-year, 8s.; per quarter, 4s.; delivered GRATIS on the day of publication.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Proprietors of the MUSICAL WORLD beg to remind those Subscribers who have not yet forwarded their Subscriptions, that unless the same be paid to MESSRS. MYERS and Co., 37, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, prior to the publication of the next number, they must discontinue forwarding it. Those Subscribers who may have paid Mr. W. S. JOHNSON (the late Publisher), in advance for the present year, will please to send an order to MESSRS. MYERS and Co., to receive the money from him.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

. The publication of the MUSICAL WORLD having changed hands, the proprietors respectfully solicit that all who desire to subscribe from the present time will have the kindness to notify the same to Messrs. MYERS and Co., 37, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, and to forward their Subscriptions in advance. A notification by letter, or verbal message, will receive immediate attention.

For the convenience of our West-End Subscribers, Advertisers, and Correspondents, Messrs. WESSEL and Co., 229, REGENT STREET, have kindly consented to receive Advertisements, Subscriptions, and Communications for the Editor.

CHANGE OF OFFICE.

. The MUSICAL WORLD will henceforth be printed and published at the office of Messrs. MYERS and Co., 37, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, where Subscriptions, Advertisements, and all Communications for the Editor may be sent.

NEW ARRANGEMENTS.

. Arrangements have been made to produce the MUSICAL WORLD for the future every Saturday morning at 10 o'clock, at which time it will invariably be ready for delivery.

Engagements have been entered into with several well-known writers, in the provinces and on the continent, who have undertaken to supply the MUSICAL WORLD with periodical correspondence on all subjects of musical interest. The services of a gentleman of high standing and ability have also been secured, for the purpose of reviewing such new publications as may be forwarded to the office with that view. This department will be strictly attended to. Original articles, from eminent pens, on general subjects of art, will also appear from time to time.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

The second performance of Mendelssohn's Elijah, which took place on Monday night, drew one of the largest assemblies we remember to have seen congregated within the walls of Exeter Hall. The execution was as remarkable for general carefulness as, on the previous occasion, for a very opposite quality. Those who were present at the first performance had the pleasure of assisting at a grand rehearsal, the benefit of which was enjoyed by their successors on Monday night. The respect which, in common with all true lovers of music, we are bound to feel for the memory of Mendelssohn, was shocked by the negligence with which his greatest work was interpreted, under the auspices of a society more indebted to the influence of his genius than any other in England or in Europe. It will, therefore, be easily believed that we went to Exeter Hall on Monday night determined to spare nobody—champions of Mendelssohn, protectors of the subscribers, and messengers of the public, rather than shielders of the Sacred Harmonic Society from blame, deserved or undeserved, or apathetic throwers of cold water upon manifestations of unpardonable indifference.

Happily, our critical watchfulness turned out unnecessary. Our office on Monday evening was a sinecure. Mr. Costa defied us, with a performance of Elijah, for the most part unsailable.

Let us hope, that the Sacred Harmonic Society may take warning, and, profiting by a lesson which it cannot but inwardly acknowledge to be a severe one, correct the errors of its ways. To be the first musical society in Europe is a fine thing, but to deserve the distinction, even if it be not unanimously accorded, is still finer. The first musical society in Europe—were it twenty times the first musical society in Europe, and were twenty times the vigor, zeal, talent, and experience of Mr. Costa at the head of its proceedings—cannot do impossibilities. We put it to the good sense and candour of all fair, impartial and reflecting judges, whether, after an interval of six months' idleness, the correct, or anything approaching correct execution of a grand, elaborate and difficult work, like the oratorio of Elijah, without a single rehearsal, be not an impossibility.

The Sacred Harmonic Society is, we are sure, at bottom, quite as right-minded a society as it is a great and numerous society, and, put upon its good behaviour under the influence of a temporary reverse, will conduct itself better for the future. But if the members forget, or allow for one instant to remain in abeyance, their obligations to the great musical spirit of the present age—Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy—"there must be something rotten in the state of Denmark." And should that be the case, which we shall be sorry to believe, we must take upon ourselves the gratuitous office of medical advisers, and by the wholesome drugs of honest criticism and fearless animadversion, whenever occasion may demand, endeavour to reduce the plethora of conceit, to free the veins and arteries from the obstructions of pedantry and self-opinion, to purge away the offending matter, and restore the afflicted body to sound and uncompromising health. "He chasteneth whom he loveth."

MR. DANDO'S QUARTET CONCERTS.

(From our City Reporter.)

These pleasant winter meetings recommenced on Monday evening, in the "throne room" of Crosby Hall. Where Richard Crookback sat of yore, delivering cruel edicts, there stood Mr. Dando, with his trusty comrades, Mellon, Hill, and Lucas, making sweet music. Among the earliest instituted of our quartet concerts, following close upon the heels of those of Mori and Blagrove, and outliving both, Mr. Dando's have ever been well conducted; and although the audience is select, it is thoroughly appreciative, and doubtless large enough to ensure a steady annual profit. We sincerely hope so, at least.

The programme was a handsome one; it was, indeed, of Mr. Dando's best. Haydn's quartet in C major (No. 32) opened the concert, and Mozart's in E flat major (No. 4) concluded it. What could be better than to begin with Haydn, and finish with Mozart? We shall not attempt to criticise either of these well-known works; which, in effect, have lived so long as to be recognized among the undying forms, immortal through the strength of their own beauty—types, ever to serve as models for the contemplation and delight of youthful genius. I need scarcely add, that they were excellently played. No violinist knows Haydn and Mozart more familiarly than Mr. Dando; Mr. Alfred Mellon (who had quitted his post at the Adelphi, for an element more congenial to his musical aspirations) is a second violin "of the first water;" Mr.

Hill is the tenor of tenors; and Mr. Lucas, as a classical violoncellist, needs no praise from us.

The grand piece of the evening, however, was a new quintet in B flat, for two violins, two violas, and violoncello—one of the posthumous works of Mendelssohn, executed by the same four gentlemen, with the addition of Mr. W. Thomas as second tenor. The impression derived from listening to this at a breath, and for the first time, is, that a new masterpiece has been given to the art, a rich and bright jewel added to the stores of chamber music. To stop and analyse what was an intense and continuous feeling of delight, is not in our power. Another occasion must serve for examination. As, one by one, they slowly come forth from the engraver's hands, the few remaining works of the great master, whose untimely death has arrested for a time the progress of the art itself, possess a painful and peculiar interest. Every one, you fancy, may be the last, and think that never again can be felt the fresh sensation, the keen and engrossing interest, that invariably accompany the first hearing of any piece of music from the pen of Mendelssohn. There remains, then, but to begin the catalogue again, and go right through, from op. 1 to op. 87, at which figure arrives the quintet in B flat. This last must be left to other hands than ours, to apostrophise in a style befitting its pretensions and the fame of its inspired author. We were pleased on the whole with the performance; but we felt that much remained to do, much to refine, a world of energy, a variety of passionate expression to add, before the last published chef d'œuvre of Mendelssohn could be rightly interpreted and fully understood.

The pianoforte playing of Mr. Lindsay Sloper was the theme of unanimous praise. We have rarely heard this most finished and elegant performer to more consummate advantage than in Beethoven's melodious duet in F major (with Mr. Dando on the violin), and in the trio in C minor of young Silas (with Messrs. Dando and Lucas, violin and violoncello),—the latter a work which, despite its close imitation of Mendelssohn's manner and frequent appropriation of Mendelssohn's ideas, is assuredly one of no ordinary merit.

The vocal part of the programme was divided between the Misses Cole and Mr. Benson. The Misses Cole sang some of the lovely chamber duets of Mendelssohn, among which "Greeting" was admirably conspicuous—with becoming simplicity of style and a purity of execution that promised much for the future. These young ladies are clever and unassuming, and deserve every encouragement. Mr. Benson sang a ballad called "Meeting and Parting," and joined the Misses Cole in Curschmann's pretty trio, "Addio," which pleased very much. The vocal music was accompanied by Mr. Lindsay Sloper, and the concert gave general satisfaction to a select audience of connoisseurs, whose numbers, we have little doubt, were in some degree restricted by the weather, which, more than unpropitious, was downright aggressive.

ALBERT SMITH AT MANCHESTER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Manchester spinners of cotton have been made convinced at the Free Trade Hall—where they flocked to the number of some 2,222—that there is a man who can spin yarns as well as themselves, and yarns that make the mouth open to grin—not to yawn. Mr. Cobden, the manufacturer, doubtless, manufactures very long speeches; but they are sadly in want of pictorial illustration. We should like to see some "effigies" of his facts. Look at Albert. He gives you anecdotes and scenery combined. He tells you of men, and shows you their physiognomies cunningly dispersed upon canvas. So that you must swallow all he says—that is, as much of it as you can catch, since his utterance is fleetier than most men's thoughts—or be set down for a noodle of a sceptic. Proh pudor! Smith no sooner says than, “schnell and beweglich,” he demonstrates. From his merry lips come assertion and proof, tumbling, one over the other, in playful strife for priority of egress. And more—the ear is content, and the eye delighted. The melody of the vocal Albert is based upon the brushy harmony of Beverley. Why does not Cobden—who was, or should have been, one of Albert's most eager admirers, “audit et spectat”—try something of the kind? If he could show us his Utopia in oil—as Beverley gives visible reality to Smith's inordinate inuendos—the world would be convinced, and “the Duke,” incontinent, disband the army, spike the guns, and turn the bayonets into tooth-picks for Gog and Magog at Guildhall, where aldermen are carnivorous, and Lord mayors given to guzzle. Cobden uses all his oil for the tongue, and canvasses public opinion smoothly enough; but there be who stand in doubt of gab, be it never so glib. And such were they who shouted and roared at the Smithian sallies, in the Free Trade Hall, until that gloomy precinct (the pride of Peacock), moved by the risible convulsions of its occupants, suddenly, like Tom Pipes, began to know itself flesh and blood, and joined the general laugh—so well, indeed, that Smith and his pocket theatre were taken unawares. Thus, at least, might a lively fancy have represented the effect produced by Albert the jolly and judicious, on this memorable occasion. So one-minded was the laugh, that it seemed, as it were, one laugh,—or as if the Free Trade Hall, a mighty monster with a million mouths, were opening them all at a stretch, swayed by a single impulse, that of ingurgitating egregiously the feast of wit and flow of soul which, without let or hindrance, exuded in puns, and jokes and quibbles, from the fountains of the Albertian imagination, as from pores preposterously perspiring.

You know the story—I need not relate it. I would no, indeed, attempt an abstract of it for a pipe of any wine whatever—no, not for no pipe. Were I to essay to wrap it up in the foldings of my feeble wit, it would turn my spirit topsyturvy. I have not the pen of Smith—I have not the paper, nor the ink of Smith—nor the papier à secher. Of the school of appreciators, I simply enjoy, not knowing how to invent. That I leave to my betters. The naked fact is that Smith gave his Overland Mail on the morning and evening of Monday last; and that the Free Trade Hall was filled on both occasions—in the morning by the rich and proud, (the “upper ten,” as the Yankees call them), and in the evening by the middlings and mob (the lower twenty), who monstrously enjoyed what their betters had already relished before dinner, after the usual manner of petits maitres and petites maitresses, with staid delight, and thrice diluted merriment. But it was the post-prandial people who entered most heartily into Smith's peculiar drollery, and who cried until they were near splitting their own sides and the walls'. These were the fellows for Smith's money. I say Smith's money, since once out of the pockets of the “many-headed,” it went straight into those of the “long-headed,” (we mean it in the amiable sense) Albertus; it was, therefore, Smith-money to all intents and purposes. Thus the goldocracy used their dinner to digest Smith's jokes, while the copperocracy used Smith's jokes to digest their dinner. Which of them did wisely and comfortably? We are not of those equilibrium-compensation-mongers who would say that both did wisely and comfortably, and in a level degree, because a good dinner being better than the Overland Mail, there was a balance, and the Overland Mail being better than a bad dinner, there was a balance, and so there was a balance either and both ways—quod erat, &c. We are not of these sour-mouthed-equalizers; on the contrary, we say the post-prandial people had the best of it, since Albert being superior to any dinner, after dinner, and (with deference to good appetites) less tempting (pimpant) than a good dinner just before dinner, those who went full and devoured him as a tonic, or a chasse (as the temperament of the inner man might require) were happier than those who went empty, and, to use the mildest simile, must have swallowed Albert as a glass of absinthe—a seurvy metaphor, since Albert is not bitter but sweet.

I send you extracts from the Courier, Examiner, and Guardian, who write about Smith as though Manchester alone among towns could understand and delight in him.* We scout the egotism of these boasters, and throw down the gauntlet, as having been among the very first and hottest of his champions.

THE RISE AND PROGRESS OF MUSIC FROM PALESTRINA TO ROSSINI.

BY THE CHEVALIER, JOSEPH CATRUFO.

The origin of modern music may be said to be almost coeval with that of Christianity itself. The early Christians sang the psalms and hymns which were extant at that period, and it is averred that St. Paul raised his voice in his prison and glorified God, nothing daunted by the prospect of his approaching martyrdom. As the Christians were persecuted they were obliged to conceal themselves in subterranean places, and their first temples were the catacombs, where they assembled to pray and sing the praises of their Divine Master. In the year 312, after the defeat of Maxentius, the Christian religion was openly practised in the Roman empire; in 313, Constantine built several churches, and in 384, under the reign of Theodosius, the Ambrosian chant was introduced at Milan. In the commencement of the fifth century, Italy was overrun by the barbarians, and Rome, taken by Alaric, was abandoned to pillage. In the midst of this universal cataclysm, it is not to be wondered at, that music should have remained stationary; the consequence was that the Ambrosian chant was maintained in the church upwards of two hundred and fifteen years. Gregory the Great, raised to the pontifical see in the year 590, undertook to reform this branch of the service, and gave it a new constitution, which was adopted in all the churches of Christendom, and is still in use, under the appellation of the Gregorian chant. In 880, Hubaldo introduced a method of diaphony or harmony, which consisted in the employing of two voices, in progressions of fourths and fifths, and in the introduction of the intervals of the major second and the minor third; to him, therefore, we are indebted for the first notions of harmony. In 1022 appeared Guido d'Arezzo, who substituted for the letters of the alphabet, as devised by Saint Gregory, six syllables of the hymn to Saint John, composed by Paul Diaconus. At a later period he gave the diagram of six hexachords, Molle, Naturale, Durum—he continued the method of diaphony by Hubaldo, to which he gave the title of Diaphonia et organi jura.

Franco, of Cologne, was the first who turned his attention, in 1066, to the scholastic measure or time. He published for the Cathedral of Liege, a work, entitled Ars cantus mensurabilis, which may be found in the Oxford Library (842). This work is divided into six chapters: the first contains the meanings of the words employed by the author ; the second, treats of the form of the notes and their value ; the third explains the ties ; the fourth treats of the rests which correspond to the different notes ; the fifth is devoted to the consonant and dissonant intervals ; and the sixth explains the organum and other combinations. The National Library of Paris possesses Nos. 65 and 66, (fonds du Cange) and 2736 (fonds de la Vallière), two manuscripts by Adam le Hale, surnamed the Hunchback of Arras ; these compositions were written about the end of the thirteenth century, or the commencement of the fourteenth ; they are for three voices, and their form differs from that of the ecclesiastical diaphony, which proceeded by notes of equal value, without rhythm, and which only contained an unpolished and incorrect harmony ; whilst the phrases of le Hale are rhythmical, proceed by a succession of thirds and sixths, and have a contrary movement. This music served as an intermediate stage between the diaphony and the concerted pieces of a higher order and more regular development. Le Hale composed, in 1285, for the court of Naples, then French, a comic opera, entitled Le jeu de Robin et de Marion. The time which elapsed from the first appearance of the diaphony of Hubaldo to the compositions of Adam le Hale, five hundred and twenty years, is the best proof of the slow progress made by harmony.

* We have inserted one of these in our Miscellaneous columns.

In 1240, the Benedictine monk, Walter Odington, published in England, under the title of "Speculatio de Musici," a work, in which he treats of the minor and major intervals, of the divisions of the scale, of the harmonic proportions, of the dissonant chords, of the divisions of the monochord, and of several other subjects tending to elucidate the study of harmony. Thirty-four years after, Marchetti, of Padua, produced at Venice, two works, entitled "Lucidarium artis musicæ planæ," and "Musica mensurabilis." In these two treatises Marchetti introduced for the first time the accidental diesis or sharp, and treated the subject of chromatic counterpoint, the preparation and resolution of the dissonant chords, as well as the harmonies and temperament. From this period we may date a real progress in harmony by the expungement of numerous and gross errors.

Francesco Ludinio, born blind, stands forth in the fifteenth century as the composer whose works produce most effect, owing to the unaffected simplicity of his style ; in general the masters of this period seem to have strenuously and sincerely laboured to ameliorate the art of writing, their works being free from many of the faults so frequent in the time of Le Hale.

The composers of the fifteenth century, William Duffay, Binchois, and their successors, Hoberecht, Kenheim, and Busnois, gave to harmony a more genial and regular form, whilst, on the other hand, the didactic authors began to classify facts, and found a theory both simple and analogous to the productions of the period. Consonant chords of thirds and sixths produced, with a few prolongations, dissonances of seconds and sevenths, and the rules of composition did not exceed eight in number. However, the composers of whom we have spoken did not confine their efforts to these results. They, and we may mention J. Dunstable, an Englishman, as one of the most able musicians of that period, invented canons, which in course of time were followed by the fugue and other artificial compositions : the consequence was a complete revolution in the art.

In the middle of the fifteenth century music narrowly escaped being proscribed from churches by the re-introduction of the Gregorian chaunt ; this disgrace was owing to several causes, the principal of which was that the music of this period, being always fugued, loaded with imitations and extravagant combinations, presented insurmountable difficulties of execution. It is to this epoch that we owe modes, times, polations, emiolies, proportions, perfections, imperfections, enigmas, and knots. Compositions were always written in four, five, six, seven, and sometimes as many as eight parts ; the words were contradictory, confounded in inexplicable confusion, in short, the text was quite lost sight of, and was devoid of meaning. The composers pushed their audacity so far as to add to the Latin text French and Italian words, and they even went to the extreme of introducing profane and obscene expressions ; whilst the organists, to captivate the suffrages of the multitude, played burthens of popular melodies and mundane songs. This state of things lasted up to the sixteenth century.

It was at this period that Peter Louis de Palestrina appeared ; his compositions soon raised him high in the esteem of his contemporaries, and, in 1551, he was appointed master to the Giulian chapel in the basilica of the Vatican.

In 1554, at the age of thirty, he composed his first work which consisted of four masses for four voices, and was dedicated to Julius III. The Pope in return for his dedication named Palestrina chorister of the pontifical chapel ; the chaplains united to oppose this nomination, which was however maintained by the Pope ; but which was ever viewed with feelings of jealousy and distrust by the whole body of the chapter of choristers.

To prove his gratitude to the holy father, Palestrina composed a book of madrigals for four voices, which he purposed dedicating to the Pope, when the father inopportunately died in 1555 ; he then resolved to submit his collection to Marcel II., his successor ; but the newly elected Pope died twenty-three days after his elevation to the holy see, so that Palestrina's book appeared without any dedication. This work, written in a clear, graceful, and expressive manner, obtained great success ; the style is quite new and does not resemble any of the productions of the author's predecessors and contemporaries. John Peter Caraffa, of the order of the Theatins, having been raised to the Pontifical see, and having learned that in despite of the rules and regulations, several singers of the Apostolic chapel were married, declared that such an abuse should be tolerated no longer, and published accordingly a motu proprio, in terms so harsh that Palestrina, who was included in this proscription, fell ill. Two months after he was offered the situation of chapel-master to the church of St. Jean de Latran ; he entered on this new office the 1st of October, 1555, and discharged its duties for five years, four months, and a few days. During this period he composed "The lamentations of Jeremiah," the Magnificat, and the Improperii, which raised him to the first rank among those composers who have understood the difficult art of uniting the acquirements of science to a perfect appreciation and expression of the text. The hope of bettering his own condition as well as that of his family induced Palestrina to quit St. Jean de Latran for St. Maria Majoz. He occupied this position ten years, from the 1st of March, 1561, to the 31st March, 1571, after which period he was reinstated in his former place in the Vatican, which had become vacant by the death of John Animuccia. Palestrina who, from the time of his expulsion from the Vatican, had not published any of his works, now resumed his first title of Maestro di Capella della Basilica Vaticana, and produced several of his compositions already known. In spite of his example, his contemporaries sought for success in wild and extravagant compositions equally foreign to the nature and distinctive genius of ecclesiastical music.

About this period, under the reign of Pius IV., a commission was named to enforce the execution of a decree of the Council of Trent, relating to sacred music. The cardinals Vitellosi and Borromée, members of this commission, demanded the co-operation of eight professional members named by the chapter of the lay-vicars.* In their first sitting, they agreed on the following resolutions:—1stly. That henceforth no masses or motets should be sung in which there existed any of that confusion as to the text which I have already pointed out; 2ndly. That all masses composed on burthens of profane songs should be excluded for ever; 3rdly. That no text composed by private individuals should henceforth be received, but that the words must, on all occasions, be confined to the text adopted by the church. A fourth point was also discussed; it was debated, if it were possible in florid composition so to construct the music as to enunciate the words clearly and distinctly. The cardinals were eager to obtain this condition; but the singers maintained that it was impossible on account of the fugues and imitations which constitute the principal features of sacred music, and of which it could not be despoiled without completely altering its distinctive character. The cardinals quoted in support of their opinion the Te Deum of Constanzo Testa, the Improperii, and the mass on the Gamut by Palestrina. To these arguments the singers replied that the works quoted against them were of limited extent; but that in compositions of greater development, the concision and clearness of the text demanded by the cardinals would be impracticable. It was decided, to clear up the difficulty, that Palestrina should be commissioned to write a mass according to the intentions of the cardinals. It was further agreed, that if these intentions could be fulfilled, the resolution should be at once adopted; if they could not, that another consultation should be held before coming to a decision. Palestrina—full of inspiration and enthusiasm—wrote three masses for six voices, which were executed at the house of Cardinal Vitellosi. The first two were received with much favour, but the third was considered as a prodigy of the human mind, and the singers themselves did not hesitate to express the admiration which they felt for this triumph of genius. It was ordered that no further change should be made in the constitution of church music; and that in future, no compositions should be received, except such as were reputed worthy of the holy place, and of which Palestrina's three masses presented such excellent models. It was at this period that Palestrina received the appellation of "the Prince of Music." His reputation increased, and Cardinal Pacecco gave him to understand that Philip II., King of Spain, would accept with pleasure the dedication of some of his works; and more especially of the mass, which had saved church music from destruction. Palestrina made a choice of six masses, three for four voices, two for five, and one for six; which he designated under the title of Missa Papæ Marcellæ, because he had had the intention of dedicating them to Pope Marcel, but had been prevented doing so by the death of that pontiff.

Palestrina, after having illustrated his century by his knowledge, his taste, his fecundity, and his genius, died at the end of January, 1594, at the age of eighty. This great man was a pupil of the celebrated Godimal, who had founded at Rome a school of music, which produced several celebrated masters; amongst whom we may mention the names of Jean Animuccia, Stefano Bettini, (il fornarino) Alessandro Merlo, (della viola) and Jean Marie Nanini.

One year after the death of Palestrina, Claude de Monteverde introduced into music the Seventh of the Dominant, the Ninth of the Dominant major and minor, as well as the Seventh of the Sensible, without preparation. These innovations raised up a host of enemies against Claude de Monteverde; they accused him of having stayed the progress of the science of harmony. Claude defended himself, and the public applauded his innovations; and, after a while, the new dissonances were admitted into the schools and adopted.

Thus, evidently without being aware of the great revolution which he had accomplished, Monteverde gave us the tonality on which all our modern music is founded.

(To be continued.)

Dramatic Intelligence.

DRURY LANE.—The new comedy is played every night, and as it becomes familiar decidedly improves. The dialogue goes more smoothly, and several points, which were lost the first night on the audience, now tell with much effect. We are glad to announce that Mrs. Walter Lacy has recovered from her lameness, and that the character of Cherry Bounce does not suffer in consequence. Mrs. Nisbett continues the life and soul of the comedy, and the concentrating point of attraction. Mr. Anderson deserves the highest commendation for undertaking the part of Sydney, quite unworthy of his ambition, and strengthening the cast by the addition of his name. Several novelties have been announced in the bills. A new five-act play is in rehearsal; Auber's Enfant Prodigue is to be produced as a Grand Operatic Spectacle; and a new operetta, or ballad opera, by Mr. Nelson, has been received.

HAYMARKET.—MACREADY'S FAREWELL PERFORMANCES. —Our last week's notice was accidentally omitted:—The performances were King Lear on Monday night; Werner on Tuesday; The Merchant of Venice on Wednesday; Virginius on Thursday; and, King John on Friday. The final performance of each character commenced with Werner on Tuesday, so that Mr. Macready was seen for the last time in Werner, Virginius, Shylock, and King John. During the current week, the great tragedian has appeared in Julius Cæsar as Cassius, (Monday); the single act of Henry the IVth., and The Jealous Wife, as King Henry, and Mr. Oakley (Tuesday); in Othello, as Iago (Wednesday); in Much Ado About Nothing, as Benedick (Thursday); and, in Julius Cæsar, as Brutus (last night).

With all the above performances, one excepted, our readers have already been made acquainted. The exception is the Benedick in Much Ado About Nothing, which Mr. Macready has not played for some years. His first essay in this character was, if we remember aright, at Drury Lane, when that theatre was under his own management, Mrs. Nisbett being the Beatrice. On that performance the criticisms of the day were voluminous, their general tendency leaning to the side of high eulogium.

We have not space this week, but shall give a lengthened notice of Mr. Macready's Benedick in our next, merely remarking that the performance was immensely successful.

MARYLEBONE.—Mr. Stammers is eager and indefatigable in purveying for his patrons. He is also speculative—he has tried the legitimate drama in Church-street. Mrs. Nisbett was his mainstay before Christmas: the Pantomime has proved his chief support since the holidays. The legitimate drama, while Mrs. Nisbett played, underwent no ordeal. In a race for priority of attraction Mrs. Nisbett would run the legitimate drama, in its proudest and palmiest days, to a head. The legitimate drama is never fairly tested as a prefix to the Pantomime. Shakspeare and Lillo are equally venerated at plum-pudding season. Hamlet and George Barnwell go down the public throat, at such times, with equal gusto. Mr. Stammers has also submitted the musical drama to his audiences, and has tempted them with the stirring realities of domestic melodrama. In short, the manager has proved the taste of his supporters, and has determined to please them at all risks. "Put money in your purse" should be the manager's maxim, and the surest mode, indeed the only mode of doing this, is by consulting the sympathies of the public.

* These lay-vicars were both composers and singers at the same time.

Miss Jane Mordaunt returned to the Marylebone Theatre and made her entrées as Julia in the Hunchback. Miss Annie Lonsdale played Helen for the first time. It says no little for the abilities of this fair lady that, coming so lately after Mrs. Nisbett in one of her most brilliant and captivating assumptions, she was highly successful. Miss Annie Lonsdale is sure to become an immense favorite here. Her personnel is singularly prepossessing, and the expression of her face animated and arch in an extreme degree. She is graceful and easy, and in her acting betokens the true vis comica. A little more energy, and a nicer display of art in making a point, we should have desired; but these practice may attain. Mr. James Johnstone makes one of the best Master Walters we have seen. His conception of the character and mode of acting remind us forcibly of Sheridan Knowles. The Lord Tinsel of Mr. Henry Lee was excellent. This gentleman promises to become one of the best light comedians of the stage.

The dramas of the Dream at Sea, and Grace Huntly were revived on Wednesday evening. In the former Miss Jane Mordaunt, Miss Annie Lonsdale, and Mr. James Johnstone appeared. The two fair actresses also played in the latter.

The Pantomime continues to have a joyous run, and the houses are crowded every evening.

Mr. Clement White is engaged and will appear (directly after the Pantomime. The Beggars' Opera, the Waterman, and other favorite musical pieces will be produced expressly for him.

JULLIEN AT SHEFFIELD.

(From a Correspondent.)

On Monday evening last, Mr. Saunders gave his Grand Concert with M. Jullien's band, Madlle. Jetty Treffz, and M. Vivier. The success was immense, the Hall was densely crowded, and the delight universal. The Times, Free Press, and Independent (local papers), all speak in admiration of this Concert; the following enthusiastic apostrophe is from the Sheffield Free Press.

"Time was, when at Prospero and his magic wand it was ours to wonder, but ever since the unrivalled Jullien has entered on the stage of popular entertainment, we have been all but disposed to think that even in a wand a spell of potency may exist. Who that has beheld this great professor of the Baton guiding on to the choicest harmony, can in the evanescency of wandering ideas, refuse at least a temporary resting place to the thought, that his wand too, 'is not of common mould.' To us his annual concert at the Music Hall, on Monday evening last, was indeed a source of pleasure, and if, as an ancient writer has affirmed, participation heightens enjoyment, then must the entertainment referred to have been a most favorable illustration of such a kindly doctrine. When we mention that the house had, perforce, to overflow a portion of its admiring audience into the orchestra, and that the gallery doors had, at an early hour, loudly to protest against 'a pressure from without,' such of our readers as were not present on the occasion, will understand what a well-merited popularity the talented conductor has, during ten seasons, gained for himself in this country,

"The solo performances, the announcement of which tended so much to enhance the interest of the entertainment, were rendered with exquisite taste and skill. Herr Koenig, M. Lavigne, and others were in this department very effective. At an early part of the evening it was doubtful, owing to some slight indisposition, whether or not M. Vivier would have been able to pour 'through the mellow horn his pensive soul,' happily, however, the audience was not destined to a disappointment in this behalf. M. Vivier was able to proceed with his part, and the attractions of the evening were thus complete and full.

"The first appearance amongst us of the celebrated Jetty Treffz was, however, the great feature of the evening. To her charming talents as a vocalist, she unites a most happy naïveté of manner which bids fair to make her a universal favorite—a very German Queen of Song. Her rendering of 'The First Violet,' and the other strains with which she delighted her hearers, cannot but be remembered with the liveliest emotions by them. Successive plaudits told how warm were the acknowledgments which they in return tendered to her. The French Drummers too, failed not to sustain the laurels which they have of late been gathering amongst us. The tambour-major, M. Barbier, made his appearance in full costume, thus adding with his band an imposing effect to their share in the performances. We should not close this notice without adding how much we feel our enterprising townsman, Mr. Saunders, entitled to consideration at the hands of all admirers of the harmonious art, for his arrangements on the occasion. We understand that measures are in contemplation, which, if successful, will at an early day afford our fellow-townsmen a second entertainment at the hands of M. Jullien and his talented corps of performers. An intimation such as this, we receive with very sensible pleasure; for, when we remember the crowded aspect which the Music Hall presented, we cannot but feel justified in alleging our belief that very many indeed must have been absent, rather from want of accommodation, than lack of interest in the subject.

On Thursday evening a Grand Ball was got up by Mr. Saunders, for the benefit of the Sheffield General Infirmary. M. Jullien and his band were again the magnets of attraction. The Music Hall was elegantly fitted up, and the whole passed off with the greatest éclat; it was the best Ball ever given in Sheffield. The following remarks are from the Sheffield Independent.

"There were about 350 present, and amongst the company many families of distinction in the town and neighbourhood. The hall was very tastefully decorated for the occasion. The front of the gallery was surmounted in the centre by an immense transparent picture of the crystal palace, over the middle of which floated the national banner, surrounded by those of all nations, amongst which may more particularly be noticed, America, France, and Russia; and immediately beneath the transparency was placed the Sheffield Arms, on beautiful white satin, the banner which the late Mayor, Thos. Birks, Esq., took to the Grand York Banquet. The sides of the gallery were tastefully decorated with evergreens, enclosing life-size statuary, which were illuminated by various coloured lamps, over which were placed banners of all nations, giving to the whole a very imposing appearance. The floor also was covered with holland's cloth, which added much to the comfort of the company. The decorations of the room were managed by Mr. Mercer of Falgate. Dancing commenced about ten o'clock to the enlivening strains of M. Jullien's band, and was kept up with spirit until about half-past three on the following morning. The sum realized by the ball on behalf of the Infirmary will be about £35.

BLANDFORD.—Mrs. Oakley's concert took place on Thursday, 16th inst., and the crowded state of the room, which was filled with the principal families of the nobility and gentry of the neighbourhood, proved the esteem in which the talents of this lady and her daughters, equally distinguished by their performances on the pianoforte and harp, are held. The vocalists engaged were Herr and Madame Brandt, from London. They met with a most enthusiastic reception, and were encored in almost all their pieces; their singing of Macfarren's beautiful duet, "Oh, when the weary heart," from the Sleeper Awakened, and Herr Brandt's interpretation of Beethoven's "Adelaide" being particularly admired. Mr. Ricardo Linter, the composer and pianist, was present, and a new duet for the pianoforte, written by him expressly for the occasion, was performed by the Misses Oakley, and much applauded.—(From a Correspondent.)

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

The Eighteenth Annual General Meeting of the Members of the Sacred Harmonic Society was held at Exeter Hall on Tuesday last, the 21st instant; the President, Mr. Harrison, in the chair. The first business was to receive a Report from the Committee of the proceedings of the last year, and on the present state of the Society; and the Chairman accordingly called upon Mr. Brewer, the Honorary Secretary, to read the Report, from which we extract some of the principal passages:—

The completion of another year in the Society's history imposes upon the Committee the responsible and yet agreeable duty of presenting, in conformity with the laws by which the Society is governed, "a Report of the state of the Society, and an abstract of its accounts" for the time which has elapsed since they last assembled before their fellow members in Annual General Meeting.

The Committee are necessarily deeply interested in Meetings of this kind, seeing that they have not only to render up to those to whom they are more immediately responsible, a true and faithful account of their stewardship, but have also to endeavour so to represent the affairs and proceedings of the Society, as to yield satisfaction to that much larger body on whom it is mainly dependent for support, and whose confidence it is therefore essentially important to enjoy. The Sacred Harmonic Society has long since become an Institution in which the public at large have a great interest, and those on whom devolves the management of its affairs being continually reminded of the fact, can by no means be forgetful of it on an occasion like the present.

Although such an occasion naturally brings with it some anxieties to the Committee, it produces also a degree of satisfaction to them to have the opportunity of exhibiting in some measure the care and fidelity which they are wont to exercise in administering the affairs of the Society, and of submitting the results of their labours as developed in its operations.

The periods at which the Subscriptions of the several persons belonging to the Society at Christmas expire, are given in the following statement, viz:

At Christmas 1850	-	-	-	-	-	99
" Lady Day 1851	-	-	-	-	-	91
" Midsummer "	-	-	-	-	-	31
" Michaelmas "	-	-	-	-	-	454
						675

During the past year the weekly meetings for rehearsals have been kept up with as little deviation as possible from the regularity which has always distinguished this Society. On some few occasions it has been found necessary to make a slight alteration in the accustomed arrangements, either by a change in the night of meeting, or by appointing an additional rehearsal, and the Committee cheerfully acknowledge the readiness with which the members and assistants have generally accommodated themselves to the requirements made of them under such circumstances. Although the importance of a regular and punctual attendance at rehearsals has been frequently before pressed upon the attention of the members and assistants, the Committee cannot consider the present an unfit occasion to reiterate their earnest hope, that every one who feels desirous of upholding the Society's reputation will observe the utmost practicable regularity with regard to attendance at all such meetings.

The Public Performances of the Society during the year, from Christmas 1849 to Christmas 1850 have been as follow, viz.

Friday, January 11th	} Mendelssohn's St. Paul
" " 25th	"
" February 8th	} Handel's Saul
" " 15th	} Mendelssohn's St. Paul
" " 22nd	"
" March 8th	} Haydn's Creation
" " 22nd	} Haydn's Third Mass,
" March 22nd	} Mendelssohn's Lauda Sion, and
" " 22nd	} Spohr's Last Judgment
Wednesday, March 17th	} Handel's Messiah
Friday, April 5th	"
" " 12th	} Mendelssohn's Elijah
" " 26th	"

" May, 10th	} Handel's Israel in Egypt
" " 24th	"
" November 29th	"
" December 6th	} Handel's Messiah
" " 13th	"
Monday " 23rd	} Mendelssohn's Elijah.

The above list contains seventeen concerts, ten of which were subscription and the remaining seven, repetition performances.

The two performances of Mendelssohn's St. Paul, on the 11th and 25th of January, were rendered additionally interesting by the presence of the brother of the lamented composer, and the third performance of the same work, on the 15th of February, was attended by H. R. H. Prince Albert.

In the course of the season, the committee were solicited to undertake the management of a concert under distinguished patronage, in aid of the Building and Endowment Fund of King's College Hospital, and relying upon the wonted readiness of the members and assistants of the society to co-operate with them, in promoting so benevolent an object, arrangements were accordingly made for a performance of Mendelssohn's Oratorio, "St. Paul," which took place as already mentioned, on Friday the 7th of June last.

The tickets for this performance, which were one guinea each for reserved seats in the area, and five shillings each for seats under the gallery were principally disposed of by the ladies patronesses, and the committee for the hospital; and at the conclusion of the undertaking, when the accounts had been made up, the committee had the gratification of receiving a letter from the Honorary Secretary to the Hospital Committee announcing that a profit of nearly £900 had been realized, and accompanied by a resolution of thanks, of which the following is a copy, viz.:

"At a meeting of the Committee for the Building and Endowment of King's College Hospital, held on Wednesday, June 19th, 1850, The Lord Radstock in the chair, resolved,

"That the warmest thanks of this Committee are eminently due
"and are hereby presented to the President, Treasurer, Librarian,
"Honorary Secretary, and Committee of the Sacred Harmonic "Society, for their great kindness in carrying out the details of "the Oratorio on Friday, June 7th, 1850, for the benefit of King's "College Hospital, and especially for the skilful and efficient
"arrangements, in every department by which the success of this "very excellent performance was so effectually secured."

"J. W. CUNNINGHAM, Hcn. Sec."

Through the zealous and judicious exertions of the Society's librarian Mr. Bowley, joined to that characteristic disinterestedness which prompts him to a continual self sacrifice in order to promote the welfare of the society, the Committee have had an opportunity offered to them, which they have gladly availed themselves of, to enrich the library by a purchase of a large and very valuable collection of musical works, on highly advantageous terms. They consist chiefly of the Standard Treatises on Musical Science, both Theoretical and Practical, with a large assortment of compositions of acknowledged excellence, of various classes, including an extensive and interesting collection of English glees; and forming altogether, a most desirable acquisition to a library such as that which the Society now possess. Having been purchased by Mr. Bowley at a sale by auction, at prices far below their real value, he offered them to the Committee in the most unreserved manner, at the same prices, although it appeared by the testimony of Mr. Puttick, a gentleman accustomed to the sale of musical property, (and who is one of the members of the Society,) that the lots which had been purchased at an expense of about seventy guineas, were fully worth to the Society about £110. The Committee need scarcely remark, how much the claims of Mr. Bowley to the warmest acknowledgments of the Society are increased by these circumstances, and by the many other distinguished services which he is constantly rendering to the Society; and which are familiar to every one connected with it.

The greatly increased extent of the Society's library, and the imperfect nature of the catalogue which has hitherto been kept of it, having rendered it advisable that a new and more complete catalogue should be prepared, the Committee have gladly availed themselves of an offer to undertake the same, which has been most kindly made by one of their body, Mr. William Henry Husk, a gentleman whose extensive and accurate acquaintance with musical literature, combined with habits of remarkable exactness, and aptitude for orderly arrangement, peculiarly qualify him for such a task, and lead the Committee to entertain a confident expectation that when his leisure shall enable him to complete what he has already begun, the result will be alike creditable to himself, and satisfactory to the Society at large.

The Committee have, during the past year, continued the course commenced in 1848, of purchasing the music required for use in the orchestra, and have expended in respect thereof the sum of £88 11s., being rather less than one half the amount laid out for the same purpose in the preceding year. The gradual decrease in the outlay for this item of expense, will be best shewn by the following statement of the cost in each of the three years.

	£	s.	d.
In 1848	260	11	9
„ 1849	184	10	3
„ 1850	88	11	0

The above amounts, it must be borne in mind, are inclusive of the charges for copying and binding, and all incidental expenses.

The Committee have much pleasure in introducing into their Report an allusion to the extensive and important alterations which have been effected during the past year in the large room of Exeter Hall. The complaints which have been so often made of the defects of this room and its ill adaptation for the purposes for which it is chiefly used, have at last had their effect upon the directors and proprietors of the building, who have been induced after much exhortation and upon the earnest representation of those who interested themselves in the question, amongst whom the most indefatigable advocate has been the Society's invaluable member Mr. Bowley, to make such alterations and improvements in the structure as render it now perhaps the most suitable building for the display of great musical effects which this or any other country can boast of.

It would be out of place to enter in this report into a minute description of the alterations which have been effected, but as it cannot fail to be a subject of interest to persons connected with the society to possess a full and accurate account of them, and to know the course of events by which they have been brought about, the committee have subjoined in the appendix a detailed statement on the subject, which was prepared with great care by Mr. Bowley, aided by some technical details furnished by the authorities professionally concerned in the undertaking.

As the great organ had to be removed during the progress of the works, advantage was taken of its re-erection to effect considerable alterations and improvements in it. Under Mr. Walker's direction the keys have been reversed, some larger pedal pipes have been added, and the body of the instrument much improved in tone.

It now only remains for the committee to state the financial results of the Society's operations during the past year.

The accounts for the year ending at Christmas last, have, at the request of the committee, been carefully examined and audited as usual by three of the members who were nominated at the last Annual General Meeting, viz., Mr. Edgar Smallfield, Mr. William Withall, and Mr. James Taylor. From the abstract which has been signed by the gentlemen, and which is appended to this report, it appears that the aggregate receipts and payments of the year were as follows, viz.:

Receipts.

	£	s.	d.
Balance in hand at Christmas 1849 ...	57	3	6
Dividends on Stock	29	2	6
Subscriptions	1049	9	6
Casual Receipts	45	19	9
Proceeds of Concerts	3803	19	0
	4985	14	3

Payments.

	£	s.	d.
General Expenses	841	8	9
Expenses of Concerts	3883	16	0
	4725	4	9
Balance in hand	£260	9	6

Upon this statement it may be remarked that the receipts for subscriptions have again considerably increased in the past year, the amount of them having exceeded that in the year 1849 by £92. With respect to payments it may be mentioned that independently of the expenditure for Concerts some of the more important items refer to purchases which are in the nature of valuable property to the Society, as for instance:

	£	s.	d.
Purchases for the Library.	104	10	3
Purchase of music required for performance.	88	11	0
Bookcase in Office for preserving music in.	53	18
	£246	19	3

But in addition to this the accounts shew that an actual profit in money has been realized during the year to the amount of £203 6s., the balance in hand at the commencement of the year having been increased at its close from £57 3s. 6d. to £260 9s. 6d., so that in fact taking both descriptions of property into account, the profit realized during the last twelve months may be reckoned at £450 5s. 3d., an amount which greatly exceeds that of any year since the Society has been in existence.

The amount of property of which the Society is possessed at the present time, independent of the balance of cash in hand, amounting to £260 9s. 6d., may be stated as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
Stock in the public Funds (3 per Cent Consols).	1000	0	0
Estimated value of Library, Stock of Music, Instruments, Fittings, &c. ...	1250	0	0
	£2250	0	0

Having submitted the foregoing details to their fellow members for their information and consideration, the Committee conclude their Report by offering their unfeigned congratulations upon the distinguished success which has attended the Society's operations during the period now brought under review, and their ardent hope that a like degree of prosperity may crown its exertions in the year on which it has just entered and for very many years subsequently.

Mr. TAYLOR, the Treasurer, then read the yearly Balance Sheets of the Receipts and Expenditure. Among the principal items were—Receipts: Subscriptions, £1,049; Proceeds of Concerts, £3,803. Payments: Purchases for Library, £104; Orchestral Music, £88; Professional Assistance, £2,890; Rent of Exeter Hall, £587; Printing and Advertising, £351. The Balance of Cash in hand was £260, independently of monies invested amounting to £2,250.

Mr. JAMES KITCAT, in moving the adoption of the Report and Accounts submitted to the meeting, observed, that containing so able and elaborate a statement of the position of the Society, it would be a waste of time to enter into any lengthy remarks on the occasion. Presenting as it did a faithful exposition of the proceedings of the Society, during the past year. The facts recorded were such as to be matters of congratulation to every member. He cordially proposed its adoption.

Mr. HARWAR having seconded the motion,

Mr. BOWLEY, in answer to enquiries, explained that the major part of the Society's library was now removed to the office in Exeter Hall, where it was available to the members, and that, having written to every one connected with the Society, he could say that every farthing the Society owed had been paid; he had been very particular in making every enquiry on this occasion, having lately ascertained that each member belonging to associations of this nature was liable for any debts the Committee may have contracted, should there not be sufficient assets to discharge them, and he had no doubt, therefore, that the members would be glad to receive his assurance that they need have no fear on that account.

This statement was received with loud cheers.

Mr. BREWER further stated that it was not the first time that the Committee had been able to state that the Society did not owe anything, as it was always a rule when they came before the members of the Society, at the General Meeting, that every account should have been paid. In reference to an enquiry respecting hire of music, he explained that the only sum paid on that head during the year had been five shillings; all the other music, which had been required for the Society, having been bought and paid for, as had been stated by the Committee in their Report, and as had been vouched for by the three gentlemen who had audited the accounts on the part of the Society.

The report was then adopted. The next business was the election of five members of the committee, when Mr. Winsor, Mr. Sims, and Mr. Cohen were re-elected, and Mr. Thomas Mitchell, and Mr. Sherrard, elected new members of the committee.

Mr. BOWLEY proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Costa, for his continued exertions on behalf of the Society. He reminded the members, that under Mr. Costa's auspices, they had attained such a position that no one had ever dreamed of. Mr. Costa's energies were not confined only to his conducting, but he was always devising means for the Society's prosperity. His heart and soul were always with it, and nothing gratified him so much, as the energy and spirit which were displayed in the management of the affairs of the society.

The motion was carried by acclamation.

The best thanks of the meeting were unanimously given to the President for the zealous exertions which he continued to manifest in the well ordering of every department of the Society.

Mr. RUSSELL in proposing the thanks of the meeting to Mr. Brewer, for the great services he had rendered to the society in the capacity of honorary secretary, feelingly alluded to the sentiments of regret, felt by every member of the society, at the alarming illness which he had experienced, and their gratification at his appearance again amongst them with renewed health and spirits. He trusted that his valuable life might long be spared for the benefit of all with whom he was acquainted.

Mr. HILL alluded to the great exertions of Mr. Bowley in every department connected with the Society, and would particularly mention his persevering and arduous labour in procuring those important alterations in the large hall, which had given such universal satisfaction. He had been met with strenuous opposition, but he had persevered, single-handed, and eventually succeeded.

Mr. BOWLEY thanked the meeting for the compliment which had been paid him. He had for some time been satisfied of the absolute necessity for the important alterations which Mr. Hill had referred to, and nobody knew better than the President, Mr. Harrison, from whom he had received most valuable aid and advice during the progress of the works, the difficulties they had to contend with, but he believed the directors were now convinced they had acted well in carrying them out, and he was quite sure the members were grateful to the directors of Exeter Hall for the kind attention which they had paid to the suggestions offered on this subject on the part of the Society. Since these alterations had been completed, the full development of the great resources of the Society's magnificent orchestra had been made apparent, and he unhesitatingly asserted, that nothing could be more grand or more splendid than the performance of Elijah on the previous night. Connected also with that performance, there was a very satisfactory circumstance, that it had realized a profit of nearly £150, which, he must remind the meeting, was an addition to the large balance in hand when the accounts were made up. He was satisfied that with a continuance of that confidence, which the members had invariably reposed in the Committee, they had nothing to fear for the stability of the Society, for it had gone through its ordeal, and it was now easy for any body of men who pursued a straightforward honest course to carry it on to unbounded prosperity.

The other complimentary votes having been unanimously passed, the meeting dispersed.

Foreign.

PARIS.—(From a Correspondent.)—Of the genuine success of Mlle. Duprez as Lucia, you have already given notice. At every repetition of the Opera the general enthusiasm has increased. They are now rehearsing (at the Italian Opera), Don Giovanni, in which Madame Sontag will sing the Zerlina; (notwithstanding an attempt that has been made to give the part to Mlle Duprez). Madame Fiorentini, Donna Anna, Madame Giuliani, Elvira, and Duprez, Don Giovanni! Mozart's chef d'œuvre has never, been as great a favorite with the Parisians as with the London public, and it is to be hoped that the forthcoming representation of it may amend this solecism in good taste.

I saw Thalberg, and learned from him that he is busy writing an Opera (for Mr. Lumley), in four acts, the book by Scribe, to be brought out in June, at Her Majesty's Theatre. On Saturday last I assisted (as the French phrase goes) at a soirée, at the house of M. Marmontel (descendant of the great poet), Professor of the Piano at the Conservatoire, and heard his little pupil, Plauté (eleven years and half old), who gained the first prize at the last concours. He played a study by Rosenhain called La danse des Sylphes. Deloffre and Pilet (the inseparables) played a duet of their own composition with that artistic taste for which they are noted; they will remain here until their return to London for the Opera season. A pupil of M. Reval (a French lady), sang twice; to a youthful and fresh voice she joins the method of her master. It was, altogether, a highly interesting evening. Marmontel himself, did not play, a proof of modesty very rare in the genus, French Pianist.

The whole world and his wife talk of going to London for the Exhibition. On dit that Mr. Lumley has engaged M. Moritz van Geldern, first solo violoncellist to the King of Holland, pupil of Douzater and Romberg, who plays the violoncello in the legitimate manner, not like some fashionable artists here, who either mimic the flageolet and bagpipes, or caricature the whining of second rate singers, and play nothing but opera airs. At Messrs. Brandus' I saw M. Schlesinger, who looks remarkably well after his six months confinement in Germany; it has by no means soured his temper; there is still the benignant smile and friendly manner towards artists in particular. I need not say that his late affair rather makes him sought after than otherwise.

The Tempesta is in active rehearsal, and I do not doubt but it will produce the same effect here as in London! Judge of the state of things at the Grand Opera from the following fact:—Twelve years ago an opera by Rosenhain was accepted, and only now is in rehearsal. This may serve "at home" as balm to the wounded feelings of disappointed composers.

The new piece by George Sand, Claudèe, has an enormous success, and I am convinced will have the same in London; it is one of the brightest, freshest, and purest inspirations of the French literature, and raises the authoress to a classical pedestal. The French are pleased to hear the simplest English ballads more than one would imagine. The other night at a grand ball given by Mr. Seymour, (Surgeon-Dentist), one of the first here, who keeps a princely establishment in the Rue de Castiglione, where a host of the first French and English aristocracy were assembled, in the midst of the "hubbub" a young English lady began to sing a ballad (Macfarren's "She shines before me"); immediate silence followed, and enthusiastic applause, and there was no end to the Ah! comme c'est jolie! The ballet, Paquerette is still continued at the Grand Opera. The mise en scene is splendid; the music so so—not bad.

THE UNITED STATES.

(From the New York Sunday Times.)

"NAPOLEON" FLOGGED AGAIN!—GRAND AND UNEXPECTED SET-TO!—A GREAT MAN VANQUISHED IN THREE ROUNDS.—The city was yesterday "one scene of rude commotion," owing to an authenticated rumour that James Gordon Bennett, editor of the Herald, had received his ninth public flogging. The flogging was administered by John Graham, a young lawyer—who, by the way, was arrested last evening for the offence, and required to give in bail for his appearance to answer. The Mirror's version of the affair tallies correctly with the verbal accounts we have heard, and we give it in brief:—

"Bennett was proceeding down Broadway with his wife, and on reaching White Street, Mrs. B. went into a shoe store, leaving him on the side-walk. Mr. John Graham and his two brothers, Charles and Dewitt, were passing at the time on the other side, and crossed over, when John aimed a blow at Bennett with his fist, but missed him. John then struck him with his fist below the ear, bringing him to his knees, and then seized him, twisting the small end of a raw-hide round his hand, holding him down with the other, and giving him a terrible whipping; the blows being principally aimed at his face and shoulders. No one interfered, we believe, and Graham and his friends proceeded on their way, and Bennett was conveyed in a carriage to his hotel."

We learn that Mr. Bennett was considerably disfigured, and was compelled to go into Joyce's clothing store to repair damages. An eye-witness assures us that Bennett's face was severely cut, and that his clothing was much torn and otherwise disarranged. He at first attempted to show fight, but was so speedily placed hors du combat that he had no chance to display his prowess.

The causes which led to this rencontre are numerous and grievous. During the late canvass, Bennett, who seems to have taken this entire country—its government, elections, and public men—under his charge, and who, presuming on his purse and his press, has been assailing candidates by the wholesale, declaring who ought to be elected, and dictating who should not be elected, with an arrogance peculiarly his. Among the individuals who, for some cause, had fallen under his displeasure—or rather, his malignity and ill-will—was John Graham, Esq., a candidate for district attorney. Bennett, long before the election, abused him in the most wanton manner. Day after day he made violent personal attacks on his character and pretensions; and even after the election, when, among honourable opponents, further attacks [are deemed unnecessary and uncalled for, Bennett continued to drag him before the public, exulting in his defeat. Mr. Graham, neither in his character, attainments, nor family, merited this wholesale abuse. He knows enough of the political world not to feel depressed or mortified at a defeat, and did not on that account feel called upon to violate the laws by a personal attack on Bennett; but there were others who were dear to him, who felt keenly the merciless character of those attacks, and he considered himself bound to resent them in the manner he has. It is wrong, no doubt, to break the peace and violate the laws, even to punish a person who, like Bennett, places himself beyond the pale of the law. He uses the columns of his paper, and has for years, as the assassin does his dagger—to strike down all who stand in the way of his interest, who rebuke his conduct, or check his power. He seems to gloat over all whom he prostrates or tramples upon. Everything falls before his slanderous pen. Youth and age—the virtuous and the good—the minister at the altar—the merchant at his desk—public credit and private character—all are ruthlessly assailed to gratify his malice. Grown rich from the morbid curiosity of the public, he has defied all law, and threatens courts, juries, counsel, and all who dare to arraign him at the bar of public opinion, or before the majesty of the laws. He is a terror to all who have not the power to reach him.

We have never, in our long pilgrimage through life, met with a man of Bennett's demoniac character and spirit. He could not live a day south of the Potomac; and even in this peaceable city he has by turns been flogged by Colonel Webb, Mr. Hale, the late Dr. Townsend, Mr. Hamblin, and several others, who could no longer submit to his slanderous abuse. A journal which speaks daily to thousands is a dreadful weapon in the hands of an unprincipled man. Its very circulation gives it influence, for men believe what they read in its columns without possessing the means of ascertaining its truth. What can a feeble man or a feeble woman do to arrest its malice? Nothing. What is the redress? Personal violence.

Bennett fights to the last to prevent justice overtaking him. If you sue him for a libel, he pays his fine, and attacks you again. If you convict him of a misdemeanour, while others are imprisoned he waves the flag of his defiance against courts and juries, and pays any fine imposed upon him, and commences de novo another assault upon your reputation. A free press was not established for such purposes, and we have been greatly surprised that Bennett has so long escaped the punishment which he richly merited.

As his wife witnessed this attack, we presume an attempt will be made, as usual, to excite sympathy on her behalf. We have personal knowledge of the fact that no one deserves less sympathy. She exercises over him a most decided influence. She can control the columns of the Herald, and compel him, if she pleases, to become a decent, respectable man, by changing the character of that paper. But her inclinations and disposition correspond entirely with those of her husband. We have seen of late long and violent attacks on Barnum, and repeated covert abuse of Jenny Lind, in the columns of the Herald. This, no doubt, arose from the respectful coldness with which Miss Lind met the repeated advances of Mrs. Bennett, who appeared determined, in every possible way, to bring her under her influence; and she did not hesitate telling Barnum that she would make him adopt a certain course in relation to Miss Lind, or he would feel the effects of his obstinacy. Nothing is more common than for Mrs. B. to threaten the vengeance of the Herald against all who offend her; and when she found that Mlle. Lind felt no inclination to cultivate an intimacy with her, she left the Irving House, went up to the Union Place Hotel, and fastened herself upon Parodi, whom she has directed should be puffed in whole columns of the Herald, to the evident injury of that fair stranger.

When we first knew Mrs. B. she was a reputable, amiable girl—very poor, but very industrious—making an honest living by teaching music. Why she should demand to lead the fashion because she married James Gordon Bennett we cannot imagine. She lost caste, in our estimation, when she married him; but still she had it in her power to have drawn him from his evil ways, had she felt so inclined. He wants no more black-mail—he is rich enough. If he wants rank, consideration, influence, and the respect of good men, he must become a good man first himself. Failing to do so, and bent upon violence, malice, slander, and hatred to the whole world, he must, in his rugged journey through life, expect to meet such treatment as he has met with from Mr. Graham and many others. If he will cast his eyes about, like the cobra capello, to see in whom he can dart his fangs, he must expect some day or other to receive a coup de grace from some person whom he has deadly injured. We marvel how he has escaped so long.

A card from Mr. Graham will be found in another column.

(From the New York Herald.)

THE ENGLISH PRESS AND THE LIND MANIA IN THE UNITED STATES.—The English journals, and even some of the French newspapers, have indulged in ridicule, sneers, and sarcasm upon the American press and people, because we have had a Jenny Lind mania. They say that the exaggerated enthusiasm of Americans not only brings them, but the object of idolatry herself into contempt. The English journals, particularly, pride themselves upon the decent degrees of admiration to which their enthusiasm is always confined—seldom going beyond the precise sum of one pound and one shilling—that aristocratic old currency, known in Guinea times, when slavery was a current English trade, and the coast of Africa supplied a good portion of the revenues of British philanthropists. Of course there is no end to the sallies of wit and humour which have been evolved from our singularly animated reception of Jenny Lind, and it would take columns of our paper to reproduce the hundredth part of the comments of those who are always glad to find an American theme upon which to blunder and exhibit their apparent wisdom.

There may be some reason, we confess, for the English press to indulge in humour at the scenes which have been acted here during the Lind excitement; but the very stolid, dull, and plodding character of Englishmen unfits them for understanding the nature of our public enthusiasm, or of the people of this country. We have more money than melancholy—more beef than bowels—more fun than fashion—more brains than beer—more soul than selfishness—more impulses to be enlivened than interests to be consulted—more freedom for excitements than excitements for freedom—more downright, hearty, unconsidered, frolicsome, go-aheadativeness, than ever could be generated among a people, the mass of whom are forced to live on small wages, and to find their own tea and sugar. For instance, when Dickens came over to this country, we had one of our frolics. Every part of the popular pageant had the appearance of absurdity. It was one of our carnivals of curiosity and fun—a determination to have a time—and a good time—the birth of frolic, fun, and fancy, even though we upset the temporary idol. The affair was got up by two or three individuals only, aided by the newspapers, and yet it was an affair worth talking about. Brigadier General Morris and Col. W. H. Maxwell—we are all colonels, generals, captains, corporals, or privates—lead off the army of excitation, and away we went, battering down dullness and stupidity, arousing the sluggards of society, and besieging the whole city, till all the inhabitants “came out.” No doubt, all this appeared very absurd to strangers. They could not understand it. But we did—everybody here understood it. It is a common thing to have such frolics. They destroy the monied monotony of the metropolis, and we can well afford to have them once a month, by way of merriment. When Lord Morpeth was here, at the same time we had another and different excitement, conducted in consideration of his lordship's rank, on a different scale from that which marked Dickens's career; for after all, there is poetry, taste, and method, in all these frolics. They are not all alike. They are in harmony with the characters lionized for the occasion.

Now, in the Jenny Lind demonstrations, we have only repeated in a similar way, suited to her position, the same exaggerated scenes which amused the people when Dickens, the literary lion—perchance the only literary animal—was the grand feature. We received Jenny Lind with all the enthusiasm that could be mustered, not only because we really proposed to beat the European cities in the production of that article, as we have in steam-ships, but that we could amuse ourselves, and possibly be the cause of wit in others.” How was all this excitement created? Barnum, who had long been engaged in patronizing the fine arts at his Museum, on an exaggerated scale, began to feel the pride of place. He had procured a great curiosity, at an enormous risk, and he had an ambition to excel not only in making money, but as a manager. Everybody said, “Barnum will do it.” He was in a fair way of so doing. He came to us, and appealed to our good nature for assistance—crowded letters upon us from London—freighted our columns with every breath of wind from Europe, and produced the “necessary documents,” as he termed them, with as much anxiety as if he had the woolly horse, the Fejee mermaid, or Joyce Heth. We were willing to have our good nature used to its utmost limit, because the enterprise required courage; and when Jenny Lind arrived, we did all we could to aid Barnum's frolic. By extraordinary appeals to the good-nature of editors generally, he went on successfully. His path was strewn with roses. Sunshine poured down upon his hopes, and he was in the course of being thoroughly blessed.

Few men can bear prosperity. Barnum believed that he had made Jenny Lind, as he had made the Fejee mermaid. His full-blown pride, however, overthrew him. By folly and duplicity, he assailed the press in a series of apparently fabricated letters, giving the public to understand that the public journals are in the habit of taking payment for such articles as have been published for him. From that moment we lost all sympathy for him and his enterprise. We gave him a chance to vindicate himself, and to produce the original letters, published in Boston. He has done nothing—and the inference is, that he was willing to represent that any or all those who have befriended him are to be bought and sold to the highest bidder, like cattle in the market. This is the whole secret of Barnum's Lind mania, in its rise and fall, and it will prove a warning to those who even carelessly repeat such charges, without the slightest ground upon which to base an opinion.

The public have had their Jenny Lind carnival season. They are now coming to their senses. Her merits are fairly appreciated, and she will hold the position in the public mind to which she is justly entitled as a great artiste. That we can respect, criticise, and appreciate the fine arts in this country, as well as Europeans, there cannot be a question. Parodi's advent will prove this. It will be seen how a great tragic vocalist—a perfect artiste—will be treated. We shall show how independent we are of all those musical cliques which are barriers against genius in all European cities—how it is left to New York to discover, stamp, and place in its proper position, eminent talent in any of the realms of art. Jenny Lind had the misfortune to be engaged by a showman—Parodi's career will be quietly superintended by an artist. This difference will produce different results. We shall retrieve our character as judges of the fine arts; and while we shall continue just when we choose to do so, to have our wild, hurried, pleasant, exciting frolics, we shall do so with the same ease as the English put themselves under their railroad king, or tie themselves and and foot with an anti-corn law league. Our people do not make one portion of a pin, but learn to make every part. Stick a pin there. We want to see everything, hear everything, whip everything, do everything, have everything, and keep everything. We do not content ourselves with being indifferent lovers of art. What we expect to prove is, that we are the most liberal, capable, and enlightened critics of the age, if we have sufficient time to produce results. Watch the results.

(From the New York National Police Gazette, Dec. 9th, 1850.)

HAYNAU AND THE NIGHTINGALE.—THE BUZZARD AND THE DOVE.—The unprincipled character who presides like a spider or a centipede over the columns of the Herald, has been laboriously engaged for several weeks past, to depreciate the character and talents of Jenny Lind, and to attain her, if possible, with some fancied qualities, which he seeks to ascribe to her agent and manager for this country. But the satanic warfare which the accursed spirit we refer to urges against this benevolent and offenceless girl, has thus far fallen harmless. The public understand it, and they have adjudicated upon the motive and the aim, by crowding the concerts of the Nightingale to the most flattering excess, even in the very face of the debut of Parodi, the Herald's protege. What is more, Parodi already begins to suffer from the sentiment of indignation which has been thus inspired, and the sound and fury of the paper which has thus assumed to be her organ, cannot save her from serious injury, if she is permitted to be the medium of assault upon a saint, who is enshrined in the hearts of the world, as sacredly as any image niched in a cathedral aisle. The clap-trap that Parodi sang to the revolutionists in Italy, with the American flag in her hand, will not do even in the Bowery, as a malicious counterpoise to the substantial gift from the hands of a simple girl, of twenty thousand dollars, to the poor of the American people; nor will the stale talk, of being the only support of her family, subtract from the benevolent pre-eminence of one who is not only the support of her family, but the benefactress of her race. Who is there, with half a grain of soul, who can look upon that virgin devotee, and reflect, as he beholds her enveloped in the sacred atmosphere of her own melody, that she stands there not for profit, not for fame, not for passion, but as the missionary of good deeds, who, laying aside the guads and vanities of the world, traverses the earth, blest and accredited of God, to earn a fund for the education and instruction of the children of her own dear native land. What must be the texture of a heart that cannot be impressed with so holy an example of human excellence as this? and what must be the infernal complexion of a soul that can hate it, and put in play all the satanic powers of malevolent ingenuity to do it evil? Yet such has been the course of James Gordon Bennett and his paper for the last four weeks. Iteration follows iteration, intended to depreciate her position and to decrease her audiences. On one day, she is coupled with the woolly horse and the negro turning white; and on the next, we are told, in the very breath that announces Parodi as the queen of the lyric drama, that Jenny Lind cannot sustain any continued dramatic effort.

We are surprised to see Maretzek and the Italians generally, second this atrocious line of policy, by an exhibition of satisfaction at the counter excitement which is thus sought to be blown up in favour of their countrywoman. We approve of their enthusiasm for the scion of their own land; doubtless she is eminently worthy of it, both in character and ability, but, Lord bless us, Jenny Lind has done them no harm. Her eye is not fixed on rivalry; she dreams of nothing but her high mission, and is too much wrapt in its grand purpose to think of professional strifes and jealousies, or to notice the efforts of the evil-minded to slip an arrow now and then against her bosom. Let them content themselves with Parodi, and with the reception which our people are sure to give her. She is a woman, and that alone is a guarantee for a generosity from our nation which is certain to span the full measure of her merits, if not to go beyond them. But let her friends leave the people unmolested in their reverence and affection for the Swedish songstress, and let us hear no more envious hypercriticism on the necessity of gravity, in our treatment of her. There has, thus far, been no want of dignity exhibited by the American people towards this fair philanthropist. The English papers sneer at our enthusiasm, and her defamer in this country, seizing at anything that may dampen the ardor of our regard, reproduces the reproach in his columns here. Let them sneer and laugh, and let him echo their abuse. We do not even mind being charged with paying her the obeisance due to a queen. It is a pleasure to love the good, and it is to the honour of the American people, that they have loyalty only for virtue and excellence, while the rest of the world content themselves with idols of dough and of brass. It is a discrimination which we are proud of. This is a country in which moral beauty may claim the largest approbation from the public sentiment, and the ardor of the ebullition is only a guage of the generosity of the bosom from which it bursts. A girl who builds schools, endows hospitals, who entrances the world by her art, who educates the children of a nation, who relieves the necessitous wherever she goes, and who all the while, contributes to the cause of virtue a personal example of the highest character, exemplifies the scriptural phrase of "how beautiful are the feet of the righteous," and deserves the unqualified admiration and applause of mankind. We have found in the lone girl who, unassisted, has done all this, an object worthy of the extreme enthusiasm of a people with whom personal qualities are the only titles of nobility; and who like all who are honest do not hesitate to fondle openly on an object which they love. When a finer beau idéal than genius, self-denial, and a beneficence as boundless as the sea, can be found for the reception of republican honors, we shall then accept a new sovereign for our sentiments, and suffer Jenny Lind to return to the national adoration which belongs to her in Sweden. We look upon her now, however, as the property of the world, and believe she will be canonised in its remembrance, long after this age and generation shall have passed away, as one of those bright encouragements given by the Creator, to prove how near the angels human excellence may ascend. In all this city, in all this land, nay, in all the world, there has been but one wretch found, so destitute of principle, so utterly wicked in his soul, as to attempt to wound her, and to intercept her in her sacred purpose. That wretch, that moral spider, is James Gordon Bennett, and while contemplating his heinous course against this guileless girl, against this guest of our hospitality, we have often wondered that some of the admirers of her charities, as well as the recipients thereof, have not mobbed the edifice of the miscreant defamer, and razed the pernicious workshop to the ground. It may be, however, that justice is not far off. A community so chivalrous as ours, will not suffer its dearest sympathies to be continually outraged, by an alien wretch who was never betrayed into a noble action in his life; and when the retaliation does come, it will doubtless take the defamations of the poor Dickson girls, the Martin sisters, and other helpless sufferers into the account, and make the rebuke last him for his life.

Reviews of Music.

"SIX LIEDER OHNE WORTE."—BOOK I. OF ORIGINAL MELODIES FOR THE PIANOFORTE. WILLIAM VIPPOND BARRY (of Bandon). R. Coxs and Co.

MR. VIPPOND BARRY (of Bandon), is not a writer of the ordinary class. On the contrary, his lieder ohne worte (we wish he had given them some other name) are distinguished by an abundance of harmonic distribution, a profuseness of modulatory progression and retrogression (pass the word) which place them altogether beyond the sphere of mediocre executants. We observe, however, that they are dedicated to the "lion pianist," Alexander Dreyschok, and conclude that Mr. Vippond Barry (of Bandon), had an eye to the large capacity of those ten celebrated fingers, and fashioned his lieder to suit them. Stripped of their heavy panoply of accompaniment, the "melodies" are not without attraction, although the rhythm is occasionally dislocated, while the cadences are not always as natural as might be desired; but undivested of their artificial costume, they remind us vividly of an epigram pointed by a celebrated literary man, who said of the sentences of a cotemporary, that they were like "very small babies in very long clothes." It is this excess of ornament which spoils Mr. Barry's lieder. The notation used by this gentleman, moreover, is puzzling and inexplicable, and adds to the difficulty of reading his music. It appears as though he had been studying Dr. Alfred Day's Treatise on Harmony, without clearly understanding the author's meaning. For example, in G minor, passing to the dominant, by means of the chord of G, A, C sharp, upon E flat, he writes D flat, instead of C sharp; and in C minor, passing to the dominant, by the same chord upon A flat, he writes G flat instead of F sharp. Dr. Day never meant anything of the kind, if Dr. Day be Mr. Barry's authority; if not, however, we should like to hear Mr. Barry's explanation of such a singular method of notation.

The best of the six lieder are No. 4 in B major, and No. 6 in F sharp minor. These are less clogged with superfluous harmony and extraneous modulation; the melodies are good—the last especially, which is quite expressive—and some passages are elegant, while others are brilliant. We strongly recommend Mr. Vippond Barry (of Bandon) to write more simply. If his ideas be worth noting down (which we sincerely believe), why obscure them in a fog of unsightly drapery, which perplexes the ear without delighting it? For instance, No. 2 ("Silent love"—with a quotation in Twelfth Night), begins upon the chord of F, but never stays half a bar in any key whatever, while all the rules that govern progression are needlessly and ineffectively violated. Mr. Barry should rather have taken for his motto, in place of "She never told her love," "He never told his key," which would have been highly appropriate to this most strangely discursive and unsatisfactory of six strangely discursive and unsatisfactory lieder ohne worte. If Mr. Barry's intention, while adopting Mendelssohn's title, was to avoid any resemblance to Mendelssohn's style, however, he has succeeded to admiration.

ERNST.—It may be as well to direct the amateurs of the violin to the fact that the only opportunity they will have of hearing this great performer, in London, for a considerable period, will be at the concert of Mr. Balfe, on Monday next, when he will play three times. The day after Ernst will start with Mlle. Angri, on a provincial tour, the speculation of Mr. Beale.

MR. BRINLEY RICHARDS is in Gloucestershire, on a visit to the Earl and Countess of Beauchamp, at Madresfield Court.

THE REVEREND THOMAS HARVEY.—The name of this gentleman must be familiar to our readers, his case having been frequently discussed by the English and continental press. The sympathy generally expressed in his behalf has only been equalled by the surprise that such a persecution as he has been subjected to should have been permitted in the nineteenth century. Mr. Harvey has filled situations abroad, as chaplain under the British government, for eighteen years, and wherever he has been stationed, has upheld the integrity of the English Church, and maintained his position as a clergyman, with unblemished reputation, in the combined exercise of unaffected hospitality and active benevolence, at the same time never sacrificing his independence or his principles. Yet this is the clergyman whom some, in high places, have delighted, not to honour, but oppress. The persecution of Mr. Harvey commenced in 1831, and has been from then until now continued. Thrice have false and anonymous representations in his favour been made the grounds of attack. Thrice has he been condemned without a chance of explanation; thrice also has been completely exculpated by a written expression of concern that Mr. Harvey should have been exposed to so much inconvenience, owing to the difficulty experienced in satisfying the scruples of contending parties. The jurisdiction which does not extend to foreign chaplains, has been cruelly exercised to suit a particular caprice, and in response to Mr. Harvey's reasonable appeal for reparation, a most unsatisfactory answer was returned, in which, while the right of jurisdiction was disclaimed, the exercise of absolute power was arbitrarily used to Mr. Harvey's manifest disadvantage. Difference of opinion, even in the most petty matters of doctrine, on the part of an humble chaplain, was not admitted, and independence of mind was the poor apology for wholesale oppression. Mr. Harvey, however, was so fortunate as to escape observation from 1836 until 1842. In 1842, however, an opportunity presented itself, which was not to be lost, and in reply to an appeal, on the part of Mr. Harvey, for support under trying circumstances, whilst the reverend gentleman's propriety of conduct, sound doctrine, and conciliatory disposition, were at once recognised; such assistance was accorded as more than neutralised any good that might otherwise have resulted. Nor was this all. Mr. Harvey was ultimately dismissed from his chaplaincy at Antwerp, in 1845, a post which he had undertaken at much sacrifice, in compliance with a powerful suggestion, and dismissed under circumstances which called loudly for sympathy and compensation. Mr. Harvey then hastened to England, and prayed to be allowed the means of justification. These were denied to him, and his letters, couched in respectful language, were never even acknowledged. After eighteen years' faithful service, Mr. Harvey was turned adrift, with a veritable ban upon him. At length, however, with a view of establishing his professional character, he accepted a curacy without salary, in the boundary of a certain diocese. Before he was licensed, means of accusation against him were sought, but not found; he was, therefore, licensed to a curacy of increased spiritual responsibility, but without stipend. Full confidence was declared in the doctrine, learning, morals, and fidelity, of Mr. Harvey, who three months previously had been designated in the eyes of the world as a scandal to the Church! This completely vindicated, after a gratuitous service of twelve months, Mr. Harvey naturally applied for reparation; but his letter was returned unread. Finding all chance of redress hopeless, Mr. Harvey at length retired from a country in which justice was denied him by those who are sheltered from attack by the circumstances of position. Mr. Harvey is at present in Boulogne, minister and proprietor of the Upper Town English Church in that city. How highly he is esteemed may be ascertained by the number and respectability of his congregation, who recently subscribed for his portrait, which is just completed by a London artist of eminence. Mr. Harvey is now on a visit to his native land, and we trust he may find generous and honest hearts ready not only to deplore injustice, but to sympathise with its object. The pamphlets mentioned in our last describe the case in glowing colours, and cannot fail to be read with interest by all whom they concern. In conclusion, let us cite an extract from the leading columns of a foreign contemporary. The Brussels Herald, of July 17th, 1847, in reference to Mr. Harvey says: "This excellent and efficient clergyman, whose persecution has created such general sensation amongst the English residents in Belgium, has been as well known and appreciated abroad as he is now at home. Indeed his continental reputation has exceeded even that which he enjoyed in his native land. The reverend gentleman, during eighteen years' residence on the continent, has done more to uphold the Anglican Church than any chaplain within our knowledge, and this forsooth is the clergyman fixed upon as the befitting object of unjust oppression."

Original Correspondence.

ENGLISH PROFESSORS AND ENGLISH COMPOSERS.

To the Editor of the "Musical World."

DEAR SIR,—I consider that the remarks in your last, appended to your general recommendation of Mr. Richards's published works, entitle you to the best thanks of the whole musical profession. So long as English teachers of music avoid using each others' works, so long are they doing themselves an injury, by losing opportunities of advancing the general estimation of the profession to which they belong. Nor is this remark at all invalid in the case of those professors who cannot put a teachable work of their own side by side with that of a compatriot. Many excellent teachers do not compose, or do not publish, and others either cannot or will not direct their attention to the writing of works serviceable for ordinary teaching. To these the lighter productions of an educated musician like Mr. Richards ought always to be welcome, as a means of furthering the broad object in view.

I very much fear, however, that this feeling is not nearly so general as could be wished. I recently attended a "Lecture on the Rise and Progress of the Pianoforte," by an English professor, and not only among the "illustrations" was there not a single English composition, but in the "lecture" itself even the name of English composers or pianists were studiously avoided, just as if they were not in the remotest degree associated with the subject! To prove I have no ill-feeling in mentioning this, I withhold the name of the professor referred to, hoping that, if you publish this hint, it may make him a better boy in future. I merely, in confidence, enclose the programme for your own satisfaction, and remain,

Yours, very truly,

CHAS. E. STEPHENS.

3, Stanley Place, Paddington Green,
Jan. 21, 1851.

[One of our reporters was present at the lecture, an account of which will be found elsewhere.—ED. M. W.]

MR. CHARLES MATHEWS ON METHUSALEM.

To the Editor of the "Musical World."

LYCEUM, JAN. 21, 1851.

SIR,—At a moment when so much valuable space has been accorded to the comparatively unimportant discussion as to the authenticity of St. Peter's Chair, I will not for a moment suppose that you will refuse me a place, for the present communication, on a subject teeming with the deepest interest to all your readers.

I need hardly state that managers of theatres are inundated with an almost equal amount of epistolary matter as are editors of newspapers. Scarcely a day passes, but even I receive letters filled either with solemn suggestions, artistic advice, histrionic hints, dramatic directions, or critiques on costume. These are read of course, in every instance, with intense interest and due deliberation, and when appertaining to things of the stage, are received by me in silence and profound humility. But when my erudition is made a question, as in the instance to which I am about to refer, I feel that it then becomes a duty imperative not to "conceal the torch of learning behind the cloud of modesty."

In my small farce of the "Ringdoves," the name of "Methusalem" occurs, and has been by me so printed. A gentleman from King's College, Cambridge, who signs himself "Screw-tator," has attacked me on the correctness of the name, which, I am told by him, is "Methuselah," and I am referred to "Genesis, cap. 5, v. 27," in support of his correction, and requested to acknowledge through the public press. Now, with all humbleness of spirit, I beg to differ from this erudite moonshee, and to affirm that "Methusalem is strictly correct. Firstly, let me premise, that the common Hebrew makes it "Methusalech," with the final cheta. Indeed, the name of this very old gentleman, who attained to nearly a thousand years of age, is spelt in various and dissimilar ways. On one of the sculptured rocks of Netayah, which, by the bye, is a comparatively recent authority, being but of three thousand years' date, the name is written "Methusyluman;" and even amongst the Gezides, or Devil-worshippers, who have no "written book," it is "Methuz-iman." The single authority extant for "Methusalah" occurs in the Chaldaic version; but the Chaldaic being in a Shemitic dialect, a sort of congener of the Hebrew and the Syriac, the authority is singularly hypothetical. The commentators—Rashi, Gomora, the Talmud, the Mishna, and the Council of the Beth Din—all agree in spelling the name "Methusalem;" and if more modern authorities are required to prove my position, I would refer to the learned Polanders, Rabbi Schmule Lock Baumer, and to the very reverend and erudite Chief Rabbi of the Jews of Great Britain, Doctor Adler. It is strange that the name spelt "Methusalem" occurs in the Shezdar of Brama, and in the Ti Kong of the Chinese Con-futzee, a copy of which is in my possession, and to which "Screw-tator" of Kgs. Col. Cam. is most welcome to refer.

I feel convinced that you, Sir, will see the necessity of my defence; for, though I should very properly submit to any correction in matters of taste, I do not think that, connected so closely as I have been for some years past with the Jews, I should suffer my Hebraic erudition to be lightly called in question.

I am, your obedient servant,

C. J. MATHEWS.

Miscellaneous.

ALBERT SMITH AT MANCHESTER.—That portion of our readers (a numerous one no doubt) who have recently made the acquaintance of the marvellous Munchausen at the Theatre Royal, may perhaps credit us when we state that last night we traversed the overland route to India, and back. By the aid of steam, diligence, and dromedary, we visited Bombay; light modes of conveyance re-transported us to Suez, Grand Cairo, Marseilles, and home;—and now we reach the Courier-office, brim-full of "incidents of travel" and quite undecided whether to address our readers in Arabic, Turkish, Greek, French, or our own native English. Albert Smith, well known to many of our friends as a talented novelist, was our cicerone, and admirably he discharged his duty; entertaining us by the way with some of his merriest merry-thoughts, lively sketches of character, and racy snatches of song, full of a rich and unctuous humour. We fancied, at one time, that he was John Parry, Charles Mathews, and himself combined, so versatile did he prove in his lively and humorous scenas. It is one of the pleasantest voyages any person could take in the brief interval that elapses between tea and supper; and as Mr. Smith announces his intention to conduct two trains over that great highway this day (one starting at half-past one, and the other at eight o'clock, in the Free Trade Hall), we hope, for their own sakes, that a large number of passengers will avail themselves of the opportunity of making the acquaintance of a very talented and deserving guide over the overland route.—Manchester Courier.

MR. T. H. TOMLINSON.—This professor's soiree musicale took place on Monday evening. The programme included a number of popular voices, and the singers were all in excellent voice. Miss Watson sang "The Alps the horn resounding," "Tell me my heart," and the cavatina very nicely, as also the Duets, "Fear no sorrow," and "I've wandered in dreams." The Misses Wilson gave the duet from Norma, with spirit and expression; and Miss K. Wilson sang "The captive Greek girl," with much feeling. Mr. G. B. Wilson sang "Friend of the brave," in such a style as to gain him applause, and "Students and Maidens" (Mr. Tomlinson's own song), produced quite a sensation, and he was hardly less applauded and admired in his other song. It was altogether a very agreeable evening.

M. ALEXANDRE BILLET.—This eminent classical pianist is engaged to play Mendelssohn's "Rondo Brilliant," in E flat, for pianoforte and orchestra, at Mr. Balfe's concert, on Monday next.

MR. FRANK MORI is engaged by Mr. Beale as pianist and conductor, in the Ernst-Angri tour. A more competent artist could not have been secured for the office.

SHREWSBURY.—Jullien has been here with Jetty Treffz, Vivier, and an excellent orchestra, consisting of some of the most eminent London profession, with the renowned French Drummers and their stalwart Tambour Major. He had a very full concert at the New Hall, and left the next day for Chester.—Shrewsbury Paper

BIRMINGHAM.—Jullien's concert here at the Town Hall turned out a bumper, at which every body was pleased, since he is no where more generally liked than at Birmingham. He was accompanied, as at the other provincial towns, by Jetty Treffz and Vivier, but in addition to these popular artists, he had procured the services of the French Drummers, who created so great a sensation in London. The selection included those specimens from Mendelssohn's works, which your correspondents at Manchester and Liverpool have already noticed at length. I need not, therefore, go over the same ground. In the second part the singing of Jetty Treffz, Vivier's horn-playing, and Jullien's "Exhibition Quadrille," severally excited the enthusiasm of the audience to the highest pitch.—(From a Correspondent.)

DUBLIN.—Jullien has arrived, and has already given three concerts at the Rotunda Rooms, all of which have been crowded. His attractions are even greater than they were last year, since, in addition to the popular and fascinating Jetty Treffz, there is the renowned cornist, Eugene Vivier, with his triple and quadruple notes, making harmony now soft, now sweet, now loudly resonant, a band more than ordinarily brilliant, and more studded than usual with the names of instrumental "stars," the "Great Exhibition Quadrille," Jullien's masterpiece, and last, not least, the celebrated French Drummers, whose terrible harmony of rolling sticks on angry parchment is firmly (not capriciously) controlled by M. Barbier, the Hercules of moustachio'd majors tambour. The result has been a flux of curiosity, which in the guise of multitudinous audiences has flowed into the Rotunda, and filled the hoary building to the sides. If I have time next week, I shall send you a more detailed account.—(From a Correspondent.)

YORK.—Jullien's ball and Jullien's concert last week were both first-rate affairs, and both crammed. Although York is always a great town for Jullien, I much doubt if he ever had so crowded a concert, or so thoroughly elegant and fashionable a ball. The programme of the concert gave entire satisfaction. Jetty Treffz pleased immensely and was encored in every thing she sang. Vivier quite "astonished the natives" with his wonderful horn-playing, and Jullien with his "Exhibition Quadrille," and the famous French Drummers created a furore. The band was better even than that of last year. Amongst the principals were Koenig, Jarrett, Summers, Winterbottom, Viotti Collins, Pratten, Lavigne, Sonnenberg, Cioffi, Demunck, &c. &c. The ensemble was perfect in the full pieces.—(From a Correspondent.)

GLASGOW.—The appearance which the Merchants'-hall presented on the evening of the 15th instant, at the concert of the Philharmonic Society, must have been gratifying to the members, the hall being filled with the elite of the city. The arrangements were superior to those of last year—the orchestra being augmented, while the vocal talent was better. Under the able leadership of Mr. Julian Adams, the gentlemen amateurs have made great progress, though of course there is still room for improvement. The programme embraced selections from Donizetti, Auber, Weber, Bossisio, all of which were executed with a care that left little to be desired. The vocalists were Miss Birch, and Herr Muller, of Vienna. We have never heard Miss Birch in better voice. Her opening scene from Der Freyschutz "Softly sighs the voice of evening," took the audience by surprise. She was enthusiastically applauded. The duet, "Quanto Amore," sung by her and Herr Muller, was also very successful. The Jacobite song, "Over the water to Charlie," was given in splendid style, and provoked an encore, for which Miss Birch substituted "Charlie is my darling." Herr Muller was, on the whole, very successful. He appears to want experience, but possesses an excellent bass voice, and sings with great taste and occasional effect. The other performer who calls for special notice is Mr Julian Adams, the main spring and soul of the society. His only solo was on the piano. It was a brilliant effort, and indicated a command of the instrument which places him in a high rank as a pianist. Altogether the concert, the first of a series, was one of the most delightful of the season. If the others are equally successful, the society will have reason to congratulate themselves.—Glasgow Paper.

CHESTER.—We find by the local papers that Jullien stopped here on his road to Dublin, and gave a concert, which was crowded. The stars were Jetty Treffz, the popular German singer and actress; Vivier, the player of the magic horn, and the notorious French Drummers, with the Tambour Major. The band was first-rate, and the several admirable soloists who officiated as principals highly distinguished themselves in the "Great Exhibition Quadrille," the last new composition of the popular chef d'orchestre.

MACLISE'S PICTURE OF "WERNER."—This is a portrait of Mr. Macready in one of his most celebrated characters. We call the picture a "portrait," because, although Josephine is introduced, it is for the purpose merely of setting off the principal figure, and involves the likeness of no actress. Upon Werner the artist has expended all his care, and certainly a more admirable picture, or a more splendid likeness we have rarely seen. Mr. MacLise has not only caught the exact features of the peculiarities of attitude and look of the great tragedian, but has infused into his drawing the intense care and suffering so wondrously depicted in the representation of the character, and has thrown over all the halo of genius which, more than accuracy of feature or attitude, appears to stamp the picture as a work of the highest merit. It would be well, now that we are about to lose the brightest ornament of the stage, if Mr. MacLise, in addition to his Werner, would paint Mr. Macready in some of his most popular parts. A series of portraits of the great tragedian in King Lear, his grandest personation, taking the most striking scenes, would be received by the play-going public as a boon, and would more than reimburse Mr. MacLise in the engraving. The picture of "Werner," may be seen at Mr. Hogarth's establishment, in the Haymarket. It belongs, we understand, to Mr. John Forster, to whom it has been presented by Mr. MacLise. It is already in the hands of the engraver.

Advertisements.

MISS CATHERINE HAYES

AND

MILLE. JENNY LIND.

THE only English Ballads sung by the above distinguished vocalists are, "Take this lute," by Benedict; "Oh, summer morn," by Meyer; and the "Lonely Rose," by Balfe, sung by Milie Lind; "Those happy days are gone," by Lavenue; "Why do I weep for thee," by Wallace; "O, sing to me," by Osborne; and "My last thoughts are of thee," by Maynard, sung by Miss Hayes.

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street.

MR. ROBERT BARNETT

DEGS to inform his Friends and Pupils he has REMOVED from 71, Dean Street, Soho, to 129, ALBANY STREET, Regent's Park.

EXTRAORDINARY MUSICAL ATTRACTION.

ROYAL MUSIC HALL, ADELAIDE STREET, STRAND.

SIGNOR MONTELLI, Director of the Italian Operatic Company, begs to announce that he has entered into arrangements to give a series of Grand Vocal and Instrumental Entertainments on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, (alternate with the Apollonicon performances,) commencing Monday, the 10th February. Signor Montelli has already secured the services of the principal Vocalists and Instrumentalists in London, and engagements will be immediately effected with several of the most distinguished continental artists expressly for these entertainments. Selections from all the most celebrated English and Foreign Compositions, with every novelty of interest, will be presented, varied every evening. Conductor, Signor Montelli. To facilitate the increasing taste for music, the prices will be at the lowest possible ratio. Stalls, 2s.; unreserved seats, 2s.; balcony seats, 1s. 6d.; upper ditto, 1s. The Hall is capable of accommodating 1,500 persons, and visitors may depend upon every attention being paid to their comfort and convenience. All particulars may be obtained of Robert W. Ollivier, Concert Agent, No. 19, Old Bond Street.

APOLLONICON.

TUESDAYS, THURSDAYS, SATURDAYS—Mornings, Two; Evening, Eight; precisely.—The most perfect Work of Musical Mechanism in the world, upon which six Professors perform at the same time. Admission, 1s.; reserve seats, 1s. 6d. Programme—see Morning Journals each day of performance. Royal Music Hall, adjoining the Lowther Arcade.

N.B.—The elegant Hall, capable of receiving 1,500 persons (the best for sound in London), is engaged on and after Monday the 10th February. Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays in each week for Italian Operatic Concerts by the first Artists. Director—Signor Montelli.

DENT'S IMPROVED WATCHES AND CLOCKS.

E. J. DENT, Watch and Clock Maker, by distinct appointment to the Queen, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and his Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia, most respectfully solicits from the public an inspection of his extensive stock of Watches and Clocks, embracing all the late modern improvements at the most economical charges. Ladies' Gold Watches, with gold dials, jewelled in four holes, 8 guineas; Gentlemen's, with enamelled dial, 10 guineas; Youth's Silver Watches, 4 guineas; warranted substantial and accurate-going Lever Watches, jewelled in four holes, 6 guineas.—E. J. Dent, 82, Strand; 33, Cockspur-street; and 3, Royal Exchange (Clock Tower Area).

ST. MARTIN'S HALL, 89, LONG ACRE.

M. ALEXANDRE BILLETTS begs to announce a series of THREE EVENING PERFORMANCES OF CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC, in illustration of the Works of the great Composers, on Tuesdays, February 11th and 25th; and March 11th. To commence at 8 o'clock precisely.

Tickets for a Single Concert, 2s.; Reserved Seats, 4s.; Subscription to Reserved Seats for the Series, 10s. 6d. To be had at St. Martin's Hall; of WESSEL and Co., 229, Regent Street, and the principal Music Publishers.

PROGRAMME OF THE FIRST PERFORMANCE.

1. Sonata in F sharp major, Op. 78 BEETHOVEN.
2. { Prelude & Fugue in A flat BACH.
Prelude & Fugue in F HANDEL
3. Sonata in C minor WOELFL.
4. Andante con Variazioni in E flat, Op. 82, (Posth. Works, No. 10) MENDELSSOHN.
5. Sonata in B minor HAYDN.
6. Selection of Studies—
A minor STEIBELT.
D major CRAMER.
C minor RIES.
G major MOSCHELES.
C sharp minor CHOPIN.

PROGRAMME OF THE SECOND PERFORMANCE.

1. Sonata in E flat minor PINTO.
2. Prelude & Fugue in G minor (Cat's) Fugue SCARLATTI.
Prelude & Fugue in D major MENDELSSOHN.
3. Fantasia in A, Op. 16 (Dedicated to ROBERT SCHUMANN) W. S. BENNETT.
4. Sonata in C minor, Op. 35 (Dedicated to CLEMENTI) DUSSEK.
5. Allegro di Bravura CIPRIANI POTTER.
6. Lieder ohne Worte MENDELSSOHN.
No. 4, Second Book.
No. 6, Sixth Book.
No. 1, do. do.
No. 4, do. do.

PROGRAMME OF THE THIRD AND LAST PERFORMANCE.

1. Sonata in B minor, Op. 40 (Dedicated to CHERUBINI) CLEMENTI
2. { Prelude & Fugue in F BACH.
Prelude & Fugue in E minor MENDELSSOHN.
3. Grand Sonata in B flat, Op. 106 BEETHOVEN.
3. Andante con Variazioni in B flat, Op. 83 (Posth. Works, No 11) MENDELSSOHN
5. Rondo in A minor MOZART.
6. Selection of Studies :
C minor HUMMEL.
E flat MACFARREN.
D minor HILLER.
D flat major HENSELT.
A minor THALBERG.

MR. LINDSAY SLOPER'S

FIRST SOIREE'S OF CHAMBER MUSIC

WILL take place on TUESDAY next, January 28th, at the NEW BEETHOVEN ROOMS, No. 27, Queen Anne Street, Cavendish Square. Mr. Lindsay Sloper will be assisted by Miss Dolby, Mr. Benson, Mr. Dando, and Mr. Lucas. The second and third Soirees on Tuesdays, February 11 and 25. Tickets for the series, one guinea each; or for single evenings, half-a-guinea each. May be had of all the principal Music warehouses, and of Mr. Lindsay Sloper, 7, Southwick Place, Hyde Park.

LONDON SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.

Conductor—Mr. SURMAN, founder of the Exeter-hall Oratorios, and 15 years conductor of the Sacred Harmonic Society.

ON FRIDAY, JANUARY the 31st, HAYDN'S ORATORIO CREATION, with 800 performers. The Oratorio will be preceded by the Anthem, "In that day," composed and conducted by Dr. Elvey, private organist to Her Majesty. The still parts of the Creation and Anthem will be sung by Miss Birch, Mr. Turner (of St. George's Chapel), Mr. Lockey, and Mr. H. Philips. Tickets, 3s., 5s., 7s. and 10s. 6d. each, may be obtained at the office of the Society, No. 9 in Exeter-hall. The music to be rehearsed this evening will be the above, and a selection from the London Psalmist.

HANDEL'S "ISRAEL IN EGYPT,"

ON THURSDAY, JANUARY 30.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, Exeter-hall. Conductor, Mr. COSTA. Vocalists—Misses Birch and Dolby; Mr. Manvers, Mr. Whitehouse, and Mr. Machin. With orchestra (including 16 double basses) of 700 performers. Tickets, 3s.; reserved seats in area or gallery, 5s.; central area (numbered seats) 10s. 6d.; at the Society's sole office, 6, Exeter-hall; or of Mr. Bowley, 53, Charing Cross.

BEETHOVEN'S WORKS,

New Edition, to be complete and uniform.

EDITED by WM. STERNDALE BENNETT, Professor at the Royal Academy of Music and the Queen's Colleges. Twenty-one of the sonatas, andantes, rondos, airs, &c., for the pianoforte, are now ready, and a Thematic Index can be forwarded (post free) on application. "This edition is engraved and printed in a very superior style. It is much clearer and easier for the performer to read than any edition hitherto published." London, Leader and Cock, 63, New Bond-street, corner of Brook-street.

AN APPRENTICE WANTED in a musical establishment situated in a most fashionable thoroughfare at the west end of town. He must be a youth about 16 years of age, possessing a genteel address, of highly respectable connexions, with a correct knowledge of the French language, and a slight knowledge of music. A Premium will be required. Full particulars may be obtained at Robert W. Olivier's New Musical Instrument Repository, 19, Old Bond Street. (Lapworth's.)

DIATONIC FLUTE.

BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

MR RICHARDSON, who is now making a tour in the Provinces, will perform on this flute the same Fantasias he had the honor of playing before Her Majesty at Windsor Castle on the 3rd inst. Mr. Pratten is also performing on this instrument at M. Jullien's Concerts. It may also be heard by Mr. Nicholson, Leicester; Mr. Percival, Liverpool; Mr. C. Royal, Manchester; Mr. Sykes, Leeds; Mr. Jackson, Hull.

Descriptions of this Flute with testimonials, &c., forwarded free. Manufactory, 135, Fleet Street. A. SICCAMI, Patentes.

N.B.—Published at the above address:

Richardson's new Flute with testimonials, &c., forwarded free.

Pratten's ditto ditto "Coming thro' the Rye" and "Jock o' Hazeldean."

Percival, Capriccio, &c.

Pratten's Studies for the Diatonic Flute.

Siccam's Theory of ditto.

THE FLUTE.

H. POTTER, Musical Instrument Manufacturer to the Honorable Board of Ordnance, begs to call the attention of Amateurs and Professors to CLINTON'S NEWLY IMPROVED FLUTE, the only perfect instrument with the old fingering throughout. Every note is equal in power and quality, and can be produced with the utmost ease and certainty. It is well in Tune in every Key in Music, and offers immense facilities to the performer. All the fingerings for C natural and C sharp are preserved, with Tone equal to the other notes, and which cannot be obtained on any other flute. These instruments are very superior in workmanship and materials, and the mechanism free from complication; consequently they are desirable and extremely moderate in price. Description and price lists may be obtained at the manufactory, No. 2, Bridge Street, Westminster.

Just Published,

BARRETT'S COMPLETE METHOD FOR THE OBOE,

COMPRISING all the New Fingerings, New Tables of Shakes, Scales, &c., with a Concise Method of making Reeds; adopted by the Royal Academy of Music, the Conservatoire Militaire of France, &c. By A. M. R. BARRETT, Professor of the Oboe at her Majesty's Theatre, the Royal Italian Opera, Le Conservatoire de Paris, &c. &c. Price 31s. 6d. London: Jullien & Co., 214, Regent-street.

VOCAL MUSIC.

Just published,

SCIPION ROUSSELOT'S new version of "TRAB, TRAB," as a Duet, Trio, Quartet, or Chorus. The celebrated Echo Chorus arranged as a Duet, with Pianoforte Accompaniment; and also his Grand Quadrille Fantastique, "THE CRYSTAL PALACE," for one or two Performers on the Pianoforte, ta Messrs. Rousselet and Co., 66, Conduit-street, Regent-street.

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC

BY

BRINLEY RICHARDS.

Angela. Romance. Dedicated to the Lady Robert Grosvenor 2 6

"Mr. Brinley Richards' 'Angela,' though essentially popular in style, yet strongly indicates the hand of an accomplished musician."—Morning Post.

Mendelssohn's "First Violet." ... 1 6

Mendelssohn's "Maid of the Ganges." Dedicated to Sterndale Bennett, Esq. ... 2 0

"In the arrangement of these two charming melodies by the lamented Mendelssohn for the Pianoforte, Mr. Richards has very effectively adopted the style of the celebrated Lieder ohne Worte."—Herald.

The Fairy's Dream. Romance ... 2 6

Picciola, ou le Chant du Captif. Dedicated to Mrs. Anderson 2 6

Sybil. Romance. (Second Edition) ... 2 6

"The style of these compositions is the most attractive of modern Pianoforte music,—and whether for variety and sweetness of effect, or for frequent indication of a graceful elevation of musical thought, combined with a moderate degree of difficulty in execution, we have never met with three pieces by a native composer which were calculated to give so much satisfaction to a candid reviewer. Nothing can be more useful to young students of the modern school of Pianoforte playing than such compositions as the above."—Dramatic and Musical Review. September.

Premier Nocturne. (Second Edition.) ... 2 6

The Irish Emigrant. Arranged as a Rondo ... 2 6

"Among the recent examples of the style of Pianoforte music at present in vogue, few more successfully appeal to the exigencies of popular taste, and more thoroughly realize the beau ideal of fashionable elegance than the above-named publications. Sybil, Picciola, Premier Nocturne, and The Fairy's Dream, are all specimens of Mr. Brinley Richards in his most happy and fluent manner. They abound in ad captandum melody, and are overrun with passages both brilliant and neatly turned. The principal objection to the modern Pianoforte music of the drawing-room is a certain affectation of sentiment, from which Mr. Richards is entirely free. In his lightest passages there is a certain refinement, which indicates a desire to satisfy the amateur and the professor simultaneously, and must render his pieces acceptable to both."—Musical World. December 7.

CHAPPELL, 50, NEW BOND STREET.

CURES FOR THE UNCURED!—HOLLOWAY'S OINT-

MENT—Cure of a Bad Leg of more than sixty years' standing.—Mr. Barker, of No. 5, Graham's Place, Drypool, near Hull, had ulcers on his leg from the age of 18 until upwards of 80, and although for many years he had sought the first advice in the country, nothing was found to cure them. He often suffered excruciating pain for long periods together, which incapacitated him from attending to his business. He had given up all hopes of getting a cure, when at last he was persuaded to try Holloway's Pills and Ointment, which he did, and however wonderful it may appear, the leg was thoroughly healed by their means, and by continuing to use the Pills alone after his leg was well, he has become in health so hale and hearty as now to be more active than most men of fifty. N.B.—The truth of this extraordinary statement can be vouched for by Mr. J. C. Reinhardt, 22, Market Place, Hull. February 20th, 1850.

The Pills should be used conjointly with the Ointment in most of the following cases:—

Bad Legs	Coco Bay	Contracted and	Lumbago	Scurvy
Bad Breasts	Chiego-foot	Stiff Joints	Piles	Sore-heads
Burns	Chilblains	Etiophantiasis	Rheumatism	Tumours
Bunions	Chapped hands	Fistulas	Scalds	Ulcers
Bite of Mosche-	Corns (Soft)	Gout	Sore Nipples	Wounds
toes and Sand-	Cancers	Glandular Swell-	Sore-throats	Yaws
Flies		ings	Skin-diseases

Sold by the Proprietor, 244, Strand, (near Temple Bar,) London, and by all respectable Vendors of Patent Medicines throughout the Civilized World, in Pots and Boxes, at 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s. 2s., and 3s. each. There is a very considerable saving in taking the larger sizes.

N.B.—Directions for the guidance of Patients are affixed to each Pot or Box

Printed and Published for the Proprietors, by MICHAEL SAMUEL MYERS, of No. 3, Studley Villas, Studley Road, Clapham Road, in the parish of Lambeth, at the office of MYERS and Co., 27, King Street, Covent Garden, in the parish of St. Paul, where all communications for the Editor are to be addressed, post paid. To be had of G. Purkiss, Dean Street, Soho; Allen, Warwick Lane; Vickers, Holywell Street, and at all Booksellers.—Saturday, Jan. 25, 1851.

The Musical World.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

Terms of Subscription, per Annum, 16s.; Half year, 8s.; Three Months, 4s.; payable in advance, to be forwarded by Money Order, to the Publishers, Messrs. Myers & Co., 37, King Street, Covent Garden.

No. 5.—VOL. XXVI.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1851.

PRICE FOURPENCE.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Proprietors of the MUSICAL WORLD beg to remind those Subscribers who have not yet forwarded their Subscriptions, that unless the same be paid to MESSRS. MYERS and Co., 37, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, prior to the publication of the next number, they must discontinue forwarding it. Those Subscribers who may have paid MR. W. S. JOHNSON (the late Publisher), in advance for the present year, will please to send an order to MESSRS. MYERS and Co., to receive the money from him.

For the convenience of our West-End Subscribers, Advertisers, and Correspondents, Messrs. WESSEL and Co., 229, REGENT STREET, have kindly consented to receive Advertisements, Subscriptions, and Communications for the Editor.

STERNDALE BENNETT'S WORKS.

At the very interesting sale of copyrights and plates, the property of the firm of Coventry & Co., which took place on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of last week, the published works of Mr. Sterndale Bennett occupied a conspicuous place. The number of plates amounted to little short of eight hundred, the whole of which were "knocked down" to Messrs. Leader and Cock, Music Publishers, at Nine Shillings and Sixpence per plate—a larger figure than was realized by any other item in the Catalogue, except the Organ Sonatas, and other works of Mendelssohn. The general opinion expressed was, that had these compositions been sold in separate lots, as per advertisement, instead of in the mass, they would have brought more than double the sum. We record this with unfeigned pleasure, as an indication, if not a prognostication, that English manuscripts are "looking up" in the music publishing world.

Independent of the intrinsic worth of Sterndale Bennett's compositions, and of the influence they have already, even at this early period, exercised on the art of playing and composing for the pianoforte—matters beyond controversy—the question, so long scouted, of the value of English copyrights, is thus triumphantly solved. The works of a composer, whose devotion to the highest interests of the art which he professes and adorns, is not excelled even by the genius which first gained him distinction, have not only escaped the frequent predicament attached to serious endeavour (that of becoming a dead weight in the market), but, as a matter of positive mercantile value, have thrown nearly all competition into the back ground. The catalogue of Messrs. Coventry & Co. was as rich in works appealing exclusively to the popular taste, as in those which must be counted among the strongholds of art,—as fruitful of Czerny, Chaulieu, and Valentine, as of Bach, Mozart, and Mendelssohn—but, with the solitary exception of the last named composer, the right of possession in favour of William Sterndale Bennett, an English musician, was more eagerly contested, and more dearly purchased, than anything else in the catalogue.

LEARNED IN KEYS.

We reprint the following elaborate critique, from the pages of a Liverpool paper—on one of the Classical Chamber Concerts of Messrs. Thomas and Haddock—as a specimen of what criticism ought not to be.

"The fourth of these interesting concerts was given on Wednesday evening, commencing with a fine quintett in D, by Beethoven, for two violins (violin and violoncello), of which the first movement, allegro, was very pleasing, and appeared to give general delight, followed by an andante in B flat, which was very beautiful. A quartet, pretty short allegro in C led to a splendid presto in the same key, which was fully appreciated by the audience. This was succeeded by a quartett, in B minor, for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello, by Mendelssohn, of which the first movement was very long, and wanting in motion or intention. The andante in E, which followed, was pretty and very much liked. An allegro in F sharp minor very pretty and sparkling, and we must not quarrel with its being very original, as the allegro in B minor wound up the affair in a very brilliant manner; and the whole was admirably played by Mrs. H. Beale and Messrs. E. W. Thomas, Baetens, and Haddock. The first part concluded with a duo for violin and violoncello, in G op. 57, by Kummer, whose name is new to us. The introduction and andante, more rambling than original, led to the Theme Suisse, a well-known air, which was followed by an intermezzo allegro con fuoco, in G minor, which was very much applauded, and finished with an allegro molto in G major, which skilfully returns to the original movement, and ends very brilliantly. The second part commenced with an exquisite trio, in G No. 2 op. 1, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, by Beethoven, admirably executed by Mrs. Beale and Messrs. Thomas and Haddock. It opens with a beautiful adagio, followed by an equally delightful allegro, which ran into a largo in E, followed by a fascinating scherzo in G; and the whole concluded by a finale presto, which words are wanting adequately to praise. This magnificent selection concluded with Mozart's quartett in B flat, No. 5, for two violins, opening with a splendid allegro, in which the hand of this master could not be mistaken; a very flowing, beautiful minuetto, followed by an exquisite adagio, in E flat, full of the richest harmonies, and finished with an allegro assai, in the original key. That was altogether a gem. Everything went well—the audience delighted—but no encores, which can only be accounted for by everything being so good that it would have been necessary to have the whole concert over again."

Here is learning for you! Was there ever such a quantity of keys used to no purpose? and who would dream that the writer may not possibly know one from another? Where is Mr. Punch—the unflinching enemy of keys and musical terms in general, that he has passed over an article so suited to his purpose? Why has not Mr. Punch bitten his usual bite? If the notice had appeared in these columns our hook-nosed contemporary would have thrown a bucket of cold water at us. Perhaps, however, he disdains to break a lance with small fry; and though condescending, now and then, to joust with the Musical World, a Liverpool paper would not tempt him to mount his dog.

MACREADY AND THE GREAT EXHIBITION.

WE have already, in a recent article, alluded to Mr. Macready's retirement from the stage on the eve of the great confluence of all nations, and commented on the impolicy of selecting such a period for taking his final leave. The subject, however, is of sufficient importance to call for a separate notice, and we shall be truly pleased if, through any remarks of ours, Mr. Macready be tempted to its further serious consideration. Such a determination on the part of one who, regarding his art as a labour of love, has ever been happy in appearing before the public, seems to us an anomaly. That the actor has sound and plausible reasons for retiring from the scene of his triumphs, while yet his powers may be said to be in their zenith, we have good reason for believing; but the cause which has induced him to choose the present moment is beyond our conjecture. We have always thought Mr. Macready ambitious; and what man who loves his art is not so? His final resolution, however, would seem to set aside this "high-reaching" quality, and resolve itself into a pique, arising from some imaginary neglect. If some such motive be not at the bottom of Mr. Macready's declared intention, we know not to what it may be attributed. Of all men who have embarked in the theatrical profession, Mr. Macready has the least right to feel disappointed. The public has long done eminent justice to his talents, and the critics, with few exceptions—exceptio firmat regulam—have paid homage to his genius. Why then should Mr. Macready bid farewell to the stage at a time when the influx of strangers from all parts of the globe should act as an unanswerable argument for remaining? Shakspeare is acknowledged throughout the world as the greatest tragic poet. His plays are standard works wherever poetry has a home; in Germany more especially, he is idolised as the first of dramatic authors, despite the reverence paid to Schiller and Goethe. Will not the countless numbers who are shortly coming to London anticipate as one of their highest gratifications, the opportunity of seeing Shakspeare's acted plays in the English language and upon the English stage?—and ought Mr. Macready, the Shaksperian actor of the day, to be absent on such an occasion? Mr. Macready's name is famous all over the continent, and a grievous disappointment will ensue to the lovers of Shakspeare and intellectual acting, when they learn that the artist who can most deeply and truthfully realize the conceptions of the poet, has quitted the stage on the very eve of their arrival.

Mr. Macready is not to be dissuaded easily from a settled resolution. He has never broken faith with the public. Yet surely, on such a momentous occasion, he may reasonably change his mind, and defer, for a short time, the accomplishment of a resolution, made under a peculiar combination of circumstances, without forfeiting the esteem of the public. A limited series of performances, during the period of the Great Exhibition, would be the most commanding attraction in the theatrical world, without excepting the great Italian Operas, or Rachel herself. If these performances should take place at Drury Lane, and Mr. Macready, as on a former occasion, obtain the assistance of Messrs. Anderson, Vandenhoff, Cooper, Mrs. Nisbett, Mrs. Ternan, and other members of the corps, with Miss Helen Faucit, and Compton added, as indispensable in Shakspeare's plays—the same splendor, completeness, and taste in the dresses, scenery, and decoration as under Mr. Macready's own management at the two patent houses to strengthen them—they would constitute an era in the history of the stage, and become a fitting close to the career of the greatest living actor.

Should Mr. Macready persist, however, in his determination of ending his career with the present engagement at the Haymarket, he will greatly disappoint his admirers. For our own parts, we hold fast to the belief that the foreigners who crowd our streets during the "Great Exhibition," will never be permitted to return to their own homes without the privilege of telling their friends that they have seen Shakspeare acted in the land of his birth. The question rests with Mr. Macready.

THE RISE AND PROGRESS OF MUSIC FROM PALESTRINA TO ROSSINI.

BY THE CHEVALIER JOSEPH CATURIO.

(Concluded from our last.)

IN 1609, Viadana, chapel-master of the cathedral of Mantua, invented thorough-bass. The influence exercised by this invention on musical science was immense. Viadana exposed the principles of thorough-bass in a dissertation written in Latin, Italian, and German, which he placed as an introduction to a set of motetts of his own composition. The Italian masters saw, liking Viadana's discovery, a means for developing, by the study of the clavier, the sentiment of harmony in their pupils, and thereby improving the art of accompaniment. They reduced to a small number of rules the precepts of this preparatory science, and they fancied that nothing further remained to be done in a purely practical art.

Carissimi was born in Venice in 1582. The high reputation which he enjoyed won for him the situation of master of the pontifical chapel and director of the German College at Rome, in 1649, fifty-five years after the death of Palestrina. To this great man we owe the introduction of orchestral accompaniment in church music; he improved the recitative lately invented by Peri and Monteverde, and he is the first composer who wrote cantatas. His melodies are graceful, and replete with expression and vivacity: his style, less severe than the Roman, was sustained by a pure and simple harmony. This harmony, developed by his pupils, Bassani, Buononcini, and Casti, led by degrees to that perfection which it attained in the 18th century. Carissimi was a very prolific writer: he composed a great number of masses, motetts, cantatas, and oratorios. He it was who gave to the oratorios, which he had rendered popular, a regular form, and from that period it has maintained its place as one of the most attractive forms of church music. He was the first to introduce accompaniments of the viola and bass-violoncello into sacred music, for, in the commencement of the 17th century, the violin was but little used in Italy, and the violoncello was as yet unknown. His celebrated "Wails of the Damned," for three voices, with accompaniment for the organ and two violas, and the oratorio of Jephtha obtained considerable success.

Carissimi assisted at the birth of opera. He was twelve years of age when Julius Caccini and Jacques Peri produced their Daphne (1594), the first regular work of this description; and he was in his twenty-fifth year when Monteverde gave his Orpheus (1607), in which we find both his harmonic innovations and the same style, which continued to be pursued by all the writers of Italian operas during the first half of the 17th century. We may safely affirm that Carissimi's music, diffused by his pupils all over Europe, served as the type of our modern productions.

Cavalli and Ciccognini composed together an opera entitled Jason. They were the first to introduce airs—but denuded of regular form and proper development, their effect was monotonous.

In 1663, Cotti composed an opera entitled Dorice, in which he introduced pieces which were calculated to display the talents of the singers. John-Baptist Bassani began to perfect the forms of dramatic music: his operas, Falaride (performed at Venice in 1684) and Alaric, King of the Goths (played at Ferrara in the following year), abound in excellent attempts in this style of composition. Caldara, chapel-master of the cathedral of Mantua, imitated Bassani's style in an opera entitled Argina, played at Venice in 1689.

The metropolitan school now produced a man of genius, who, shaking off the trammels of past traditions, opened a vast field for musical science. This man, who appeared with the dazzling splendour of a luminous meteor, was Alexander Scarlatti, a composer of sacred and theatrical music, endowed with wonderful fertility of invention, and was at the same time a bold and original thinker. He gave, in 1693, an opera which bore the title of Laodicea and Berenice, in which he struck out a new path for dramatic music. This work was the first sound attempt at genuine expression. Until then the accompaniments had been heavy and monotonous, and dragged lazily after the voices, which were themselves not free from a certain heaviness and uniformity which palled upon the ear. Scarlatti imparted more vivacity to the instrumentation, and substituted for the syllabic forms of the music a freedom of vocalisation hitherto unknown. He was also the first to introduce a repetition of the original theme. These innovations were received with immense favour, and were adopted by all the Italian composers, more especially by John Buononcini and Ariosti. Musicians were eager to imitate the style of Scarlatti, who outshone all his predecessors, and whose popularity went on increasing up to the last hour of his existence. He wrote eighteen operas at Naples, and composed no less than two hundred masses. He founded a school, which gave birth to two profound musicians, Domenico Scarlatti, his son, and Gizzi; the latter shone by the grace and delicacy of his compositions; the former was simple and majestic, like his father; his dramatic compositions abound in passages which express with a masterly hand the affections and sentiments of the soul. So complete a revolution had been effected in dramatic music, that the conviction arose that the art had now attained its highest degree of perfection; but another revolution was about to take place, which gave the same impetus to instrumental, which Scarlatti had imparted to vocal music. This revolution was determined by the works of Corelli, and notably by his fifth. His compositions were elegant, lively, dramatic; he was the first to separate instrumental from vocal music.

At this period opera was not known in Germany. It is true that Opitz had translated Dafné from the Italian of Rinucini, the same work which Caccini had written in 1594, and of which Henry Shutz had composed the music, in 1627, for the Elector of Saxony; but this essay had met with no imitators, and Reiser was the first who founded the German lyrical theatre by his opera of Bazilius and his pastorate of Imène, in 1692. This great artist wrote one hundred and sixteen operas, which were followed as models by Händel and all the German school. It may be remarked that the seventeenth century was a most remarkable epoch in the history of the musical art.

Händel had received from nature an extraordinary genius for music. He was not long content to imitate Reiser; he went to Italy, where he was naturally struck with the brilliant qualities of Scarlatti's compositions. The mixture of the two styles, conjoined with Händel's own instinctive genius, produced those admirable and sublime compositions which are the wonder and delight of succeeding generations. Yet it must be remarked that his long stay in England, in a manner separated from the rest of musical Europe, rendered his success comparatively individual, and prevented him, unfortunately, from exercising over musical science that preponderating influence to which he might have otherwise undoubtedly pretended. It was only some time after his death that the full value of his master-pieces began to be known and his genius appreciated.

Among the master-pieces of Händel's composition we may mention his oratorios:—the Messiah, Israël, Judas Maccabeus, Saul, Samson, Solomon, and Joshua; and among his operas and serenatas, Rinaldo, Acis and Galatea, Semele and Timotheus.

It was far different with the pupils of Scarlatti and Gaetano Greco. At the commencement of the eighteenth century Porpora appeared, one of Scarlatti's most brilliant pupils. His principal works are Arianna e Teseo, Semiramide, Tamerlano, Annibale, Il Matrimonio, and Il Triumfo di Camillo. Porpora also wrote a great deal of church music, and devoted himself to teaching. He was followed by Domenico Sarri, whose compositions are replete with passion and poetry; and by Ignazio Gallo, who produced a great many operas, and was director of several musical academies. Leonardo da Vinci succeeded. This composer, in his operas of Arlaxerce and Iphigenia, conciliated the favour of the Neapolitans by the charm of his melodies, the science of his accompaniments, and the brilliant colour of a pure and captivating style. Leo-nardi Leo obtained much success in serious opera and in church music.

In the second half of the eighteenth century, the Neapolitan school gave birth to a man who exercised a most salutary influence on the progress of the musical art. Pergolese's compositions, abounding in the purest and sweetest melodies, offer a combination of simplicity and grandeur which will insure their immortality. Pergolese was equally famous in theatrical and in sacred music, and all have agreed in acknowledging the merits of the composer of the Stabat Mater. Durante was also a successful composer, both of dramatic and sacred music. All these artists, whose reputation was European, aimed at expression as a leading feature in their compositions, and they succeeded in producing effects which their successors have perhaps unwisely neglected. Instrumentation was also more largely developed, wind instruments were introduced into the orchestra by slow degrees, and it may be averred that in 1740 a complete revolution had taken place in the musical art.

Leo, Feo and Durante founded excellent schools at Naples, Lotti also established one at Venice. These schools produced composers of a high order of merit; Egidio Duni, Latilla, Tommelli, Fiorillo, Majo and Galuppi or Buranello. Dramatic music was further developed and assumed a greater variety of forms; obligato recitative was invented and the orchestral accompaniments assumed a more prominent feature than before. The theatrical works of the artists whom we have just named, usurped the place occupied by their predecessors, and the names of Leo, Durante and Feo, were henceforward only celebrated in connexion with sacred music. The invention of the Opera Buffa, by Galuppi, is one of the most important events connected with the history of music at this period; this invention occupies the interval included between the years 1740 and 1761.

Piccini was the first to introduce concerted pieces and finales. He made the first trial of this innovation at Rome, in 1760; it exercised a great influence on succeeding dramatic compositions. This onward impulsion was continued during the second half of the eighteenth century. Piccini, Sacchini and Sarti were still in the plenitude of their glory when Paisiello and Guglielmi enriched the art by the new form which they gave to the cantilena, to the construction of their pieces and to the instrumentation. Their admirable genius was prodigal of such captivating novelties and ingenious combinations and effects, that the best works of their masters were laid aside, and a complete revolution was brought about before the end of the century. A man endowed with a peculiar and distinctive genius as regards vigour of expression, Gluck invented a style of music of which no previous model had existed, and imparted to dramatic art an impulsion of which we still feel the effects. Two other composers equally remarkable for their genius and science, Haydn and Mozart, wrote for the voice and for instrument; the melodies of these two great masters bear that stamp of originality which is the great characteristic of genius. Mozart more particularly left all his predecessors and contemporaries so far behind him, that his century, unable to appreciate his compositions, unprepared for this daring precocity of genius, and it may be said, dazzled by his sublime intellect, failed to acknowledge his excellence, and it was only some time after his death that his compositions, better executed and more fully understood, assumed the high station to which they were entitled. It must be owned that Italy has never fairly appreciated the works of Mozart and Haydn, and Paer and Mayer, both men of undoubted talent, who attempted to introduce the German style of orchestration into their works, never obtained any great success at Naples; their productions were taxed with heaviness, although they may be considered as the stepping stones to a still further reform which was then on the eve of being accomplished. Generali and Morlacchi also contributed in bringing about this new revolution; their talents of a high order had insured them a distinguished place among lyrical composers, when they were suddenly eclipsed by the appearance of a young man, then twenty years of age. This young man was Rossini, who now advanced boldly on his artistical career, struck out a new path for himself and prepared to accomplish the twelfth musical revolution, that of the nineteenth century. Born at Pesaro, in the Roman States, the 29th February, 1792, Rossini commenced his musical studies at the age of twelve. Angelo Tesei, a priest, taught him the art of singing, harmony, and a little counterpoint. After three years' study, Rossini presided at the piano with much success; in 1807, he was entered at the Lyceum of Bologna, and studied the art of composition under Father Mattei. In 1812, he produced his first works, which consisted of a symphony and a cantata, entitled: Il pianto d'armonia. Rossini made his debut in dramatic composition, by L'Inganno felice, which was coldly received; he afterwards gave, at Ferrara, the oratorios of Ciro in Babilonia, and, at Venice, La Scala di Seta, L'Occasione Falladro, and Il figlio per Azzardo. In 1813, he produced Tancredi, in which he effected a complete reform in serious opera. This brilliant work, teeming with the exuberance of a youthful imagination, abounds in delightful melodies, in orchestral beauties and a gush of new ideas, which are but rarely, if ever, interpreted to the full extent of the author's meaning. To Tancredi succeeded L'Italiana in Algeri, La Pietra di Paragone, Aureliana in Palmira, Il Turco in Italia, Sigismondo and Aureliano. In 1815 Rossini produced at Naples, Elisabetta and Torvaldo e Doriska. He wrote in 1816, at Rome, Il Barbiere di Siviglia, La Gazetta and Otello. In this last work, Rossini began to change his manner by the elaborate developments which he introduced into serious opera, and by the brilliancy of his orchestral accompaniment; these innovations were further carried out in the scores of Mosé in Egitto, Maometto Secondo, Zelmira, and Semiramide. La Gazza Ladra and La Cenerentola were written at Milan and Rome, in 1817, and Armida was composed at Naples, in the same year. Rossini gave, in 1818, Adelaide di Borgogna, at Rome; in 1819, Edoardo e Cristina, at Naples; Ricciardo e Zoraide, at Venice, and La Donna del Lago, at Naples; in 1820, Bianca e Faliero, at Milan; in 1821, Matilda di Shabran, at Rome.

Rossini next repaired to Paris, where he introduced some excellent reforms, both in composition and in singing. His first production in the French capital was Maometto, which he arranged for the French opera, under the title of Le Siège de Corinthe, the second was Le Comte Ory, and the third and last was Guillaume Tell, which set the seal to the author's reputation.

All Rossini's compositions produce a magic effect; they reveal an ingenuity, a versatility, an inexhaustible fund of imagery which stamps him as a superior genius. The form of his pieces and the development which he gives them, testify to the improvement which he has effected in dramatic music. It may be said that he has resuscitated the piano-forte, by providing professors of that instrument with innumerable melodies susceptible of an infinity of variations. By his delicious cantilenas, his new modulations, and the combined effects of a powerful rhythm and piquant instrumentation, he has entirely modified the taste of his countrymen, by presenting them with a more vigorous and healthy style of music, and by forcing them to listen to a whole opera with attention and pleasure, which no composer had ever done before him.

The music of this enchanter offers an interest so sustained and so sympathetic that it admits of no abstraction. The public attention is so strongly captivated that it is unwilling to lose any one of the composer's inspirations, and it lends a willing ear from the first bar of the overture to the last echo of the finale.

The unanimous applause which has welcomed, in all parts of the civilized world, the productions of Rossini, are sufficient proof of the enthusiasm which they have inspired. The hypercriticism of men who, for the most part, cannot understand him, are unable to analyse, appreciate, nay even to read him, is not worth refuting. I may, however, be allowed to suggest to the vituperators of Rossini, a fact, of which, by the bye, they may possibly be ignorant, that if the absence of effect be a capital fault in music, Rossini is indubitably the creator of new effects and combinations between the voices and instruments, the mere possibility of which was unsuspected before his time. Artists of known merit have owned to having learned much from a careful analysis of Rossini's scores; if, in these scores, a few insignificant oversights are to be found, they in nowise justify the attacks which musical pedantry has directed against a composer, whom I consider as one of the first of harmonists.

Since the celebrated Maestro has withdrawn from the theatre, he has produced a Stabat Mater, written in quite a modern style. This master-piece, which has excited universal admiration, is worthy of the other works of the reformer of the music of the nineteenth century.

From the time of Peter-Louis Palestrina to Rossini, during a period of two hundred and fifty-eight years, we may reckon twelve musical revolutions; after each of which it was asserted that nothing more could be done; yet the event has invariably testified to the contrary. The changes which have arisen as regards taste and opinion, conjoined with the instability of forms and the wreck of so many great reputations, are curious and notable facts in the history of music. It is not so in the other arts; the productions of the great painters, sculptors, and architects of Raphael's time, serve and ever will serve as models to their successors; we, on the contrary, have nothing to imitate or copy in the music of the old masters; their style and process differ so essentially from ours, that the music of former and that of our time seem to be two different arts. The names of the most celebrated composers, from Palestrina, Carissimi, and Scarlatti have become for artists little more than historical names, and for the general public a dead letter. Musical revolutions take place when, a modification occurring in the taste of generation, a man of genius appears who, striking out a new path, throws the veil of oblivion over his predecessors.

Rebels of Music.

"SONGS FOR WINTER HOURS."—Written by CHARLES SWAIN, arranged by RICHARD ANDREWS. Campbell, Ransford, and Co.

An attractive little book of its kind, the merits of which are by no means confined to the outside, although that is daintily decked in rose coloured boards and gold letters. There are ten songs in all. Mr. Charles Swain, the poet (not unknown to fame); has shewn a lively facility of rhyming by the fluent manner in which he has treated ten themes in strong contrast to each other. Mr. F. Andrews, on his part, has taxed the resources of all nations for his melodies, eight of the ten songs being founded on national tunes. The first, "Nay, speak no ill," cannot be spoken ill of. The German air, which Mr. Andrews has adapted to it tastefully, is exceedingly simple and vocal. No. 2, "O what a world it might be," derives its tune from Norway; there is, nevertheless, no touch of the Norwegian coldness in it. No. 3, "There is beauty in a merry laugh," is wedded to an American air, which, from its cheerful character, is happily expressive of the sentiment involved in Mr. Charles Swain's very neat words. At the end of each verse Mr. Andrews has effectively introduced a choral refrain in four part harmony. No. 4, "There are moments in life," has been dug out of the rich mines of German tune. It is graceful, and remarkably unpretending; nor has Mr. Andrews made it less obtrusive by the addition of anything extraneous in the shape of harmony, the accompaniment being as quiet as the air itself. No. 5, "Procrastination," is a duet founded upon a melody by Lachner—not one of his best by the way, although the arrangement is good, and the voice parts for two sopranos are well; while the second soprano voice (a manifest advantage) may be replaced by a tenor, for which male organ Mr. Andrews has judiciously set apart a special line. No. 6, "Ne'er will I forsake thee, mother," is adapted for one or two voices. Bellini has been called upon for the melody, and has responded in a pleasant and flowing strain, disposed in the mode of B flat. The accompaniment of Mr. Andrews is studiously simple, which leads us to prefer the duet arrangement to the solo. No. 7, "The Flower thou lovest," is original, without being original; the music, composed by Mr. William Shore, having been originally suggested by another music, not composed by Mr. William Shore. In other words, it resembles too many familiar phrases to be strictly entitled to the appellation "original;" it is, nevertheless, vocal, and the accompaniment nicely written. No. 8, "Something Cheap," is again a German melody of the Styrian character. It is distinguished by a certain flow which is likely to captivate the general ear. Mr. Andrews, by his accompaniment, has rather helped it to flow more easily than impeded its course. No. 9, "When Fortune beams around you," is likely to be the most popular of the whole set. It is professed to be an Italian melody, but the opening bears a strong resemblance to some of the well-known tenor songs of Balfe. The second part contains a phrase from the second part of Rossini's brilliant march in Otello, in the same key (C), but it is suddenly arrested by a well devised transition into F, which for a moment interrupts the cadence. No. 10, "My life was like a fountain," being the composition of a lady, Miss Fanny H. Henslowe, must be treated with civility. Under these circumstances we are happy in being able to say that, though not striking, it is unpretending and inoffensive, and trips along gaily enough. Let us recommend Miss Henslowe to rewrite line 1, bar 5, page 46, in which the accompaniment is incorrect. The second chord would be better with G natural in the bass, and so return to G sharp in the next chord, leaving out that note in the treble. Nor do we like the harmony of the next bar but one, in which the D in the bass should carry the chord of the 5—3 instead of 6—3.

On the whole, we can recommend the "Songs for Winter Hours" as a pretty and acceptable Christmas present for any young gentleman who may entertain a sly regard for any young lady who likes singing but objects to difficult music.

MENDELSSOHN'S "FIRST VIOLET."—Arranged for the Piano Forte.—BRINLEY RICHARDS.

"THE MAID OF THE GANGES."—MENDELSSOHN.—Ditto, Ditto.

"THE IRISH EMIGRANT."—Ditto, Ditto.—CHAPPELL.

In his adaptation for the piano-forte of "The First Violet," one of Mendelssohn's most expressive songs, Mr. Brinley Richards has evinced, in equal degrees, refined taste and the utmost veneration for his author. He has preserved both the melody and harmony intact; and, as the arrangement stands, it may be viewed without disparagement by the side of the Lieder Ohne Worte themselves. The more such music is taught, the better both for pupils and masters.

"The Maid of the Ganges" is adapted in a more brilliant style. There are also one or two points slightly altered from the original; for this reason, and only for this reason, it has less of our entire sympathy than the other; for we hold that Mendelssohn cannot be altered for the better. But, viewing the subject in another light, Mr. Brinley Richards has evidently intended to make a short fantasia, which intention alone could justify the episodic introduction of the theme in F flat, (the key of the song is A flat,) which prolongs without increasing the interest of the development. It would be well, however, if the concoctors of fantasias on popular melodies did no more to deface the beauty of the original than Mr. Richards, in this arrangement, which, as a brief, showy, and by no means difficult piece of display, deserves, and is likely to obtain, a very extensive sale.

With "The Irish Emigrant" Mr. Richards has been far less chary of ornament and addition; but here his alterations are all improvements; by a profuse and skilful distribution of light and graceful passages, he has invested an absolutely barren theme with a charm not inherent in itself. A little more difficult than the preceding, this graceful bagatelle is still entirely within the reach of moderately advanced performers, and is as good as anything of the kind we know from the popular and richly-rewarded pens of Rosellen and Gorla.

"THE CHRYSTAL PALACE POLKA."—J. R. LING.—SHEPHERD and JONES.

"THE CHRYSTAL PALACE QUADRILLE."—J. R. LING.—MAY.

THE author of this dance music is one of the most agreeable and prolific writers of easy pieces for the pianoforte. His compositions, moreover, are not only excellently adapted for teaching, but are finished with a care and correctness denoting considerable musical taste. The "Chrystal Palace Polka," but for a slight resemblance in the opening to Jullien's "Drum Polka," would be irreproachable. It is sparkling, lively, and well accented. The trio, in C, is especially pretty.

The "Chrystal Palace Quadrille" is constructed after the model of Jullien's "Great Exhibition Quadrille," with the exception that there are no variations to the themes. It is made up of a short introduction upon the subject of the National Anthem, followed in succession by Scotch, Irish, Welch, Swiss, French, Canadian, United-Statistic, Hungarian, Russian, Austrian, German and Polish national melodies, in alternate succession, two or three going to a figure, and the whole concluding with a coda in which "God save the Queen," is presented in 2-4 time. The tunes are judiciously and effectively selected. For what it pretends to be, nothing could be more appropriate, or (for the special information of our lady-amateurs) more facile of execution, than this quadrille.

"THE INDISPENSABLE POLKA."—J. G. CALLCOTT.—CRAMER and BEALE.

Mr. Calcott has not ill-chosen a name for his Polka, which, to a certain class of our readers, the dancing class (a very large one, no doubt), in this season of the year, is positively "indispensable," being one of the most catching polkas, and one of the most original polkas (not to compare it with the "Original Polka"—no pun, reader), that has appeared for some months. We say months, since, in these fructuous times, polkas spring up like mushrooms, increase like apples, and, in autumn, drop from the tree of public opinion, whose branches are shaken by the "trade-winds" of satiety, like mulberries and medlars. Not that we intend our trope to apply to Mr. Calcott's "Indispensable Polka." That, if we may be allowed to express so much confidence in a matter materially evanescent, will be quite as "indispensable" next Christmas, as in the present month of January, which may be figured to have opened the gates of the year, 1861, to allow it its part in the coming festivity of "All Nations." We can discover nothing of the decaying element in Mr. Calcott's polka. It is not likely to run to seed; or, if it does, the "winged winds" will seize on each particular grain and bury it in some fertile spot, where, in a future time, it will give birth to many other polkas equally "indispensable"—if not so many as Jullien's "Original," at least as many as will give the "trade winds" of the autumn of 1862 plenty of work. And thus it is ever with a new idea, which, but now born, straightway is a type, and multiplying egregiously, becomes the progenitor of a hundred "effigies" of itself, until too often, as in the books of certain philosophers, the cause is confounded with the effect, and the meaning of the first inventor is lost in a cloud of preposterous progeny. Mr. Calcott's polka consists of two figures and a coda, either rivaling the other in vivacity and glibness. It is well put upon the key-board, and is enlivened by the potent co-operation of a cornet-a-piston. We recommend the "Indispensable" to all our amateur pianists and cornet-a-pionists. A more apt, and, indeed, moving, and, moreover, jubeant medium for a quarter of an hour's innocent relaxation between a young lady and a young gentleman, each eager to please and to be pleased, at a comfortable confarreation, or social soiree, we leave for those to find who have diligence to search; with this proviso—that as well might they seek for a needle in a bundle of straw, an earwig in a haystack, or a midge in a morass.

"THREE ROUNDS FOR EQUAL VOICES."—JOSEPH MC. MURDIE, MUS. BAC., OX.—BREWSTER and Co.

Mr. Mc. Murdie's "Rounds" are really round; by which, we mean, there is nothing laboured or square-cut in them. They are simple, brief, and unpretending; but written with a purity, and voiced with an aptitude which can hardly fail to serve them as recommendations to the amateurs of glees in general and rounds in special. Mr. Mc. Murdie does not go round the corner to accomplish his "rounds," nor step out of his way, nor stumble in his path, but marches straight round, like a well drilled sentinel taking his rounds.

The first round, "Ye Little Birds," is set to a dainty lyric from the Fayre Maide of the Exchange, 1615, discoursing of Phyllis "walking sweetly in her garden allies," while the "wanton warblers" watch her wakefully. The poet (anonymous) has not gone round about the bush in disposing of this theme, but has treated it roundly and frankly. Mr. Mc. Murdie has found a guileless tune, in strict sympathy with his text, and has pitched it in the cheerful tone of A. Nothing can be smoother than the general effect, or more satisfactory than the cadences which alternately preface the entry of the voices. Round No. 2—"The Daisies peep from ev'ry Field"—by Dr. Woolcott, combines in three verses, facts botanical, ornithological, and astronomical, treating of flowers, birds, and suns. The melody of Mr. Mc. Murdie, placed in the mode of A flat, a mode, by the way, softly congenial with the triple topic, is even more vocal, and more pleasantly developed than its predecessor, while the harmonies, if possible, which is not improbable, are sweeter and more recherche. Round 3 and last—"Hence, smiling mischief, Love,"—we like the best of all, although the rhymes of the anonymous poetaster, who defies the "great passion" (in dreadful distich,) comparing the odour of its treacherous sigh to the poison infused into his, the poetaster's breast, by a rose he fondly pressed (in tearful tetrastich), are of the looser sort of ordinary; but Mr. Mc. Murdie's music is made of other stuff, and, indeed, there is more stuff in it than such stuff merits, as the brain of the poetaster above anonymed would seem to be stuffed withal. The melody, spiritoso, in G major, is fresh and charming, and the distribution of the voice parts shows an excellent taste for harmony. In short, for a short round, we might go a long way round the sphere of musical invention without meeting a happier specimen of this class of vocal composition.

"THE DECEIVED."—SONG.—FRANK MORI—JULLIEN and Co.

In the choice of words for the song before us Mr. Mori has shown an excellent discrimination of poetical merit. He has adopted the beautiful lyric, "Take, Oh! take those lips away," from one of Shakspeare's plays, and the highest compliment we can pay him is to say that he has set them in a congenial spirit. We have not, for some time, met, in the shape of a brief song, with anything more plaintive and legitimately expressive. In choosing the mournful key of B minor, Mr. Mori evinces a true feeling of the character that depends upon tonality, about which some writers, (among them, Mr. Punch), profess to be sceptical; but in which others, and among the rest, ourselves, entertain a hearty faith. As "The Deceived" is very short and entirely beautiful, criticism is disarmed, and we are content to lay down our arms and own its beauty. It is unnecessary to recommend this song to our professional vocalists, since it has already been so fortunate as to attract the attention of that very accomplished English singer, Mrs. Dolby, who has introduced it at one of her elegant and classical sociétés, with distinguished success.

"THE ASSIGNATION."—SONG.—FRANK MORI.—JULLIEN and Co.

Though of a less elevated character than the preceding, the present song must please by its grace and sprightliness. Mr. George Wood, while inferior to Shakspeare as a poet, has some very pretty thoughts about flowers, birds, and ladies fair, and expresses them in verse, which to say the least of it, is natural and flowing. The melody of Mr. Mori, in F major, adapted, like that of the first song, to a contralto voice, is of a lively character, but in the midst of its vivacity preserves a certain air of elegance, which recommends it to the polite ear. The accompaniment is easy and musician-like.

Both these songs may be regarded as a welcome addition to our stock of vocal chamber music, and, we trust, will often serve as antidotes to the unhealthy trash with which our concert programmes are deluged. We are glad also to hail them, as minor contributions from the pen of a young English musician, whose name alone would be a guarantee in his favour, had he not already excited, in musical circles the general anticipation, that a new and promising addition to the list of our dramatic composers will, in all probability, be declared in his person.

Dramatic Intelligence.

DRURY LANE.—A new Operetta was produced here on Monday. The action of the piece is a mere vehicle for some pretty music by Mr. S. Nelson. Two damsels, personated by Miss Eliza Nelson and Miss Morant, compel their lovers, two young tradesmen (Messrs. Rafter and M. J. Chester), to reverse an insolent inscription over their doors, which implies that women are but the born slaves of the other sex. The composer of the music is evidently familiar with the most popular forms of melody, and writes with fluency and correctness.

The first two songs were deservedly encored. Miss Eliza Nelson has a mezzo soprano voice, sweet in quality, if not very powerful in the upper notes. Her lower notes want cultivation, being somewhat thin and reedy; for this reason we would caution her against singing songs of the florid or bravura class, to which her voice is at present scarcely equal. She is very young, and her abilities as an actress are of unusual promise. Her gestures are graceful, and her manner evinces thorough self-possession; she is full of archness and vivacity, and has as pretty a pair of laughing-eyes as a damsel need wish for, to expound and minister to her will.

HAYMARKET.—MACREADY'S FAREWELL PERFORMANCES. We have now approached the last week of the series. On Monday next Mr. Macready ostensibly takes his leave of the stage in King Lear, but there will be an extra performance at some theatre unnamed, for his farewell benefit, on the 19th instant, when, so says the announcement, he will bid adieu to the stage for ever.

The performances of the present week included Othello, on Monday night; Cardinal Wolsey, on Tuesday; Hamlet, on Wednesday; Richelieu, on Thursday; and Macbeth, last night. It is needless to say an unusual degree of interest was attached to each of these representations, more particularly to Hamlet and Macbeth, two of the most finished assumptions of the great tragedian, and, on no former occasion, have we seen them represented with more vigor and truth. Indeed, when we consider that Mr. Macready now plays five times a week, and bear in mind the arduous task he has to undergo at each performance, the unflagging spirit with which he sustains his various parts shows that he is still in the height of his powers, and makes us doubly regret his untimely departure.

As we are preparing a series of essays on the genius and talent of Mr. Macready, to commence with an early number of the Musical World, we need not pause here to comment upon his recent performances, with the single exception of Benedick, in Much Ado about Nothing, our notice of which was omitted last week, but which, from its comparative novelty, demands a few words.

Mr. Macready, if we remember right, first played Benedick at Drury Lane, when that theatre was under his management. Mrs. Nisbett was the Beatrice, and Helen Faucit the Hero. The cast, it must be owned, was first-rate. The critics of the day, with one or two exceptions—Oh! those exceptions!—were loud in praise of Macready's performance, and Much Ado about Nothing was in high favour with the public during the season.

Mr. Macready appeared for the first and last time at the Haymarket, as Benedick, on Thursday night week. The performance was a remarkable one. We entirely agree with the able critic in the Times, who pronounced it one of the best efforts of the great tragedian, and expressed his opinion that, if Mr. Macready were induced to give an extra final performance, he could undertake nothing more welcome to his admirers than Benedick. Since the days of Garrick, who was pre-eminent in this character, we find no tragedian, at least no acknowledged great tragedian, attempting the part of Benedick with accredited success. Elliston and Charles Kemble were both admirable; but neither Elliston nor Charles Kemble come strictly within the category of "great tragedians."

The surprising part of Mr. Macready's Benedick was its buoyancy and lightness. In this respect it certainly equalled any piece of comic acting we have seen. In every scene something new and striking was exhibited. Nor was this its sole or its chief merit. The manner in which astonishment and perplexity were assumed when Benedick learns that Beatrice loves him—developed in the soliloquy on her leaving the harbour, after overhearing the conversation between the Prince, Claudio, and Leonato; the mingled hesitation and awakening respect towards Beatrice when she is sent to bid him to dinner, and the subsequent comment on her expressions; the whole of the colloquy with Beatrice, when, after acknowledging his love, she asks him, as a proof of his sincerity, to challenge Claudio, and the sudden change from half bantering to downright earnest, were assumed with inimitable tact, and produced a genuine effect. The "business" of the scene, when Benedick sits down on a chair to ruminate on the passion of Beatrice, so unexpectedly revealed to him, excited roars of laughter. Indeed, we have seldom heard more sincere and hearty merriment than that elicited on Thursday night by Mr. Macready. But the finest bit of acting in the whole play, one of the most striking examples of racy comedy we ever witnessed, was the soliloquy in which Benedick rates the absent Claudio for falling in love. This was perfect.

We are inclined to think that had Mr. Macready made Benedick a standard part, it would have proved, beyond a doubt, one of his most admirable performances. There were certainly occasions in which self-possession did not serve him in good stead, and the natural ease, which in tragedy he has so entirely at command, occasionally deserted him; but this, being only apparent in the level passages, evidently resulted from want of familiarity with the part, which prevented him from identifying himself with it so completely and abstractedly as is his ordinary wont. The performance, nevertheless, was a fine piece of comedy.

Mrs. Warner was out of her element in Beatrice; it would, therefore, be unfair to criticise her performance. Of Mr. Davenport's Prince we can speak more favorably; it was in every respect excellent. Mr. Howe's Claudio was also good, and Miss Reynolds' Hero prettily conceived and prettily played. Mr. Buckstone made a decided hit in Dogberry. It was the first time he performed the part, and he must have taken the greatest possible pains in its delineation. He kept the audience in one continued roar of laughter while he was on the stage, and made some admirable points in the examination scene. Mr. Buckstone's Dogberry, with a few repetitions, would, undoubtedly, become one of his most popular performances. Mr. Henry Bedford's Verges was not sufficiently quaint; but Mr. Clark, as the first watch, was capital.

At the end of the third act a loud call was raised for Mr. Macready, who declined, however, to appear; but at the end of the play he came on, and was hailed with tremendous cheers, which were continued long after he quitted the stage.

THEATRICALS AT WINDSOR CASTLE.

Her Majesty the Queen gave a dramatic representation at the Castle on Friday evening; the performance took place in the temporary theatre, which was fitted up the same as on former occasions.

About 8 o'clock Her Majesty the Queen and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, with their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, the Princess Alice, and the Princess Helena, accompanied by the Royal dinner guests, entered the temporary theatre.

The Queen and Prince Albert being seated, and the illustrious circle having also taken their seats, the performances commenced.

The following was the programme:—

By command, Her Majesty's servants performed a comedy, in two acts, by Mr. Douglas Jerrold, entitled The Prisoner of War.

Captain Channell, Mr. Webster; Basil Firebrace, Mr. Charles Kean; Peter Pallmall, Mr. Keeley; Tom Heyday, Mr. Belton; Beaver, Mr. King; Boaz, Mr. Meadows; Chenille, Mr. Selby; Nicole, Mr. Wynn; Forest, Mr. Ryder; Monsieur La Rose, Mr. Hance; Officer, Mr. G. Everett; Gaoler, Mr. R. Cathcart; Gargon, Mr. Stacey; Prisoner, Mr. Daly; Frenchmen, Mr. J. F. Cathcart, Mr. Paolo, Mr. Stokes; Clarina Channell, Mrs. Charles Kean; Polly Pallmall, Mrs. Keeley; Madame La Rose, Mrs. Alfred Wigan; Madame Violette, Mrs. W. Daly; Babotte, Miss Mary Keeley.

After which, a vaudeville in one act, by Mr. J. R. Planche, entitled The Loan of a Lover.

Captain Amersfort, Mr. James Vining; Peter Spyk, Mr. Keeley; Swyzel, Mr. Addison; Delve, Mr. Stacey; Gertrude, Mrs. Keeley; Ernestine Rosendaal, Miss Murray.

Director, Mr. C. Kean; Assistant-Director, Mr. G. Ellis. The theatre arranged and the scenery painted by Mr. Thomas Grieve.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

Handel's Israel in Egypt was performed on Thursday night, for the first time during the present season, and, as was to be expected, attracted an assembly that crowded Exeter Hall to the extremities. This masterpiece, which stands at the very pinnacle of the art, and is, perhaps, the most transcendent example of choral writing extant, has lately been assuming a place in public regard not inferior to that which the Messiah has maintained for nearly a century. It is no longer considered laboured and dry; the choruses are no longer reproached for their profusion, uninterrupted succession, and extreme difficulty; the vocal solos, airs, and duets, no longer considered inexpressive, or too few. All such criticism is consigned to oblivion; and were it to arise again from the dust, and appeal to the judges and amateurs of the present hour, it would be unanimously welcomed with the kicks, and cuffs, and derisive sneers of the musical community at large.

A contemporary has insinuated that Mendelssohn's preface to the Israel in Egypt, prepared for the Handel Society, had some hand in establishing this admirable reform. We are certain of it. When such a man as Mendelssohn approaches the text with religion and veneration, and even proffers an excuse for the organ part (printed in small type) added by himself—not with the hope of supplying what Handel was wont to play and left unwritten, but as a guide and assistance to the generality of organists—it would be preposterous and impertinent on the part of any other to meddle with the score—which he (Mendelssohn) restoring to its purity, has pronounced “one of the greatest and most lasting works” of the human intellect. Happily Mr. Costa, a powerful agent in these days, is of a mind with Mendelssohn, and will not suffer a single bar to be interpolated into the oratorio of the Israel in Egypt—to which, we firmly believe, may be traced the cause of its rapidly growing popularity. The songs and duets, introduced by Professor Taylor, broke the chain of miraculous choruses, interrupted the dramatic and ever-augmenting interest of the musical description, and spoiled the clear and masterly design, which made one whole of all this gorgeous variety of effects. Much the same consequence, indeed, accrued from the officious meddling of Naham Tate with King Lear, Dryden with The Tempest, Thomson with Coriolanus, and Garrick with Romeo and Juliet and Hamlet, “cum multis aliis.” But the genius and uncompromising principles of Mr. Macready cleansed this Augean stable of its filth, and restored the drama of Shakspeare to its purity and pristine strength. What Mendelssohn has done for the orchestra Macready has done for the stage. Why should not Mr. Costa stir up the embers of the half extinguished opera, and emulating his great contemporaries, earn for himself the name of a reformer, by restoring Mozart to his original proportions, and giving us Don Giovanni as the immortal composer wrote it. None but he is capable of this, since no other has the strength of position to enforce it. Were Mr. Costa to do it, it would ensure him, after death, a niche in the Temple of the Unforgotten.

Our opinion of the performance of Thursday night may be expressed in a few words. It was on the whole a very fine performance, but not so perfect as we could have wished, and as Mr. Costa has the power to make it. The choruses, with the exception of three, were executed in such a manner as to leave little room for Criticism, who might wag his tongue in vain anticipation of a point whereon to exercise the eloquence of reproach. But the exceptions were grave. It is true that “He sent a thick darkness,” is rarely—nay, never—sung in tune; but is that a reason why it should not be sung in tune? Did Handel write under the separate voice parts, “Please sing out of tune?” No, assuredly. It is, then—since to sing in tune has never been pronounced impossible by renowned professors of the vocal art, who, on the contrary, have urged it on the student's attention as the first and most indispensable point to which his industry should be directed, and in the absence of which singing is no better than any other unpleasant noise—it is, then, we say, the bounden duty of a conductor to enforce this wholesome regulation with might and main. If sung perfectly in tune, the chorus, “He sent a thick darkness,” would be far more intelligible, and its sublimity more directly impressive.

It is true the chorus “With the blast of thy nostrils” is elaborate and difficult to perplexity, and for this reason, has rarely,—never indeed—been rendered correctly. But if a chorus, because it is elaborate and difficult to perplexity, is to be passed over with the same nonchalance as another chorus, which is unelaborate and easy to convenience, what is the use of the custom of rehearsals, and where the advantage of a talented and energetic conductor? Mr. Costa has it in his power, and should exert his influence and authority, to obtain that precision and clearness of outline and general execution for the chorus "With the blast of thy nostrils," which has hitherto been wanting, and, until which be achieved, the effects Handel calculated upon must for ever remain unrealized. We admit that there are three separate subjects in this chorus, developed in the most complex manner; but when Handel wrote them, he intended all three to be distinctly heard throughout, which he knew to be possible, or would not so have planned it. The effect is clear enough upon the piano-forte, and there is no reason why it should not be equally clear in the choral orchestra.

It is true that the chorus "The people shall hear," the most prodigious and terrible in the whole work, has suffered, time out of mind, from the same want of decision, false intonation, and unsteady accent. In this chorus, indeed, the exercise of severe discipline is even more loudly called for than in the other two. The confusion of the minor and major chords and scales, from first to last, tortures the ear, and is destructive of the general effect. Yet this chorus is as capable of execution correct and steady, as the others; or, we repeat, Handel would not have written it. Our contemporary, above alluded to, recommends Mr. Costa to call a special rehearsal for the two last of these choruses. We join in the recommendation—merely suggesting the addition of "And he sent a thick darkness."

The solo singers in Israel in Egypt have but light work in comparison with what is allotted them in other oratorios; and it was as well for them, since, with the exception of Miss Dolby, they were by no means in great force on Thursday night. The return of Mr. Manvers from America promises a valuable addition to our list of concert tenors. His voice has the same qualities for which it was remarkable before he quitted England. It is strong, and clear-toned, without being flexible. His singing is sensible and vigorous, but wants refinement. The two sopranos were Miss Birch and Miss Eliza Birch; the two basses, Messrs Whitehouse and Machin. Mr. Whitehouse does not yet come up to the expectations formed of him. His singing was nervous, and endangered the duet (with Mr. Machin) "The Lord is a man of war," which did not go as we could have wished. Miss Dolby's singing in "Thou shalt bring them in" (the most melodious air in the oratorio,) would have been perfect, but for some slight intrusions of modern ornament. Miss Dolby, however, shared with the chorus "He gave them hailstones" the honours of "encore," which were only twice bestowed. The custom of encoring is, nevertheless, better honoured in the breach than the observance, at these sacred concerts. Israel will be repeated on Friday the 12th, and the next oratorio announced is Samson, on the 26th—the first time under Mr. Costa's direction.

JENNY LIND AND THE WIDOW.—The citizens of Calais were much pleased, and the heart of a needy woman cheered, by the receipt on Thursday (the 19th ult.) of a check on the bank for 500 dollars, drawn by Miss Lind in favour of Sarah W. Clark, widow of the late Joseph N. Clark, mate of the barque Sophia, of Calais, who lost his life on the 3rd of September, in removing the cargo from the Swedish barque Joanna, which was in a sinking condition.—Saroni's Musical Times.

DEATH OF HERR LORTZING.

(From a Correspondent.)

Germany has lost a talented composer—Gustave Albert Lortzing—on the 23d of January.

Lortzing was born at Berlin on the 23d of September, 1803, and from his early youth was destined for the stage. He had a fine tenor voice, and became an excellent singer; to which he joined histrionic talent. He composed his first opera at the age of twenty-three, Ali Pacha de Janina, which was received with much favour at Berlin, Dresden, Munich, and Vienna. The Pole and his Child, the Dierstalker, and the Czaar and Zimmermann followed in quick succession. The last opera, in particular, was performed, within six months of its appearance, on every stage in Germany. The other operas are Hans Sachs, Der Waffenschmidt, Undine, and Rehearsal of an Opera Buffa, the last written expressly for the Frankfort stage. Besides these works he composed several vaudevilles, songs, and morceaux for flute and piano. On both instruments he excelled as a performer. Lortzing's death was sudden and unexpected. After rehearsing the Matrimonio Segreto he went home to draw up the prospectus of a new Philharmonic society, of which he was to be director. Feeling rather oppressed in the night, he sent the servant to the doctor in the morning. The doctor, on his arrival, found him already dead. A fit of apoplexy was the cause. In Lortzing Germany has not only to lament an excellent musician, but society an upright, amiable, and single-minded man.

Provincial.

HULL.—(From a Correspondent.)—Master Werner, the pianist, has been giving concerts here, under the superintendence of Mr. Charles Jeffreys, one of our most spirited entrepreneurs, no less than one of our liveliest poets and librettists. The boy's performances really astonished the good people of Hull. Yorkshire, you know, is not the least noted of England's counties for musical taste and the number of its amateurs; and Hull, you know, is not the least noted of the towns in Yorkshire for ditto ditto. The favourable verdict of Hull, therefore, must be regarded by the friends of the boy as a decided step, and a step in the right direction, and a step which it depends upon the boy himself not to retrace back again, in his youthly march towards the goal of his aspirations. The Hull Advertiser, too, a large and independent sheet, which is generally cited as an authority where matters musical are concerned, is in raptures with the boy, and thus gives written expression to the admiration that stirs up emotion in his critical breast:—

"The musical public of Hull are under great obligations to Mr. Charles Jeffreys for affording them an opportunity of witnessing the piano-performances of one of the most extraordinary prodigies of musical ability ever seen in Yorkshire. Heinrich Werner is one of the wonders of this wonder-producing age. A mere child in appearance and in years, he performs the most complicated pieces with a brilliancy and an intensity of feeling of which it would be almost impossible for those who have not heard him to form any conception. And not the least marvellous thing about him is his memory. The most difficult compositions of the great masters of musical science are performed by him with minute accuracy without the assistance of a single note of music. In him the real genius of music is impersonified. If he visit Hull again we strongly recommend the heads of families to bring their children to hear and see him."

I was the more pleased at reading this, since, by what I had heard on good authority, I had jumped to the conclusion that some of the London papers were unduly critical upon the boy's gifts and pretensions. It appears that the boy was persuaded, à rebrousse poil, to undertake a piece of Liszt, too difficult for Liszt, much more for the boy, and the result was a temporary metropolitan disaster, which the boy's provincial progress, however, seems likely to correct. At all events, the boy is now put on his legs upon the platform of public opinion; and it depends less even on himself than on his friends and advisers, whether he shall continue to preserve an erect posture, or slide involuntarily upon the slippery path of dangerous and unyouthful ambition, until, reprobate, he may be unable again to reinstate himself firmly upon his feet. It is better to possess a fixed substratum on the boards of reality, than to dance obliquely, à casser le cou, on the tight-rope of adventurous uncertainty. That the boy has talent I am certain; that he has genius I can well believe. Let him not peril the good results of both by such unfinished performances as may lead the best-inclined to the suspicion that he has neither.

I may as well end my account of the concert in the quaint, but not inexpressive prose of the Hull Advertiser, who thus apostrophises the singers:—

"The concert was well supported by the excellent band of the 46th Regiment. The female singers were Miss Leng, who sang very pleasingly; and Miss Henley, a sweet, agreeable singer. The male singers were Mr. Henry Haigh, well-known to the musical public of Hull; and Mr. Delavanti, whose style of singing Lover's ballad of 'Widow Machree,' would half incline us to fancy that his real name was Delany, and that his birth-place was not far removed from 'that beautiful city called Cork.'"

Julien and his troupe are shortly expected here. I shall send you an account of their reception.

MAIDENHEAD.—(From a Correspondent.)—The Taplow and Maidenhead Choral Society's second concert took place in the Guildhall on Thursday, by permission of the Mayor, Charles Cooper, Esq. The performance included a selection from the Messiah,—we wish we could say the entire oratorio, since the band, chorus, and principals were fully competent to do justice to it. The singers were Mrs. A. Newton and Miss Ward, from London; Mrs. Mainott, Mr. Mudge, and Mr. Whitehouse, gentlemen of St. George's Chapel, Windsor. The band was assisted by several members of Her Majesty's private orchestra, which, with the chorus, made nearly 100 performers, the whole under the direction of Charles Venables, jun., Esq., founder and conductor of the Society, whose exertions to create a taste for oratorio and madrigal music among the gentry in the neighbourhood deserve the highest praise. This gentleman assembles his workpeople at his splendid establishment at Cliefden, weekly, supplies them with a convenient room, gas, and music, after which he regales them with a substantial repast, and those who come from a distance he sends home in a comfortable conveyance. As a conductor, he is equally conversant with the sacred, operatic, and lighter styles of music. The selection from the Messiah was preceded by the grand duo concertante on Guillaume Tell, for violin and violoncello, by Messrs. Day and Horatio Chipp, admirably executed by these talented English artists. The selection commenced with the overture, and terminated with the "Hallelujah," the audience, as is customary, standing. Mr. Whitehouse gave an excellent reading of the recitative and air, "The people that walked," but was less successful in "Why do the nations?" Mr. Whitehouse has a fine voice, and with study and experience may become an excellent singer of sacred music. A miscellaneous selection of secular music, forming the second part, began with the overture to Winter's Opferfest, followed by the madrigal, "My mistress is as fair as fine," sung very smoothly. Mrs. A. Newton gave the aria, "O luce di quest' anima," in which she was rapturously applauded and encored. The concert finished with the Sturm Marsch, by Bilse, with which the audience seemed much pleased.

MAIDSTONE.—The Distin family gave a concert here on Thursday, at the Corn Exchange.

BRISTOL.—At our Cathedral on Wednesday week, one of Boyce's services, with Tallis's responses, and the anthem, "Where is wisdom to be found?" were performed by probably the fullest and most efficient choir ever assembled within its walls. Many choristers from Worcester, Salisbury, Exeter, Oxford, Gloucester, and the Chapel Royal, Windsor, being in town for the purpose of assisting in the Madrigal Society's opening night, advantage was taken of that circumstance, and, by permission of the Dean, strengthened our regular choir.—Bristol Gazette.

OXFORD.—The Ransfords gave two vocal concerts at the Town Hall, on the 22nd and 23rd ultimo. On Wednesday the 22nd an audience of upwards of 900 persons attended, and on the following evening there were more than a thousand persons present. They were encored in several of their pieces. We may mention more particularly, Glover's "Smiling Faces," "The Merry Sunshine," George Barker's new Irish ballad, "Norah Bray," Bittella's "Gipsy King," &c. The concert on Thursday evening concluded with "God save the Queen," the whole of the audience joining in chorus, and departed highly pleased with their evening's amusement.

EGHAM.—(From a Correspondent.)—The second of a series of subscription concerts took place at the Assembly Room, on the 27th, under the direction of Mr. S. Smith, organist of Egham church. The services of the Misses Pyne, and Messrs. Hobbs, Knowles, Montem Smith, and Whitehouse, were secured. In the instrumental department Mr. J. Day (violin), Mr. Lake (concertina), and Mr. Edwards (flute), contributed solos. Miss Pyne was encored in Romer's ballad, "They bid me never see him more," and her sister Louisa was similarly honoured, after her brilliant execution of Rode's air, the honour being divided between the sisters in one of Auber's sparkling duets from the Crown Diamonds. Mr. Hobbs sang a comic song by Blewitt, "What do the gentlemen do before marriage?" and being encored, gave the "Gentlemen after marriage," with an impromptu musical illustration. The audience skewed discrimination in demanding a repetition of Bishop's rondo, "To see his face." A succession of concerts in this style, and with such performers, will greatly improve the musical taste of the neighbourhood. Much credit is due to Mr. Smith, for the spirit with which he has commenced this series, and no doubt he will be liberally supported by the inhabitants. The concert was well attended, and terminated at a convenient hour for those who have a distance to go.

CHELSEHAM.—Messrs. Hale and Son's Concert, on Thursday evening, at the Assembly Rooms, falling short of our expectations in respect to its audience, surpassed them in the quality of the performances. Miss Goddard's fantasias were charming examples of pianoforte playing—brilliant rather than showy execution, and remarkable clearness in rapid passages, being the characteristics. Signor Piatti's violoncello performances were beyond praise, exhibiting a mastery over the instrument we never heard surpassed. Mr. Richardson discoursed more eloquent music than we remember to have listened to before upon the flute, even from Nicholson. In short, the instrumental parts of the concert were all that could be desired. Nor were the vocal parts inferior. The beautiful singing of Miss Williams, made us almost forget that the scheme had lost one of its chief attractions, Mrs. A. Newton. Mr. Weiss's voice was also heard to the best advantage. We were never more pleased with a song of the kind than with Benedict's "Rage, thou angry storm," sung by Mr. Weiss on this occasion. The applause was enthusiastic, the encores numerous, and the performances well deserved such marks of public favour.—(Looker On.)

LIVERPOOL.—Mrs. Fanny Kemble Butler has commenced her readings of Shakespere at the Philharmonic Hall. Mr. Templeton, the Scottish vocalist, has been giving his entertainment, entitled Mary Queen of Scots, at the Concert Hall, Lord Nelson Street.

GLASGOW.—Mr. Julian Adams is about to give a series of chamber concerts in Glasgow. He has engaged Willy, Hausmann, Hill, and others, for the purpose of performing trios and quartets, a style of music that will be quite a novelty to Glasgow. The concerts are to be given at the expence of Mr. Adams, who is desirous to improve the taste of the Glasgow amateurs; and no charge is to be made for admission.

GREENOCK.—We understand some musical amateurs have subscribed a certain amount of money, rented a chapel in Greenock, and engaged Messrs. Willy, Hausmann, Harper, Nicholson, and twelve or fourteen members of the London Opera bands for the purpose of giving concerts three times a week; the admission is fixed at threepence, the reserved seats sixpence, and the series to embrace a period of two months.

LIMERICK.—The first concert of the Limerick choral society took place on Wednesday evening, at the Philosophical Rooms, under the direction of Mr. Vickers, before a fashionable audience.

The arrangements reflected credit on the conductor and committee. Dublin, Cork, and Belfast, can each boast its musical societies. Limerick, hitherto little known in this respect, may now fairly compete with her sister "Harmonics." The programme was judiciously selected, and comprised works of the classical writers. The chorus comprised upwards of seventy voices. Lord Mornington's glee, "Here in cool grot," was interpreted effectively; particularly in the refrain towards the close, "Listen, listen," which was delicately whispered by the whole chorus as if by one voice. The German quartets were given with a delicacy which elicited unanimous applause—the "Two Roses" being re-demanded. Dr. Arne's "Where the Bee Sucks," was carefully given—the sopranos and contraltos telling with good effect. The quartet from Oberon, "Over the dark blue Waters," was sung with great spirit and accuracy by between 60 and 70 members of the society. The lights and shades in a charming chorus from Euryanthe were given with a degree of finish seldom attained by so young a society. The opening duet for sopranos was well sung and encored. The encores during the second part were frequent and unanimous. A trio from Mr. Laurent's Opera of Quentin Durward, was given with much nicety. "Oh Vane Pompe" was beautifully executed by Miss Vickers. Her voice is a pure soprano, of rich and pleasing quality. The ease with which she executed florid passages was unanimously admired. A duet by Tully was also remarkably well sung. We must specially notice Bishop's chorus, "Now Tramp." Little was wanting to make it perfect. We were surprised at the number of amateurs which this society has been the means of bringing together, and feel convinced that our fellow-citizens will appreciate the efforts of the committee and their friends in drawing forth the talent of our city. We rejoice that an opportunity now offers for the cultivation of an art to which Limerick can give as much talent as other cities, and which in so great a degree tends to the refinement of the community at large.—(From a Correspondent.)

Foreign.

(From a Correspondent.)

PARIS.—Since my last I have had a treat at M. Erard's soirée, where all the fashion of musical Paris was assembled, besides several eminent artistes, who, in graceful union, created one of those evenings of "causerie spirituelle et piquante," that leave such agreeable remembrances behind. I will not speak of the beauty of the "fairest flowers" of the French and English aristocracy, nor of their tasteful "toilette." Felix Godefroid was king of the evening's entertainment, and played as I never heard him play before. His genius, taste, and energy seemed to have entered into his fingers, and the sounds he struck from the suffering harp-strings, like electric sparks, smote the senses of the listeners, and straightway kindled enthusiasm. The applause was really boisterous, considering the place—a "Salon de haute volée" (a drawing-room of high flight!)—but the end sanctified the means. Godefroid was well worth putting aside decorum. Madlle. Vera sang, and Gottschalk, the pianist, was in high favor, with his "Bananier" and other exuberant trees of trait and trill and arpège. Madlle. Oury played, with M. Oury, a brilliant duo for piano and violin, in masterly style.

At a party at Lord Normanby's, Moritz Van Gelder performed several solos on the violoncello. He is certainly a fine performer on that instrument; and moreover, his compositions bear the stamp of his schooling at the Leipsic Conservatoire, where, I understand, he studied with Mendelssohn.

Great pains are taking with the forthcoming representation of Don Giovanni, at Mr. Lumley's Theatre Italien. It is announced to be performed "in its entirety." Hitherto at Paris it has been only given curtailed.

Messrs Erard have taken out several new patents to be exhibited at the London Exhibition for pianofortes of all shapes and sizes. Pleyel, Pape, and Herz do not think of competing.

The Gazettes des Théâtres has recently stated that by "decision ministerielle," Madlle. Rachel is again admitted to enter as member in the society of la Comédie Française, to fulfil the ten years of service which she owes to that establishment. In each of the first three years she will have six months holiday, and the following seven years, only three, (as it is usual)—to play twice a week, and receive 30,000*f.* a year, (instead of, as formerly, 42,000.) This sum she receives from the Government allowance (subvention.) Her extra nights will be paid by the director, as also the time of year for her leave of absence will be fixed by him.

I dare say you have heard that Madame Stolz has made a furor, in Semiramide, at Lisbon, and sent 50,000 reals to the poor of that town.

NEW YORK.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The establishment of a musical Art-Union, something similar to the Painters' Art-Union in London, has been seriously discussed. It is proposed that this Art-Union shall consist entirely of native professors, and that the works of native composers, approved of by a committee chosen from among the members, shall be published. The idea of a lottery is rejected, and the public are to have no interest in the matter.

Parodi's success at the Italian Opera in Astor Place goes on steadily increasing. She is really a great favorite. M. Maretzek, the director, has turned up a trump card in the young and handsome pupil of Madame Pasta. A new Opera, called Giovanna di Napoli, the music by Mr. Maurice Strakosch, the piano-forte player, is in preparation. This gentleman is very well known in his own particular sphere, but how far he is capable of writing an opera for the Italian stage, or indeed for any stage, has yet to be established. Meanwhile his work is anticipated with considerable interest. The possession of Madlle. Parodi, as prima donna, is a fortunate circumstance for Mr. Strakosch.

Some concerts are taking place at Tripler's Hall in the style of the "Tombola," though on a larger and more liberal scale. The first was entitled "New Year's Gift Concert," at which those who purchased tickets at the price of two dollars were entitled to draw for certain prizes, musical instruments, printed music, &c. &c. The success, it appears, was so great, that a second "Gift Concert" has been announced, at which, among other prizes, is advertised, as first gift, "the magnificent boudoir Dolce Campana Piano of Jenny Lind, valued at 1000 dollars." The description of this instrument is worth quoting:—

"This superb instrument was manufactured expressly for Jenny Lind, and was used only by her in her private room while in New York. This piano is elaborately finished, exquisitely ornamented, with her National arms opposite those of America, gorgeously emblazoned in colors. This valuable memento of the glorious Jenny Lind has been much sought after, and many liberal offers have been made at private sales, but the subscribers have deemed it advisable to leave it open for public competition."

Because, it may be presumed, as much as 1000 dollars, the stated value, was not offered by any private purchaser. The second "gift" is another "Dolce Campana" piano, valued at 700 dollars; the third and fourth more pianos; the 5th to the 16th inclusive, "beautiful and elegant guitars." Only 2500 tickets, at two dollars each, are to be issued, although the value of the "gifts" is put down at 5000 dollars, so that the speculation must be a loss,—since the singers and instrumentalists have to be paid. The general admission to the concert, without reference to the lottery, is 50 cents (half a dollar). The ceremony of drawing is thus explained:—

"The tickets, numbered from 1 to 2500, will be placed in the drawing box. The drawing (after the first part of the concert) to be under the supervision of gentlemen well known to the community, and of integrity unimpeachable. The first number drawn to be entitled to the first gift, and so on in succession. The gifts, if desired, to be delivered to the fortunate winners on the evening of drawing. The gift music can be obtained of S. C. Jollie and Co. at 300 Broadway, during the next day, or any succeeding day after the concert."

Sig. Guidi, who may be remembered performing small tenor parts at Mr. Lumley's, two years ago, has been engaged by the Boston Handel and Haydn Society,—who according to Saroni's Musical Times, "had travelled half through the continent, and sent their agents through the other half, to procure a tenor for their oratorios, but without success,"—to sing the Creation in English, in which a Scotch vocalist, not named, had failed and got laughed at. "The Modern Swan of Pesaro," as the same journal facetiously entitles Signor Guidi, has lately taken to the study of English, and one of the committee of the Boston Handel and Haydn Society, happening to hear him sing a ballad, was so astonished by his pronunciation, "that he did not trust his own ears" (rather a queer compliment), but brought his brother committee men to hear him, who, straightway, came to terms, and secured "the modern swan." Signor Guidi is a member of Maretzek's Italian troupe.

A society has been recently founded at New York, under the name of "The American Musical Fund Society;" similar in aim and constitution to that of the London Royal Society of Musicians. The stated objects of the society are the "payment of annuities, relief in affliction, protection to the widow, and guardianship to the orphan," for which a fund of 2000 dollars is to be vested. The purpose is admirable, and it is to be hoped it may be carried out without jobbing, the grand danger in all institutions of the sort, as London can prove too well.

Mr. and Mrs. Doctor, pianists, from Vienna, have been giving concerts here, without producing any great effect. A musical journal (Saroni's Musical Times) which published an immense "puff" on these worthies, accompanied by their portraits, in anticipation of their performance, criticises them thus savagely after the concert is over:—

"The pre-eminent points of Mr. Doctor's playing are a sluggish careless execution, uncertain in octaves (leaping, jumping, great intervals) eccentric conception of every style of music, and less than ordinary facility in every manual difficulty. The style of Mad. Louise Doctor is that of a hundred young ladies in this city, in no other way expressible than by calling it Boarding-school style."

As a composer Mr. Doctor fares even worse than as a pianist at the hands of the merciless reviewer, who, in a previous number, compares him to the greatest of performers.

HAVANA, 31st Dec. 1850.—(Extract from a Private Letter.)—We have a pretty good opera—Steffanoni, Salvi, and César Badiali, being the Stars. A new tenor has just arrived, one Geronimo Bettini, who bids fair to become a formidable rival to Salvi. He has already thrown down the gauntlet by making his débüt in Lucia, said to be Salvi's best part; and notwithstanding his indisposition and the effects of a long sea voyage, he made a very favourable impression, which augurs well for his success. Jenny Lind is to be here on the 4th of January. High prices are talked of, but the general impression is, that she will not take here so well as in the United States and with you. Nous verrons! People here are fond of music, but they don't like paying dear for their whistle.

[Bettini is from the Académie de Musique, in Paris, and will be remembered at the Royal Italian Opera a couple of seasons ago. He was engaged by Maretzek for New York, but was prevented by illness from appearing.—ED. M. W.]

MR. MACREADY'S RETIREMENT.

(From the Observer.)

Mr. Macready will terminate his dramatic career on Monday. For several days every place has been taken at the Haymarket for the farewell performance, much to the disappointment of numbers of his admirers, and it is therefore suggested that another short series of nights should be set apart for his further performances. That the management would only be too glad to accede to such an arrangement can easily be credited, and that Mr. Macready should create any difficulty under the circumstances is scarcely comprehensible. Such a career as his has been should not be cut short all of a sudden, and should he cease altogether to perform, pending the Great Exhibition, the public will have some right to hold they are treated with scant kindness—a thing which those who know Mr. Macready best aver him to be wholly incapable of. It will be, consequently, for the actor and the manager to take counsel on this strait, and decide in accordance with the popular feeling on the subject. Mr. Macready is the last of that race of great English actors to whom there does not seem, at this moment, to be a successor. He has kept up the character of the actor's profession also, by the integrity of his private conduct, as well as by his undoubted ability. Mr. Macready has, therefore, become pro tanto public property, and as such he cannot, without a sufficient cause, retire from the stage. This sufficient cause has not been shown in the present instance. He is in the full possession of his faculties; indeed, he is a greater actor than ever he was; and, consequently, it is not within the compass of his power, without the consent of the public, "to that effect had and obtained," to withdraw from the public service, always presuming that his wish is to stand well with his fellow citizens. At this point of time Mr. Macready's retirement would certainly be a minor catastrophe. The metropolis is about to be filled with a countless crowd of persons of almost all nations under the sun, most of them anxious for amusement, many of them amateurs of the drama. In case of Mr. Macready's secession, however, there will not be a single adequate representative of the tragic muse of England left to inform foreigners of what the English stage has been; and the country will, therefore, be deprived of its only great living actor, at the very moment when it required most his aid and assistance for the purpose of keeping its place, histrionically speaking, in the array of civilization. Mr. Macready consequently cannot retire, at least as yet; and Mr. Macready consequently will not retire—such certainly is the desire of the English public. We have upon no occasion spared Mr. Macready's defects—indeed few metropolitan journals have been more free in commenting upon his imperfections as a performer; but we are satisfied that Mr. Macready had no successor, as he had no equal for many years past, and therefore feel that it only echoes the voice of the community, when it cries aloud to him to "tarry yet a little longer" on the scene of his triumphs as an actor—that stage wherein he has gathered his undying histrionic laurels.

Original Correspondence.

AFROPOS OF THE GREAT EXHIBITION.

To the Editor of the "Musical World."

SIR,—It appears that the Great Exhibition is to be provided with a supply of musical instruments, representing the genius and discovery of modern times in that mechanical branch. Beyond doubt, the art to which such improvements belong will be much benefitted by the appliances of modern skill, and the discussion which will be promoted in that particular branch. It has been suggested in your paper that such discussions, relating both to the theory and art of music, should be fully and mutually entertained by those competent from experience to speak on such subjects. For one, I am inclined to think that the present meeting of musicians of all countries will do much towards dissipating those jealousies which do not properly belong to the high art of music, but are the results of national prejudices, which display their fruits in every matter, whether of art or science. That which will best promote the advancement of music in any shape, be it in science or in art, should be hailed by all who love it as an object of the highest consequence, irrespective of age, country, or predilection. As regards the display of instruments we are to have, what more desirable object can be conceived, than that the skill and experience of modern times shall be fairly examined and tested by artists of all countries, who will of course be competent to decide as to the merits of each invention or improvement displayed, and by their adoption of the same form one common bond of union amongst all? We know the variety of forms and changes which some instruments have lately undergone, and the perplexity it has afforded to artists at large. Let me, for example, mention one. A very beautiful and very useful instrument in the orchestra has been so cut up and changed since the old masters scored for it, that no one would recognise it now to be the same, either in volume of tone, or the power we have gained on it for the purpose of execution. I speak of the flute. Who would credit the present condition of this lovely instrument? We see almost all the professors in this country of any note, at open feud with each other on this point, and using instruments which, in structure and appliances of fingering, are so totally different, as scarcely to bear the smallest comparison one with the other. Let me enumerate them. Nicholson subdivided his flute into large, small, and medium-sized bores, using in the highest octave different fingerings for each. Böhm reversed the whole order of fingering, and professors had to relearn the instrument. He subsequently re-modelled it, and tortured the vocal sound of wood into the shrill blast of metal. Another change of fingering ensued. A failure here set all to work; they cut up, reversed, changed, altered, and so modified Böhm's invention, as to annihilate his system. Mr. Carte has now two flutes of his own invention for sale, differing from each other. Mr. Siccama has another; Mr. Briccialdi has another; Mr. Clinton has just favored us with another. Now, Sir, the evil of this is apparent. Those who learn under one of these masters will not presume to go near another for improvement, because, either they are wedded to their own system, or they do not understand the nature of the flute you bring them. Hence each system has become a monopoly, and so the art has become crippled. Why should not a committee of able artists this year set the point at rest as to which is best, and so make one system universal? The general and, I believe, the best-founded opinion is to retrace the old ground, and get back to the old fingering. The only two that have attempted this practically, are Mr. Siccama and Mr. Clinton. The Böhm system of open keys has proved a failure, and so by consequence have all modifications founded on the same. Hence, those two above-mentioned will I conceive be the only lasting patterns, as they are founded on the old shut-keyed system. Which of the two is best must be decided by a combination of practical and experienced artists. Let them examine these instruments in respect to the ease of the fingering, the purity, equality, and quality of their tone—the theory of their structure, and greatest perfection of tune they give in all the keys in music—I am confident, if fairly done, no first-rate professor will dispute their decision; and the benefit it will cause to the large body of players on that instrument, will be great beyond all conception; the flute will then become, as it once was, the true study and amusement of all lovers of the art, and not, as it now is, an object of a petty rivalry, partisanship, and strife.

I remain, Sir,

Your constant reader,

25th January, 1851.

MARSHAS.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT.

To the Editor of the "Musical World."

SIR,—Availing myself of the invitation conveyed through your columns by "A Constant Reader," and stimulated thereto by the statement of your correspondent "Chas. E. Stephens," in the succeeding number (Jan. 25) I am induced to take up the subject of "International Copyright." I wish it were possible to avoid personality in this matter; but to whisper in an undertone the cause and effect is to treat it with ambiguity, and to leave your readers just where the point has been suggested, without giving the reflections which naturally arise from the considerations evoked by them. Truly does Mr. Stephens say, "so long as English teachers of music avoid using each other's works, so long are they doing themselves an injury." Had, however, the injury rested there, it might in time have righted itself, but the real mischief has arisen from the unqualified preference given both to foreign publications and foreign tutors. English teachers have not only been auxiliary to the exclusion of one another by the anti-patriotic preference given to and introduction of the works of foreign authors, but by the censure they have thereby conveyed upon the productions of native writers, and the inlet made to the rivalry of French, Italian, and German masters of very inferior talent frequently to themselves. Look also at the state and condition of music arising from the assumption of copyright claimed by importers of foreign works, who, by republishing them in an English dress, have in this way accumulated large profits, taken from the pockets of English composers and arrangers by the fact of doing, as publishers, what Mr. Stephens complains of, through excluding the native author from that share of employment and remuneration for his talents bestowed upon foreign works and foreign writers of inferior merit—or rather, by the illogical assumption of copyright for foreign works under statutes passed expressly for the encouragement and protection of English authors; thereby depriving the latter of their birthright and putting the proceeds into their own pockets. I am no enemy to the patronage and encouragement of talent, let it come from what part of the world it may, but let it be done upon right principles. The foolish and ignorant jealousy by which one man thinks to elevate his own fame and promote his own interest by decrying that of another, is always looked upon with suspicion by persons of discernment. "Honesty is the best policy" in such matters, as well as in those of trade, and it may safely be averred in a somewhat homely aphorism, that "what is got over the devil's back" is commonly dissipated in another way. "Honour to whom honour is due," is no less an injunction in regard to others' due, than the observance of any moral law or obligation; and I think it will be found that the mischiefs brought upon the musical trade and profession by what I have pointed out, will ultimately recoil upon those whose policy has been the occasion of them. And now a word respecting the "International Copyright Act." What did our legislators mean by the very designation of this law, but that the "quid pro quo" should be the very basis of it. We don't, say they, object to the introduction of foreign genius or talent, but the advantages accorded by us as a nation shall be reciprocated towards the subjects of Great Britain placed in the same circumstances. Is it so? We trow not, and why not? Because a number of gentlemen who are monopolists, calculating upon their ingenuity in torturing the laws, as in bolstering up their assumptions and continuing their indefensible proceedings, have made use of the terrors, procrastinations, and expenses, connected with litigation, under pretext of maintaining pretended right, and thereby prevent the reciprocity contemplated by the legislature being carried into effect. Do not English authors see and feel how this system affects their interests, both at home and abroad? If not, they should apply their minds to the inquiry, and by one united effort rally round the only individual who has had the courage to contend for their rights and the privileges which a monopoly would deprive both him and them of the full enjoyment of.

Yours, very faithfully,

MUSICUS.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

To the Editor of the "Musical World."

SIR,—In reading the account of our society in your excellent journal, which, I presume, has been furnished you by some of the officials of our committee, there appears to me some statements in our accounts calculated to mislead the public and our subscribers. The report states that our balance in hand, at Christmas, 1849, was 57l. 3s. 6d., but I would ask, where did it come from? Was it from monies paid by the subscribers, for which the committee had to give concerts? The dividend on stock, I can understand, and is correct enough. I can also believe that 1,049l. 9s. 6d. has been received for subscriptions; but have we not to give, viz., to ninety-one subscribers, concerts to Lady Day, and thirty-one to Midsummer, and four hundred and fifty-four to Michaelmas, 1851—making a total of six hundred and seventy-five subscribers to provide concerts for to the above dates. Our casual receipts are stated at 49*l*. 19*s*. 9*d*. I suppose this arises from the loan on commission on the sale of music, although we were given to understand that we do not borrow; but, I believe, that we lend to country festivals, which, I think, is not very much to our credit, as it must tend to injure such persons as Hedgley and Goodwin, whose business it is. The next item is, proceeds of concerts 3,803*l*. 19*s*.; but then as our expenses are 3,883*l*. 16*s*., we evidently are losers to the tune of 79*l*. 17*s*., and as the amount of our subscriptions is 1,049*l*. 9*s*. 6*d*., and our general expenses are 841*l*. 8*s*. 9*d*., it appears to me that they swallow up our subscriptions within 209*l*. 0*s*. 9*d*., so that I cannot see where the money for the Standard Treatises on Musical Science both theoretical and practical, with the interesting collection of English glees, bookcases, &c., amounting to 246*l*. 19*s*. 3*d*., is to come from, unless the committee have been making use of the monies received from our subscribers, for which we have to give them concerts; consequently it is not so clear to my mind that the profit realised during the last twelve months is 450*l*. 5*s*. 3*d*. Our reported balance in hand, is it not in perspective? Suppose we were to give no more concerts—should we not have to return our subscribers their subscriptions, and where must the money come from to do so with, but out of our 1,000*l*. stock in the Consols? I fear our library and stock of music, instruments, fittings, &c., would fetch, if brought by Mr. Puttick to the hammer, not more than half their estimated value. I do not know if you have among your subscribers the celebrated accountants, Messrs. Quilter, Ball, Jay, and Co.; but if so, perhaps they would be kind enough to oblige your readers with their opinion on our financial prospects.

I remain, dear Sir,
Your constant reader,
A MEMBER OF THE SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

ENGLISH MUSICIANS.

To the Editor of the "Musical World."

DEAR SIR,—I consider the valuable remarks made by you on English composers and performers, ought not to be passed over without a vote of thanks from all English musicians. The recent lecture given on the "Rise and Progress of the Pianoforte," by an English professor, wherein he avoided the name of an English composer or pianist, shows that it must have been done out of ill will. I cannot think how any one could give a lecture on pianoforte playing, without some illustration from the works of our great musicians; for instance, there is John Cramer, who, as a composer and performer on the piano-forte, has never been surpassed, if equalled, and as performers, there was Henry Field, of Bath, and John Field, both Englishmen. Among our living composers and pianists, we may mention Sterndale Bennett, C. Potter, W. H. Holmes, B. Richards, Mrs. Anderson, and last, but not least, Kate Loder, who, as a performer of classical and modern piano-forte music, I consider, has no female rival. There are a great number more I could mention as composers and performers, both instrumental and vocal, each of whom, all Englishmen ought to be proud of. I am, Sir, wishing your valuable publication success,

Yours very truly,
ORPHEUS.

Bristol, January 30th, 1851.

[Our correspondent is in error about John Cramer, who is German, not English, by birth.—ED.]

Our Scrap Book.

SINGING.—The mechanical part of singing, even the most perfect, is an indispensable part of the merit of a good singer; but it is not all. The most successful delivery of the voice, the best-regulated respiration, the purest execution of the ornaments, and what is very rare, the most perfect intonation, are the means by which a great singer expresses the sentiment which animates him; but they are nothing more than means; and he who should persuade himself that the whole art of the singer is comprised in them, might sometimes give his audience a degree of tranquil pleasure, but would never cause them to experience vivid emotion. The great singer is one who identifies himself with the personage whom he represents, with the situation in which he is placed, and the feelings which agitate him; who abandons himself to the inspiration of the moment, as the composer would do in writing the music which he performs; and who neglects nothing which may contribute to the effect, not of an isolated piece, but of the whole character. The union of all these qualities constitutes what is called expression. Without expression, there never was a great singer, however perfect the mechanical part of his singing might be; and expression, when it is real, and not merely laboured acting, has often obtained pardon for an incorrect performance.—(Extracted from —; by Aurelian.)

MUSICAL ANALYSIS.—But, it is said, there is no need of all this examination, to know whether a particular melody is agreeable or otherwise. This is a matter of feeling rather than of analysis, and everybody is capable of judging of his sensations. All this is undeniable; but what must we conclude from it? That every one has the right to say that such a melody pleases him, or that it seems insignificant or disagreeable to him; but not to decide upon its merits, if he is not capable of analyzing it. Thank heaven we are not obliged to analyze the measures of phrases, in order to ascertain whether they are properly balanced; such a labour, unworthy of any one who has the sentiment of music, is never necessary, when the ear has been properly cultivated in respect to rhythm and number. We must labour to give perfection to this organ; and to do this, attention alone is required, without resorting to the aid of science. Let any one, instead of giving himself up, without reserve, to the vague pleasure which he receives from an air or duet, set himself to examine its construction, to consider the arrangement and repetition of its phrases, the principal rhythms, the cadences, &c. At first the labour will be painful, and will break in upon his enjoyment; but, by degrees, a habit of attention will be formed, which will soon become spontaneous. Then that which, at first, seemed to be merely a matter of dry calculation, will become the foundation of a ready judgment, and the source of the most lively gratification.—(Extracted from —; by Aurelian.)

THE INFLUENCE OF MUSIC ON THE MIND.—The power which music exercises over the human mind is easily to be recognised from the assistance which it lends towards the expression of the strongest and most opposite of the passions, such as joy and grief. Of this assistance we have testimony in the proofs which exist of its having been the custom of the most ancient and barbarous nations to introduce music at their feasts and funerals. Josephus tells us that the pomp and expense of funerals amongst the Hebrews was carried to a ruinous excess. The number of flute-players who led the procession amounted to several hundreds, and the guests were invited not only amongst their own relations, but friends and neighbours, for thirty days successively, to attend these solemnities. That they also made use of music in their feasts is ascertained from several passages of Scripture, amongst which is one in the 5th chap. Isaiah, 12th ver.—"And the harp and viol, the tabret and pipe, and wine, are at their feasts." But the principal time for rejoicing was at the vintage, and then music was most required and held in the highest estimation.—(From T. H. Tomlinson's Lectures on Ancient Music.)

MUSIC IN ANCIENT TIMES.—From the most ancient records, we find that music was held in the highest estimation by every people, and in all ages, and in it they took the greatest delight, and made use of it upon occasions the most opposite. It gave dignity and solemnity to their festivals, inspired them with courage in the war-dance, and excited mirth, cheerfulness, and activity in the frolicsome dance of peace. What the music of the ancients really was, is not easy to determine; it is however certain that it was something with which mankind were extremely delighted, and that it had progressed and arrived at a state of great cultivation, and was studied by a great number of persons of the highest rank, and that it led to great distinction and honour, is to be found recorded when Solomon commenced the arduous task of collecting materials for building the Temple, and determined the manner of its construction, and appointed the number of persons who were to minister; amongst whom, not the last or least important were the musicians, both as regards their number and the dignity of their office. The princes of Israel, the priests and Levites, being assembled, four hundred and eighty professors were chosen, and the rest disciples, making altogether four thousand, a part being musicians and the others singers, who were employed in all the ceremonies of the Temple; for Solomon strictly observed the most solemn pomp and magnificent display, particularly in the dedication of the Temple, where we find, according to Josephus, that this great prince employed two hundred thousand trumpets, and forty thousand instruments of music, to record and praise God with; and it appears that he considered music not only as a proper aid in religious ceremonies, but as an agreeable act, for he is mentioned in the 4th chap. of the 1st Book of Kings, and the 31st ver. as being wiser than Ethan the Ezrahite, and Heman and Chalcol, and Darda, the sons of Mahol, who were all singers. And it appears that during the long reign of Solomon, the Hebrews were in the greatest prosperity, which not only enabled them to cultivate the arts and sciences amongst themselves, but stimulated foreigners to visit and assist them; for the immense wealth, the great renown, and the enormous sums paid the musicians, could not fail to attract the greatest talents from all parts of the neighbouring kingdoms.—Tomlinson's Lectures on Ancient Music.

"MUSIC," said Luther, "is one of the fairest and most glorious gifts of God, to which Satan is a bitter enemy, for it removes from the heart the weight of sorrow, and the fascination of evil thoughts. Music is a kind and gentle sort of discipline; it refines the passions and improves the understanding. Even the dissonance of unskilful fiddlers serves to set off the charm of true melody, as white is made more conspicuous by the opposition of black. How is it," continued he, "that on profane subjects we have so many fine verses and elegant poems, whilst our religious poetry remains so languid and so dull? Those who love music are gentle and honest in their tempers. I always loved music," added Luther, "and would not for a great matter be without the little skill which I possess in this art."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

SEBASTIAN BACH.—The only life of Sebastian Bach, in English, with which we are acquainted, is a short memoir translated from the German of Forkel, published some years ago by Boosey and Co., Holles-street.

MR. BALFE AND MR. LINDSAY SLOPER.—The concerts of these eminent musicians will be noticed in our next. Press of matter compels their postponement, together with much interesting provincial news and correspondence.

Advertisements.

APOLLONICON.

TUESDAYS, THURSDAYS, SATURDAYS—Mornings, Two; Evenings, Eight; precisely.—The most perfect Work of Musical Mechanism in the world, upon which six Professors perform at the same time. Admission, 1s.; reserve-seats, 1s. 6d. Programmes—see Morning Journals each day of performance. Royal Music Hall, adjoining the Lowther Arcade.

N.B.—The elegant Hall, capable of receiving 1,500 persons (the best for sound in London), is engaged on and after Monday the 10th February. Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays in each week for Italian Operatic Concerts by the first Artists. Director—Signor Montelli.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.

CONDUCTOR, MR. COSTA.—HANDEL'S "ISRAEL IN EGYPT" will be repeated on WEDNESDAY WEEK, the 13th February. The orchestra (including 16 double basses) will consist of 700 performers. Tickets, 3s.; reserved seats in area or gallery, 5s.; central area, numbered seats, 10s. 6d.; at the Society's Office, 6, in Exeter-hall; or of Mr. Bowley, 53, Charing-cross. Handel's "Samson" will be revived on Wednesday, Feb. 21.

DENT'S IMPROVED WATCHES AND CLOCKS.

E. J. DENT, Watch and Clock Maker, by distinct appointment to the Queen, H.R.H. Prince Albert, and H.I.M. the Emperor of Russia, most respectfully solicits from the public an inspection of his extensive STOCK OF WATCHES AND CLOCKS, embracing all the late modern improvements at the most economical charges. Ladies' Gold Watches with gold dials, jewelled in four ho'es, 8 guineas; Gentlemen's, with enamelled dials, 10 guineas; Youth's Silver Watches, 4 guineas. Warranted accurate-going Lever Watches, jewelled in four holes 6 guineas.—E. J. Dent, 82, Strand; 33, Cockspur-street; and 34, Royal Exchange (Clock Tower Area).

THE SCORPION.

NEW SONG.—Sung by Mr. R. PAGET, for whom it was expressly written and composed. Words by EDWARD FARMER. Music by G. SIMPSON.

The subject of this song, being the boast of a pirate, demands the spirited and energetic treatment which the composer has accorded to it. To a melody of great merit are united suitable and well-conceived harmonies. The song has found an able interpreter in Mr. R. Paget, of Atherton, who by his singing has created quite a sensation upon each occasion of its repetition.—Dramatic and Musical Review.

London: Campbell, Ransford, and Co., 53, New Bond-street, and may be had of Mr. R. Paget, Atherton, Price 2s. 6d.

MR. W. STERNDAL BENNETT

RESPECTFULLY announces that his SEVENTH ANNUAL SERIES OF PERFORMANCES OF CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms on Tuesday evening, February 28, March 18, and April 8. To commence at half-past 8 o'clock. Subscription tickets, one guinea; triple tickets (to admit three to any one concert), one guinea; and single tickets (to admit to any one concert), half a guinea. To be had at all the principal music warehouses, and of Mr. W. S. Bennett, 13, Russell-place, Fitzroy-square.

HERR ERNST

BEING absent on a PROVINCIAL TOUR, requests that all Letters, Communications, and Engagements during his absence from town, may be addressed to Herr Ernst, under cover to

M. FRANK.

12, MARGARET STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE.

NEW BEETHOVEN ROOMS,

QUEEN ANNE STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE.

M. ALEXANDRE BILLET

Begs to inform his Pupils and the Public that his CLASSES OF PIANOFORTE INSTRUCTION

have recommenced for the season.

Applications for terms, and all particulars, to be addressed to the NEW BEETHOVEN ROOMS, Queen Anne Street.

CARTE'S PATENT FLUTES.

In the Press, and will be published on Wednesday next, the 5th of February,

A SKETCH of the successive IMPROVEMENTS made in the FLUTE, with a Statement upon which Flutes are constructed, and a Comparison between the relative Merits of the Ordinary Flute, the Flute of Boehm, and Carte's two new Patent Flutes. By RICHARD CARTE.

Publishers: Rudall, Rose, and Co., 38, Southampton-street, Strand; Addison, 216, Regent-street; Keith and Prowse, 48, Cheapside; and Cocks and Co., 6, New Bur-lington-street. Price 1s., or if sent by post, 1s. 6d.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL, 89, LONG ACRE.

M. ALEXANDRE BILLET begs to announce a series of THREE EVENING PERFORMANCES OF CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC, in illustration of the Works of the great Composers, on Tuesdays, February 11th and 25th; and March 11th. To commence at 8 o'clock precisely.

Tickets for a Single Concert, 2s.; Reserved Seats, 4s.; Subscription to Reserved Seats for the Series, 10s. 6d. To be had at St. Martin's Hall; of WESSEL and Co., 229, Regent Street, and the principal Music Publishers.

PROGRAMME OF THE FIRST PERFORMANCE.

1. Sonata in F sharp major, Op. 78 BEETHOVEN.
2. { Prelude & Fugue in A flat BACH.
3. { Prelude & Fugue in F HANDEL.
3. Sonata in C minor WORKLE.
4. Andante con Variazioni in E flat, Op. 82, (Posth.) Works, No. 10) MENDELSSOHN.
5. Sonata in B minor HAYDN.
6. Selection of Studies—
A minor STEIBELT.
D major CRAMER.
C minor REES.
G major MOSCHELES.
C sharp minor CHOPIN.

PROGRAMME OF THE SECOND PERFORMANCE.

1. Sonata in E flat minor PINTO.
2. Prelude & Fugue in G minor (Cat's Fugue) SCARLATTI.
2. Prelude & Fugue in D major MENDELSSOHN.
3. Fantasia in A, Op. 16 (Dedicated to ROBERT SCHUMANN) W. S. BENNETT.
4. Sonata in C minor, Op. 35 (Dedicated to CLEMENTI) DUSSEK.
5. Allegro di Bravura CIPRIANI POTTER.
6. Lieder ohne Worte MENDELSSOHN.
No. 4, Second Book.
No. 6, Sixth Book.
No. 1, do. do.
No. 4, do. do.

PROGRAMME OF THE THIRD AND LAST PERFORMANCE.

1. Sonata in B minor, Op. 40 (Dedicated to CHERUBINI) CLEMENTI.
2. { Prelude & Fugue in F BACH.
2. { Prelude & Fugue in E minor MENDELSSOHN.
3. Grand Sonata in B flat, Op. 106. BEETHOVEN.
3. Andante con Variazioni in B flat, Op. 83 (Posth.) Works, No. 11) MENDELSSOHN.
5. Rondo in A minor MOZART.
6. Selection of Studies:
C minor HUMMEL.
E flat MACFARREN.
D minor HILLER.
D flat major HENSELT.
A minor THALBERG.

HEALTH WHERE 'TIS SOUGHT!—HOLLOWAY'S

PILLS.—Cure of a disordered Liver and Stomach, when in a most hopeless state.—Extract of a letter from Mr. Matthew Harvey, of Chapel Hall, Airdrie, Scotland, dated the 15th of January, 1850.—To Professor HOLLOWAY, Sir,—Your valuable Pills have been the means, with God's blessing, of restoring me to perfect health, at a time when I thought I was on the brink of the grave. I had consulted several eminent Doctors, who, after doing what they could for me, considered my case hopeless. I had been suffering from a Liver and Stomach complaint of long standing, which during the last two years got so much worse, that every one considered my condition as hopeless. I, as a last resource, got a Box of your Pills, which soon gave relief, and by persevering in their use for some weeks, together with rubbing night and morning your Ointment over my chest and stomach, and right side, I have by their means alone got completely cured, and to the astonishment of myself and everybody who knows me. (Signed) MATTHEW HARVEY.

These celebrated Pills are wonderfully efficacious in the following complaints:—
Ague Consumption of Fevers of all kinds Liver complaints Tumours
Asthma the Bowels kinds Lumbago Ulcers
Bilious Com- Consumption Fits Pile Worms of all plaints Debility Gout Rheumatism kinds
Blotches on the Drop- Head-ache Scrofula or King's Weakness, from Skin Dysentery Indigestion Evil whatever cause
Bowel complaints Erysipelas Inflammation Sore Throats &c., &c.
Colds Jaundice Tic-Doaleureux

Sold at the Establishment of Professor HOLLOWAY, 244, Strand, (near Temple-bar, London, and most all respectable Druggists, and Dealers in Medicines throughout the civilised World, at the following prices—1s. 1/4d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 36s. each Box. There is a considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.
N.B.—Directions for the guidance of Patients in every Disorder are affixed to each Box.

TO PROFESSORS OF MUSIC.

A PROVINCIAL MASTER requires AN ASSISTANT capable of teaching SINGING principally—and the Junior Pupils the Pianoforte.—None need apply whose character will not bear the strictest investigation. Apply in the first instance at Messrs. Addison and Co.'s, 210, Regent Street, London.

MR. WILLIAM STERNDALÉ BENNETT'S WORKS.

THE whole of Mr. W. S. BENNETT'S WORKS, formerly published by Mr. Coventry, of Dean-street, are now published only by Messrs. Addison and Hollier, 210, Regent-street; and Messrs. Leader and Cock, 63, New Bond-street, corner of Brook-street; of whom all Mr. W. S. Bennett's compositions, both vocal and instrumental, are to be had for the future.

"THE INDISPENSABLE POLKA,"

BY J. G. CALLCOTT, Price 2s. "QUEEN OF THE NIGHT WALTZ," by the same author, Price 3s. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

VOCAL MUSIC.

Just published,

SCIPION ROUSSELOT'S new version of "TRAB, TRAB," as a Duet, Trio, Quartet, or Chorus. The celebrated Echo Chorus arranged as a Duet, with Pianoforte Accompaniment; and also his Grand Quadrille Fantastique, "THE CRYSTAL PALACE," for one or two Performers on the Pianoforte, at Messrs. Rousselet and Co., 66, Conduit-street, Regent-street.

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC

BY

BRINLEY RICHARDS.

Angela. Romance. Dedicated to the Lady Robert Grosvenor 2 6
"Mr. Brinley Richards' "Angela," though essentially popular in style, yet strongly indicates the hand of an accomplished musician."—Morning Post.

Mendelssohn's "First Violet." 1 6

Mendelssohn's "Maid of the Ganges." Dedicated to Sterndale Bennett, Esq. 2 0

"In the arrangement of these two charming melodies by the lamented Mendelssohn for the Pianoforte, Mr. Richards has very effectively adopted the style of the celebrated Lieder ohne Worte."—Herald.

The Fairy's Dream. Romance 2 6

Picciola, ou le Chant du Captif. Dedicated to Mrs. Anderson 2 6

Sybil. Romance. (Second Edition) 2 6

"The style of these compositions is the most attractive of modern Pianoforte music,—and whether for variety and sweetness of effect, or for frequent indication of a graceful elevation of musical thought, combined with a moderate degree of difficulty in execution, we have never met with three pieces by a native composer which were calculated to give so much satisfaction to a candid reviewer. Nothing can be more useful to young students of the modern school of Pianoforte playing than such compositions as the above.—Dramatic and Musical Review. September.

Premier Nocturne. (Second Edition.) 2 6

The Irish Emigrant. Arranged as a Rondo 2 6

"Among the recent examples of the style of Pianoforte music at present in vogue, few more successfully appeal to the exigencies of popular taste, and more the oughtly realize the best ideal of fashionable elegance than the above-named publications. Sybil, Picciola, Premier Nocturne, and The Fairy's Dream, are all specimens of Mr. Brinley Richards in his most happy and fluent manner. They abound in ad captandum melody, and are over-run with passages both brilliant and neatly turned. The principal objection to the modern Pianoforte music of the drawing-room is a certain affectation of sentiment, from which Mr. Richards is entirely free. In his lightest passages there is a certain refinement, which indicates a desire to satisfy the amateur and the professor simultaneously, and must render his pieces acceptable to both." Musical World. December 7.

CHAPPELL, 50, NEW BOND STREET.

BEETHOVEN'S WORKS,

New Edition, to be complete and uniform.

EDITED by WM. STERNDALÉ BENNETT, Professor at the Royal Academy of Music and the Queen's Colleges. The sonatas, andantes, rondos, airs, &c., for the pianoforte, are now ready. "This edition is engraved and printed in a very superior style, is much clearer and easier for the performer to read than any edition hitherto published." London, Leader and Cock, 63, New Bond-street, corner of Brook-street.

Printed and Published, for the Proprietors, by MICHAEL SAMUEL MYERS, of No. 3 Studley Villas, Studley Road, Clapham Road, in the parish of Lambeth, at the office of MYERS and Co., 37, King Street, Covent Garden, in the parish of St. Paul, where all communications for the Editor are to be addressed, post paid. To be had of G. Parke & Co., Dean Street, Soho; Allen, Warwick Lane; Vickers, Holywell Street; and at all Booksellers.—Saturday, Feb. 1, 1851.

The Musical World.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

Terms of Subscription, per Annum, 16s.; Half year, 8s.; Three Months, 4s.; payable in advance, to be forwarded by Money Order, to the Publishers, Messrs. Myers & Co., 37, King Street, Covent Garden.

No. 6.—VOL. XXVI.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1851.

PRICE FOURPENCE.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Proprietors of the MUSICAL WORLD beg to remind those Subscribers who have not yet forwarded their Subscriptions, that unless the same be paid to MESSRS. MYERS and Co., 37, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, prior to the publication of the next number, they must discontinue forwarding it. Those Subscribers who may have paid MR. W. S. JOHNSON (the late Publisher), in advance for the present year, will please to send an order to MESSRS. MYERS and Co., to receive the money from him.

For the convenience of our West-End Subscribers, Advertisers, and Correspondents, Messrs. WESSEL and Co., 229, REGENT STREET, have kindly consented to receive Advertisements, Subscriptions, and Communications for the Editor.

LONDON versus LIVERPOOL.

We quoted last week a notice of a concert from a provincial paper, as an example of what musical criticism should not be. We have now before us an article from a metropolitan contemporary, which completely puts to shame the Lancashire scribe. It is à propos, or rather malà propos, of the Sacred Harmonic Society, on the occasion of the second performance of Elijah—decidedly the best ever given at Exeter Hall. The critic falls foul of the society in a merciless manner; but unfortunately, the cloven hoof is visible under the robe of independence, which is but clumsily attached. We insert the article, "in its integrity," as the Post says.

"Mendelssohn's magnificent oratorio Elijah was performed here last evening by the members of the Sacred Harmonic Society. This is perhaps the most elaborately constructed of Mendelssohn's works, and therefore the choice of it for performance by the Sacred Harmonic Society exhibits a degree of ambition which would have been highly laudable had the performance borne any proportion to the daring nature of the attempt. We have frequently heard this sublime composition both in this country and on the Continent, and we could not but be sensible of the lamentable deficiencies of the chorus last evening. There were certainly five-hundred persons singing, not together, but at the same time, and all, as Byron once said of some other performers of sacred music,

"Singing out of tune,
And hoarse,"

but the effect of the contemporaneous performance of 500 solos was anything but pleasing, and we felt grateful to Mr. Brownsmith when he occasionally poured in a flood of sound from the organ, drowning for the time the din. The English music public has of late had frequent opportunities of hearing really good choral singing; they know what it can and ought to accomplish; the performances of the chorus at the German Opera, and of the Berlin chorus at Her Majesty's Theatre, has rendered them intolerant of even mere mediocrity, and the chorus of the Sacred Harmonic Society must work much harder, and rehearse much more frequently, before it can occupy the position at which it evidently aims. Mr. Costa also, excellent as he is as a leader of opera, does not altogether satisfy us as a conductor of sacred music; he last night took the music throughout the whole of the oratorio too fast and TOO HIGH."

The above is from our respectable evening contemporary, The Sun, who is rarely given to such curious blundering, since, nine times out of ten, he borrows his musical articles from the morning papers. The Sun does not shine in the atmosphere of the fine arts (if Punch will allow music to be a fine art). His original light is obscured in a fog of ignorance.

Let us enlighten the Sun in some particulars. The Sun ought to know that the performance of Elijah exhibits no particular amount of "ambition" or "daring," on the part of the Sacred Harmonic Society, since the Sacred Harmonic Society has performed that oratorio "many a time and oft," during the last four years. The Sun ought to know that the "contemporaneous performance of 500 solos," means nothing whatever. The Sun ought to know that "choral singing" does not "accomplish," although choral singers may. The Sun ought to know that to be "intolerant of even mere mediocrity" argues no vast amount of intolerance. Last and most essential, the Sun ought to know that Mr. Costa may conduct an oratorio "too fast" (not his prevalent fault by the way), but that to tax him with conducting it "TOO HIGH," argues a vacuity of meaning, which leads to the inference, that the head of the writer must be as empty as the language in which he prefers the charge. The Sun should know all these things; but, being enveloped in a cloud, he cannot perceive them. We have therefore fulfilled the office of bons camarades, in blowing away the misty obstruction. Waving the torch of truth over the map of his mistakes, we have afforded him the opportunity of plainly beholding and correcting them. Prythee, good Sun, wipe thine eye, use thy kerchief, put on thy spectacles, read thy criticism, and confess thy sins. Thou art not blind from excessive light, but from the want of it. Why meddle with that which thou dost not comprehend? Place thy forefinger upon thy countenance, and own thou art not conscious of the exact difference between a duet and a fiddle.

BRINLEY RICHARDS.

WE invite the attention of our readers to a memoir of this gentleman, inserted in another part of our columns, which we have borrowed from the pages of Bentley's Miscellany. The mere fact of an article of such length being devoted to the life and works of an English musician, by a journal of strictly literary character, is of such significance, that we cannot pass it over without an expression of satisfaction. That music is becoming daily better appreciated in this country, can hardly be denied. But, gratifying as this circumstance undoubtedly is, it is even more consoling to know that our native professors are gradually occupying that rank in public consideration which is their undoubted due, and of which only bigotry and short-sighted ignorance have so long deprived them.

LONDON SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

Haydn's Oratorio of the Creation, and Dr. Elvey's new Anthem, "In that day shall this Song be sung," were performed on Friday evening, the 31st ult., by the members of this Society. The performance in general was unusually good, and reflected much credit on all concerned. The chorus, "The Heavens are telling," excited a great sensation, and the chorus, "Awake the Harp," was highly effective. These were the principal points. Miss Birch, Mr. Lockey, Mr. H. Phillips, and Mr. Turner, were the singers. Miss Birch sang "With verdure clad," with admirable taste and expression. We have seldom heard her in better voice. Mr. Lockey displayed his pure tone and refined feeling to the best advantage in Haydn's music. The difficult song, "Now vanish," he gave with proportionate spirit and vigor. Mr. Henry Phillips was entirely successful in the bass music. "Rolling in foaming billows" was finely declaimed and articulated—the chief desideratum, we take it, in grappling with this song. The chorus in general were steady, and Mr. Surman appeared to take the greatest possible pains to make them go well together. Mr. Surman's pains, however, were occasionally unrewarded, and the mass of singers sometimes eluded the command of his baton. The performance, nevertheless, was entitled to much praise, the more especially as every one engaged in it seemed to do his utmost. Mr. Surman obtained an immense reception. He is decidedly one of the popularities of Exeter Hall.

Of Dr. Elvey's Anthem we have already recorded our opinion in the Musical World (No. 2). Upon hearing it performed at Exeter Hall, our opinions are confirmed as to its merits and specialties. The anthem is modelled in the style of our great cathedral masters, and is written with the correctness and purity of a well-grounded musician. Dr. Elvey presided in the orchestra. He was received with prolonged cheers on his entrance. His work could not have been entrusted to more zealous executants than the members of the London Sacred Harmonic Society. It was carefully and excellently performed, and elicited unmistakable demonstrations of approval throughout. The pieces which appeared to afford most gratification were, the short chorus in full harmony, in B flat, "Trust ye in the Lord," leading to a choral fugue in the same key; the chorale in G minor, "Be gracious unto us;" the solo for tenor, "Thou wilt keep him," remarkable for its skilful voicing; and the final fugue, "Amen," with its well-marked and carefully elaborated theme. All these had their enthusiastic admirers, who applauded them to the echo.

The grave objection we have to offer to Dr. Elvey's Anthem is, that it begins in one key and ends in another. In so short a composition, this is hardly to be countenanced. The effect is unsatisfactory, and the work is rendered fragmentary and disconnected. Dr. Elvey, as well as ourselves, must be aware that among the works of the great masters, no precedent is afforded for such innovation.

AMATEUR MUSICAL SOCIETY.

If we draw an inference from the great improvement manifested this year in the Amateur Musical Society, there is much hope for musical England. The progress made within a twelvemonth is indeed remarkable. That a body of amateurs, for the mere love of art, and the ambition that love generates, should, to the exclusion of all native-born—no, rather, native-taught—pleasures, devote their time and talents to a difficult branch of learning, the approach to which is impeded by innumerable and nearly insurmountable obstructions and difficulties, speaks "trumpet-tongued against the deep damnation" of foreign scoffers, who deny us a right to the title of a musical nation; and should act as an additional spur to the professional man, lest the toe of the amateur should tread on the kibe of the artist.

We were vastly taken with the first concert of the Amateur Musical Society, which took place on Monday night, at the Hanover-square Rooms, and brought together a large influx of fashionables. The members reckoned about eighty strong, including the professional players, who were—Blagrove (first violin), Zerbini (second violin), King (piccolo), Boose (clarinet), Baumann (bassoon), Zeiss (trumpet), C. Harper, Wander, and Mann (horns), Ireland (harp—a good name for the harp), and Pratten (double bass). Signor Negri, as heretofore, conducted.

The C minor Symphony of Beethoven was an ambitious attempt on the part of the society, but was, nevertheless, crowned with decided success. Signor Negri, thinking thereby to ensure a steadier and more correct performance, took each of the movements too slow; but we very much doubt whether the Symphony would not have gone better—well as it did go—had the conductor indicated the composer's time as it was intended. We are the more convinced of this, as in the overture to Oberon, given later in the evening, the second movement taken in the usual time, went admirably, while the first movements, played too slow, suffered materially. The overture to Zanetta, and the Wedding March from A Midsummer Night's Dream, were brilliantly executed. Both wind and stringed instruments were excellent, and the alternation of light and shade observed with great nicety. The piano passages in the overture were rendered with great delicacy; and the winding up of the Wedding March brought out the power and energy of the band in a conspicuous light. A selection from Robert le Diable went off with considerable eclat. Messrs Boose and Baumann, who played the clarinets and bassoon solos, were mainly instrumental in conducting to this effect; but not altogether; for the amateur who played the oboe executed his task in such a manner, as to divide the applause with his professional compeers. This was the more remarkable, as his playing on the oboe involved a transposition of keys, the part being originally written for a Corno Inglese.

We have but to notice the very clever execution of Stern-dale Bennett's fourth concerto in F minor, for pianoforte and orchestra, by a young amateur. This gentleman, whose youth, had he no talent, would stand pardon for his presumption, might certainly have selected a better vehicle for the display of his powers. His ambition, however, was excusable, as the manner in which he overcame many of the difficulties indicated capabilities of no mean order. His touch is firm and distinct, his tone round and full, and he marks the time with great precision. With care and study, and a stringent abnegation of the flattery of fools, the juvenile amateur may really become celebrated as an aristocratic and unbought pianist.

On the whole, we do not hesitate to pronounce this concert by many degrees, the best which, as yet, has been given by the members of the Amateur Musical Society.

BRINLEY RICHARDS.

(From Bentley's Miscellany.)

Music has for some years been gradually assuming that place which is its undoubted prerogative among the most refined and humanising of the arts. For a long time England held aloof from the faith which had been strong in the rest of Europe since the days of Lully and Louis XIV. The indifference of literary and scientific men, with the bitter sneer of Swift for a motto, outweighed even the potent influence of Handel, whose position in high society was the chief cause of jealousy in the bosom of the celebrated Irish clergyman, politician, and satirist. Swift could not brook that the same respect should be paid to a "fiddler" as to his intellectual self. But times have changed. The personal influence of Weber, Spohr, Mendelssohn, and other distinguished musicians who have resided, at various periods, in England, during the last thirty years, has dissipated prejudice, and taught us to know the difference between composers of music and mere players upon musical instruments, and to give to each his proper share of honour. A great musical composer now holds rank with a great poet or painter, and Mendelssohn being the frequent and intimate guest of royalty is no longer a matter for surprise. Although the days of Elizabeth are not exactly restored—when music was regarded as an essential feature in polite education, and gentlemen as well as ladies would have been ashamed not to be able to sing a part in a madrigal at sight—the general appreciation of music is far more remarkable now than at any former period of our history. The fact that nearly three thousand persons, chiefly from the middle classes, can be attracted, twenty times a year, to the performances of Oratorios at Exeter-hall, is a sign of the times that cannot be over-estimated. It places London at the very head of the musical cities of Europe, since no such institution as the Sacred Harmonic Society exists in any other part of the world. The number of societies, amateur and professional, for the public and private execution of the music of the classical composers is far too numerous to specify; nor is it requisite for us to insist that a pianoforte is now considered an absolute necessity in every "well-regulated" house. While, as might be expected, a great deal of meretricious taste prevails, and a vast quantity of bad music finds a market, it can hardly be denied that the influence of good example is daily augmenting, that the general tendency verges towards a healthy feeling, and that a modern English school, the one thing wanting to give us a high rank among musical nations, is already in the germ. We need not catalogue the names of those upon whose talent and industry such a desirable consummation depends; it is enough to assert, without fear of refutation, that at the present moment London possesses a greater number of composers of high promise, if not of decided genius, than any other capital in Europe.

Among the cleverest and most rising of our young musicians, the subject of the present brief sketch must be allotted a conspicuous place. The popularity of his writings for the voice and pianoforte has recently brought him before the public in such a manner, that a new name added to the list of meritorious native composers has been unanimously recognised. Mr. Brinley Richards was born at Carmarthen, in South Wales, of a musical family. His father was for many years organist of the principal church, and his youngest brother, the Rev. John Richards, now curate of New Church, in Radnorshire, displayed such an aptitude for music, while a student at St. David's College, Lampeter, that he obtained an additional scholarship, in recognition of his services as organist in the chapel of the college. The scenery of Carmarthenshire—the vale of Towy, Granger Hill, celebrated by the poet Dyer, and other romantic spots—had no doubt a peculiar influence on our young artist, and filled his mind with early images of beauty. It is worth noting by the way that three of our most popular musicians are "Celts"—Vincent Wallace, George Osborne, and Brinley Richards. The last mentioned was educated in the Royal Academy of Music, at which institution he contested and obtained the first King's Scholarship, in two successive years. This distinction entitled him to free instruction in the various branches of music, besides the most essential parts of general education. His first masters were Mr. Macfarren for composition, and Mr. W. H. Holmes for the pianoforte, under whose experienced guidance, having acquired almost all that masters can communicate, he was transferred to the class of Mr. Cipriani Potter, Principal of the Academy. It was with the advice and assistance of the late Duke of Newcastle that Mr. Richards directed his steps to the only musical institution of London; and that lamented nobleman subsequently took a sincere and liberal interest in his welfare, and honoured him with his friendship and correspondence to the last. The Earl of Westmoreland was also his kind and constant patron. Having been originally destined to the study of medicine, and, indeed, actually placed with a surgeon of eminence at Carmarthen, Mr. Richards devoted his attention to music somewhat later in life than is usual with those who practise this difficult and most exclusive of the arts. His progress, nevertheless, both on the pianoforte and in counterpoint, harmony, and original composition, was remarkably quick, and he very soon became one of the ornaments of the Royal Academy of Music, where he assumed the duties of sub-professor, and shortly afterwards was appointed one of the professors of the institution. The composition which first acquired him distinction was a grand concerto for the pianoforte and orchestra, performed by himself, with great applause, at one of the Academy Concerts. This was followed by two overtures, for full orchestra, the last of which has been frequently played in London, and when introduced at a public concert in Paris, during Mr. Richards' first visit to the French metropolis, attracted the notice of the late Chopin, and laid the foundation of an intimacy which lasted until the death of that celebrated artist. Mr. Richards now played frequently in public, and composed many pieces, vocal and instrumental, which coming under the notice of music-publishers, proved of ultimate advantage to him. A caprice, for the pianoforte, called "The Birds and the Rivulet," was heard by Mr. Beale (of the firm of Cramer and Co.), an excellent judge, and well known connoisseur, who was so pleased with it that he at once made a liberal offer for the copyright, and entered into further treaty with Mr. Richards for the purchase of new MS. compositions. Among his numerous vocal writings, a madrigal, quaint and learned as though it had sprung from Elizabethan period, has been greatly praised, and a ballad called "The Blind Man and Summer," which Miss Dolby, the best of English singers, has sung repeatedly, may be cited as a faultless example of that primitive and universally popular style of composition. Mr. Richards also dedicated his talents to the stage, and some songs introduced in the English version of Auber's Diamans de la Couronne, at Drury Lane Theatre, betrayed such a happy resemblance to the character of the original, without the slightest evidence of plagiarism, that much was predicted of his dramatic talent at the time. With this growing artistic fame, Mr. Richards soon combined a position in society, not more due to his eminent musical talent, than to his gentlemanly manners and educated mind. Lady Morgan, the Countess of Beauchamp, and others distinguished in the highest circles and in the world of literary connoisseurship, honoured him with their patronage and friendship. In fact, industry, talent, and good sense have seldom met a more rapid and substantial reward than in the person of Mr. Brinley Richards, whose social and artistic position is entitled to envy and emulation.

As a pianist, Mr. Richards holds a very prominent rank. His school is the classical school of Mendelssohn and Sterndale Bennett, in the performance of whose admirable works, and those of Bach, Handel, Beethoven, Mozart, and the other great pillars of the art, he particularly excels. But he is not less versed in the more brilliant style of execution which belongs to another class of pianists. Few, indeed, can play with greater energy and effect the difficult fantasias, &c., of Thalberg, Liszt, Herz, Henselt, their rivals and their followers. In short, Mr. Richards is a thoroughly accomplished pianist. As a composer, Mr. Richards has demonstrated, by a symphony (MS.), a concerto and two overtures, already mentioned, a caprice dedicated to Potter, another called "Le Soir," dedicated to Chopin, "Contemplation," "Midsummer Day" (schërzo), &c., his acquaintance with the serious school, and his familiarity with the great classical forms, ancient and modern. On the other side, his "Sybil," "Angela," "Picciola," "Fairy's Dream," his pianoforte arrangements of Mendelssohn's vocal songs, and a large catalogue of sparkling and attractive trifles, declare him a gifted follower, if not a warm disciple, of what has been termed the "modern romantic school." Among his vocal compositions may be specially singled out a trio for soprano voices, "Come hither," and a bacchanalian scena, full of characteristic melody and vigorous expression, with which the great German bass-singer, Staudigl, was so delighted that he sang it in public, producing an effect quite equal to that of his most esteemed Teutonic master-pieces.

Without entering into further details, we have adduced enough to explain—if explanation be necessary—the appearance in our pages of an article on a musical subject. But the present high estimation enjoyed by the musical art would be a sufficient reason for alluding at some length to the career and works of one of our most rising native professors, were it not equally true that a new name in the intellectual world, a new evidence of artistic invention, must always be heartily welcomed by those who admire talent and genius, in whatever sphere exhibited. Mr. Brinley Richards is only thirty years of age. A brilliant prospect lies before him, the full realization of which depends upon a continued exercise of those excellent qualities to which he is indebted for the position he already enjoys.

MACREADY.

(From the "Era.")

Mr. Macready is essentially an actor. His estimation of his art—his notions of himself—his devotion to his task—these are patent. His life has been a prolonged attempt to embody the conceptions of the Poet—he has never tired, never faltered, and his success has been complete. His retirement is a national loss, because high dramatic talent is scarce; and the Stage will suffer because of the respectability his name reflected upon it. His very exclusiveness added to his importance, and even where his mimic powers failed to gain approval, he left impressions favourable to his character as a scholar and a gentleman. May his final exit from "the world's wide stage" be long delayed, and may he enjoy, in domestic life, the repose to which he is well entitled, and to use words which he has often spoken with touching eloquence:—

"That which should accompany old age,
As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends."

May these be his! The eminent Tragedian is, as a public individual, no more. It was for thousands to know him as they will never more behold him, and to remember him as he was—of the Past. "Why should we," said poor Hazlitt, "prick the bubble that reflects the world, and turn it to a little soap and water?" The motto of Macready has been, "Aut Cæsar, aut nihil." Macbeth will be his last character—"Close, close the scene upon him, and never break that fine phantasmagoria of the brain which the player has conjured up."

One night more, Wednesday the 26th, the night fixed for his benefit, and last farewell, and the curtain will fall upon his theatrical achievements. He will have been upwards of forty years before the public, affording varied and intellectual entertainment of an elevating character, and realizing the creations of genius.

Mr. Macready is known to delight in the quietude of domestic life, where, surrounded by his wife and family, his social qualities are conspicuous—where he may be less a hero, but not less a man. Upon the threshold of his home, with all that makes it dear to an Englishman, we must take our leave of him, wishing lasting happiness to his hearth—all that the most liberal of his many admirers can do in the way of showing their gratitude for what he has done for them while labouring in the cause of the British Drama.

WORDS FOR MUSIC.

By ROBERT B. BROUGH.

Thou hast winning eyes, Mary,
Glad and passing bright;
Ever by their gentle fire
Setting hearts a-light.
Beaming,
Gleaming,
Fairly streaming
Forth with lightsome glee!
They must shine on somebody—
Let them shine on me.
Thou hast pouting lips, Mary,
Red as ruby gem—
Tempting as the autumn cherry
Drooping on its stem.
Glowing,
Showing
Dimples knowing
Dangerous to see!
They must smile on somebody—
Let them smile on me.
But thou hast a heart, Mary,
Well its worth I know!
How it bounds at others' pleasure—
Melts at others' woe.
Fairest,
Rarest
Charm thou bearest—
Rich though others be—
It must beat for somebody,
Let it beat for me!

(The above words are copyright.)

MR. HENRY LINCOLN.—This eminent professor has resumed his interesting lectures on the works of the great composers, ancient and modern, at the Whittington Club. His first was on Weber, his second, on Rossini. Both were highly instructive, and illustrated by various and appropriate examples. At the last lecture, Mr. Lincoln was assisted in the vocal department by Miss Noble, Miss Eyles, Miss Fanny Rowland, Mr. Herbert, (who sang with excellent effect, the graceful cavatina, "Languir per una bella," now almost forgotten) and Mr. J. A. Novello. The terzetto, "Zitti, Zitti," by Miss Eyles, Mr. Herbert, and Mr. J. A. Novello, was encored. Mr. Lincoln himself presided at the pianoforte, an instrument upon which he is an accomplished performer.

MADLLE. BESNIER, the vocalist, has arrived in town, after a most successful season at Brighton.

Reviews of Music.

"THREE MUSICAL SKETCHES FOR THE PIANOFORTE."—HENRY BAUMER. Duff and Hodgson.

If it be true, as we are informed, that the author of these sketches is a mere boy, and that they constitute his first published work, we are justified in saying that they hold out no ordinary promise. Without presenting any striking marks of original thought, the model Master Baumer has taken is the best, provided only that he follows it as a guide, and be not led away by its attractions of style to a slavish and abandoned imitation. Since the death of Weber, composers for the pianoforte may be divided into three classes; those who caricature Henri Herz; those who caricature Sigismund Thalberg; and those who caricature Felix Mendelssohn. In the first category may be ranked such men as Rosellen, Gorla, &c. In the second, Prudent, Kontaki, Willmers, &c., &c. In the third, almost every writer professing to belong to the school called "classical." We must confess we have but little respect for any of them, and least of all for the last. There is, it must be admitted, some ingenuity in contriving new variations, even on the Herz and Thalberg pattern; indeed, were the variations not new, the efforts of the composers of the "Romantic" school would be little better than plain copies of the two originals, since the themes upon which these originals construct their fantasias are very rarely their own, Rossini, Auber, Bellini, and Donizetti being the fountains of melody at which they continually fill their watering pots, proceeding, after their own fashion, to sprinkle them upon their own barren plots of thought, and the flowers that spring up are but façades, bearing a sickly resemblance to the types from whence they draw their origin. But the imitators of Mendelssohn, who carry not their watering-pots to the fountains of Rossini, Auber, Bellini, and Donizetti, have recourse to an old well, the water at the bottom of which has become foul and stagnant, and choked up with rubbish. They dare not appropriate Mendelssohn's own ideas—the themes or melodies upon which he formed his compositions—but they use, without ceremony, his form of accompaniment, his peculiarities of harmony, his style of modulation and progression, to dress up their fleshless skeletons and make them look young and fresh. But the "reviver" does not act. The dead well will not mix with the living fountain; the faded forms only look the more withered in their gay attire, like old maids with low dresses, or Pantaloon in Harlequin's suit. Like the wicked sisters in Cinderella, they would fain be shod with a glass slipper. But it does not fit them—attempting to walk they limp and stumble.

The above remarks are not intended to apply to Master Henry Baumer, whose sketches, besides a depth of feeling rare in so very young a composer, present more than the example, if not of absolute originality, at least of a strong desire to draw upon his own resources and think for himself. We have mentioned them with the hope that they may act as a warning, by which he may ultimately profit. The first sketch, entitled "Sorrow," in G minor, has a sweet vein of sentiment running through it; but the form of the accompaniment, to say nothing of the 3-8 measure, and the peculiarity of one or two of the cadences, can too readily be traced to the lied in A minor, in the first book of Mendelssohn's "Songs without words." The general flow of the composition is also impeded by eight bars of remplissage, which connect, or rather disconnect the second theme, in the dominant key, from the cadence in the dominant, which is otherwise agreeably contrived. We recommend him to omit these eight bars in a future edition. The second sketch, "Hope," in D flat, is more original, both as to melody and accompaniment, but less symmetrical in form. The second phrase, in F major, the major third of the key, is intrinsically graceful; the modulation thence into D, both effective and charming; but the return to F again, before the re-appearance of the first subject in the original key, is a decided miscalculation. From the point in D major Master Baumer should have found some progression to lead back naturally to the key of D flat; or he should have omitted the modulation into F altogether. The third sketch, "Joy," in G major, is the longest and best of the three. The transition to the dominant is easy and effortless. The episode in A major (page 8) involves a melodious cantabile subject, accompanied with great taste and cleverness, while the resumption of the first motivo is well managed, and the coda brings the whole to a close with great brilliancy. Our only objection to this sketch is that which always applies to redundancy. There are too many repetitions, and too much of the alternate tonic and dominant form of passage.

We have spoken thus frankly of these sketches, because they display, not only a talent far beyond the average, but decided promise of better things. Had we told Master Baumer that his composition was faultless, we should have been untrue to our office and unkind to him. One who can write already so well, at so early a stage of his career, will not be offended by honest counsel; but if, on consideration, he believe it good, will employ it to his profit and advantage. Mr. Baumer is a pupil of Mr. William Dorrell and Mr. Lovell Phillips, and is a decided credit to both his masters.

"THE SCORPION," Song.—Words by E. FARMER, Music by G. SIMPSON. Ransford.

This ballad, which has attracted considerable attention in the provinces, through the singing of Mr. R. Paget, of Atherstone, is essentially remarkable for the qualities that ensure popularity and command encores—a flowing melody, easily retained, and addressed to the general ear. The accompaniment is easy to play, but effective and appropriate. Mr. Simpson's song does not aim at anything higher than an agreeable medium of display for a concert singer, ambitious of producing that particular impression which cannot be better described than as the "ad captandum." In this he has been perfectly successful. At the same time, it is our duty to state, that this song is written with irreproachable correctness, and is happily adapted to the great majority of voices. It has every chance of popularity, and will doubtless be shortly laid hold of by some of our public singers. They might go further and fare worse.

"THE QUEEN OF NIGHT."—Valse.—J. G. CALLCOTT. Cramer, Beale and Co.

The qualities which we noted last week in Mr. J. G. Callcott's "Indispensable Polka," are not less conspicuous in the set of *valse*s before us, which, if liveliness go for anything, had been more appropriately designated "The Queen of Day Valse," than "The Queen of Night Valse." In the actual style of "Valse," invented and multiplied by Lanner, Strauss, Labitsky, and last, not least, Jullien, "The Queen of Night" is composed of a short introduction, four figures and a coda, in which last, the conglomerate themes are dished up, with sauce à la remplissage, as it were an olla podrida. The general effect of the whole is brilliant and band-like; Mr. Callcott having cleverly given to his key board the effect of fullness and brass which appertains to a "harmonic," or wind orchestra. At the same time we may insinuate to our lady readers who exult in "Valse à deux," and in "Valse à trois," that the "Queen of Night" is easy to catch hold of, and though she wear a veil and wings, is not likely to slip through their fingers. Of the four figures, while all are rhythmical and bustling, we prefer the first, which involves an effective adaptation of the military accent; and the second, which, so to speak, is an idealization of the musical snuff-box style, until the bold and happy transition to E flat, in the second part, suddenly changes its character, and ensures a variety of color, without injury to the general effect. The theme of the first is admirably suited to a cornet-a-piston, in A natural, which, of course, would play in F; and we find that Mr. J. G. Callcott has judiciously added an independent and well written part for that instrument, which renders the "Queen of Night" simultaneously approachable by a lady pianist and gentleman cornetist. For which pleasant co-execution, we heartily recommend it.

"SIX MELODIES."—(Lieder ohne Worte)—For Flute and Piano. B. MOLIQUE. Transcribed by JOHN CLINTON. Wessel and Co.

Mr. Clinton has selected six of the most charming songs from the many gems with which Herr Molique has enriched the repertoire of vocal chamber music, and has arranged them with a conscientious respect for his author; preserving both the melody and accompaniments, notatim according to the text, and in most cases even retaining the original keys. When Mr. Clinton has altered the keys, the transposition has been inevitable from the peculiar nature of the flute, which cannot adapt itself so readily to varieties of pitch as the pianoforte or violin. The mere catalogue of the songs selected by Mr. Clinton will conjure up a world of agreeable reminiscences. A more captivating lyric, in the ballad form, than "If o'er the boundless sky," (No. 1) has rarely been given to the public; but, apart from its irresistible prettiness, the finished neatness of its accompaniment and its recherché harmonies and modulations display the hand of a master. The great popularity of this song confers equal credit upon our concert singers, the majority of whom have introduced it, and upon the public who have so unanimously appreciated it. Mr. Clinton has transcribed this song in the author's key, B flat. No. 2, "Fair Annie," is another cheerful inspiration, of a less romantic character, though, perhaps, more directly appealing to the popular ear. For what reason we are unable to guess, this animated little song has not received the same degree of attention from our concert singers as the preceding, though we cannot imagine it being well sung without obtaining an encore. Mr. Clinton has transposed "Fair Annie" from E to F to suit his instrument, the amateurs of which will easily apprehend his reasons. Nos. 3 and 4—"When the moon is brightly shining," and "Come, all ye glad and free," (Schifferlied) respectively in A and G, the original keys being preserved, are of essentially a different character from the preceding; their specialty being tranquil grace, their melodies flowing and transparent as deep, untroubled streams, their accompaniments richly varied, and distinguished by exquisite taste and finish. If a preference may be made, where all is so well deserving of admiration, we should suggest that these two songs are more entirely suited to the character and capabilities of the flute than any of the others. No 5, "Come, dearest, come," the words of which are translated from a German lyric by Prince Albert, may be classed in many respects with the preceding, the melody being of the same elegant and flowing character, although the accompaniments are more elaborate and difficult, while the modulations are more abundant and recherché. To perform them with effect demands a refinement both of expression and execution which not every flautist possesses, but which he who does possess may use to manifest advantage in the present instance. The original key, A, has again been preserved: No. 6, "O that my woes were distant," is far different from all the preceding, being essentially passionate and romantic. Miss Dolby, however, and other eminent singers, have made the musical public so familiar with the beauties and prominent features of this exquisite song, that any further description of it is unnecessary. Suffice it to add that Mr. Clinton has been again compelled to transpose the key from F sharp to F minor, not to D flat, as the title-page indicates.

In the transcription of these songs Mr. Clinton has displayed taste, discrimination, and love for his author—indeed, the only qualities demanded for his task—in no ordinary degree; and it is creditable to him, that, though one of our most brilliant flautists, he has carefully avoided all attempt to display the mechanical properties of his instrument, at the expense of the expressive simplicity of Herr Molique's beautiful songs. We can, therefore, recommend his arrangement unconditionally.

"THE MUSICAL BIJOU FOR 1861." Edited by F. H. BURNBY.
D'Almaine and Co.

The Musical Bijou for the present year, if not so glittering and splendid in point of decoration as some of its predecessors, is strikingly handsome, and contains some very superior designs by eminent artists. The illustrations consist of the Covers, the Title, and Border, the Presentation Plate, the Minstrel Knight, the Battles of Wellington, and a portrait of Mr. Sims Reeves. The Covers are achieved in white, gold, and black and brown colours. The front cover represents a framework of intertwining branches and leaves, with two female figures at each side, illustrative of the musical art, enclosing a space for the title. The back cover is but a skeleton of the first, the gold and dark colours being absent. The frontispiece, the "Minstrel Knight," is drawn on stone by E. Walker, and is tolerably well designed, but the execution is faulty.

The title and border are exceedingly beautiful. They are very cleverly designed. The introduced figures in the border are drawn with much propriety and taste. Gold and black are the only colours used in this illustration. The Presentation Plate is by far the neatest we have seen in a work of this kind. A raised framework in imitation of lace, entirely devoid of colour, surrounds a large "TO" in gold fancy work, neatly executed. This has a particularly chaste and pleasing effect. Contrary to custom, the Musical Bijou dispenses this year with an embroidered Contents. We do not think the supporters of the work have lost anything thereby. We have heard it laid to the charge of former numbers of the Musical Bijou that the old English letters employed in the contents rendered them perfectly useless, except to those versed in antiquarian type. The portrait of Mr. Sims Reeves is a most striking and admirable likeness, by Baugniet, and should really entitle the volume to the strong recommendation of the public, had it no other merit. The expression of the countenance is caught with singular force and precision. "The Battles of the Duke of Wellington," illustrative of the "Wellington Marches," composed by Stephen Glover, is well designed and coloured. The centre-piece consists of a group of warriors on horseback, the Duke being the most prominent figure. Surrounding the group are miniature representations of the battles of Vittoria, Badajoz, Assaye, Ciudad Rodrigo, Salamanca, and Waterloo. The whole is surmounted by a pair of regimental colours, and the pedestal supported by figures of the Foot Guards, Line, Highland, and Rifle regiments. It has been lithographed by E. Walker, the artist already mentioned.

The contents of the "Musical Bijou" include various names well known to the public. The vocal portion has been contributed by Miss Ann S. Mounsey, Mrs. Mackinlay, Alexander Lee, G. H. Rodwell, J. H. Cave, W. H. Holmes, Stephen Glover, J. L. Hatton, C. F. Desanges, Edwin Flood, and Guilie Alary. The poets who have volunteered, or whose lyrics have been borrowed for the nonce, are W. Bartholomew, S. Bruton, W. Beattie, E. J. Gill, Mrs. Mackinlay, M. Abrahams, Kirk White, A. M. Samuda, Lord Byron, and Herrick. This division contains nineteen morceaux.

The instrumental department is not so diversified. The contributions are confined to Stephen Glover, Ricardo Linter, M. Szekely, J. M. Jolly, and Wellington Guernsey. The first has supplied six, and the second five pieces, out of fourteen. Marches, quadrilles, polkas, and waltzes make up the quantity of the instrumental contents.

Altogether, the "Musical Bijou" is a very elegant and desirable drawing-room book, and as such will not disappoint the purchaser.

"JULLIEN'S ALBUM FOR 1861." Edited by THOMAS BAKER.
Jullien and Co.

If Jullien's Album this year be less gorgeous in its covers, less resplendent with blazony, and gold, and barbaric colours than its predecessors of by-gone seasons, the contents make ample amends, even to those who attach importance to the rich varieties of the modern decorative art. The covers are plain to a degree, certainly not to a fault. The interior title-page is very neat. Scrolls of raised flowers on a pink ground, from lithographs of M. and N. Hanhart, enclose the name and date: all other ornament is discarded. Jullien's autograph, no small recommendation to the admirers of the celebrated conductor, is affixed. Two rich portraits of Jenny Lind and Jetty Treffz, in oil colours and gold, by G. Baxter, are given before the Presentation Page. They are both beautifully done, although a certain pinkness of haze thrown over the pictures, deteriorates greatly from the effect. Jenny Lind's likeness is not particularly good; nor does the somewhat stunted figure afford a happy idea of the thin and elastic Swede. Jetty Treffz's is a better picture, and a better likeness in every respect. The face is not an exact resemblance, nor has the draughtsman caught with much truth the character of the head, but the general appearance is sufficiently striking to suggest the similitude. The figure is admirably done, and the attitude is graceful and correct. We acknowledge the great difficulty in obtaining an exact likeness by the means used by Mr. Baxter, and therefore our praise is due.

to him for having done in so skilful a manner that which is so very difficult to do. Nevertheless, we see but little probability of this peculiar branch of the "taking art" ever being brought to any thing like perfection. Mr. Baxter, we understand, has taken out a patent for printing in oil colours after this fashion. If this be the case, we trust that for the future, when he does affect likenesses, he will not render them subservient to the decorations.

The Presentation Page is exceedingly chaste and beautiful, and is painted on stone by the Messrs. Hanhart in raw sienna. The illustrations in the body of the work are two; one to the song, "Rose de Mai," the other to the ballad, "One smile of thine." The first is a picture of two young ladies; the last a picture of one young lady. Both are well executed in lithograph; but as we do not exactly see what the pictures of the young ladies have to say to the songs, or in what manner they explain them, we shall pass them by without further notice.

The contents of the volume ask little more for their recommendation than the mere chronicling. And first of the vocal section. The songs and duets are seventeen in number. They include among the composers the names of Balfe, G. A. Macfarren, E. Loder, John Barnett, Henry Smart, H. Lavenue, Roch-Albert, G. Stanley, T. Baker, Walter Maynard, A. M. R. Barret, G. Barker, Angelina and George Linley. The poets are H. J. St. Leger, G. V. Irving, E. J. Gill, G. Barker, Shirley Brooks, George Linley, Miss Rollo, J. W. Lake, Colonel Addison, and Desmond Ryan. The names of some of these speak for themselves. The musicians have a decided advantage over the poets. The pianoforte department is rich in gems of Jullien, there being no less than six of his compositions out of fourteen pieces. Among these we find the "Hungarian," the "Charles the Second," the "Hibernian," and the "Nepaulese" quadrilles; the "Derby Galop," and the "Ghoorka March." The other composers are Osborne, König, Fitzgerald, Vogler, Buller, and Lavenue. Their efforts comprise fantasias, waltzes, polkas, and galops.

BALFE'S CONCERT.

A very large concourse assembled at Exeter Hall on the evening of Monday week, attracted by the announcement that Balfe, the popular and the talented, would take his benefit. That Balfe would provide good entertainment for his supporters, was universally anticipated; and was, to a certain extent, corroborated by the names of Ernst, Angri, Sims Reeves, Mrs. Sims Reeves, Billet, and others of note, established or promissory, being appended to his list. And yet was not Balfe's programme all that it should have been. It is true that a numerous and efficient corps of instrumentalists were engaged, and that the soloists were unexceptionable; but the matter, sir, ay, the matter was not the thing looked for, or to be coveted, when Balfe gave a concert, and had such interpreters at his command. But we must not be too severe with the vivacious and versatile composer. Little doubt but that he knows the peculiar taste of John Bull, and supplies him with food to suit his palate. Yet Balfe, we think, might have had an ulterior object in view, besides pandering to the bilious appetites of the mob; and yet, again, unless he had done so, he, perhaps, instead of a "benefit," might have had a "malefit." In short, while finding fault with Balfe as a conscientious artist, we must award him credit as a politic man; and so, like Mahomet's coffin, between heaven and earth, he stands suspended midway between our praise and dispraise—laus et vituperium.

The programme, for the most part, was composed of a string of morceaux, Italian, and English, stale as a nine days' herring, and threadbare as an Irish reaper's wrap-rascal. Of these, we shall say nought, saving that, being interpreted by such artists as Mr. and Mrs. Sims Reeves, Mademoiselle Angri, and Miss Poole, they were treated better than they deserved. A new song, by Mr. Frank Mori, called "Come where sweet-toned Zephyrs," and another by Balfe, entitled "Old Friends," pleased us much. Being good, as well as new, these constituted an exception to nearly all the vocal music. It must be admitted, that the audience were as enthusiastic as ever about Mr. Sims Reeves' "Death of Nelson," and the ballad about "other lips," from the Bohemian

Girl, together with popularities, duetto and solo, from Donizetti, and elsewhere; but, we contend, Mr. Balfe might have done better on such an occasion, and should have looked larger in the eyes of the musical world. Whatever faults we may have found with the vocal section of the entertainment, we discover little or nothing in the instrumental department to cavil at. Ernst played two fantasias, the Otello, and the Airs Hongrois (both magnificently: for the last, he supplied his Carnaval); M. Alexandre Billet performed Mendelssohn's Rondo Brillant in E for pianoforte and orchestra, and the Wedding March from A Midsummer Night's Dream (receiving great applause in both); and the band executed Balfe's overture to Falstaff, and Lindpaintner's "Battle Overture." What may be termed emphatically the novelty of the evening, was Mademoiselle Lucciola, who has come to London from Italy to astonish the natives. The fair artist has been styled "the celebrated female tenor"—to what purpose, we are at a loss to guess. "Celebrated" she may be in her own country; "female" she most probably is in any country; but wherefore "tenor" in this, or any country, puzzles us beyond measure. Mademoiselle Lucciola certainly has a deep contralto voice, but not deeper than that of Miss Masson, Miss H. B. Hawes, Mademoiselle Brambilla, and others, whom we never heard designated by any other name than that of contralto—and she has some notes which might be considered falsetto notes, but the quality is unlike that of a tenor, and the timbre is decidedly that of a woman. Despite of puffs, and partizanship, and the expectant novelty, Mademoiselle Lucciola did not create a favourable impression. An attempt to sing Mario's Bacchanalian song from the Prophete, was the reverse of successful; although some strenuous supporters of the "female tenor" did, with night and main, endeavour to enforce a repetition of her attempt upon the audience. In addition to what we have already named, Madame and Signor F. Lablache sang several times, and obtained encores; and Mr. Gerhard Taylor performed a harp solo. Mr. Frank Mori attended at the piano, and Mr. Balfe directed the orchestra.

Dramatic Intelligence.

HAYMARKET.—MACREADY'S LAST PERFORMANCE.—Monday night was a memorable night at the Haymarket, and will remain so for ever in the annals of that theatre. The scene which occurred there can only be met with once in half a century; and he who had the fortune to be present, will carry to his latest hour the remembrance of one of the most stirring and interesting incidents in his life. The immense crowds which assembled at the Haymarket Theatre, during the last few weeks of Mr. Macready's final engagement, increasing every night until the last week, when the house was crammed to suffocation at each performance of the great tragedian, gave indication of what would be the state of things on Monday when his last appearance was announced for King Lear, his most transcendent personation.

For two months previously every available seat in the house was taken, and for nearly three hours before the doors were opened the boxes, pit, and gallery entrances were besieged by multitudes. Every precaution had been taken to guard against accidents and inconveniences, and so admirably provided were the arrangements under the direction of Mr. Manby, that not a single disturbance took place during the evening, nor was there a moment's interruption given to the performance, although every part of the theatre was packed, and hundreds were forced to put up with standing room in the pit and upper boxes. Many were satisfied if they could only obtain an occasional glimpse of the stage; the orchestra was converted into stalls, and the band officiated for a part of the evening on the stage.

The demonstration which took place when Mr. Macready appeared as the old King, may be surmised, provided the reader be endowed with no mean share of imagination.

Cheer followed cheer in rapid succession, and rose and fell like a tornado near the Cape of Hope, or the simoom in the desert of Sahara. The actor appeared somewhat overpowered at first, and seemed to express his deep feeling by a slight pressure of his palms together, and a gentle inclination of the head, but he soon recovered his entire self-possession, and went through his performance with all his wonted power and energy. We shall not attempt to describe the scene which followed the termination of the play. One thing struck us as particularly applicable to the circumstance and occasion, and implied a greater compliment than any amount of ebullition or enthusiasm. The scene of the death was listened and attended to with breathless interest, and when Lear expired there was no attempt, as on former occasions, to get up an instantaneous and vehement display. The sympathies of the audience were wound up beyond the usual point. Attention and reverence held them mute. When the old King fell dead from Cordelia's arms and Kent cried, ;

"Vex not his ghost,
He knows him not, who on the rack
Of this vile world would stretch him out further ;—"

and the band played the dead march behind the scenes, you might have heard a pin drop, so intense was the silence. Nor was this deep silence broken as long as the curtain continued to descend, which must have occupied the space of two minutes at least, until it touched the boards of the stage. Then indeed, the pent-up volume burst forth, and the storm raged with re-invigorated fury. Mr. Macready came on and every individual in the house rose to greet him. Upon his retiring the tempest, lulled for a moment, again broke forth, and amid the roar Macready's name was heard at intervals shouted from all parts of the theatre. Again the great actor appeared, and this time it was expected he would address the audience. Silence was bawled out lustily by every one, and instantaneously obeyed. Mr. Macready then advanced a few paces towards the foot-lights, and in a few words, delivered in a tone of voice the most musical we ever heard, and with an intensity of feeling that penetrated the hearts of all present, he expressed his thanks to his "true patrons" for the warmth of their reception : told them he stood, indeed, on the verge of his theatrical career, that one night more, and then he would depart from them ; and that to that last night he would refer his brief expressions of regret and gratitude before bidding them farewell for ever. The cheering was then renewed, and throats were opened wider than before, and palms met together in harder clap ; and hats and kerchiefs were wilder flung about, and all things were made more extravagant ; and so, with dignified step, and bending head, and intertwining fingers, and would-be-lingering looks, KING LEAR departed from the scene of his glories for ever and ever.

On Tuesday, after the comedy of She Stoops to Conquer, a new farce in one act, entitled Good for Nothing, was produced. It is from the pen of Mr. Buckstone, and promises to become one of the most popular of his small pieces. Indeed, we have seldom seen a farce with so decided a moral tacked to it, or one in which the intention has been more legitimately carried out. The plot runs thus :—Two brothers, the one a railway fireman, the other a market gardener, residing together, have brought up a poor orphan thrown on their hands by fortune. Poor Nan is allowed to run at large and do as she pleases ; the consequence is, she becomes a regular tom-boy, a ne'er-do-well, or, as the title of the farce pronounces her, a "Good for Nothing." She idles all day, plays with the boys in the street at "hop-sotch," "trundle-hoop," "string-peg," and, no, not "leap-frog" and always gets into some scrape or other. The brothers, occupied with their own affairs, pay Nan little or no attention ; and what service they might do her is interrupted by disputes among themselves as to how she should be treated. Harry, the fireman, contends for the application of moral force ; but Tom, the gardener, will listen to nothing but conciliatory measures and the soothing system. Between the physics of the one and the ethics of the other, Nan's education in every respect is brought to a stand still, and she herself is little better than an infant out of swaddling clothes. Nan's ideas are not of the most refined. Such domestic matters as combing her hair, washing her hands, and other enforced requisites of society, are not held in absolute regard by Nan, who inclines to the normal state of nature. It is doubtful if Nan ever heard the maxim, "Cleanliness is godliness," or having heard it, that she ever paid it any attention. Love, at length—Love, time out of mind, the universal reformer of mankind, and every other kind—works a revolution in Nan. There is a certain carpenter (even Charley), who, amidst all Nan's unsophistication and normality, sees glimpses of sense and kindness, which lead him to entertain a hope that by a little stratagem she might be made sensible of her dusty ways, turn from them to the light, and behold truth with unblinking optics. The stratagem—one worthy of a more exalted sphere of life than that in which moved the honest carpenter—is put in force and takes effect ; Nan sets to her proper reformation with hearty will ; turns herself out as agreeable and good looking as possible to the eye of the carpenter, who wins her in the end to the promise of teaching her the rudiments of reading and writing—a happy prologue to the connubial theme—and so Nan is dismissed at the end with the growing respect of the audience. There are several points in Nan's history, all tending to the development of her character, which Mr. Buckstone has seized with much truth and forcibleness, and without which a certain repulsiveness would be felt. Thus, Nan's good nature is abundantly testified in her refunding the money, scraped together by the brothers to bind her apprentice to some profession, when they were unable to pay their rent ; the soundness of her sense is manifested clearly and unmistakably in reconciling the brothers when they quarrelled ; and the quickness of her intelligence becomes apparent in drawing her inference from the hints of the carpenter (even Charley), and applying them with so much readiness. With a little more colouring, and a little more particularization with respect to the details, Nan as a sketch, would have proved worthy of Dickens, and we do not think we could have paid Mr. Buckstone a higher compliment. But the rapidity of action necessitated in a one-act piece precludes minutiae of details, and the author is compelled to jump at conclusions ; for which reason we are bound not to find fault with Mr. Buckstone if a small tinge of over-coloring be given to his picture. This praise, however, we can bestow upon Nan, that she is the best and most truthful character we have witnessed in a farce, for a very long time. Mr. Buckstone, as brother Tom, had little more to do than to preach peace, and fly into a passion with every sentence ; nevertheless, he did wonders with his part, and was irresistibly droll ; when he came on with his garden garniture all covered with mud, and a huge head of cabbage in his hand, he was received with shouts of laughter. Mr. Howe played brother Harry, in a very bluff and mechanical manner. Upon Mrs. Fitzwilliam's shoulders fell the entire weight of the piece. The part of Nan was performed by her with excellent comic force, every shade and peculiarity of the character being caught with much truth. Mrs. Fitzwilliam has not been seen in any part for a long time which exhibits the correctness and versatility of her talent to so much advantage.

At the fall of the curtain, an unmistakeable and unanimous success was betokened in the general cheers of the audience, and a loud call was made for Mr. Buckstone and Mrs. Fitzwilliam, who accordingly came on, and were received tumultuously. Mr. Buckstone then announced the repetition of Good for Nothing, for every evening until further notice.

On Thursday a new two act comedy, by the author (as it was announced) of The Vicar of Wakefield—not Oliver Goldsmith we presume, but Mr. Stirling Coyne—entitled Presented at Court, was produced with unequivocal success. The story belongs to the gallant times of Charles the Second, and among the persons of the drama we find Rochester, Sydney, Etheredge, Secretary Pepys, Killigrew, and other flauters in the court beams of the day. The plot is as follows:—

Mistress Anne Franklyn (Miss Reynolds), is the daughter of a rich mercer in the city, whose beauty and fortune has attracted a host of adorers. Among her ardent and most pertinacious admirers she reckons the Earl of Rochester (Mr. Davenport), Mr. Secretary Pepys (Mr. Lambert), and the Marquis of Flamareus (Mr. Selby), an old French émigré, who had been a perruquier in his youth. To none of these gallants does Mistress Anne render more than her sweet looks and silver tongue. For simple Captain Montague (Mr. Howe), does she reserve the devotedness of a true heart; but Mistress Anne is ambitious and would fain be presented at court. She is the more impelled to this to do spite to Lady Castlemaine and other flatterers round the throne, who look upon her as an upstart, and are driven frantic with jealousy when the king's admiration is turned towards her. But obstacles intervene to the presentation, the most difficult of which is the finding a lady of rank to present her. At last old Lady Trumpington (Mrs. Stanley), an ancient friend of the Franklyn, is raked up in Devonshire and brought to town for the purpose. The court ladies, aided by Rochester, lay a plot to defeat Anne's presentation. The court dress she has made is stolen, the coachmaker and perruquier are bribed, and old Lady Trumpington run away with. The last named incident is effected thus:—Lady Trumpington is accompanied from the country by her nephew, Master Geoffrey Wedderburne (Mr. Buckstone), a loose rustic. Rochester, disguised as a countryman, calls on Geoffrey, passes himself off as the friend of an acquaintance, makes him drunk and locks him up in a closet. The road being now clear, he meets Lady Trumpington, feigns to be an envoy from the Emperor of Russia, and, by some roundabout rhodomontade, which touches the old dowager's weak points, persuades her that the peace of Europe depends on her intervention, and carries her off in a sedan to the Turkish Ambassador. The conspirators now make sure of having foiled Anne and are in high glee. The first act ends here.

The second act opens at the house of Mrs. Anne Franklyn. The young lady is in despair. Lord Rochester enters and offers to recover her carriage, dress, perruquier, and bring back Lady Trumpington, provided she grants him her love. The dress, he informs her, is below at the door in a sedan. Though offended, the lady refrains from expressing her indignation, anxious to hit upon some plan by which she might conciliate the gallant lord without compromising herself. While she is pondering, the French Marquis is announced, and Rochester is allowed to conceal himself in a closet. Anne's servant, Mildred, then suggests the possibility of inducing the Marquis to dress her hair. What a triumph for Anne to have her coiffure made by a Marquis! After a little finesse, the Marquis is carried off to officiate as perruquier to the lady, but not before the bandbox containing the court dress is recovered from the sedan, by the aid of Geoffrey. Thus two objects are secured towards the accomplishment of the presentation. But two more remain: the procuring a carriage, and the recovery of Lady Trumpington, or finding a substitute for a patroness. Fortune favors the fair, no less than the brave. Mr. Secretary Pepys arrives in his state coach to pay Anne a visit. Mildred engages him, and induces him to write a note to his coachman placing his carriage at her disposal. She then stows him away in another closet to await her mistress. All is in good train—but Lady Trumpington is not forthcoming. An idea strikes Geoffrey—he attires himself as his Aunt, and carries off the fair Anne to Court, and so the presentation is effected, but not without a little farcical manœuvring, in which the real Lady Trumpington appears in the Presence Chamber, and the false one is carried off as a madman.

This piece is well written. The dialogue is neat and pointed, and occasionally flavoured with the sauce piquant of right courtly wit. The characters are well contrasted, and drawn with spirit. The story is well developed, until towards the end, when the interest flags, and the tone partakes of the broad farce. Were it not for these exceptions, Presented at Court, would be irreproachable. The acting was good. Buckstone was inimitable in Geoffrey. His drunken scene was uproariously comic, and made the audience scream with laughter. Mr. Davenport sustained the part of Rochester with becoming dignity and ease, and Miss Reynolds made a very pretty and highly agreeable City Madam, and supported the interests of the ladies of the Corporation with native grace and propriety.

The dresses for the most part were appropriate, but attention was not always paid to the customs of the period. Why did Miss Reynolds wear her hair after the modern fashion? and why did some of the gentlemen wear perriwigs, and others none? Also, why were the same costumes of the gentlemen worn on the Mall and at Court? and why did Mr. Howe wear his hat on in the drawing room, in presence of a lady? We pause for a reply!

Provincial

DUBLIN.—(From our own Correspondent.)—I informed you in my last of the arrival in Dublin of Jullien, accompanied by his excellent orchestra, the charming Jetty Treffz, Vivier, the horn-wonder, and lastly, and by no means the quietest portion of the troupe, the French drummers. Of the many and welcome visits of Mons. Jullien, none, I should think, have been more, if so successful as the present. The Rotunda has been crowded, and hundreds have nightly sought in vain for admission. The programmes have been varied on each night of the performance, and have introduced the soloists who produced so lively a sensation at the concerts in Drury-lane, during the months of November and December. Mons. Jullien deserves unlimited credit for his spirit in securing the services of so many artists of undoubted talent. The bands which, in nearly every instance, have been engaged for tournées in England, have been made up of materials which could not bear a close examination, generally being a kind of stage scene, which required stage light, in the shape of a "star." The consequence was, that the performances were tedious, and seldom remunerative to the speculator. Mons. Jullien has reformed this: his troupe is composed of artists, of London and European fame. His band comprises the most eminent orchestral performers in London, amongst whom may be mentioned Messrs. Lavigne, Pratten, König, Jarrett, Cioffi, Collinet, Somers, Baker, Doyle, Bezeth, V. Collins, L. Collins, Sonnenberg, Kliegel, Winterbottom, Band, &c. &c. The ensemble produced by such a combination of talent is naturally very fine; in fact, it is worth buying a concert ticket, if only to hear one movement of a symphony. It is the only opportunity we have of hearing many points in those great works given with delicacy and precision, which can alone be effected by performers possessing great mechanical skill and long experience.

All—nearly all—the artists I have mentioned have played solos during the series of concerts, and have met with great and deserved success. I would particularly mention the performances of M. Lavigne on the oboe, and those of Mr. Winterbottom on the bassoon. It was the first opportunity we had of hearing M. Lavigne in Dublin. He has an extraordinary command of his instrument; his tone is remarkably pure, and his taste unexceptionable. He played two solos, and was encored in both. Mr. Winterbottom is a great acquisition to our instrumentalists in this country. The bassoon being an instrument so rarely studied with success, it is rare to meet with a performer who has any pretension above mediocrity. Mr. Winterbottom, though evidently a very young man, has already accomplished much towards obtaining a distinguished position. He has a beautiful tone, wide compass, and plays invariably in tune. With perseverance he is sure of success. Mr. Viotti Collins (violin) was loudly applauded and encored for his clever playing in the Carnaval de Venise. Signor Cioffi obtained a similar compliment for his admirable performance on the trombone.

Madlle. Jetty Treffz has been received with the greatest enthusiasm. She has been in first-rate voice during her visit. At the concert given for her benefit, which was filled to overflowing, she sang Mozart's "Vedrai carino" deliciously, and was unanimously encored; and in the second act she gave some Irish melodies, which quite enchanted the audience. I think her voice is more powerful than it was last season, without having lost any of its sweetness. A residence in our generally condemned climate appears to agree with the fair artiste. I hope she will make up her mind to stay amongst us. She is a universal favourite, and will command admiration and respect wherever she may go.

I have not yet mentioned the performance of M. Vivier. We have made several attempts to induce M. Vivier to visit us, but hitherto without success. The honour of introducing him to an Irish public was reserved for M. Jullien. Our curiosity was great to hear and see him, having heard so much mention of his talents as a musician, philosopher, and homme d'esprit. Of the two latter I have had no opportunity to judge, not having any personal acquaintance with M. Vivier (although his intelligent physiognomy leaves me no doubt in the matter); but of his performance on the French horn I can answer; and I agree with all who had an opportunity of hearing him, that he is one of the most finished and impressive performers I have ever heard on any instrument. He is sure of every thing he attempts—by no means a common occurrence with performers on the horn—and his tone is magnificent. He is a first-rate singer on his instrument, which in his hands may be called a horn of many notes—a horn of plenty for M. Jullien, since it attracts crowds nightly, to hear the two or three, and I know not how many more notes produced simultaneously. M. Vivier's new effects are no less wonderful than pleasing; but independent of these he is a great performer on his instrument. His success has been immense. The French Drummers have created quite a furor.

A Review (in honor of these warlike visitors) of all the regiments stationed in Dublin took place on Thursday last. The British soldiers seemed to enjoy the scene. They were mightily amused with the Tambour Majeur, who had decorated his person with all the colors of the rainbow, and walked at the head of his "corps" with the authority and pomposity of a huge turkey-cock strutting at the head of a brood. He is a most amusing personage, and appears to attach no slight importance to the functions of tambour-major. He formed a strong contrast to the business-like manner and quiet demeanor of the British drum-major. However, the French and English soldiers appear to entertain a high respect for each other, which, aided by an excellent dinner, provided by the town-major and the officers of the different regiments, ripened into a positive attachment. M. Jullien and his orchestra were also invited to lunch with the officers. It is an unusual thing to meet French and English soldiers, arm-in-arm; but here, when you meet a French soldier, he is sure to be accompanied by some of his ancient rivals. Of the performances of the French drummers so much has been said, and so many have been to hear them, that it would be superfluous to compliment them further. Their style of performance was new to us, and as introduced by M. Jullien in the Exhibition Quadrille, exceedingly effective. During the series of concerts we have had movements from the symphonies of Haydn, Beethoven, and Mendelssohn; selections from "Robert," "Le Prophete," "Les Huguenots," and "Norma;" the Exhibition Quadrille, waltzes, polkas, &c., &c., by Jullien and Kœnig. On dit, Jullien intends to visit America, and that the present is to be his last visit but one. We shall all regret the discontinuance of his annual visits; he has done a great deal towards improving and directing the taste of the public; his concerts have served as a neutral ground for amateurs of the most opposite tastes. Every one has found something to his fancy. We shall really miss him when he leaves us.

The concert for the benefit of M. Jullien, and the last of the present series, was the fullest of all.—I understand that he has been very successful in Cork and Limerick. I will write again as soon as anything musical occurs.

LIVERPOOL.—(From our own Correspondent.)—I shall commence my communication this week with the following article, abridged from the Courier, concerning the Liverpool Welsh Choral Society:—"This society gave its eighth public performance in the lecture-hall of the Mechanics' Institution, on Wednesday last. The audience was numerous and respectable, though not so large as on a former occasion. Mr. W. Thomas conducted, and Mr. W. B. Rogers presided at the organ, the principal vocalists being Miss Williams, Mrs. Morris, Messrs. Morris, Roberts, E. Jones, and Pierce. The first part consisted of selections from Handel's Judas Maccabeus, and the second part of a miscellaneous selection of sacred music, with Welsh words. Miss Williams possesses an excellent organ, and read her part very correctly. The air, "From mighty kings," she sang exceedingly well, and deserved the hearty encore she received. Mr. Pierce sang nearly all the portions assigned to him very efficiently. With due attention, proper training, and practice, he will soon take his place as one of our best local bass singers: The society is fortunate in having the services of Mr. Rogers, whose performances were warmly applauded. Too much praise cannot be given to Mr. Thomas for the great improvement he has effected during the short time he has been conductor, and if the same perseverance be displayed during the next year, we may expect this society to rank as one of our best."

Mrs. E. Kemble commenced a series of readings from Shakespeare on Wednesday week, at the Philharmonic Hall, on which occasion she read the Midsummer Night's Dream, before a small but delighted audience. On Friday she selected Romeo and Juliet. The applause, as on the previous occasion, was incessant and spontaneous—an honour well merited by the talents of Mrs. Kemble. On Wednesday that most sparkling and delightful of comedies, Much Ado about Nothing, was the play chosen for the reading. The versatility of Mrs. Kemble was again conspicuous; the war of words between Benedick and Beatrice were given with much unction, while the stolid pomposity and senility of Dogberry and Verges were most truthfully hit off. The reading of the scenes in which these two worthies appear, created roars of laughter. The more poetical and serious portions were delivered with graceful and expressive feeling.

At our Amphitheatre the monotony of the scenes in the circle have been relieved by a grand military spectacle, entitled Napoleon, in which M. Bastien Franconi personates the Emperor with a truthfulness that would make Gomersall die with envy. In addition, the artistes, assisted by some of the privates of the 91st Regiment, were dressed in the veritable uniforms worn by Napoleon's Generals and the Imperial Guard. The effect was highly pleasing and novel. There was no dramatic representation, but a series of graphic tableaux, which advantageously displayed the peculiar excellencies of the troupe, and elicited loud applause. The scenes in the circle presented no novelty, though the astounding performances of M. Maus on the slack-wire created the usual astonishment—a more wonderful performance we never witnessed; and, like George the Third when he saw the apple in the dumpling, we cannot discover how it is done. The eleventh morning performance took place on Wednesday, before a fashionable audience.

At the Theatre Royal the pantomime terminates its successful career next week, the last performance taking place on the 15th instant. On Monday evening Mr. Hackett, of American celebrity, will appear as Falstaff, and during his engagement, in several Yankee farces.

Speaking of the forthcoming Philharmonic Concert, the Times says, "The first subscription concert for the season takes place on Tuesday next, and, if the talent engaged is a criterion of what is to follow, we may congratulate the music-loving public on the fact that the forthcoming season will be one of the most brilliant that has taken place in Liverpool. Madlle. Angri is the only contralto living who can stand the test of greatness after Alboni. As a singer of English ballads and the florid bravuras of Rossini, she holds a higher position than any foreign vocalist who has lately sung in English. Of Madlle. Graumann we know but little, though we have seen her name favourably mentioned by our contemporaries. M. Jules Stockhausen has already become a favourite, and Signor S. Tamburini gives promise of excellence. Of the instrumentalists, it is sufficient to say that Ernst is the greatest of living violinists, while Mr. F. Mori bears a name associated with musical attainments of the highest order. We trust that the chorus will this season be brought forward more prominently, and give us a little novelty; for instance, some of those massive concerted pieces from the Prophete, Huguenots, William Tell, Moisé, &c., which have nightly created such unwonted enthusiasm at the Royal Italian Opera. Such a step would, we feel certain, give universal satisfaction. Our choir is the best-voiced (if we may coin a word) in England, while their musical proficiency has been universally praised by the most critical and competent critics in the world."

I understand that Mr. Albert Smith, the wit, the novelist, the dramatist, and we know not how many other things, will shortly appear in his new entertainment, entitled, The Overland Mail, at the Philharmonic-hall. Wherever the all-talented Albert has appeared, he has been welcomed by overflowing audiences, and we advise those who love a hearty laugh, and instruction mingled with amusement, to go and hear the "Prince of Smiths" relate his adventures by sea and land.

We hear Mr. Thomas, leader of the Philharmonic band, has arranged to go to London, to assist his friend, Mr. Horsley, on the event of the performance of David, at Exeter Hall this month. It is a display of zeal we are glad of being able to record.

Messrs. Thomas and Haddock's fifth Chamber Concert will be held on the 1st instant. The programme is peculiarly attractive, and includes the posthumous quartet of Beethoven.

February 6, 1851.

J. H. N.

CLIFTON.—On Tuesday, the 28th ult., Mr. H. C. Cooper gave his annual concert at the Victoria Rooms. The programme was almost entirely composed of classical chamber music. The room was filled by an audience of little short of 400 persons. A local journal writes as follows:—"A more chaste and classical entertainment has seldom been heard in this city. The main features were selected from the instrumental writings of Mendelssohn, Beethoven, Spohr, and Molique, which were performed by Herr Molique and Mr. Cooper (violins), Mr. H. Hill, of her Majesty's private band (viola), and Mr. Scipio Rousselot, Director of the Beethoven Quartett Society (violinello). Herr Molique is a finished performer; his tone pure and silvery, his intonation faultless, and his style altogether suited to the interpretation of classical music. Mr. H. Hill is a master of his instrument, and, like Molique, depends for his effects upon legitimate expression. M. Rousselot's violinello playing is polished, and he seems quite at ease in the execution of the most complicated passages. With Mr. Cooper's powers our readers have been long since familiar. The concert commenced with a quartett on F, by Molique, classical in form, and sufficiently intricate to test the powers of the performers. The quartett was finely played, and the finale called forth repeated plaudits. Miss Owen followed in a ballad by Sterndale Bennett, "To Chloe in sickness." She is young, and possesses a contralto voice of limited compass, but of pleasing quality. She sang the ballad in question, and, in the second part, Mendelssohn's "Savoyard's song," slightly varied, to bring it within her register, with agreeable effect. The next performance was an andante and scherzo from a posthumous quartett, by Mendelssohn, in the best style of the master, original and striking; the simple melody of the andante gave prominence to the tenor part, and displayed to advantage the rich tone of Mr. Hill. The scherzo is singularly light and fanciful, and replete with passages which enabled the performers in turn to display their powers of delicate execution. The piece was effectively rendered, and an attempt was made to encore the scherzo, but it was not complied with. The first part closed with a duet concertante for two violins, played by Herr Molique and Mr. Cooper, which afforded a fine opportunity of estimating the merits of those eminent performers. Like most of the violin compositions of Spohr, it is full of difficulties, all the effects of expression and contrast of which the instrument is capable being brought into requisition. In the allegro, which was finely played, the tones of the two violins blended exquisitely. The theme adagio, full of tender and expressive melody, is given alternately to either instrument, while the other plays a pizzicato accompaniment. The finale presto, a masterly piece of writing, was played with great precision and spirit, and elicited repeated bursts of applause, and a call for repetition, which was, however, met with no better success than attended the previous encore. The second part opened with Beethoven's quartet in E flat, No. 10, op. 74, one of the finest compositions of its class, original, sparkling, fanciful, and grand, presenting effects which one would scarcely believe capable of being produced by so limited a number of instruments. The concert closed with another fine quartett in E minor, by the same master (No. 8, Rasamovsky), played with precision and regard to expression, which gave the utmost effect to every point. The concert finished at eleven o'clock, the audience being evidently gratified by the entertainment." The quartetts were led alternately by Herr Molique and Mr. Cooper.

GLOUCESTER.—Mr. J. W. Needham's Quartett Concert took place on Wednesday evening last, at the Shire-hall in this city; a great musical feast to those whose taste was sufficiently cultivated to appreciate the selection, which for the most part was of the highest order. The executants, Molique, Cooper, Hill, and Rousselot, rendered the pieces entrusted to them with the fullest effect. The quartetts were one of Molique's in F, op. 18; a posthumous quartett of Mendelssohn, op. 81; No. 10 in E flat, op. 74, and No. 8 in E minor, op. 59, of Beethoven; a duetto concertante for violins, No. 6 in D minor, by Spohr; a sonata by Beethoven for piano, and three songs. The duet for the violins was brilliantly executed by Molique and Cooper, and elicited much applause. The songs by Miss Owen were pleasingly sung. Whilst we admit the high character of the music selected, we think Mr. Needham miscalculated the capabilities of the audience. Musical taste requires much cultivation to appreciate such a selection. The two quartetts of Beethoven are of the most intricate and elaborate character, requiring a large acquaintance with them before they can be really enjoyed. There are many of his quartetts more simply constructed and more full of flowing melody, appreciable to ordinary ears. Again, why could not a place be found for one of the charming quartetts of Mozart or Haydn? We say this in good feeling towards Mr. Needham, for we consider that he deserves well of the inhabitants of the city and neighbourhood for the spirited attempt to introduce amongst us a character of music rarely enjoyed out of the metropolis; and it is because we fear the attempt on his part to "feed babes with strong meat" will nip in the bud a taste which he has been mainly instrumental in encouraging, that we throw out these remarks. The room was thinly attended, but the very unfavourable state of the weather, and other circumstances, contributed to keep many away. The musical pleasures of this city have been this week agreeably varied by the performance at the theatre on Monday night of Balfe's well-known opera of The Bohemian Girl. The musical corps consisted of Miss Rebecca Isaacs, Miss Honnor, Mr. Travers, Sig. Borroni, and Herr Kuchler. The opera is familiar to all lovers of stage music; and we need only say that it was, for a country theatre, in which such representations are entirely new, most creditably performed, and was well received by a crowded and fashionable house. Miss Isaacs sang, "I dreamt I dwelt in marble halls," and the other parts falling to her lot, with taste and effect. The vocalization of Borroni, of Travers, and Kuchler, was admirable.—Gloucester Journal.

WINDSOR.—The second concert of the Windsor and Eton Amateur Choral Society, for the season 1850-1, took place at the Town Hall, by permission of the Mayor, on Tuesday evening. The hall was crowded in every part. The principal vocalists were Miss Byers, Master Hardy, Mr. John Mitchell, Mr. S. Smith, Mr. Montem Smith, Mr. Marriott, Mr. Knowles, and Mr. Whitehouse. The instrumentalists consisted almost entirely of members of her Majesty's private band, and the band of the Royal Horse Guards (Blue). Dr. Elvey officiated as conductor, and Mr. E. Chipp as leader. The leading feature of the entertainment was the Cantata on the birthday of her Majesty, performed before the Queen, the Prince Consort, and the Court, at Windsor Castle, during the Christmas week. The instrumental introduction called into action the combined force of the bands. The recitative—"The rolling year leads on the bounteous May," and the air—"Sov'reign before whose honor'd throne," were nicely given by Mr. Montem Smith, and was followed by the chorus—"The signal chime breaks on the list'ning hour." The clear shrill notes of the boys from St George's choir, mingled with the full-toned melody of the principal vocalists, and the host of chorus singers, had a commanding effect, heightened by the appropriate instrumental accompaniment. The madrigal—"Through the realm from sainted pile," came upon the audience as a welcome change. The chorus again broke forth in "Again the chime—again o'er hall and bower," and was followed by the solo-soprano—"O thou Supreme o'er earth and skies," by Miss Byers, who rendered the words with considerable emphasis. The solo mezzo-soprano—"With thy enduring aid, O Lord," by Master Hardy, was highly creditable, and promised well for the future career of the youthful vocalist. The semi-chorus—"Great Father, guard their princely race," was excellently given. The chorus—"Thine, Britannia, evermore," concluded the Cantata, and we do not exaggerate the feeling of the audience when we say that the composition, as a whole, was rapturously received. Mr. Marriott gave "The Death of Abercrombie" and was warmly applauded. Dibdin's words and Braham's music, in less skilful hands than Mr. Marriott's, would have commanded a cheer from any British audience. Schubert's German song "The Wanderer," was well adapted to display the compass of voice and execution of Mr. Whitehouse. As might have been anticipated his "endeavours to please," were "crowned with" an encore. Mendelssohn's glee—"O hills, O vales of pleasure," the ancient madrigal—"Down in a flowery vale," and Miss Byers's Italian song, by Donizetti, completed the vocal portion of the first part, which was brought to a close by Beethoven's overture to Fidelio. The second part commenced with the "Wedding March," by the entire band. Then followed a duo on the violin and violoncello, by Messrs. Day and Horatio Chipp (of her Majesty's private band), on themes from Rossini's Guillaume Tell. The execution of Messrs. Day and Chipp (masters of their respective instruments), called forth reiterated bursts of applause. Mr. Montem Smith sang "Lily Gray," and Mr. Knowles was encored in that established favourite "I'm going Jessy, far from thee." A glee and a madrigal intervened. Then followed a solo, by Mr. Chipp, on the violoncello, which we need scarcely say was all that could be desired. Another glee, a ballad by Miss Byers, and the National Anthem concluded by far the most successful of any of the Society's concerts.—Abridged from the Windsor and Eton Express.

GLoucester.—It spoke well for the attractions of the concert on Wednesday night, that, amidst torrents of rain and the howling of the pitiless storm, there was mustered in the Shire-hall so large and so fashionable an audience as we found seated at eight o'clock, round the little platform raised in the centre of the room. The inclemency of the weather, nevertheless, had evidently a detrimental effect upon the attendance, as was evinced by numerous vacant seats, previously taken by parties intending to be present. A recent melancholy circumstance also kept away several influential families; but the select audience was capable of appreciating the "concord of sweet sounds" produced by the union of poetry and artistic skill. The artistes engaged held a position which almost place them above provincial criticism. Herr Molique, the eminent composer; Mr. H. C. Cooper, of the Royal Italian Opera, and one of the soloists at the Philharmonic Concerts; Mr. H. Hill, of her Majesty's private band, and principal tenor at the Royal Italian Opera; and M. Rousselot, the distinguished violoncellist, are all members of the "Beethoven Quartett Society." The quartetts selected for the occasion were two by Beethoven—No. 10, in E flat, (op. 74), and No. 8 in E minor (op. 59); a posthumous quartette in F minor by the lamented Mendelssohn, and another by Molique himself. Besides these, there was a duet concertante for two violins, by Spohr. If we could make any distinction we should, perhaps, give the preference to Mendelssohn's quartett, although all were performed in a first-rate style of excellence. The duet between Herr Molique and Mr. H. C. Cooper, a delicious morceau, was exquisitely rendered and elicited the greatest enthusiasm. Mdlle. Clara Loveday also gave great satisfaction by her performance of a pianoforte sonata by Beethoven. The instrumental part of the concert was varied agreeably. Three songs were given by Miss Owen, a promising pupil of the Royal Academy of Music, who possesses a clear and musical contralto. On the whole, the concert was one of a highly classical character, and we only regret that we have so few opportunities in Gloucester of enjoying such a treat as was afforded on this occasion.—Abridged from the Gloucester Chronicle.

CHELENTHAM.—(From a Correspondent).—Mr. Woodward, a highly respected entrepreneur in this town, gave a grand concert of vocal and instrumental music, on Friday morning (the 31st ult.), at the Assembly Rooms. The singers were Mdlle. Angri, Signor S. Tamburini, and M. Stockhausen: the instrumentalists Herr Ernst (violin), and F. Mori (pianoforte). After a duet from Don Pasquale, by Signors S. Tamburini and M. Stockhausen, Mdlle. Angri sang the "Una voce" in a dashing manner. Herr Ernst then came forward and was greatly received. He played his own fantasia, Otello, in a superlative style of excellence, and was immensely applauded. I never heard such fine, broad violin playing, allied to such deep and varied expression in my life. I have no remembrance of Paganini, although, when very young, I was present at one of his concerts. M. Stockhausen, a clever bass singer, gave two songs, by Mendelssohn and Kucken, in conjunction. That of Mendelssohn, "On song's bright pinions," is a perfect gem; it was well sung and capably accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr. F. Mori; that of Kucken was rather insipid, though not devoid of a certain kind of prettiness. A song called "Assination," by Mr. F. Mori, with a lively accompaniment, was sung with much taste by Mdlle Angri; but I did not greatly care for Signor Tamburini's Canzone Napolitaine, which followed it. A duet for violin and piano, on the Huguenots, by Thalberg and De Beriot, was finely executed by Ernst and F. Mori; but with all its brilliancy, it appeared to me very flat and stale as music. In the second part there were "La ci darem," by Angri and Tamburini, some Swiss melodies by M. Stockhausen, and the Carnaval de Venise by Ernst, which last most humorous and delightful bit of fiddling created a furor. The concert ended with a selection from Macfarren's Sleeper Awakened, consisting of a ballad, "Forget it not" (Mdlle. Angri), a serenade, "Oh, listen dearest," (M. Stockhausen), a rondo in the bravura style, "Gone, he's gone" (Mdlle Angri), and a trio, in canon, "Good night," (Angri, Tamburini, and Stockhausen). All these pieces were exceedingly well sung, and with all I was delighted. The serenade in G major is deliciously quaint and smooth, and "Gone—he is gone," in D flat, one of the most effective florid cavatinas I have heard. The last was sung, with great vigour and animation, by Mdlle. Angri. This trio reminded me of something in the same composer's Devil's Opera—I forget what. I have not mentioned the encores, which were too many to enumerate. The audience, more select and distingué than numerous, left the Assembly Rooms in perfect good humour with the entertainment that had been provided for them. Ernst alone would have been worth the price of a concert-ticket.

BATH.—The "Ladies' Concert," last week, by the Harmonic Society, at the Assembly Room, was well attended, and passed off with great éclat. The singers were Mrs. Pyne and Miss Gilbert, Messrs. Bianchi Taylor, Millar, Pyne, Bell, Thomas (one of Mr. B. Taylor's pupils, attached to the choir of the Worcester Cathedral), Bell, E. Lansdown, and Tanner. The vocal selection was from the works of Calcott, Stevenson, Bishop, Macfarren, Parry, &c. The instrumental solo players were Messrs. Salmon (violin), Harvey (clarinet), and Williams (cornet-a-piston). The overture to Cenerentola was very well performed. Henry Harford, Esq., one of the vice Presidents, was in the chair.

CROYDON.—A troupe of artists, headed by the celebrated violinist, Ernst, accompanied by Mdlle. Angri, the accomplished contralto, Herr Stockhausen (basso), S. Tamburini (barytone), Mr. Frank Mori (conductor), gave a concert last week at the Greyhound Assembly Room. The programme contained two solos by Herr Ernst—both of which were magnificently played, and both encored with the greatest enthusiasm—several brilliant solos by Mdlle. Angri, in which the celebrated contralto took the audience by surprise, and won herself the highest honours, receiving an encore for nearly every one of her songs; besides other vocal morceaux by the gentlemen, who obtained various degrees of favour. The room was crowded to excess, all the fashionables of the locality attending.

LEAMINGTON.—Mrs. N. Merridew's annual Grand Morning Concert took place on Saturday, at the Royal Assembly-rooms. The executants engaged were the great violinist, Ernst; the celebrated contralto, Elena Angri; the accomplished pianist and accompanist, Mr. F. Mori; the popular artists, Signor S. Tamburini and M. Stockhausen. The rooms were crowded with the rank and fashion of the place. Mrs. Merridew was patronized by nearly one hundred of the nobility and gentry, all of whom were present. The primal honours were carried off by Ernst and Angri. The great violinist was listened to with breathless attention, and applauded to the echo. The fair contralto created a most lively sensation. M. Mori's pianoforte playing was universally admired, and, in short, everything afforded abundant satisfaction.

Original Correspondence.

MR. CHARLES MATHEWS ON METHUSALEM.

To the Editor of the "Musical World."

Sir,—Being a Scribe of the Pentateuch, I dare not sit quietly and allow a palpable error pass on to deceive the public.

In your valuable paper of the 26th January, 1851, I find Mr. Charles Mathews defending himself from the attack of a gentleman nominating himself "Screw-tator," of King's College, Cambridge, by proving that Methusalem is right, and not Methuselah. His proof consists of great names, such as Rashi, Gemora, Dr. Adler, the Beth-din, &c. &c. But with all due respect to Mr. Mathews; I think he is in error, and makes mistakes, to say the least of it, and must beg to be allowed to state that it is impossible to believe that either the Rev. Dr. Adler, the Beth-din, or any other authority has given its opinion that Methusalem is right and Methuselah is wrong, because it is inconsistent in the extreme. Even supposing that these parties would have pronounced as Mr. M. states (which I deny), their opinion could not be valid, because there are thousands of Hebrew bibles in print, and, perhaps, thousands of written Hebrew Pentateuchs in England, wherein you can only find five times in Genesis and once in Chronicles the name "Methuselah," or, as the Rev. Dr. Raphael spells it, "Methushe Ich," or, more properly, "M'thushelabb," as the last letter is a hheth, more aspirate than a single h, thus, מְתוּשֶׁלַח: read the consonants above the word from right to left, like the Hebrew written and read, and you will find it right. I consider that Mr. Mathews has made a farce of it.

hhlshuthm

I am, Sir, yours, respectfully,

Salford, Manchester.

M. H. S.

To the Editor of the "Musical World."

Dear Sir,—I am fully aware that J. B. Cramer was born in Germany, yet our own country justly claims the merit of having educated the artist, and made the man. "In mind and principle, in language, in an ardent attachment to the government under which he lived, and in the true inheritance of those distinguished traits which so peculiarly distinguish the Englishman, Mr. Cramer has always been considered a native of Britain."

The above I have taken from an account of his life.

I am, dear Sir,

Yours, very truly,

ORPHEUS.

Feb. 5th, 1851.

Miscellaneous.

MR. LINDSAY SLOPER'S SOIREEES.—The first of the annual series of these chamber performances took place on Tuesday, the 28th ult., at the New Beethoven Rooms, Queen Anne Street. The programme was especially good, and comprised several novelties. Pinto's sonata in G minor, for pianoforte and violin, was not the least acceptable of these. This composition of an original and accomplished musician was, among others, lately rescued from oblivion by M. Alexandre Bilet. Beethoven's sonata in C (op. 102) for pianoforte and violoncello, was introduced by Mr. Lindsay Sloper. This is one of the latest works of the composer; and, although abounding in eccentricities, evidences a profundity of thought, and a command of beautiful ideas, even to profusion. Both sonatas were admirably executed. In the first, Mr. Lindsay Sloper obtained the aid of Mr. Dando; in the latter, Mr. Lucas. Beethoven's trio in E flat (op. 70, No. 2), by Messrs. Sloper, Dando, and Lucas, was welcomed by the audience as an old and familiar friend, and was a highly interesting performance. Mr. Sloper exhibited his solo power in Handel's Chaconne in G, from the Suite de Pièces; a single movement from Heller's sonata on Mendelssohn's "Volkslied;" the presto scherzando in F sharp minor of the last-named composer; and four compositions of his own, including a serenade, two studios, and a tarentella. The serenade and tarentella are old acquaintances, but the two studios are new, and, unless we are greatly mistaken, will add considerably to Mr. Sloper's reputation as a composer. Mr. Sloper's pianoforte playing made a decided impression, being honoured with frequent and warm plaudits. His facility of execution was displayed to singular advantage in the rapid and brilliant passages of the tarentella. The vocal music was assigned to Miss Dolby and Mr. Benson. Miss Dolby sang Mendelssohn's "O sage mein Herz" and "Jagd Lied," and a ballad entitled "Ida, Ida," by Miss Laura Barker. She was in fine voice, and sang to perfection. Mr. Benson gave Mozart's "Forget me not," and a new song, "Meeting and Parting." Mr. Sloper accompanied both singers.

FERDINAND HILLER, the composer and pianist, is in Paris for a short time.

AUBER AND ALBONI.—The name of the opera which Auber is writing for Alboni is La Corbeille d'Oranges.

BOUFFE, the celebrated comedian, is about to re-open the Vau-deville.

ITALIAN OPERA IN DUBLIN.—The Dublin public will be disappointed of their promised treat. Norma, Lucrezia Borgia, and the other operas which were to have been performed by a caste, rarely equalled on a provincial tour, which included Madame Grisi, Miss Bassano, Sims Reeves, &c., will not be done; as, in consequence of the severe indisposition of Madame Grisi, which precludes the possibility of her performing for some weeks to come, the tour is abandoned.

THE SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY repeat their performance or "Israel in Egypt" for the last time on Wednesday next, the 12th instant.

GUSTAVUS BROOKE, and Mrs. Mowatt, the American actress, have been performing at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, with considerable success. Their selection of characters has been the usual round of provincial legitimacy.

CROSBY-HALL.—Mr. Dando's second Quartet Concert took place on Monday evening. The principal pieces were Haydn's quartet in F major (No. 82); Mozart's quartet in G major (op. 10); Mayseder's sextet in D major (op. 55); and Beethoven's trio in E flat major (No. 1, op. 1). The stringed instruments with Mr. Dando were Messrs. A. Mellon, Hill, W. Thomas, Lucas, and Severn. Kate Loder took the principal part in Beethoven's trio, and played Mendelssohn's Caprice in A minor for the first time in public. Miss Dolby introduced a cantata of Miss Laura Barker, called "Enone," and Mendelssohn's lieder "O Sage Mein Herz," and "Jagd Lied." Mr. Rae accompanied the vocal music. The third concert takes place on Monday, February 24.

MISS BASSANO.—It will be seen, by a reference to our advertisement page, that this favourite vocalist continues to receive her pupils in town, the Dublin operatic tour, which Miss Bassano was to have joined, being abandoned in consequence of the illness of Madame Grisi.

MR. LINDSAY SLOPER's second soirée of Chamber Music will take place at the New Beethoven Rooms, on Tuesday evening.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.—The Governors and Court of Assistants of this institution, which has been established upwards of a hundred and thirteen years, have just presented the donors and members with the annual report. The list of claimants consists of eleven members, thirty-eight widows, and twenty-three children. During the past year the receipts were £2,676 17s. 9d.; the expenditure (including allowances to claimants) £2,048 16s. 10d. Temporary relief, £150 4s. 6d., Funeral expenses, £36, Apprentice premiums and gratuity, £55. Widow's dowry, £31 10s. Schooling £34 19s. Benefactions to non-claimants and aged claimants, £56 19s., £2,622 2s. 9d., leaving a balance of £54 14s. Cash at bankers, Christmas 1850, £261 4s. 11d. The property of the Fund is as follows:—£22,700 Three per Cent Consols; £19,650 ditto, Reduced; £7,000 ditto, South Sea; £10,139 Three and a Quarter per Cents.; making a total of £59,489, and yielding an interest of £1,810 0s. 8d. per annum.

THEATRICALS AT WINDSOR CASTLE.—The Queen gave a dramatic representation on Friday evening, the 31st ult., at Windsor Castle. About eight o'clock her Majesty the Queen and His Royal Highness Prince Albert, with their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, the Princess Alice, and the Princess Helena entered the temporary theatre, in which the performance took place, accompanied by the distinguished guests staying at the Castle, and attended by the Ladies and Gentlemen of the Royal Household in waiting. Her Majesty's private band was in attendance during the evening in an ante-room. The Queen and Prince Albert having been conducted to their seats by the ladies and gentlemen of the household, and the visitors being also seated, the performance commenced. The following was the programme:—By command, her Majesty's servants performed Shakspeare's Comedy of As You Like It. Duke, Mr. King; Frederick, Mr. C. Fisher; Amiens, Mr. J. Binge; Jaques, Mr. Charles Kean; Le Beau, Mr. James Vining; Charles, Mr. F. Cooke; Oliver, Mr. Ryder; Jaques (Son of De Bois) Mr. G. Everett; Orlando, Mr. Alfred Wigan; Adam, Mr. Bartley; Dennis, Mr. R. Cathcart; Touchstone, Mr. Keeley; Corin, Mr. Addison; Sylvius, Mr. J. F. Cathcart; William, Mr. Meadows; Eustace, Mr. Daly; Louis, Mr. Stacey; Foresters Mr. Miller, Mr. Pendergrass, Mr. Hodges, Mr. Butler, Mr. Lomax, Mr. Stirling, Mr. Nye, and Mr. Field; Rosalind, Mrs. Charles Kean; Celia, Miss Vivash; Phoebe, Miss Le Clercq; Audrey, Mrs. Keeley. Director, Mr. Charles Kean; Assistant-Director, Mr. George Ellis. The theatre arranged and the scenery painted by Mr. Thomas Grieve.

MR. MACREADY'S BENEFIT.—Mr. Macready will take his farewell of the British Public, on his benefit night, at Drury Lane Theatre, on Wednesday, the 26th inst., when he will appear in the tragedy of Macbeth. Between the first and second pieces, the long-celebrated tragedian, whose energy and other remarkable powers are so unabated that the term veteran can only have reference to his length of service, will speak his parting, and, no doubt, touchingly eloquent address. It will be something to remember. Mr. Macready feels intensely when he utters the language of imaginary characters. What will be his sensations when speaking his own words—when acting his own part? Those are trying times for favourite performers. It is like pulling them up by the roots, for there is a fascination in the applause of mankind, a charm in excelling, to which the player clings, and for the profession of his choice he has no common affection; and what will he not endure, what will he not attempt, what will he not sacrifice to maintain a position—ay, the prospect of a position in public esteem? Mr. Macready's retirement is an event of such importance, that persons of distinction are anxious for permission to stand upon or near the stage during his address, and many are making great efforts to take subordinate parts in the performance of Macbeth. As the night approaches, the interest will increase, and Drury-lane will not be spacious enough to accommodate half those who want places. There will be much to reconcile the eminent performer to the step he takes, independently of the prospect his social position presents—much to alleviate the pain of that "Farewell." Upon this, however, we will not speculate, but, in common with others, we look with much curiosity for his latest words in reference to the Drama he has so long and materially helped to uphold, and to himself, its principal living representative.—Era.

THE EARL OF WILTON.—This accomplished amateur is about to publish a collection of Hymns, Chants, and Responses, arranged by himself. We hope to have an opportunity of pointing out their merits to our readers.

SUSSEX HALL.—A concert was given at this hall last week, in aid of the "Youth's Benevolent Society." A large audience was collected by the attractive names of Mr. and Mrs. Sims Reeves, Madlle. Wagner, and Mr. Whitworth, and the programme gave entire satisfaction.

MR. VON HOFF, the well known vocalist, is about to proceed to Italy, for the purpose of studying a year or two at Milan, under Mazzucato, and other eminent masters of the Italian school.

MADAME OURY.—This eminent pianiste is, with her husband, the well known violinist, in Paris.

MR. PRAEGER, the excellent pianist and composer, is at present one of the musical "lions" of the Paris salons.

MR. JAMES WALLACK.—We are happy to state that this admirable actor, the great type of his class, has recovered from his late severe indisposition, and will shortly make his appearance at the Haymarket theatre. His welcome will be a bumper and a salvo.

SPONTINI, the celebrated composer of La Vestale, and other well known operas, died on the 24th of last December, aged 72, at Majolati, near Ancona. He was for more than twenty years Director-General of the musical establishments of the King of Prussia.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Several notices of concerts, reviews of music, and other matters, are unavoidably postponed till next week.

DRAMATICUS.—We shall do our best to answer the questions.

ERRATUM.—In Marsyas' letter, published in our last, an error occurs in page 77, line 22, where "medium-sized bores" should read "medium-sized holes."

Advertisements.

MUSICAL.

WANTED, as Articled Music Pupil, for a Term of Years, a Youth who has received a liberal education. For particulars apply to C. D. Hackett, Mus. Bac., Oxon, Organist of the Parish Church of Liverpool.

APOLLONICON.

TUESDAYS, THURSDAYS, SATURDAYS—Mornings, Two; Evenings, Eight; precisely.—The most perfect Work of Musical Mechanism in the world, upon which six Professors perform at the same time. Admission, 1s.; reserved seats, 1s. 6d. Programme—see Morning Journals each day of performance. Royal Music Hall, adjoining the Lowther Arcade.

N.B.—The elegant Hall, capable of receiving 1,500 persons (the best for sound in London), is engaged on and after Monday the 10th February, Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays in each week for Italian Operatic Concerts by the first Artists Director—Signor Montelli.

NEW BEETHOVEN ROOMS,

QUEEN ANNE STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE.

M. ALEXANDRE BILLET

Begs to inform his Pupils and the Public that his CLASSES OF PIANOFORTE INSTRUCTION
have recommenced for the season.

Applications for terms, and all particulars, to be addressed to the NEW BEETHOVEN ROOMS, Queen Anne Street.

NEW BEETHOVEN ROOMS,

27, QUEEN ANNE STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE.

MR. W. REA begs to announce that he will give three performances of Classical Pianoforte Music, assisted by the most eminent artists, on Wednesday evening, Feb. 12th, Friday evening, Feb. 26th, and Friday evening, March 14th, to commence at eight o'clock. Tickets to be had of the principal music publishers.

MR. HENRY C. COOPER

BEGS to inform his Pupils and Friends, that he has returned to London for the Season. Terms for Lessons, Concerts, &c., to be had at 7, Howland Street, Fitzroy Square.

MISS BASSANO

BEGS to inform her friends, pupils, &c., that, in consequence of the severe indisposition of Mde. Grial, the projected Tour in Ireland will not be proceeded with. Miss Bassano will therefore be enabled to continue her instruction in singing without interruption.
All communications are to be addressed to Miss Bassano, at her residence, 19, Queensburgh Street, Regent's Park.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.

CONDUCTOR, MR. COSTA. The Last performance of Handel's Oratorio, ISRAEL IN EGYPT, will take place on Wednesday next, Feb. 12. The orchestra, including 16 double basses, will consist of nearly 700 performers. Tickets, 3s.; reserved seats in area or gallery, 5s.; central area (numbered seats), 10s. 6d. each—at the Society's office, 6 in Exeter-hall; or of Mr. Bowley, 53, Charing-cross.

COMPOSITIONS BY E. SILAS.

0 SALUTARIS HOSTIA, Sacred Song.
SOLO, for Violoncello, with orchestra or pianoforte accompaniment.
CAPRICE No. 1, for the pianoforte.
LES FANNALLS, Caprice No. 2.
PENSEES FUGITIVES, for the pianoforte.
NOCTURNE, for the pianoforte.
ROMANCES.
TRIO for Pianoforte, Viola and Violoncello.

In the Press,
CONCERT STUCK, for Pianoforte and Orchestra.

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street.

CURES FOR THE UNCURED !

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.—Cure of a Bad Leg of more than sixty years' standing.—Mr. Barker, of No. 5, Graham's Place, Drum, near Hull, had ulcers on his leg from the age of 18 until upwards of 80, and although for many years he had sought the first advice in the country, nothing was found to cure them. He often suffered excruciating pain for long periods together, which incapacitated him from attending to his business. He had given up all hopes of getting a cure, when at last he was persuaded to try HOLLOWAY'S Pills and Ointment, which he did, and however wonderful it may appear, the leg was thoroughly healed by their means, and by continuing to use the Pills alone after his leg was well, he has become in health so hale and hearty as now to be more active than most men of fifty. N.B.—no truth of this extraordinary statement can be vouched for by Mr. J. C. Reinhardt, 22, Market Place, Hull. February 20th, 1850.

The Pills should be used conjointly with the Ointment in most of the following cases:—

Bad Legs	Coco-Bay	Contracted and	Lumbago	Scurvy
Bad Breasts	Chiego-foot	Stiff Joints	Piles	Sore-heads
Burns	Chilblains	Elephantiasis	Rheumatism	Tumours
Bunions	Chapped hands	Fistulas	Scalds	Ulcers
Bite of Mosche-	Corns (Soft)	Gout	Sore Nipples	Wounds
toes and Sand-	Cancers	Glandular Swell-	Sore-throats	Yaws
Flies		ings	Skin-diseases

Sold by the Proprietor, 244, Strand, (near Temple Bar,) London, and by all respectable Vendors of Patent Medicines throughout the Civilized World, in Pots and Boxes, at 1s. 1ld., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 35s. each. There is a very considerable saving in taking the larger sizes.

N.B.—Directions for the guidance of Patients are affixed to each Pot or Box

NEW SONG.

"THE VOICE THAT BIDS US WELCOME HOME," Ballad written by T. G. Carpenter, Esq., composed and dedicated to his sincere friend, B. Bernasconi, Esq., (Harrow Weald) by W. T. Wrighton, price 2s. London: Brewer and Co., 23, Bishopsgate-street Within.

MR. LINDSAY SLOPER'S SECOND SOIREE OF CHAMBER MUSIC

WILL take place at the NEW BEETHOVEN ROOMS, 27, Queen Anne Street, Cavendish Square, on TUESDAY next, the 11th inst., to commence punctually at half-past eight o'clock. Mr. Lindsay Sloper will be assisted by Miss Birch, Miss E. Birch, Mr. Blagrove, and Mr. Hancock. The third and last Soirée on Tuesday, the 25th inst. Tickets half-a-guinea each, may be had at the principal Music Warehouses, and of Mr. Lindsay Sloper, 7, South-wick Place, Hyde Park.

MR. W. STERNDAL BENNETT

RESPECTFULLY announces that his SEVENTH ANNUAL SERIES OF PERFORMANCES OF CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms on Tuesday evenings, February 25, March 18, and April 8. To commence at half-past 8 o'clock. Subscription tickets, one guinea; triple tickets (to admit three to any one concert), one guinea; and single tickets (to admit to any one concert), half a guinea. To be had at all the principal music warehouses, and of Mr. W. S. Bennett, 15, Russell-place, Fitzroy-square.

NEW FLUTE MUSIC.

SIX MELODIES by B. MOLIQUE (Lieder ohne Worte)—
Transcribed for the Flute and Piano by J. CLINTON.

No. 1.	"If o'er the boundless sky."	Price 2s. 6d.
"2.	"Fair Annie."	" 2s. 6d.
"3.	"When the moon is brightly shining."	" 2s. 6d.
"4.	"Come all ye glad and free."	" 2s. 6d.
"5.	"Come dearest, come."	" 2s. 6d.
"6.	"Oh! that my woes were distant."	" 2s. 6d.

SIX LIEDER OHNE WORTE, by F. MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY, Op. 57.—Transcribed for Flute and Piano by J. CLINTON.

No. 1.	"All Deutsches Lied."	" 2s. 6d.
"2.	"Hirtensied."	" 2s. 6d.
"3.	"Zuleika."	" 2s. 6d.
"4.	"Rheinisches Volkslied."	" 2s. 6d.
"5.	"Venetianisches Gondellied."	" 2s. 6d.
"6.	"Reiseliied."	" 2s. 6d.

Original Melodies for Flute and Piano by S. PENCIVAL, op. 4.

No. 1.	"Moderato con Espressione."	price 3s.
"2.	"Andante Malinconia."
"3.	"Allegretto Grapioso."

Wessel and Co., 229, Regent Street.

NEW VOCALISES AND METHODS.

1.	Bordogni, 24 Vocalises for all voices, (an easy set) ...	12s.
2.	Bordogni, 12 Vocalises for Contralto ...	12s.
3.	Bordogni, 36 Vocalises for Soprano, 3 books, each ...	10s.
4.	Bordogni, 12 Vocalises for Mezzo Soprano ...	15s.
5.	Bordogni, 12 Vocalises for Bass ...	12s.
6.	Zingarelli, 24 Solfeggi ...	16s.
7.	Crescentini, 20 Exercises ...	8s.
8.	Scuola Italiana di Canto, 2 books, each ...	4s.
9.	Vaccari's New Practical Method ...	15s.
10.	Catrufo's New Method ...	15s.
11.	Garcia's New Method ...	30s.
12.	Ponsseon's Complete Method ...	42s.

T. BOOSEY and CO., 28, Holles Street.

BALFE'S NEWEST BALLADS.

"OLD FRIENDS," sung by Mdlle. Angri.
"Ah! would that I could love thee less," sung by Mrs. Sims Reeves. Each 2s.
Published by Campbell, Ransford, and Co., Pianoforte Warehouse and Musical Circulating Library, 53, New Bond Street.

CARTE'S PATENT FLUTES.

MR. CARTE will introduce his new FLUTES in the course of his Lectures on INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC, at the Royal Institution, Manchester, on the mornings of the 10th, 14th, 17th, and 21st February; at the Collegiate Institution, Liverpool, on the evenings of the 11th, 14th, and 18th February; and at the Church of England Literary Institution, Shrewsbury, on the 12th and 19th February.

Just published, a SKETCH of the successive IMPROVEMENTS made in the FLUTE, with a Statement of the Principles upon which Flutes are constructed, and a Comparison between the relative Merits of the Ordinary Flute, the Flute of Boehm, and Carte's two new Patent Flutes. By RICHARD CARTE.

Publishers: Rudall, Rose, and Co., 38, Southampton-street, Strand; Addison, 210, Regent-street; Keith and Prowse, 48, Cheapside; and Cocks and Co., 6, New Burlington-street. Price 1s., or if sent by post, 1s. 6d.

M. ALEXANDRE BILLET begs to announce a series of THREE EVENING PERFORMANCES of CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC, in illustration of the Works of the great Composers, on Tuesdays, February 11th and 25th; and March 11th. To commence at 8 o'clock precisely. Tickets for a Single Concert, 2s.; Reserved Seats, 4s.; Subscription to Reserved Seats for the Series, 10s. 6d. To be had at St. Martin's Hall; of WESSEL and Co., 229, Regent Street, and the principal Music Publishers.

1.	Sonata in F. sharp major, Op. 78	BEETHOVEN.
2.	{ Prelude & Fugue in A flat	BACH.
	{ Prelude & Fugue in F	HANDEL
3.	Sonata in C minor	WOELFL.
4.	Andante con Variazioni in E flat, Op. 82, (Posth. Works, No. 10)	MEYERBEER.
5.	Sonata in B minor	HAYDN
6.	Selection of Studies—
	A minor	STEIBELT.
	D major	CRAMER.
	C minor	RIES.
	G major	MOSCHELES.
	C sharp minor	CHOPIN.

1.	Sonata in E flat minor	PINTO.
2.	Prelude & Fugue in G minor (Cat's Fugue)	SCARLAITI.
	Prelude & Fugue in D major	MENDELSSOHN.
3.	Fantasia in A, Op. 16 (Dedicated to ROBERT SCHUMANN)	W. S. BENNETT.
4.	Sonata in C minor, Op. 35 (Dedicated to CLEMENTI)	DUSSEK.
5.	Allegro di Bravura	CIPRIANI POTTER.
6.	Lieder ohne Worte	MENDELSSOHN.
	No. 4, Second Book.
	No. 6, Sixth Book.
	No. 1, do. do.
	No. 4, do. do.

1.	Sonata in B minor, Op. 40 (Dedicated to CHERUBINI)	CLEMENTI
2.	{ Prelude & Fugue in F	BACH.
2.	{ Prelude & Fugue in E minor	MENDELSSOHN.
3.	Grand Sonata in B flat, Op. 106.	BEETHOVEN.
3.	Andante con Variazioni in B flat, Op. 83 (Posth. Works, No 11)	MENDELSSOHN
5.	Rondo in A minor	MOZART.
6.	Selection of Studies :
	C minor	HUMMEL.
	E flat	MACFARREN.
	D minor	HILLER.
	D flat major	HENSELT.
	A minor	THALBERG.

HAS the honor to announce to the Members of the BEETHOVEN
QUARTETT SOCIETY, and to Musical Amateurs, that he will give a series of THREE PERFORMANCES OF CLASSICAL MUSIC, FOR INSTRUMENTS AND VOICES,

including Trios, Quartetts, Quintetts, and Septetts, selected from the Works of Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and other Classical Composers. Further particulars will be duly announced.

The Meetings will be held at 27, Queen Anne Street, Cavendish Square, on the Wednesday, at a Quarter past eight o'clock; February the 26th, March the 19th and 26th.

M. S. ROUSSELOT will spare no exertions to render the Performances of these Parties in every way worthy of the distinguished patronage he has hitherto enjoyed ; and having been honoured by promises of support from Members and Subscribers of the Beethoven Quartett Society, early notices from others will much oblige and gratify him, as preference will be given to the former Members and Subscribers.

Subscriptions for the Three Performances, One Guinea, to be had of Messrs. Rousselot & Co., Importers of Foreign Music, Instruments, &c., 66, Conduit Street, Regent Street; also Mr. Betts, Music-seller, Royal Exchange.

MIDSUMMER DAY, Scherzo, 4s.; Danish Air, 3s.; Estelle, Grand Valse, 3s. "Some of the best modern effects of Piano-forte Music are here produced with comparatively little trouble to the performer. We can most confidently recommend these compositions to the use of teachers of the Piano-forte—Dramatic and Musical Review, Feb. 1, 1851.

CRAMER, BEALE & CO'S, 201, Regent-street, and 67, Conduit-street.

BEING absent on a PROVINCIAL TOUR, requests that all Letters, Communications, and Engagements during his absence from town, may be addressed to Herr Ernst, under cover to

12, MARGARET STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE.

E. J. DENT, Watch and Clock Maker, by distinct appointment to the Queen, H.R.H. Prince Albert, and H.I.M. the Emperor of Russia, most respectfully solicits from the public an inspection of his extensive STOCK of WATCHES and CLOCKS, embracing all the late modern improvements at the most economical charges. Ladies' Gold Watches, with gold dials, jewelled in four holes, 8 guineas; Gentlemen's, with enamelled dials, 10 guineas; Youth's Silver Watches, 4 guineas. Warranted accurate-going Lever Watches, jewelled in four holes 6 guineas.—E. J. Dent, 82, Strand; 33, Cockspur-street; and 34, Royal Exchange (Clock Tower Area).

TROMBONES, TRUMPETS, FLUTES, ACCORDIONS, &c.
T. J. J. HAITE, Musical Instrument Maker to the Army and Navy, 76, Leadenhall-st., London, sells cornopians from 30s.; do., Courtois model, 3l. 10s. and 4s. 4d.; do., Besnon model, 4l. 10s. and 5l. 5s. Sax tubas, E flat tenor, 3l. 15s.; B flat alto, 3l. 3s.; B flat bass 6l.; contra bass, 8l. All other brass instruments equally cheap. Concert flutes, oboe-flaw, eight G. S. keys, patent head, turning slide, &c., 1l. 1s., 1l. 5s., and 1l. 10s. Flawood, 3s. 6d.; ditto, oboe, and G. S. keys, 15s. Clarionets, six keys, 18s. Viols, good from 5s.; a good toned violoncello at 35s.; a choice selection of old violins and cellos by the great makers, at reasonable prices. Haite's celebrated violin strings, Roman and Anglo-Roman; send postage stamps, and try a first at 2d.; good bows from 2s. An immense variety of accordions and flutinas, and book of airs for ditto. Music paper, 1s. 6d. per quire. MS. music books, &c. Cit. reeds from 1s. per doz. J. J. Haite, being a theoretical and practical musician, warrants his instruments, all of which are tried and proved upon the premises.—Orders, accompanied by Post-office orders for the amount, made payable to John James Haite, attended to the same day.

BY
BRINLEY RICHARDS.

Angela. Romance. Dedicated to the Lady Robert Grosvenor

"Mr. Brinley Richards' "Angela," though essentially popular in style, strongly indicates the hand of an accomplished musician."—Morning Post.

Mendelssohn's "First Violet." ... 1 6

Mendelssohn's "Maid of the Ganges."	Dedicated to Stern-
dale Bennett, Esq.	2 0

"In the arrangement of these two charming melodies by the lamented Mendelssohn for the Pianoforte, Mr. Richards has very effectively adopted the style of the celebrated Lieder ohne Worte."—Herald.

The Fairy's Dream. Romance 2 6

Picciola, ou le Chant du Captif.	Dedicated to Mrs. Anderson	2	6
Sybil.	Romance. (Second Edition)	...	2 6

"The style of these compositions is the most attractive of modern Piano-forte music, and whether for variety and sweetness of effect, or for frequent indication of a graceful elevation of musical thought, combined with a moderate degree of difficulty in execution, we have never met with three pieces by a native composer which were calculated to give so much satisfaction to a candid reviewer. Nothing can be more useful to young students of the modern school of Piano-forte playing than such compositions as the above.—Dramatic and Musical Review. September.

Premier Nocturne. (Second Edition.)	2	6
First Nocturne. Arranged as a Bongo	2	6

The Irish Emigrant. Arranged as a Rondo ... 2 6

"Among the recent examples of the style of Pianoforte music at present in vogue, few more successfully appeal to the exigencies of popular taste, and more thoroughly realize the beau idéal of fashionable elegance than the above-named publications. Sybil, Picciola, Première Nocturne, and The Fairy's Dream, are all specimens of Mr. Brinley Richards in his most happy and fluent manner." They abound in ad capendum melody, and are overrun with passages both brilliant and neatly turned. The principal objection to the modern Pianoforte music of the drawing-room is a certain affectation of sentiment, from which Mr. Richards is entirely free. In his lightest passages there is a certain refinement, which indicates a desire to satisfy the amateur and the professor simultaneously, and must render his pieces acceptable to both."

Musical World, December 7.

CHAPPELL, 50, NEW BOND STREET.

Printed and Published, for the Proprietors, by MICHAEL SAMUEL MYERS, of No. 3 Stadley Villas, Stadley Road, Clapham Road, in the parish of Lambeth, at the office of MYERS and Co., 37, King Street, Covent Garden, in the parish of St.
Paul, where all communications for the Editor are to be addressed, post paid.
To be had of G. Purkess, Dean Street, Soho; Allen, Warwick Lane; Vickers, Holywell Street, and at all Booksellers.—Saturday, Feb. 8, 1851.

The Musical World.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

Terms of Subscription, per Annum, 16s.; Half year, 8s.; Three Months, 4s.; payable in advance, to be forwarded by Money Order, to the Publishers, Messrs. Myers & Co., 37, King Street, Covent Garden.

No. 7.—VOL. XXVI.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1851.

PRICE FOURPENCE.

SPONTINI.

GASPARD SPONTINI was born on the 17th of November, 1778, at Miolatti, a village situated a short distance from the Roman States. In 1791 he went to Naples, and was admitted to the Conservatoire della Pieta. He composed his first opera at the age of seventeen. It was entitled, I Puntigli della donna. This work did not bring him any great reputation. Italian writers were precocious before the time of Spontini; and works which bore the impress of higher genius and more matured judgment than the Puntigli della donna had been composed at an earlier age than seventeen. The Italian career of Spontini was not distinguished by any particular trait. His was not a brilliant and enthusiastic genius—a genius of uncontrollable fires and spontaneities—which youth cannot sway till time shall moderate—which leaves nothing for the future, but allows itself to be swept onwards by the irresistible present. In short, Spontini had no impulse—and in saying that, we deprive him of the very germ of genius. But if he had no impulse, he had zeal, ardour, and a thirsty love for his art. He worked with perseverance and assiduity. While he travelled he composed—not like poor Donizetti, in his travelling chariot with his secretary and leech beside him, but toiling on foot, or, mayhap, waggon-carried, from town to town, from kingdom to kingdom.

In 1796 he was at Rome, and wrote there Gli Amanti in Cimento, and at Venice, in the same year, L'Amor Segreto. Returning to Rome the following year, he composed the Isola Disabitata for the theatre at Parma. He did not go thither to superintend its production, having been engaged to bring out another opera, L'Eroismo Ridicolo, at the theatre at Naples. In 1798 he produced the Teseo Riconosciuto at Florence; shortly after, Finta Filosofa at Naples, and the Fuga in Maschera, in 1800, in the same place. During the years 1800 and 1801, while sojourning at Palermo, he composed three operas;—I Quadri Parlanti; Il Finto Pittore; and Gli Elisi Delusi. On his return to the continent, he wrote Il Geloso and L'Audace at Rome; and in 1802 he introduced, at Venice, Le Metamorphosi di Pasquale; Chi Più [Guarda non Vede]; and Principessa d'Amalfi, which was the last work he wrote in Italy. If to the above we add Berenice, of which some of his biographers make mention, we shall have seventeen partitions written in the space of seven years, a not very extraordinary proof of the precocity of genius. There are many admirers of Spontini—enthusiastic ones it may be readily believed—who do not hesitate to say that Rossini was indebted to him for many of those ideas which more lately took the world by surprise, and for those forms which have been emphatically styled “Rossinian,” more ostensibly, the famous crescendo. By these admirers the finale to the first act of the Barbiere has been pointed out as taken from that of Vestale. In our estimation, a simile intended to be established between a garden snail and a tortoise would hold as good—each of them carries a house on his back.

Spontini came to Paris in 1803. He applied himself to teaching at first, and remained a whole year without arriving at any change in his fortunes. In 1804, however, he had the gratification of seeing his Finta Filosofa played at the Theatre-Italien. Subsequently at the Opera Comique were produced his Julie; or, le Pot de Fleurs, and La Petite Maison, neither of which achieved the least success. Indeed the latter named piece was the reverse of successful. Hisses in plenty were showered on the poet and composer, and the first representation of La Petite Maison was not suffered to be brought to a close.

To the opera of Vestale and Fernando Cortez Spontini appears to be indebted for the reputation he at present enjoys. There is a story connected with the poem of La Vestale, which states that M. Jouy, the poet, had sent it first to Mehul, and, upon its rejection by that composer, to Cherubini. According to this story, Spontini learned, upon the night of the fiasco of the Petite Maison, that Cherubini was not very anxious to set the libretto to music, and having applied for the book, obtained it. He went to work immediately, in earnest, and finished the opera in a comparatively brief space of time. But half the labour only was accomplished. His partition had yet to be represented, and before representation to be received at the theatre. In the meantime the collaboration of M. Jouy and Spontini was inaugurated by the success of the comic opera, Milton, which still remains in the repertoire of the theatre. Spontini composed also at this period an Italian interlude, entitled L'Eccelsa Gora, and an Oratorio, both produced at the theatre Louvois. The Empress Josephine appointed him her musical director, and this high position had much effect in opening the way for the representation of Vestale, despite the cabals, underminings, resistances, jealousies, and aspersions from sundry quarters. If the success of La Vestale was immense, Spontini did not obtain it without a struggle. He had opposed to him the entire of the French school entrenched and fortified at the Conservatoire, where, for a long time after the success of Vestale, it was considered a mark of good taste to revile it. But there only happened then that which occurred on the coming of Rossini to Paris. Masters and pedants, shocked with certain faults of grammar, scandalised with certain turns of phrase, rejected it altogether. The amateurs and scholars, feeling with the public, ran in crowds to hear La Vestale, and found it entirely after their taste. Condemned by the Conservatoire, as the Cid had been by the Academy, La Vestale became the idol of the Parisians, and its fame spread over France in a short time. What a gratification for Spontini, after the fiasco of his Petite Maison!

La Vestale was produced on the 15th December, 1807. Fernando Cortez made its appearance in 1809, and had a great success. It was considered less complete as a whole than the Vestale, but in point of originality, invention, and boldness of treatment, many thought it superior. In his subsequent works we find neither the finish of the one, nor the invention of the other. Spontini fell sadly off after the Fernando Cortez, and it is only through means of that work and La Vestale, that he can hope to obtain a niche in the Temple of Fame.

In 1810 the direction of the Theatre-Italien was confided to Spontini, but he retained it only two years. About the same time he married a niece of Mons. Erard, the celebrated pianoforte manufacturer. She proved to him a most admirable and faithful wife, and received his last sigh by his deathbed.

The later compositions of Spontini appear few and far between. Pelage was written in 1814, and Les Dieux Rivaux in 1816. In 1817 he wrote the Danaïdes, in which glimpses of his ancient genius are occasionally to be seen. In 1819, after much expectation, and nineteen months' rehearsals, Olympie was produced. This work, which Spontini recognised as his chef d'œuvre, and thought destined to achieve the most brilliant fortune, did not succeed. Its fate overwhelmed him with grief and disgusted him with France. Proposals made to him by the King of Prussia were accepted without a moment's hesitation. In 1820 he left Paris for Berlin, with the title of first Kapellmeister of the Court and Musical Director of the Theatre, with large emoluments accruing therefrom. He brought out Olympie, with the third act re-written by Hoffmann, at the Berlin theatre, but its success does not appear to have been extraordinary. From 1820 to 1827 he composed Lalla Rookh, a ballet-opera, for the court festivals; Nourmahal, Alcidor, and Agnes de Hohenstanfen, which he altered and remodelled in 1837, as he did also the Fernando Cortez. In addition to these, he wrote a grand march for the fête of the King of Prussia, the Chant du Peuple Prussien, and a hymn executed at Berlin on the occasion of the coronation of the Emperor of Russia.

Spontini enjoyed at Berlin the highest eminence to which an artist could aspire; but he sought in vain for the delightful days of the Vestale and the Fernando Cortez. He had to sustain frequent and lively quarrels, which the irascibility of his temper, made more irascible by disappointed hopes, plunged him into. Olympie had banished him from France; Nourmahal, Alcidor, and Agnes de Hohenstanfen, would bring him back there. He was not content with Prussian justice, he wished to recover the suffrages of the French public. He longed to find out if time and absence had not brought the Parisian judges to their right opinions, and to a true sense of his own merits. He hoped to find everything changed in his favour, and became solicitous to appear again before them. This hope, however, was never realised, and Spontini felt acutely the neglect or indifference of those whose favour he most prized. His disappointments, and being compelled to resign the illusions of long years that flattered his spirits and encouraged his health, embittered the last days of his life, and brought on a complication of disorders. He became partially deaf, and his memory failed him. He was recommended by his medical attendants to try his native air. For six months he remained at Jesi, a town not far from the place of his birth. The inhabitants received him with regal honours. Although afflicted with a violent rheumatic attack, he would, despite the entreaties of his wife, assist at the celebration paid to him. He caught cold in the church, and sunk under it in a few days.

If worldly distinction could have conferred happiness, Spontini's life would have flowed on more smoothly than that of most men's. He was covered with honours and decorations of all kinds. Among other titles that of Count of St. André was conferred upon him, a title which, it is more than probable, he had the weakness to prefer to that of author of La Vestale. Under the empire this partition has been designed for the decennial prize. The Institute had nominated Spontini member of the section of music in the room of Paer. The association of Artist-Musicians counted him amongst the founders of their society, and at their assemblies he continued for many years an assiduous attendant. Spontini wished to bequeath his manuscripts and his library to them, but was prevented by some matter of form. In his own country he created several benevolent institutions, and was a thoroughly humane and charitable man.

A grand service has been celebrated for Spontini, in the church of the Madeleine, with organ and chorus. Several morceaux of the Fernando Cortez, among others the fine and well-known duo of prisoners, were arranged to Latin words. M. Lefebvre Wely performed on the organ the Morning Hymn and march from Vestale. M. Derivis, the original representative of the high priest, together with a crowd of artists and confreres at the Institute, assisted at the celebration.

THE EDINBURGH COLLEGE CONCERT.

(From the Caledonian Mercury.)

The proceedings that have lately taken place with reference to this concert, call on us for a few remarks to put the public in possession of all the facts, that they may be enabled to account for the annual dissatisfaction to which this concert unhappily gives rise. Ever since the first establishment of the Chair of Music, the public have looked forward with expectation to the "Reid Commemoration Concert" as one that they had a right to expect would be the best of the season. As long as the Professorship was held by Mr. John Thompson or Sir Henry Bishop, there seems to have been no fault found with the manner in which it was conducted. These gentlemen proceeded on the plan of making a charge of 5s. for the admission of each person, and thereby raising a sum which, with the addition of a small grant from the Reid Fund, was sufficient to cover all expenses, and give such a commemoration as proved satisfactory to the public. On the resignation of Sir Henry Bishop, Professor Donaldson, a member of the bar, was appointed to the Chair. This gentleman proceeded to fulfil the duties of the Professorship with characteristic energy and decision. He collected the necessary preliminary apparatus, and prevailed upon the Magistrates to fit up his class-room with seats, &c., on the understanding that they would be reimbursed from the Reid Fund. Application was accordingly made to the Senatus for the £250 so expended. The Senatus refused to repay it, and hence the action on which the Lord Ordinary pronounced the interlocutor so unfavourable to their pretensions to dispose of the £3,000 of annual revenue as they in their wisdom thought proper. To return, however, to the concert. On reading the will attentively it appeared to Professor Donaldson, that it was not the intention of the testator that any charge whatever should be made for the admission of the public to the annual concert, and a memorial having been prepared and laid before the most eminent counsel, they gave it as their decided opinion, that General Reid did not intend to seek any pecuniary aid from the public, and, therefore, that all the expense attending the concert should be paid from the Fund. In the face of this opinion, it was clearly impossible to allow the charge for admission to continue, and the Professor was therefore in a manner compelled to comply with this interpretation of the General's intentions. The difficulty then arose as to the possibility of providing an adequate commemoration concert for one half the amount previously expended. Formerly the Senatus voted only £150, but an additional £250 was raised from the sale of the tickets of admission to the public. Now they refused to give more than £200. In these circumstances the Professor endeavoured to do all that was possible with the money at his disposal, waiting with patience for the decision of the Court. This has now been pronounced, and although the judgment is not final, owing to the appeal of the Senatus to the Inner House, still the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor is the only authoritative light by which the will of General Reid must be read. In the matter of the concert, then, his Lordship distinctly declares that with it they (the Professors) had nothing whatever to do, as the duty of causing it to be given belongs altogether to the Professor of Music for the time being. In accordance with this view of the case, Professor Donaldson proceeded to give directions for carrying into effect the will of the testator, and with the view of making the concert this year a worthy commemoration of General Reid, he engaged the best foreign talent he could procure.

Before all his arrangements could be completed, however, the Senatus, in the face of the interlocutor, as well as of the Professor's representations, proceeded to vote the usual sum of £200 as sufficient to defray all expenses, Professor Donaldson refusing, however, to recognise their assumed right of restriction, on the ground of its being in itself incompetent and ultra vires of the Senatus.

Thus the matter stood on the 5th of December last. It would appear that from that date until the 25th of January, the Professor, being even then evidently unwilling to exceed the sum voted, endeavoured to arrange matters so as to keep the expenses within the required amount; but, after fruitless negotiation, he found that, in order to secure the services of the eminent artists he had already engaged, and at the same time to employ the resident orchestral musicians, the amount named fell short by £20 of what was absolutely requisite. The Professor having fully satisfied himself that the foreign talent alone could not be considered sufficient to form a becoming commemorative concert, gave instructions for the extra expenditure, taking upon himself the whole risk of recovering it from the Reid Fund. We understand that a full statement was then laid before the Senatus, exhibiting the items of the expenditure, and it was accompanied by extracts from the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary, pointing out in strong terms that the concert "was not for the benefit of the University, but for the perpetuating the fame of the testator, and advancing his favourite science," and also, that they (the Professors), had no authority under the will to fix the amount of outlay for that purpose. This statement was taken into consideration by the Principal and Professors at a meeting held on the 30th January, when they resolved that "if Professor Donaldson should expend a greater sum than the £200 already voted, they will not hold themselves responsible for such excess. And further, the Principal and Professors having appointed a committee to co-operate with Professor Donaldson in making arrangements for the concert, expect that Professor Donaldson, before issuing any tickets, will consult with that committee." Professor Donaldson having had no intimation of their intention to appoint a committee to superintend the distribution of the tickets, had previously completed the arrangements for a similar disposal of them amongst the Professors, students, and the various public bodies, as former practice justified him in adopting.

In a printed letter which has come under our observation from Professor Donaldson to Professor Kelland, the Secretary of the University, this matter is placed in a very clear light. Professor Donaldson therein remarks:—

"If a committee had been at all necessary, the selection could not have been more agreeable, but, I think that some communication should have been made of this intention, before the step was taken. What I complain of is, that these things are passed at meetings which I do not attend; which are viewed by many of the professors as illegal; and which the Principal himself has discountenanced; and that measures are adopted in a hasty and inconsiderate manner, without previous consultation with myself, and by parties who have really no right to interfere in the matter at all. I need not say what I might have done if an application had been made to me in proper time; and you will recollect that I intimated to you, that although I could not attend the meeting to which I allude, yet that I would be found in my rooms till four o'clock, and would go over to the Hall at any time for a few minutes if there was any desire to consult with me in regard to the concert. No notice was taken of that offer, and, therefore, I proceeded with and have completed my arrangements, as you will perceive from the statement sent to you the other day, and from the lithographed letter which I prepared before I left home, and which I expect is now in the hands of the Principal and Professors.

"We really ought not to forget that the concert is not for the University, but for the Public; and it was made a public one by purchasable tickets. You will perceive from the lithographed letter, that no less than 480 tickets are given to the Professors; and when those to the Secretary of the University, Mr. Small, and the other Librarians, Messrs. Cook, &c., &c., are added, the number exceeds 500, besides which 400 go to the students. The Music Hall will not hold more than 1500 persons, so that out of 1500 tickets, above 900 have been allotted to the University."

It seems, however, that some of the Professors have taken umbrage at what we cannot help thinking to be very straightforward conduct on the part of Professor Donaldson, declaring it to have been uncourteous, and therefore they have resolved altogether to discountenance the concert. To such an extent has this feeling been carried, that, as we are credibly informed, some of the Professors who had actually accepted their portion of the tickets, and had distributed them amongst their friends, have recalled them. We cannot believe that this paltry spirit of obstructiveness proceeds from the general body of gentlemen composing the Senatus Academicus, and we are more inclined to suspect that the fault lies with those few who attend all the business meetings, and whose regime is not always in accordance with the patrons and the public, or the wishes of the more numerous body of Professors, who take no interest or management in such matters; and who, with a culpable neglect of duty, we think, leave themselves altogether in the hands of others. We would now, therefore, call upon these gentlemen to come forward without delay, and put an end to such proceedings, by refusing participation in acts that can only lead to further embarrassments, and very probably considerable personal expense. It is hinted that in the event of the judgment of the Inner House being still adverse, it is the intention of the belligerent few to carry the case to the House of Lords. Pray, gentlemen, may we ask who is to pay the expense of all this litigation? You cannot, surely, expect that it is to be defrayed from the Reid Fund. Such a hope, if entertained, may be found altogether delusive. It may be that, as on former occasions, certain members of the Senatus whose obstinacy outruns their judgment may agree to take upon themselves the payment of all the necessary outlay, and free you, the merely nominal men, from all embarrassment on that score. But we contend that this will by no means clear you from the unpopularity of having permitted yourselves to become parties to an action of which you yourselves could not perhaps approve.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

LUCAS V. BEALE.

'This was an action by the plaintiff, who was first violoncello-player in the orchestra of the Royal Italian Opera, Covent-garden, on behalf of himself and the other members of the orchestra, against the defendant, a partner in the house of Cramer, Beale, and Chappell, music publishers, and manager of the Covent-garden Opera House.

Mr. Keating, Q.C., and Mr. Cowling were counsel for the plaintiff, and the Solicitor-general, Mr. Serjeant Byles, and Mr. Bovill for the defendant.

The action arose out of circumstances which, stated briefly, were as follows:—The Italian Opera at Covent-garden was commenced in 1846 or 1847 by Persiani, Beale, and Galetti, who procured an extensive orchestra and placed it under the superintendence of Mr. Costa. At the latter end of 1847 the defendant became the proprietor of the theatre, and entered into partnership with Mr. Delafield, but soon retired, leaving that gentleman sole proprietor. Mr. Delafield carried on the theatre until April, 1849, when he was obliged by pecuniary embarrassments to leave the country. The defendant had advanced Mr. Delafield 1000*l.*, and had also entered into a covenant to advance him 7000*l.* or 8000*l.* for the current expenses of the Opera, upon a mortgage of Mr. Delafield's house at Fulham and also the theatrical properties. Affairs went on on this footing until Mr. Delafield's departure, when the defendant became his agent in the management of the theatre, but in order to avoid personal liability he caused the following notice to be sent to each of the principal performers, and also to be stuck up in several parts of the theatre:—

"Mr. Beale thinks it right that all parties connected with the Royal Italian Opera should clearly understand his position, in order that no misconception on the subject may arise hereafter. Mr. Beale begs, therefore, to state that he is acting in the management of the Royal Italian Opera solely on behalf of, and as agent for, Mr. Delafield, and that he undertakes no personal liability or responsibility whatever.

"201, Regent-street, May, 1849."

At this time the affairs of the theatre were in great confusion; the salaries of the performers were much in arrear; and it became evident unless some measures were adopted to prevent it, the theatre must be closed. Mr. Beale, therefore, appealed to the principal singers, and they and Mr. Costa agreed that the payment of their salaries should be deferred until the close of the season, on condition that the salaries of the orchestra and chorus were paid. At this time thirteen days' arrears were due to the orchestra, and on the 9th of July they assembled together to discuss and communicate with the defendant on the subject. Accordingly the defendant, Messrs. Chappell, Mr. Gruneissen, and other gentlemen, met in one room of the theatre, and the orchestra in another, and the latter deputed the plaintiff to communicate on their behalf with the defendant. The plaintiff accordingly did so, and ultimately the following proposition was drawn up on behalf of the orchestra, and handed to the defendant:—

"July 9, 1849.

"The gentlemen of the orchestra of the Royal Italian Opera House understanding that the principal singers and Mr. Costa have consented to forego any further claims on the establishment until the end of the season, in order that the choral and orchestral departments may have the benefit of such sacrifice, are willing and hereby pledge themselves to continue their services and attend their duties, provided Mr. Beale will guarantee the payment of the thirteen nights due on the 15th ult. Signed in the name of the gentlemen of the orchestra,

C. Lucas."

A good deal of discussion took place, and at length the following paper was drawn up by Mr. Fenn, the treasurer of the theatre, and handed to the plaintiff:—

"July 9, 1849.

"Mr. Beale will accept the propositions made by Mr. Lucas on behalf of the gentlemen of the orchestra, and he will appoint the treasury to be open on the 19th inst. to pay the thirteen nights due on the 16th inst., and he pledges himself to open the treasury on the 10th and 25th of August to make further payments.

"W. H. FENN."

The plaintiff having read the paper, said it would be more satisfactory to the orchestra to have Mr. Beale's signature to it, upon which the defendant wrote across the face of the memorandum, "Approved of by me, T. F. Beale." The plaintiff then took the paper to the orchestra. The parties separated, and the house continued open for three nights longer, when news arrived of Mr. Delafield's bankruptcy, and the defendant ceased to have anything to do with the theatre. The company then formed themselves into a commonwealth, and produced the Prophete, with so much success that at the close of the season the claims of all the five classes into which the performers were divided were fully satisfied, except those of the fifth class, which comprised the principal performers. Nevertheless, the orchestra were not paid their thirteen days' arrears, and applied to the defendant to pay them pursuant to his agreement, but he refused, on the ground that the paper signed by him was only an agreement contingent upon all the principal singers and all the members of the orchestra assenting to the arrangements proposed, and that all had not done so; and that it was also contingent upon his having the control of the treasury of the theatre, which he had ceased to have immediately after the arrangement was entered into. Negotiations having failed to effect a settlement, the plaintiff, on behalf of himself and the rest of the orchestra, commenced the present suit for the arrears due to them, which amounted to 1280*l.* 12*s.*

Mr. Costa, the director of the orchestra, proved the facts as above stated, and that all the principal singers and all the orchestra had fulfilled their parts of the arrangement.

Upon his being asked if all the members of the orchestra had played on the nights after the arrangement,

The Lord Chief Justice said.—"You can't tell at Covent Garden whether more than one is playing.

Mr. Costa bowed in acknowledgment of the compliment.

Several legal objections were taken at the close of the plaintiff's case, but it was ultimately decided that it should go to the jury.

The Solicitor-General then addressed the jury for the defendant, and said the action was a very hard and cruel one upon the defendant, who at the time this arrangement was made had no interest whatever in the proceeds of the performances which were going on—who was acting in the theatre, as everybody connected with it knew, only as the agent of Mr. Delafield, and who had only come forward when the affairs of the theatre were at a stand-still from a kindly motive towards the large body of artists, who, if the performances had ceased, would have been thrown out of employment. The learned gentleman then contended at considerable length, and said he should prove by evidence, that the paper was only signed by the defendant and delivered to the plaintiff provisionally upon all the artists engaged consenting to the arrangement, and that many of them, including Madame Garcia, Mdlle. Angri, Marini, and others, had refused to do so, and also that the arrangement had been superseded by the orchestra themselves when they joined the rest of the establishment in forming a commonwealth, and thereby removed the defendant from the control of the treasury. Moreover, the plaintiff, in suing the defendant, who was an agent only, had put the saddle on the wrong horse.

The Lord Chief Justice.—"Then there is no horse to put it on. It would clearly be no use to saddle Mr. Delafield.

Mr. Keating having made an observation,

The Lord Chief Justice replied—"I think you have got the wrong plaintiff, and I doubt whether you have got the right defendant (laughter).

Mr. Fenn, the treasurer of the theatre, was then called, and deposed to what took place at the interview between the plaintiff and defendant. He said that it was distinctly stated and understood that the arrangement was conditional upon its being assented to by all the singers and the whole orchestra, and that Mr. Thomas Chappell proposed that a clause should be added to that effect, but Mr. Costa said: "We are all gentlemen here, and we all understand that," and, therefore, the clause was not added. He stated that several of the principal singers and performers refused to assent to the arrangement. Also, that the plaintiff took the paper after it was signed to show it to the gentlemen of the orchestra, and that when after some time the witness sought for him, he found that he and all the orchestra had left the theatre, and had taken the agreement with them.

The Lord Chief Justice, after stating the evidence and the law on the subject to the jury, left it to them to say whether the paper in question was a proposal or an agreement, and whether it was signed by the defendant for himself or as agent for Mr. Delafield.

The Jury, after a short deliberation, found that the defendant intended the paper to be an agreement, and that he signed it for himself, and not for Mr. Delafield.

The Lord Chief Justice.—Then, as I have already intimated, I shall nonsuit the plaintiff, being of opinion that, as the consideration was a joint one, he is not entitled to bring an action on behalf of the members of the orchestra, and to recover the full amount due to the whole body.

Plaintiff nonsuited.

Dramatic Intelligence.

DRURY LANE.—Othello has been produced with a strong cast. Mr. Anderson's Moor is a highly effective performance. This was the first part in which he appeared before a London audience at the Haymarket, and achieved his well won popularity. We should have liked a little more fire and impetuosity in Mr. Anderson's Othello in the third and fourth acts, for he did not carry his audience with him as he might have done. All else was entitled to praise; the tender scenes being distinguished by genuine pathos. Mr. Vandenhoff's Iago lacks but intensity and a certain fiendish earnestness which is beyond his power of abstraction, to render it a first-rate performance. The scenes with Roderigo and Cassio were excellent, and the grand scene with Othello had many fine points. In the soliloquies we missed the profound artist. Of the other characters we can only allude to Mr. Walter Lacy's Roderigo, which was in all respects an admirable assumption. Mr. Walter Lacy has laid hold of the true notion of Roderigo's character. We see a "silly gentleman," and no more. The conventional buffoonery of the part is happily discarded, and the might of Iago's intellect is made more manifest thereby. Mr. Walter Lacy's Roderigo is an excellent commentary on the "silly gentleman" of Shakspeare, and should be studied by all tyrones in the profession.

The exquisite Nisbett has been re-enchanting her audiences with one of her most delightful creations, Rosalind, in As You Like it; not so magical, or bewitching perhaps, as Beatrice—for surely Shakspeare wrote Beatrice prophetically for Nisbett—but every whit as true to the text and nature. Vandenhoff's Jaques is excellent, and is just fitted to his calm, severe, and solid style.

Auber's Enfant Prodigue, newly christened, is announced as a spectacle for early next week. The management is sparing no pains or cost to render the production worthy of the most liberal patronage. It is expected to transcend all previous efforts in the gorgeous glittering line at Drury Lane.

PRINCESS'S.—The only novelties at this house of late have been the introduction of the two performances at Windsor Castle; these were, The Prisoner of War, and The Loan of a Lover for the first; and As You Like It and a popular farce, for the second performance. The cast of As You Like It is remarkably strong, including Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean and Mr. and Mrs. Keeley among others. Mr. Charles Kean's Jaques is particularly good, and Mrs. Charles Kean's Rosalind has an infinity of charms. Overwhelmingly comic is Mr. Keeley's Touchstone: and unimaginably vague and irresistibly stupid is Mrs. Keeley's Andrey. Nor must we overlook Mr. Meadows' William, which constitutes the perfection of rustic nonentity.

Henry the IV. and The Templar are still journeying their rounds, and the Pantomime is still alive and kicking, waiting for exterminating Easter to put the extinguisher on it. Meanwhile, when are we to have Bourcicault's new piece, and Douglas Jerrold's new piece?

SADLER'S WELLS.—The Rev. James White's Tragedy "Feudal Times," was revived here on Monday. This play was originally produced at this theatre four years ago, when Miss Laura Addison played the heroine. Excepting the substitution of Miss Glyn for the former lady—no improvement, by the way—the caste is much the same as before. The most dramatic character in the piece is the Earl of Angus (Douglas), and it is exactly suited to Mr. G. Bennett, whose portrait of the proud, daring, and ferocious leader of the feudal nobility of Scotland, is highly graphic and effective. The part of the Earl of Mar, assumed by Mr. Phelps, is hardly as well suited to the actor. The King, James the Third, was given to Mr. Henry Marston, but the calm, passive benevolence of the character renders it unfit for the stage. Ethics do not amalgamate well with the tragic muse. As the doctrines of the ethical philosopher prevail, the trade of the dramatic poet must cease, for want of material. Hence, such quiet, loving arbiters of peace and good-will as King James have by no means a dramatic interest corresponding to what they possess in real life. In fact, the stage is no place for day-dreamers. The costumes are new and gorgeous; and the scenery picturesque and appropriate. A Gothic chamber in the palace, with painted windows, is unique and beautiful. The house was crowded. The pantomime has not as yet lost any of its attraction. Miss Caroline Parkes dances charmingly, and the evolutions of Mr. Stilt's little boy promise to place him out of the reach of rivalry or competition.

Foreign.

(From a Correspondent.)

NEW YORK.—The rage for Jenny Lind in this city appears to have died of its own violence, like a man in a drunken fit. The public now occupy themselves with their own affairs, or those of their nearest neighbours; the press have bawled themselves into silence; the clacques are laid up with hoarseness. In vain I have endeavoured to gain some tidings of the charming Jenny—nobody knows where she is—nobody asks where she is—nobody cares where she is. An Irishman told me the other day that this seeming coolness was but the bottling-up of their enthusiasm until Jenny Lind came back. "But," said I, "suppose she does not come back?" "Well, never mind," answered Pat, "be Jasus, my boy, we kin aisy put the bottle in the cellar till the next customer comes." "And this is fame," thought I. As I know nothing of Jenny Lind or her whereabouts, I must write to you of the pet of the hour, Parodi, who has quietly and legitimately won all our hearts. She has really earned a great name here, and has added to her reputation by sundry acts of kindness, which, all honour to the Americans, I must say they never forget. I, who have heard Grisi and Malibran, cannot go the length of the Parodists, who insist that their idol is equal to either of the other two as a dramatic singer. No, Jonathan, my boy, that is a step beyond rational bounds. By the way, what an excitement would Grisi cause were she to come over here! It would set all America frantic, I am thinking. The Lind excitement would prove a fly-blow to it—after her first appearance. But to return to Parodi. At the concert for the Italian refugees, Parodi generously came forward to assist, and had the satisfaction of seeing around her, on Tuesday evening last, many of her warmest friends. I would gladly speak favourably of the performance, but cannot do it. With the exception of Parodi's singing, there was little deserving even of mention. The two branches of Maretzek's Italian troupe, I understand, will soon be re-united. I hope so, at least, for owing to the absence of some important members of the troupe, the late operas in this city have not been brought out in that style which the means of Maretzek and his former efforts have led us to expect. The only new feature worth chronicling since our last is the production of Giovanna di Napoli, under the composer's own direction.

Boston.—The Musical Fund Society's third concert had a large audience. No vocalist appeared in the programme. Beethoven's "Pastoral Symphony" was the staple article offered. For a rehearsal this performance might be tolerable—as the fitting presentment of music requiring the greatest nicety and competent wind instruments, it only excited a desire to hear a good performance by a well-appointed orchestra. The association does not evince a desire for improvement or good taste in making up its programmes, that ample patronage might reasonably produce. Until a thorough reform is made in the department of wind instruments, they can never give a perfect effect to the works of the great masters. Madame Bishop's concert on Sunday evening was a striking contrast in regard to audience or the quality of performance. She was in her best voice, and imparted to each piece the best skill, refinement, and expression her great attainments could afford. The recitative and air from The Creation gave her audience very different impressions of Haydn's beautiful conception from those received at the Handel and Haydn's Society's performance. "With verdure clad the fields appear, delightful to the ravished sense: by flowers sweet and gay, enhanced is the charming sight," with her graceful interpretation, charmed the audience with pleasing semblance of poetical description. The recitative, "There were Shepherds" renewed Madame Bishop's exceeding and well-deserved favour with her public for perfect recitation. When she first appeared in this city, the merit of good phrasing and musical eloquence could not be denied, even by the doubters on other points. The admirable management of breath, familiarity with the genius of every language used as the vehicle of thought and intelligent study in the author, unite to give Madame Bishop that command of musical recitation which Miss Lind can hardly claim. The air from Judas Maccabeus, and that from the Messiah, proved the artist, while they failed in breadth and fulness of tone—without forcing or exaggeration—to meet the expectation of superlative excellence which "With verdure clad" had excited. Handel's Bird Song, with Mr. Werner's flute obligato, presented Madame Bishop in a most favourable aspect for command of voice and skilful use of the aids science gives the cultivated vocalist. It was encored with marked enthusiasm for a Boston Sabbath-day audience. Schubert's "Ave Maria" had a faithful, pure, and fervent rendering. It was called for again, to receive still greater expression and fervour of feeling. If the clarinet had been strictly obligato, Madame Bishop's rendering of "Gratias agimus" might have excelled in most points any other attempt made here upon Catalani's great show piece, notwithstanding a want of volume and facile smoothness of tone in the more forcible passages. The Transcript gives the following:—"The Mendelssohn Quintette Club propose to celebrate Mendelssohn's birthday, (Monday, February 3d,) by a grand concert to be given at the Melodeon. The programme will be made up of the compositions of this great master, songs, an organ sonata, quintette, concerto for the violin, &c.; and, to render this music worthily, some of the best artists in the city have promised their assistance. We hope that the young and gifted artists who form the Quintette Club will see, by a crowded house, that their desire to do honour to the memory of one of the greatest musicians of our time, is responded to warmly by the lovers of good music in Boston; and that perhaps the first attempt on this side of the Atlantic, to celebrate the anniversary of a great artist's birth has met with general approbation."

The Oratorio selected by the Boston Handel and Haydn Society in their last performance was the Creation. The execution was but moderate, although the chorusses were better than usual. There was a sad want of precision and vigour, the chorusses were all taken too slow. "The heavens are telling," in particular, suffered much from this mistake of the conductor. The solos were almost entirely buried under the overwhelming power of the orchestra, who seemed to play mezzo forte all the time, except now and then an occasional fortissimo. Miss Anna Stone, whose voice defied alike the efforts of orchestra and chorus to smother it, is an exception. If, on another representation, the conductor will give out allegro as allegro, and not as andante, and if the orchestra will kindly consent to an occasional piano, especially in accompanying solo voices, the performance will doubtless be worthy of the best days of the Handel and Haydn Society. It was matter of regret that this Society did not secure the services of Mr. Hatton, whose practical experience and energy would have proved of the greatest benefit. Mr. Dempster was engaged a few weeks since to sustain the tenor part in the Oratorio, but after three rehearsals it was found that, in consequence of numerous professional engagements, he would be obliged to relinquish the position. Signor Guidi (late of Maretzek's Opera,) accordingly succeeded Mr. Dempster. The part seemed to lay below the register of his voice. Signor Guidi accomplished his task better, and with greater freedom from Italian accent, than we had anticipated, although the style of music and the English language are doubtless equally new to him.

KENNINGTON.—Mr. Charles Jefferys' Grand Concert took place at the Assembly Rooms, on Wednesday evening. The vocalists were Miss Leslie, Miss Jolly, Miss C. Jolly, Mr. H. Haigh, Mr. S. Mayo, Mr. Delavanti, and Miss Poole. The German vocal quartette, Herren Bach, Claus, Rauth, and Chevalier assisted. The instrumentalists were Mr. G. H. Lake, and Mr. Sedgwick, (concertina); Mr. H. Griesbach, (violin); Miss Theresa Jefferys, and Heinrich Werner, (piano). Mr. G. H. Lake conducted. The concert was well attended, and afforded evident gratification.

CROSBY HALL.—A concert of mixed music was given on Tuesday evening, at which the following artists assisted:—Miss Messent, Miss Poole, Madlle. Lavinia, Mr. Sinclair, Mr. Gray, Mr. Herbert, Signor Marchesi, and Mr. Frank Bodda, vocalists; and Mr. Richardson (flute); Madlle. Coulon (piano); and Mr. H. Lake (concertina). The Hall was tolerably well attended, and the performance in general satisfactory.

Provincial.

DUBLIN.—The first concert of this season of the Philharmonic Society was held on Monday evening, at the hall of the Ancient Concerts, Great Brunswick-street. As might have been expected from the rare character of the vocal and instrumental attraction provided by the committee, the hall was crowded with a brilliant array of fashionables of both sexes. The arrangements for this concert were most creditable to the taste, judgment, and energy of those to whom the task had been committed of providing the materiel of its music. The vocal artistes selected were Signora Angri (the celebrated contralto of her Majesty's Theatre),* Signor Tamburini,† and Herr Stockhausen, both well-known performers. The instrumental attraction lay principally in the performance, unrivalled in Europe at the present day, of Ernst, so justly recognised as a celebrity in the musical world by his triumphs in violin music. We are not, however, such exclusive devotees of foreign excellence as to fail to recognise with gratification the re-appearance in the orchestra of some able and tasteful performers, whose absence from the Philharmonic Concerts we have for some time regretted—Mr. J. W. Glover, Mr. Liddell, Mr. Mosley, and others whose presence gave the assurance of force and precision in the concerted pieces. The concert opened with Beethoven's "Symphony in C minor." This was as perfectly rendered as could be hoped for by the most enthusiastic admirers of the great composer. Signor Tamburini and Herr Stockhausen were both heard together in the duetto from Donizetti "Chetti, chetti." This well-known morceau from Don Pasquale did not seem to produce so decided an effect as might have been expected. Tamburini's voice (as will be remembered by many) is a baritone rather thin in character, but numbering some notes of great sweetness on its register. Herr Stockhausen's peculiar range of voice (a high baritone) enables him to achieve songs which would seem adapted for tenor voices only. The judgment, and musical acquirement of these vocalists gained them some triumphs during the evening. Their joint rendering of "La ci darem" was admirable, and was loudly encored.‡ Signora Angri was received on her appearance with an empressement and cordiality that gave evidence of the high recognition of her fame as a contralto vocalist. Her voice was first heard in the delicious cavatina, "In questo semplece." She was heard with evident delight, and loudly applauded. We have only space to advert to her superb version of the "Brindisi," in which she forcibly reminded many of Alboni, not alone in character of voice, but even in some particulars of maniere and personal. She was rapturously encored, and in all she produced a decided impression in her favour. We feel it needless to dwell on the matchless performance of Herr Ernst. None who have ever heard the magic tones of his violin can forget him. Were we to select any of his glorious efforts on last evening for especial praise, we might, perhaps, the sinfonia of Beethoven,§ or his fantasia, introducing "The last rose of summer." It needs scarcely to add, that he was greeted throughout the concert with most rapturous plaudits. In all, the concert went off most brilliantly, and evidently to the delight of the distinguished assemblage (including his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant) that attended. (Freeman's Journal).

LIVERPOOL.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The first subscription concert of our Philharmonic Society for the present season took place on Monday evening, on which occasion the following artistes succeeded in attracting a large and fashionable audience:—Madlles. Angri, Graumann, and Messrs. Ernst, Stockhausen, S. Tamburini, and F. Mori. Madlle. Angri, whose recent triumphs in the metropolis had excited the curiosity of the Liverpool audience to a high pitch, was evidently the great novelty of the evening; and if the applause with which she was greeted may be taken as a criterion of her powers of pleasing, we may safely assert that she succeeded in making a most favourable impression on one of the most apathetic audiences in the kingdom. Madlle. Angri is a singer of great and peculiar powers—her voice is of extensive compass—the low notes are wonderfully sonorous, without being harsh, while her powers of execution are almost unrivalled by any living vocalist. In addition to this, she sings with great dramatic expression and abandon, and makes the audience feel that her whole soul is for the moment wrapped up in the sentiments to which she gives utterance. Powers like these ought to make Madlle. Angri one of the most perfect vocalists that ever lived; but, unfortunately, her talents for pleasing are in a great measure rendered ineffectual by a want of refinement and elegance, without which the most admirable vocalism sounds inartistic. She was frequently encored in the course of the evening; her peculiar style—so totally different from that of her great rival, Alboni—taking the audience by surprise. Her first effort was the air "No, no" from the Huguenots, followed by an insipid Brindisi, entitled "L'ebbrezzo." In the second portion she created a profound sensation by the energetic style in which she gave the world-famous "Il Segreto," from Lucrezia Borgia. This air, which displayed all her peculiarities most advantageously, was rapturously encored. Such a dramatic style of singing was assuredly never before witnessed in the Philharmonic-hall, and we best describe the sensation Madlle. Angri created, by saying that she absolutely startled the audience. Her low notes were here most effectively produced, and advantageously displayed the full extent of her rich contralto voice. This triumph was succeeded by another, viz., a brilliant rondo from Macfarren's new serenata, The Sleeper Awakened, entitled "Gone; he's gone!" descriptive of the sensations of a wife during the unaccountable absence of her husband. The abrupt transition from rage to love, and the brilliancy with which the difficult fiorituri were overcome, caused this display of Madlle. Angri's versatile talents to excite unwonted enthusiasm: she was again uproariously encored, and repeated the air with increased effect. Madlle. Graumann, who possesses a mezzo-soprano voice of moderate compass, sang two airs in a coldy-correct style, which, though they excited no unfavourable symptoms, fell flat upon the audience.

Herr Ernst was most enthusiastically received, and played in his usual style of unsurpassable excellence. Every hearing convinces us that he has no superior; and whether we look at mere mechanical facility, or the deep poetic feeling he throws into every note, we can only wonder and admire; for mere words cannot adequately describe the sensations he creates. On this occasion he played one of Spohr's Concertos, a duet with Mr. Frank Mori, and some capricci of his own composition on Hungarian airs. In this latter piece—consisting of a series of piquant melodies—he created every possible difficulty, only to shew the ease with which they were overcome. The audience, though seldom fond of lengthy instrumental solos, relished Ernst's playing most highly, and the applause he received was frequent and spontaneous.

M. Jules Stockhausen sang the celebrated air from Zampa, "Toi dont la grace seduisante," and a serenade from The Sleeper Awakened, very tastefully. He possesses a fine voice, which has evidently been carefully cultivated; and as he sings with considerable expression and feeling, we fully expect him to take a high rank in the arduous profession he has chosen. Signor S. Tamburini's voice is not remarkable for power and quality. He sang an aria from Don Pasquale, which created no great effect. Of Mr. F. Mori's talent as a pianist we had little opportunity of judging, for, as he only played twice—once with Ernst, in a duet, and another time as accompanist to Madlle. Angri—he had but little chance for displaying those talents which we have been assured he possesses. The choir were encored twice—once in Wilbye's madrigal, "Flora gave me fairest flowers," and the chorus from Athalie, "Depart, depart." In the latter the light and shade, or what our French friends call the nuances, were most artistically rendered.

The band, which appears to have been somewhat reinforced and remodelled, played Haydn's military symphony in G and the overture to Athalie in a highly praiseworthy manner. The minuetto and trio in the former were much applauded.

* Royal Italian Opera, if it pleases you, Master Freeman, not Her Majesty's Theatre.—(Ed.)

† Not Signor Tamburini, good sir, but Signor Salvator Tamburini, son of the Signor Tamburini.—(Ed.)

‡ Wrong again, good Freeman—Signor Tamburini and Herr Stockhausen did not sing "La ci darem," it must have been Mademoiselle Angri and one of these gentlemen.—(Ed.)

§ Query!—Did Ernst play Beethoven's Symphony?—(Ed.)

The great fault of the concert was its inordinate length. There was novelty in plenty; but in music, as in other things, there may be too much of a good thing. The programme of the next concert of the Philharmonic Society, which takes place on the 4th of March, will principally consist of selections from the works of Sir Henry Bishop, on which occasion the powers of the chorus will be severely tested.

Mr. H. Beale has engaged Madlle. Angri and Messrs. Ernst, S. Tamburini, J. Stockhausen, F. Mori, Baetens, Lidel, and Hawson, for a concert at the Royal Assembly Rooms, on the 3rd of March next.

At our Theatre Royal, Mr. Hackett, an actor of transatlantic celebrity, has appeared as Falstaff, in Henry IV., and several Yankee farces. He possesses considerable dry humour, but is sadly deficient in that unctuous vivacity so necessary to make a perfect representative of the fat, witty, and cowardly knight. Miss Helen Faucit appears on Monday, in Marston's new and successful play of Philip of France and Marie de Meranie.

At the Royal Amphitheatre M. Franconi has this week produced a novelty of a most pleasing and attractive description, namely, a series of animated tableaux, descriptive of the recent triumph of the British arms in the Punjab. The dresses and appointments of the representatives of the British and Sikh officers and soldiers were life-like and picturesque, while the skirmishes and evolutions were much more animated and real than theatrical representations of military events usually are. The performances have been nightly witnessed by crowded audiences.

MANCHESTER.—(From our own Correspondent).—Mr. C. A. Seymour's third quartet concert, at the Town Hall, Chorlton-upon-Medlock, took place on Wednesday evening. The following is the programme:—

PART I.

Quartet—Pianoforte, Violin, Tenor, and Violoncello—
Messrs. C. Hallé, Seymour, Baetens, and Lidel—
(In F Minor, Op. 2) - - - - - Mendelssohn.
Quartet—Two Violins, (Messrs. Thomas and Seymour)
Tenor and Violoncello (Baetens and Lidel)—(No.
5, in B Flat) - - - - - Mozart.
Sonata—Pianoforte—(In E Flat, Op. 7) - - - - - Beethoven.

PART II.

Duo Concertante—Violin and Violoncello—Messrs. { Schubert and Baetens and Lidel—On Airs from "William Tell" } Kummer.
Miscellaneous Selection:—
Pianoforte—Prelude and Fugue—(In F Minor) - - - - - Mendelssohn.
Impromptu—(In A Flat) - - - - - Chopin.
Grand Quintet—Two Violins, (Messrs. Seymour and Thomas),—Two Tenors, and violoncello—(In E Flat) - - - - - Beethoven.

Having missed the two first concerts, we put ourselves to some inconvenience in straining a point to be present at the third, out of respect for Mr. Seymour, setting aside the great treat we knew to be in store for all who could attend. We were sorry to see the room by no means so full as it ought to have been, from the talent engaged and displayed at these classical concerts. We very much doubt if the clever leader will gain anything beyond his expenses, or even clearing them, if he gives his brother artists their full terms.

The pianoforte quartet of Mendelssohn (in F minor, op. 2) was a noble beginning—the executants being Mr. Charles Hallé, Messrs. Seymour, Baetens, and Lidel. The first movement (allegro molto) brought out in turns all the four instruments (but of course the pianoforte principal). To this succeeded the beautiful and dirge-like adagio—sung now by the strings, then on the keys, and accompanied by the one or the other alternately—which produced a thrilling effect on the audience, and obtained the most marked applause of any performance the whole evening. Nothing could be more delicately given. The intemezzo is a short prelude in lieu of scherzo or minuet to the finale (allegro molto vivace), which is a brilliant movement in Mendelssohn's best manner. This quartet of itself was a great treat. As if by way of contrast, after a few minutes pause or breathing time, a stringed quartet of Mozart's (No. 5 in B flat) was given—Mr. C. W. Thomas taking first violin, Mr. Seymour the second, Messrs. Baetens and Lidel of course being tenor and violoncello. The quartet went as smooth as possible. It was admirably played by the four. Seymour is certainly a very competent second violin: Baetens and Lidel all that can be desired on their respective instruments. Mr. Thomas I heard for the first time; he is a very clever violinist, with much purity and great powers of tone. Occasionally he was a little harsh and loud in his higher notes, but this might be the fault of a refractory first string—(Oh! these first strings, why cannot they all be perfect?) Hallé wound up the first part in magnificent style with one of those matchless performances of his—a solo sonata of Beethoven (the one in E flat, op. 7). I do not think he could have chosen one more calculated to display his peculiar talents to perfection. The amazingly retentive memory, not of mere notes alone, but of every shade and grade of expression—the intuitive perception of his author's intention, which so identifies Hallé with Beethoven as to make these sonatas seem like improvisations of his own—the wonderful combination of extreme delicacy with extreme power and brilliancy at the same time, causes the performances to be perfectly unique, unsurpassable in their way by any other artist, and impossible to be described or done justice to by my humble pen. The allegro is pre-eminently grand and beautiful, with a lovely subject that reminds one remotely of the obligato accompaniment to his own "Adelaide," and then to a March of his, in another place. This movement was warmly applauded. The adagio was no less beautiful, although so widely contrasted in character, and narrowly escaped an encore. The scherzo is short, wayward, and fanciful, although not so grotesque as some of his scherzos. The finale is full of grand harmonies, splendidly expressed by Hallé. I was quite sorry when the sonata was finished.

Beatens and Lidel had a chance of shewing their talent in the duo concertante which opened the second part on airs from William Tell.—It was a very masterly display by both—the stopping of Baetens on his violin in some very extreme intervals was exceedingly neat and smooth and Lidel's tone and execution were equally fine. At the same time I must say that the "air varie" School did not tell so well after the Sonata. Hallé again gave us a taste of his power in Mendelssohn's fugue. It was an extraordinary performance, the independent action of the two hands working out the fugue with all the resistless impetuosity of mountain torrents: to this was contrasted a short impromptu of Chopin, and Hallé took his leave amidst loud applause. Beethoven's quintet with two tenors constituted the finale to this excellent concert, Mr. Hallé's German friend the amateur, who has so frequently assisted at his concert, taking the second tenor; Mr. Seymour resuming his place as first, and Mr. Thomas taking the second violin. It was a very fine performance by all. Mr. Seymour would have been irreproachable in the first violin part but for some slight slips, as it appeared to be from careless bowing; but why look for specks when the whole was so good. I hope to see Mr. Seymour's fourth and last concert of the series attended as it deserves to be. If so the room will be crowded. I see it is announced for the 27th March. Ernst, with Angri, Graumann, Tamburini and Stockhausen were at the Concert Hall here on Monday last, and had a very large audience. The Prince of Violinists created an immense sensation. Few can play as he does when he is in the vein. Angri also roused her audience to a state of enthusiasm. I was sorry I could not attend and report more largely.

SHEFFIELD.—(From a Correspondent).—On Thursday last Mr. John Parry gave his entertainment, Notes "Vocal and Instrumental," at the Music Hall. The front and back seats were nearly full, and presented a brilliant appearance. The chief point that was admired was the "Piano taught in six lessons;" but we must not forget "The Artist," in delineating which Mr. Parry plays the piano, imitates the cornet-a-piston, and draws a very good face. Altogether the entertainment caused great mirth, and was generally thought to be not much inferior to "Lights and Shadows of Social Life."—On Friday evening the Athenæum gave a concert, with Mrs. Sunderland, Mr. F. Bodda, Mr. Hird, Mr. Willy, and Herr Hausman. The attendance was chiefly confined to members, and is not a public affair. I therefore shall only say it gave general satisfaction. I enclose a programme.—The Ernst and Angri party give a concert here on the 26th, a full account of which I will send.

BATH.—The second of M. Jaques' Classical Chamber Concerts took place on Saturday; and the numerous audience proves the high estimation in which they are justly held, while the judicious selection of pleasing as well as erudite music makes them as attractive to the uninitiated as to the scientific amateur. The instrumental artists were Herr Hausman (violin), Mr. R. Blagrove (tenor), M. Jaques (pianoforte), and M. Sainton (principal violin); this being, we believe, the first appearance of the last-named in Bath. M. Sainton fully sustained the high reputation which had preceded him, and charmed his auditory by his exquisite tone, refined expression, and facile execution of the most perplexing difficulties. We are embarrassed what to point out as the most attractive features of the concert, but among them appeared 'to us the following:—the second movements, "Largo assai" and "Allegro con Brio," of Haydn's quartett in G minor—the "Andante con variazioni," and "Presto finale," in Beethoven's grand sonata (dedicated to Kreutzer), for the pianoforte and violin. These were rendered with great skill by MM. Jaques, Sainton, Blagrove, and Hausman, showing them to be worthy interpreters of the wondrously varied ideas of the master. We should add to the foregoing the quartett by Mendelssohn, in the second act, which was full of the beauties and gems of melody with which the works of this lamented maestro are replete, while its scientific combinations were exquisitely evolved by all the artists engaged in it. Between the acts was a solo on the violin, introducing the airs from Don Pasquale, which were charmingly arranged and delightfully performed by Herr Hausman, combining the beauties of vocal as well as instrumental music. Mr. R. Blagrove played a concerto of De Beriot's on the concertina with his usual skill, eliciting tones resembling those of the finest wind instruments—the flute, hautboy, and clarinet. The vocal portions of the concert were Marcello's duett, "Qual analante," by Mr. and Mrs. Pyne, and Mozart's "Batti, batti," given by Mrs. Pyne with refined taste. She was most effectively supported by Herr Hausman's violoncello obligato. —Bath Herald.

LEICESTER.—(From a Correspondent.)—The last grand evening concert of the season was given on Monday evening in the New Hall, which was crowded to excess by the rank and fashion of both town and country. The great success attendant upon this series of concerts has sufficiently demonstrated that good music interpreted by good artists will always prove a lucrative speculation. During the season we have had, as vocalists, Mrs. Sims Reeves, Mrs. A. Newton, Mrs. Sunderland, Miss M. Williams, Miss Helen Taylor (R. A. of music), Mr. Sims Reeves (twice), Mr. Lockey (twice), Mr. Henry Phillips, Mr. Bodda, and Mr. Machin:—as solo instrumentalists—Mr. Willy (violin), Mr. Hausmann (violin), the Brothers Nicholson (oboe and flute), with all the available talent in the neighbouring counties. Two miscellaneous concerts, and two Oratorios, The Messiah and The Creation, have been given, the latter produced under the immediate superintendence of Mr. Henry Gill (leader), whose unremitting exertions entitle him to the warmest thanks of both the directors and the public generally. Mr. Farmer, of Nottingham, on both occasions conducted the Oratorios. The programme on Monday evening was an excellent one, and we need only name the artists engaged to prove that it was rendered in a very superior manner—Mr. and Mrs. Sims Reeves, Mr. Bodda, Mr. Willy (violin), Mr. Nicholson (flute), Mr. Hausmann (violin), in addition to whom, the best of the local performers assisted, viz., Mr. Gill (second violin), Mr. Weston (viola), Mr. Smith (cornet-a-piston), Miss Deacon and Mr. Mavins (piano-forte).

PORTSEA.—The Distin family on Tuesday evening gave a concert at the Queen's-rooms, in which their unrivalled performance on the euphonic horns excited the utmost delight and enthusiasm. The vocal performers consisted of Miss Moriatt O'Connor, Mr. H. Distin, Mr. W. Distin, and Mr. Theodore Distin. Mr. Norman presided at the pianoforte. The gems of the concert were "Oh charming May," by Miss O'Connor; and the vocal quartette, by Miss M. O'Connor, and Messrs. H. T. and W. Distin; "Down in a Flowery Vale," by Miss M. O'Connor, and the Messrs. Distin, encored. Sonnambula on the alto sax-horn by Mr. H. Distin, loudly encored; fantasia on airs from the operas of Lucia di Lammermoor and Figlia del Reggimento on the sax-horns by Messrs. Distins, rapturously applauded. The buffo duet "Solo fa, or singing lesson," sung by Miss M. O'Connor and Mr. Theodore Distin, was encored as was the quartette, on the euphonic horns, by the Messrs. Distin, and the serenade "Sleep gentle lady," by Miss M. O'Connor and the Distin family. This was followed by a musical melange from Lucia, employing the talents of the whole party, and was received with bursts of applause. "God save the Queen" was the finale, when the audience rose en masse, and by their enthusiasm testified their loyalty and their heartfelt appreciation of the treat they had enjoyed. We hope the Distin Family will pay us another visit. We can promise them a warm welcome. The concert was arranged by Mr. Atkins, and was complete and satisfactory. —Portsmouth Times.

LEEDS.—(From a Correspondent.)—The second concert of the Leeds Madrigal and Motet Society, was given on Friday evening, the 31st ult., in the Stock Exchange Hall, before a numerous and most respectable audience. The principal vocalists were Miss Whitnall, of the Liverpool concerts; Miss Holroyd, of the Royal Academy of Music; and Mr. Winn, of the London concerts. The concert opened with Barnett's Madrigal, "Merrily wake Music's Measure," well sung by the choral members of the society, as was also Flower's part song, "Now pray we for our Country;" indeed, all the part songs and choruses, and especially the part song "Just like Love," were nicely and correctly rendered. The trio, "Give that wreath to me," sung by Middles. Whitnall and Holroyd, and Mr. Winn, was admirably sung. Miss Whitnall's voice is a sweet soprano, and her taste and feeling are unexceptionable, as was exemplified in this piece, as also in the solo part of "Daughter of Error," and the ballad "The wishing Gate," the last receiving an encore, which was responded to with another song. Miss Holroyd's voice is a mezzo soprano or perhaps contralto, full in quality, but of moderate power. Some degree of nervousness was observable when she commenced; but, notwithstanding, she evinced in her songs a correct and chastened taste, and gave proof of having studied with great care and under judicious and able professors. Her songs on this occasion were "Che faro" from Gluck's Orfeo, a duet with Miss Whitnall, "The Swallow's Passage," and a quartet with the same lady, Mr. Cawthra and Mr. Winn, "The Spirit of Britannia," composed by Mr. Spark. Miss Holroyd was very favourably received by the audience. Mr. Winn sang Wallace's song from Maritana, "This heart by woe o'er-taken," and elicited an encore. He also joined Miss Whitnall in a duet from Elisir d'Amore. A grand fantasia from Weber's Oberon, for piano and violin, by Mr. Spark and Mr. Haddock, and a violin solo by the latter, of Ernst, were ably played. The concert concluded with "God Save the Queen," the solos by Miss Whitnall and Mr. Winn. Mr. Spark, the musical director of the society, conducted the performances, and every praise is due to him for the admirable working order of his choral party. The Elijah was given here on Thursday evening last to an attentive—for Mendelssohn is adored here—but not a very numerous audience. Henry Phillips pleased amazingly, and the band and chorus, especially the latter, did their duty well. The only part of the Oratorio encored was the chorus in the second part, "Have ye not heard," in which the solo for the Queen was most spiritedly given by Master Dean, one of the choristers at Dr. Hook's church.—John Parry's gave his "Notes Vocal and Instrumental," on Friday. Jullien gives his annual concert in the Music Hall on the 17th instant; and Herr Ernst, with Augri, F. Tamburini, &c., will make his first appearance before a Leeds audience on the 25th instant. Both concerts will, I have no doubt, be well attended.

EDINBURGH.—On Saturday afternoon Mr. T. M. Mudie entertained a select and private circle of his friends, in the Hopetoun Rooms, with recitals of his latest compositions for the pianoforte—a species of performance to which we attach a more than ordinary feeling of pleasure, from the comfortable quietness attending it, and its admitting us to a more intimate acquaintance with the abilities and acquirements of the artist, than is perhaps to be derived from a first or second appearance in a concert room. We subjoin the programme:—L'Esperance—"Allegro Brillante—(published); Tema, originale, con variazioni—"Andante Lento e Solenne"—MS.; Study—For the practice of Arpeggios—not yet in MS.; 2do. Notturmo—"Andante con espressione"—not yet in MS.; Elfish Music—Sketch for a Fantasia—not yet in MS.; Fairy Revels and Chorus—"Presto e leggiero;" Two Melodies—I.—Romance—II.—Lied ohne Worte—MS.; Polka: "La Souvenir;" La Gentilezza—"Motivo Grazioso;" Allegro Marziale—Composed as a duet—(published). Where there is so much and attractive excellence displayed, we confess to a feeling of embarras du choix in giving preference to the different pieces that illustrated Mr. Mudie's quiet and finished pianoforte playing. It evidently belongs to what is called the Cramer school—offering a most satisfactory contrast to that string-breaking and instrument-destroying system which finds its representatives in too many players of the present day. We may say, generally, that Mr. Mudie's performances were highly successful, his execution being neat and graceful, and his taste and judgment irreproachable. The opening piece, "L'Esperance," pleased us greatly, from its variety of happy ideas, and the apt suggestiveness of its title. The Andante Lento e Solenne we thought less attractive, being rather too long and frequent in its repetitions, and partaking so much of the nature of tristesse as to fall a little heavy on the ear. We liked better the arpeggio "Study," and the "Notturmo," both of which displayed much talent. We were especially satisfied, however, with the "Fairy Sketch," and the subsequent "Two Melodies," the former an original and characteristic illustration of that class of descriptive composition to which the genius of Weber and Mendelssohn has been devoted, with what triumphant success let the overtures to Oberon and A Midsummer Night's Dream say—and the latter, a pair of as captivating melodies as we have ever enjoyed. Together with the "Elfish Sketch," they should be committed to the hands of the engraver with as little delay as need be.—(Courier.)

Original Correspondence.

HOME MADE MUSIC.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

"Zummerzetshire, Feb. 01st, 1851.

DEAR ZUR,—I dair zay you'l veel zurprizd at hearing vrom me But az i am a bit of a crochit has wel as tother things, I veels very much hinterested in that thare hart—I be glad to zee yourn paper as changed hands bekase what I read tother day about hinglish musickers I likd very much vor I had alway and hidear that the voriner always had the best zhare on it—i zuppose it be zame bee musick has tis by we poor varmers, poor deels be heaten hup by them rascals but I thinks times weel change e vore long but I musnt get out awe my place, lets get back to what I got to zay about musick I have been very vound o that all my loife and many a tackling I have had vor been zo vound awit vor my poor old vather uzed to zay darn the feller hees playing on thutley viddle instead of minding the sheepe, but howumsover I doe think a feller when hees got musick in him theres no driven aught hout him again Now I thinks as it regards hour hinglish musickians I think they be quite as clever fellers as theze here chaps tother zide the zea, for I was hinduced to go to one of theze great konzorts to hear a great fiddler for the vust time in this country I cant zay his name but I think the tail hend own was the sky or ski I am zad chap to remimber names, but weel always remember places vor if i have been once to a place I do alway zure to know it again, but howsohumever thisfeller didnt vrighten me zo much for his viddling as did vor his looks vor I thought he would heat hus all up he did look so hungry, but as the volks that was there zeem very much astoneshed, I zaid to myzelf I knows weel how theze fellers vrighten the volkes tis wi there airy muzzel and long wiry wigs, I was a bit more pleased with him than I was with a Hinglish viddler zome time back as I told he before I couldnt mind names very well, but I think had the zame name as those sticks they make Baskets awe, (wityh or willy) weel hed plaze me as well as that chap that came vrom the sky wel I haired another Hinglish viddler I cant vind his name in my head but I think had a raw of happle trees to the head awn, I have jist thought own, Blagrove thats his name, now I thought heed play in a very zensible manner hand I likd it very much the feller had a clain vace to, but I want to zay something about another hinstrument the Pianerforte, a noble thing tis to Mrs. Duckling played on it poor thing I heard she played herself to daith tother day, that was a very vind Pianer she had wasnt it I think he was made Mr. Her Hard, can he give me hany hidear about them cheap ones I zee hadvertized zo much My daughter had a piece of Music tother day from Lunnen and the back aut was covered all hover with them instruments they are called the Condoles, I think they wid be very good things to have as I zuppose they will either zend one to zleep or zooth one vrom their troubles—which his a very good hinvencion in those days they tell me that there is a veller got a fine shaw of em in a Garden zome where in Linin I haired that there was a little chap honly ten year hold, that came out of the last Londin vog I spoze, that got a head zo big that the noates tumble hout down upon the kays of the Pianeforte but vancy this little creature branken viftry wires of the Condoles—but as the chap grows them the late rains have made them rather wattery I spoze there now I hope I zhall zee a little more about hinglish musickers zhortly poor vellers tis to be hoped we varmers and the Hinglish Musickers may overcome these vorienagers arter hall

"Yours resp.

"VARMER ZHARP"

LOVE'S SIMILE.

BY ANDREW PARK,

Author of "The Queen of Merry England."

A dew-drop lay
In a rosebud gay,
- And a little red Robin sat chirping nigh;
Oh, fain would it sip
From the rose-bud's lip—
For his breast was warm and his throat was dry.
Round and round did he hop
In the faith it would drop—
His little eye twinkled to gaze on the gem,
Till a bee in its flight
On the blossom did light,
And scattered the dew o'er its beckoning stem.

And such is true love—
That spell from above!
Which we, in our happiness, wish to caress;
But trembling before
The maid we adore
The soul-soften'd passion we fail to express.
And some one more bold,
With a bosom more cold,
Bereaves us of that which we wish to obtain,
And soon scattered away
Are the smiles of the gay,
And maiden and lover but languish in vain!

THE REV. THOS. HARVEY.—At a private meeting of the friends and supporters of this gentleman, held yesterday morning at Maquetra, a portrait executed at their request by Mr. Harris, a London artist well known to the public, was presented, amidst general expressions of affection and esteem. Many interesting and animated speeches were delivered upon the occasion by those who had long known and valued Mr. Harvey as a friend, and had been edified by his teachings as a minister of the Gospel, who whilst they sympathised with their clergyman in a mental suffering extended through a long period of years, were able to testify, from their own experience, to the efficiency of his public ministrations and the charities which have adorned his private career. It has never been our good fortune to attend a meeting more truly pervaded by the spirit of good will and cordiality; and we gladly echo the sentiment to which each person present gave expression—that Mr. H. may long be permitted to labour in a sphere in which he has already achieved so large an amount of good, and so truly won that confidence and appreciation without which the most gifted preacher toils in vain.—Boulogne Gazette.

Reviews of Music.

"SIX LIEDER OHNE WORTE."—Seventh Book of Original Melodies for the Piano-forte—FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLODY—Ewer and Co.

The above forms No. 14 of the posthumous works, which, it must be confessed, have issued very slowly from the press. For the great mass of the public who are sufficiently endowed to appreciate the merits of the greatest musical composer since Beethoven, the "Songs without words" present a facility of communion with his genius, which can rarely be obtained from the larger works for the choir and for the orchestra. Although occasionally difficult, they offer no obstacle to honorable perseverance, and the delightful feeling that must ensue when once they have been committed to memory, or even brought under the easy governance of the fingers, will repay, ten times over, whatever pains may have been expended in practising them. Not only their extreme beauty renders the "songs without words" generally agreeable and acceptable—even, we boldly assert, to drawing-room audiences—but their brevity is a great matter in their favour. The most indifferent to the charms of music will hardly feel tired during the performance of one of these innocent gems of melody, set in the newest and freshest harmony. And, what is better, the small tax they levy upon the patience, may, probably, win over many a listless hearer, to give his attention a second time, and a third, and until he unconsciously acquires a faith, an interest, and perchance a love, for music. Much has already been effected in this way, through their means, and had Mendelssohn done nothing more than this for the art, he would have been entitled to the gratitude and esteem of every true musician.

The present book of "Lieder," like its predecessors, is literally crammed with beauties—beauties that familiar and increased acquaintance only makes more attractive. We shall not criticise them—they are but flowers of thought, coloured by the momentary train of feeling out of which they sprang. To analyse them would be absurd; to seek for faults in that which displays the veriest perfection of finish, is labour lost, and unworthily lost. We shall simply designate them by pointing out the peculiar character and key of each.

No. 1, in F major, Andante Espressivo, is a sweet, pensive melody, with a flowing arpeggio accompaniment—easy to play and certain to please. The modulations few, and adding expression and variety to the sentiment. The effect of an Æolian harp will be probably suggested to the poetical ear by the appropriate performance of this lied.

No. 2, in A minor, Allegro Agitato, is more difficult; its characteristic is melancholy, connected with a certain feeling of mystery. With romantic temperaments it will be a special favourite.

No. 3, in E flat, Presto, is hard to execute, from two causes—the extreme quickness of movement, and the prevalence of reiterated chords in the accompaniment. It is passionate, vigorous, and intense.

No. 4, in D major, Andante Sostenuto, is another flowing and expressive melody, in which the arpeggio style of accompaniment is used in a different manner from that adopted in No. 1. While somewhat more difficult, it is in every respect as natural and beautiful; perhaps the melody is developed with even more freedom.

No. 5, in A major, Allegretto, will be regarded by many as the gem of the set. It is in one of those light and tripping movements in which Mendelssohn was so completely himself. We can see but one fault in it—its brevity.

No. 6, in B flat, Allegretto con moto, is our favourite. The melody is exquisitely fresh, and the accompaniment, while demanding crispness and decision of touch, is in the highest degree effective. Its general style is suggested by the composer's own indication of time and character.

On the whole, the 7th, and we presume the last, book of the Lieder Ohne Worte, which, fully worthy of a place by the side of its six predecessors, is more generally easy to execute than any of them—a distinction, by the way, which is not likely to decrease the sale.

To add that these "songs"—these real and unaffected melodies—should be on the desk of every pianist, amateur, and professional, is to conclude with nothing better than a truism. It is, indeed, doubtful whether the musical profession counts one individual in its ranks who could fail to be deeply interested in all that remains yet to be published of the great and immortal Mendelssohn.

"GRAND QUADRILLE FANTASTIQUE, THE CRYSTAL PALACE, as performed at Her Majesty's Theatre.—SCIPION ROUSSELOT. Reduced from the score and arranged for the Pianoforte by L. F. A. Frelon. Rousselet and Co.

Mr. Frelon has effected his task with good skill, having simplified the score of Mr. Rousselet's quadrille without in the least interfering with its artistic treatment. The pianoforte arrangement is modest to a degree, and comes within the mastery of a very moderate performer. No doubt that by players of dance tunes at sight this will be recognised as a boon.

No. 1 of the Crystal Palace Quadrille belongs to the northern nation: it is "The Croats March." The tune is singularly primitive. It has undergone but little change in the necessary adaptation.—No. 2 is the famous "Trab, Trab," which Jetty Treffz has made famous by her singing, for in itself we see but little to warrant its immense reputation. This quadrille of course appertains to the German nation. The variation ad libitum is excellent.—France supplies No. 3 with the favourite air "Ah! vous dirai-je maman." Of this beautiful old tune we have nothing to say, except that it has undergone considerable contortions to befit it for a quick dance tune. The time is altered to 6-8. Mr. Rousselet borrows No. 4 from an old Belgic national air. The air no doubt is highly national, and especially old, and undoubtedly Belgic, and agreeable enough withal, though something square cut and formal; but Mr. Rousselet, we fancy, having provided us with French and German numbers should have travelled farther than Belgium, and fared no worse perhaps, in search of national contributions for his Grand Crystal Quadrille. Russia, Hungary, Bohemia, Turkey, Negroland, Australia,—what had Italy and Spain done to be omitted?—America, China, the Sandwich Islands, Nova Zembla, and hundreds of other places were ready to his hand, but Mr. Rousselet rejected all for this old national square cut melody of Belgium. The old melody is all the better for being stirred into animation by a brilliant variation ad libitum. England and Ireland conjointly furnish No. 5—John Bull supplying "The Roast Beef of old England," and Paddy "The girl I left behind me." Did Mr. Rousselet intend to comment on the masticating propensities of one nation, and the gallantry of the other, by this double quadrille? This number winds up the set admirably, and brings the whole to a lively and rejoicing termination.

The purchaser may obtain the above for two or four hands, Mr. Frelon having arranged the quadrille separately for one or two performers.

"THE VOICE THAT BIDS US WELCOME," ballad; written by J. E. CARPENTER, composed by W. T. WRIGHTON. Brewer and Co.

The words of this song are not worthy of Mr. Carpenter's best moments. The sentiment is common and used up, and the diction is by no means harmonious; the feeling, nevertheless, is not to be despised. Mr. Wrighton is far happier in his music. He has found a very effective and well-marked tune, in good keeping with the words; and has supplied simple and appropriate accompaniments. This song is written low, to suit a contralto or barytone voice.

"DERMOT AND KATHLEEN," ballad; written by HENRY JOHN RYDE, composed by W. H. ALDRIDGE. T. E. Purday.

The words of this song are serio-comico, and are redolent of genuine Hibernian flavor. Mr. Aldridge's tune is peculiarly pleasing and fanciful, but smacks not of the brogue. If well sung, and well acted, "Dermot and Kathleen" would tell effectively in the concert room.

"OH THE MERRY, MERRY SPRING," ballad; Written by C. MAC-KAY, composed by MISS MOUNSEY. T. E. Purday.

Words and air both find favour in our eyes. The fair composer has been fortunate with the tune. It is light, sparkling, and graceful—a very spring tune, reminding one of the morning breeze and the laughing waters, and the cheerful skies. The accompaniments are in accordance with the character of the air, free and unforced; but betokening, notwithstanding, the taste and feeling of the musician.

"THE MANOR POLKA," by Frederico.—Shepherd.

There seems no end to the category of polkas, yet will "The Manor Polka" lose nothing in being placed by the side of its rivals. It is an agreeable little morceau, and will, no doubt, become a ladies' favourite.

Our Scrap Book.

MUSICAL ANALYSIS.—There is another objection, which is very freely made, and which must not be left without an answer, as it is specious, and may give rise to doubts even in well-constituted minds. "Beware of all this science," say those who are under the dominion of an unconquerable indolence; "it only weakens your pleasures. The arts procure us enjoyment only as their effects are unforeseen. Do not seek, therefore, to acquire a knowledge, the result of which will enable you to judge rather than to feel." All this reasoning is founded upon the following axiom of philosophy: "Feeling is the result of perception; judgment of comparison." But the improvement of the organ of hearing, which results from an observation of the effect of sounds, is nothing more than the means of perceiving better, and of thereby increasing the amount of its enjoyments. For this reason, attention is necessary for all, while none can derive much advantage from imperfect knowledge. Every body passes judgment upon music; some under the influence of blind instinct, and very hastily; others by means of a cultivated taste and with reflection. Who will venture to say that the first is better than the last.—Extracted from —; by Aurelian.

SINGERS.—When a singer, endowed with a fine voice, with intelligence and feeling, and who has devoted several years of his life to bringing out, by study, the qualities nature has given him;—when, I say, this singer comes to try for the first time, in public, the effect of those advantages which seem to ensure him success, and suddenly finds his hopes disappointed, he accuses the public of injustice, and the public treats him as ignorant and presumptuous. In this case, both parties are in the wrong; for, on the one hand, he who is not familiar with his own powers, but by the effect which they have produced in the school, is not in a condition to make a proper use of them in the presence of a numerous assembly, and in a large hall; and, on the other, the public is in too great haste to judge by its first impressions, having neither sufficient experience nor knowledge to discern the good which is mingled with the bad, nor to take into account the circumstances which may prevent a favourable exhibition of the singer's talents. How often does the public itself revise its own judgments, for want of having passed them at first with a proper knowledge of the case! So many things are to be attended to in the art of singing, that, without having made it a particular study, or having learned by reflection and experience in what it consists, it is very difficult to judge of a singer, at the first hearing, either in regard to his merits or defects.—Extracted from —; by Aurelian.

Miscellaneous.

Mr. Charles Horsley's new Oratorio, David, will be performed at Exeter Hall on the 24th instant.

THE PANTOMIMES AND THE LORD CHAMBERLAIN.—The incidents of Haynau's visit to Bankside, as every playgoer knows, have been seized on by the authors of some of the pantomimes of the season. After the lapse of more than a month the Lord Chamberlain has seen fit to take official notice of this personal reference, and in one instance to request its omission. In consequence of the suggestion of the Lord High Chamberlain, conveyed through Sir William Martin, two comic scenes were last week cut out of the pantomime at Astley's, one representing the exterior of Barclay's brewery, with draymen, horses, &c.; the other the bedroom of the public-house in which the baron took refuge. Among other pieces, the representation of which has been stopped by the authorities at the Chamberlain's office, may be mentioned the hippo-dramatic spectacle of Turpin's Ride to York, which has been played on the boards of most of the metropolitan and provincial theatres for the last thirty-five years. The performance of Jack Sheppard and Oliver Twist has also been interdicted.—Morning Herald.

MACREADY.—After the performance of Julius Cæsar, at the Haymarket Theatre, on a recent occasion, Mr. Macready presented Mr. Howe with a massive Roman gold ring, accompanied with a few expressive words, requesting his acceptance of the gift, for the delight and satisfaction he had experienced by his truthful and energetic representation of the character of Marc Antony.

MRS. SHELLEY, authoress of "Frankenstein," "The Last Man," &c., and widow of the late Percy Bysshe Shelley, the poet, died on the 1st instant, at her residence in Chester-square, aged 53.

THE MANCHESTER KEMBLE CLUB.—This club held their second anniversary at the Alton House, Market-street, on Wednesday evening, the 29th ult., when about twenty gentlemen sat down to an excellent supper, provided by Mr. Thomas Till. The cloth being drawn, the chairman gave "the health of her most gracious Majesty the Queen," which with a number of other toasts was most heartily responded to. A scene from Richelieu was given with great spirit. A variety of songs and recitations added to the conviviality of the evening, which was maintained until a late hour.—Manchester Courier.

PARODI AND THE SICILIANS.—The same evening on which the citadel and last bastion of Palermo's fortifications were taken by the insurgents, amidst a combined scene of devastation of property and destruction of human life, the Palermitons sent a boat and deputation to fetch their favorite singer from on board the Sardinian man-of-war, in which she had sought protection, and that very night, when the streets were almost impassable from ruins, immense crowds assembled to hear Parodi sing in Norma.

PARISIAN CARICATURES.—Some admirable caricatures have appeared in the papers from time to time since the arrival of Jenny Lind in America. Last week, Char vari brought out the following:—A fat citizen of Boston is walking gravely along, with his left hand fixed in a frame: "Holloa! what's the matter?" cries a friend. "Oh! my friend," he replies, with an impassioned accent, "I have had the happiness to have this hand pressed by Jenny Lind, and I have had it framed!"—Again: Jenny is at a soiree. The lady of the house having written on her invitation cards, "We will have the Swedish Nightingale," approaches her and says with the most engaging air: "It would be very kind of you to sing us a little song." "It does not depend upon me," murmurs Jenny Lind, "Mr. Barnum has the key." So saying, she shows the lady a small padlock which Barnum has had the precaution to put on her lips before allowing her to go to the party.—Again: A dilettanti of Boston runs, his hair standing on end with enthusiasm, to one of his friends, to whom he exhibits an old boot, by the turn of which it is evident it has been worn a long time on the left foot. "I arrived too late," says he, for the sale; "they had already sold Jenny Lind's shoes for twenty thousand; I could only get one of Mr. Barnum's old boots, for which I paid one thousand dollars. Out! it is at any rate a souvenir."

NEW MUSICAL INSTRUMENT.—We are to have a concert on Friday evening, when a Mr. Wallack, a German, at present residing in Manchester, will introduce a novel instrument never yet publicly heard here, called the "mundharmonika." Having had the privilege of a private hearing, we can assure our musical friends that there is much to admire, both in the instrument and the style of playing it by Mr. Wallack.—Manchester paper.

MR. HENRY BOYS died, aged 45, at Margate, on the 8th instant, of paralysis.

BOTTESINI.—The American journals are filled with eulogies on this double-bass player, whom they dub as the most extraordinary performer on his instrument ever known, and one of the world's wonders. A Havannah paper goes a little beyond this, and says Bottesini is a better composer than Donizetti. There is seldom fire without smoke—so it is said—and never smoke without some heat, but there must be a plenitude of burning matter, we say, to give fire to such a quantity of vapour as the following:—"Let us recur a moment to the wonderful Bottesini,—without doubt, and beyond all rivalry, the greatest performer upon the violone, in the world. At Salvi's benefit, he gave Paganini's Carnaval of Venice on this huge instrument with all the ease and effect of the most accomplished violinist. The harmonic tones which he draws, so gracefully, from the upper or G string of his instrument, are singularly powerful and beautiful. His shake is firm and faultless. Indeed, we must suspend our own comments, to give place to the rough remark of a bye-stander, which, in point of description, conveys a better idea of his playing than we could do by an elaborate essay:—"How anybody," said he, "can go over that great long thing [the neck of the instrument] and strike two notes at each end of it at once, with all the jigamies up and down [accompanying including harmonies], and not make any fuss about it nuther, is a little beyond my ideas." It is needless, though gratifying to add, that the honours awarded to the great artist were such as became such a performance. Bottesini, however, seems instinctively to shrink from notice, with that modesty which frequently accompanies superior genius. As a composer he is scarcely less inferior than as a performer. That ever fresh and strangely spiritual solo for the clarinet, which introduces the fourth scene of the first act of Lucia di Lammermoor, and which is so magnificently played by Signor Maatai, was composed by Bottesini, though the fact is not generally known. This solo, which occupies several minutes in its delivery, is ever listened to with breathless attention, and invariably calls forth a unanimous burst of applause, excited as much by the originality and brilliancy of the conception, as by the exquisite skill and taste of the performer. The credit of the composition is, of course, given, by many, to Donizetti (the composer of the opera), who, in his most happy moments (in our humble estimation), never reached anything half so pure and original as this clarinet prelude." Were it not that we have heard from undoubted authority the very highest reports of Signor Bottesini's talent, we should scarcely feel inclined to credit the extravagant praises of the American papers. That Signor Bottesini is a wonder on his instrument we are assured. That he is a better composer than Donizetti we doubt.

JULLIEN IN EDINBURGH.—The brilliant and crowded audience which assembled in the Music Hall on Monday night, on occasion of the first of the annual series of concerts of M. Jullien, was nothing more than what in the circumstances might have been reasonably anticipated. The name of il gran maestro has influence enough itself to secure for him an enthusiastic reception wherever he goes; but when it is stated that, independent of his own personal attraction, and in addition to all the old favourite performers, such as Pratten, Sounenberg, Koenig, Collinet, Jarrett, &c. his corps embraced that eminent vocalist, Mademoiselle Jetty Treffz—a host of attraction herself—and nothing less than a detachment of real live French drummers from la Garde Nationale de Paris, to say nothing of the horn-marvel, M. Vivier, the excitement with which the first evening was looked forward to, apart from the eagerness with which all the tickets for the two other concerts were all bought up on the following (Tuesday) morning, will be readily imagined. The programme was of an exceedingly varied and attractive character. It opened with the celebrated overture to William Tell, which was executed with a force and precision that called down the most rapturous acclamations. The exquisite playing of Mr. Collins on the violoncello, of Mr. Pratten on the flute, and of Mr. Winterbottom on the bassoon, was particularly observable, and well merited the applause which it received. This was followed by a beautiful andante by Beethoven, and some selections from Robert le Diable, both of which were given with great effect, and afforded various occasions for exemplifying the individual as well as collective qualities of the splendid band. We were next regaled with some pretty dance music, which of course was given with a brilliancy and expression such only as Jullien and his corps can impart to this style of composition. The great attraction of the evening, however, was the appearance of the French drummers above referred to, who were introduced in a new piece called the "Great Exhibition Quadrille." On presenting themselves they met with a very cordial reception, and under the leadership of M. Barbier, their tambour-major, they rattled away in a manner, which though it might occasionally be not altogether agreeable to those whose acoustic mechanisms were of the ordinary delicacy of construction,—yet still it did not fail to produce a very profound impression on the audience as to the excellence and regularity with which the time was kept. This singular precision was especially noticeable in the diminuendo sort of performance towards the close, when the loud rub-a-dub was made to decrease, till as it were it imperceptibly died away in the distance. Of the solo performers, Mr. Winterbottom on the bassoon, and M. Lavigne on the oboe, were particularly effective. M. Vivier, by his performance on the French horn, excited surprise at his marvellous powers, and created a positive furor. Passing, however, from the instrumentalists, to what was perhaps the great attraction of all to a large number of the audience—the single vocalist, Madlle. Jetty Treffz—we have only room further to say that her reception was most enthusiastic. The general opinion appeared to be that this lady has vastly improved since she was in Edinburgh formerly; and when, in her last song, she responded to a rapturous encore by substituting her own "Trab, Trab," the excitement of the audience knew no bounds, and the deafening acclamations were only quieted by her good humouredly giving it once more. Last night the audience was equally numerous, and not less enthusiastic. On the whole, M. Jullien may well be congratulated for the success with which he has this year been attended in Edinburgh—a success, however, which has not been greater than that which he every way deserved.—Caledonian Mercury.

MADMOISELLE RACHEL AND HER SISTER.—The Independence of Brussels has the following in a letter from Paris:—"It is known that Mdle. Rachel has several sisters who are, like her, actresses. The one who is most likely to establish a solid reputation is Mdle. Rebecca, who was recently received as a sociétaire by the Comédie Française. For this young and charming sister, Mdle. Rachel has a lively and almost maternal affection. Mdle. Rebecca has lately been performing with success the part of Catarini Bragadini, in Victor Hugo's Angelo, in which her sister has personated the principal character. The last time the two sisters performed together, Mdle. Rachel said, as they were leaving the stage after an enthusiastic recall, "My dear child, you have played like an angel; I will recompense you—let us go and sup at your house." "At my house!" exclaimed the young actress, greatly surprised, "you mean at my father's." "No, no! at your residence I say!" answered Mdle. Rachel. "What! are you embarrassed? Well, here are the keys." Shortly after the two sisters arrived in Mdle. Rachel's carriage in a pretty house in the Rue Mogador, close to the charming hotel which the great tragedian occupies in the Rue Trudon. Mdle. Rebecca fancied that she was in a dream, or playing a part in some fantastic comedy. They ascended to the second floor, and Mdle. Rachel then said, "Now open." At the same moment the door was opened, and a venerable-looking female servant appeared with a light. "What, is that you, Marguerite?" said the young actress, glad to see an old friend. "Now enter!" cried Mdle. Rachel, "and all is yours!" Mdle. Rebecca, almost stupefied, entered, and found ante-room, dining-room, drawing, bed, and dressing rooms, furnished in the most elegant style, and decorated with exquisite taste. On returning to the dining-room, a nice supper was seen smoking on the table, and Mdle. Rachel said, "The drawers are full of household linen—in the dressing-room you will find every article of linen and dress you can possibly require—one cellar is stocked with wood, another with wine, and the rent is paid a year in advance! Now let us sup, and do the honours!"

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—There will be a trial of new compositions by the Philharmonic, on the 12th of March. No persons in future will be admitted to the rehearsals but members of the Society.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.—The first of M. Billet's series of classical pianoforte concerts took place at the above hall last evening (Tuesday). This gentleman's claims to public favour are very great, for his efforts are uniformly devoted to the highest school of music. Although possessing sufficient manual dexterity to enable him to perform any of those modern extravagancies which form the repertoire of most of our fashionable pianists, M. Billet has good sense enough to prefer courting public attention as the exponent of the grand and subtle imaginings of the great masters, whose works he renders with a fire, discrimination, and mechanical mastery which few pianists could equal, to pandering to the bad taste of the age by aiming at the achievement of mere so-called "brilliant effects." From Bach and Handel, to Mendelssohn and Sterndale Bennett, his reading has extended. His studies have included all the loftiest productions of the best periods of art; and in whatever piece he executes, abundant evidence is shewn of an intimate acquaintance with his author's style and special beauties. Whether in the lofty and massive inspirations of Bach and Handel, the joyous strains of Haydn, the dulcet, love-breathing tones of Mozart, the wild and wonderful phantasies of Beethoven, or the graceful, spirituel, and impassioned beauties of Mendelssohn, his playing is alike truthfully characteristic. M. Billet, then, is a most valuable artist; and if his proceedings in the capacity of private teacher be as conscientious and honourable as those of his public career, his sojourn in this country cannot but contribute largely to the advance of musical art amongst us. The pieces selected for performance on this occasion were Beethoven's sonata in F sharp, a prelude and fugue in A flat, by Bach, a ditto in F by Handel, a sonata in C minor by Woelf, Mendelssohn's Andante con variazioni in E flat (posthumous work), Haydn's sonata in B minor, and a batch of studies by Steibelt, Cramer, Ries, Moscheles, and Chopin. In all of these M. Billet fully sustained the high character we have given him; and we were truly gratified to observe that his abilities were thoroughly appreciated by the audience. The applause bestowed upon his labours afforded one more proof of what we have often asserted, that when fine music is rendered with appropriate fire and expression, it never fails to produce its effect, even upon the uninitiated. It must of necessity do so, for it is more truthful, more natural, and paints passion and emotion more favourably than any other. The "whys and wherefores" are known only to the musician, but the result is felt by all. But in what manner is it delivered by many of our popular artists? What does the finest poetry become when recited in a cold, formal tone, without an atom of accent or emphasis? A positive bore. And it is the same thing with fine music. The works of the great masters are thus constantly marred in the performance. Many of our artists, both vocal and instrumental, think it necessary, whenever they essay a classical piece, to assume a stiff and glacial style, by means of which they think to impart a sort of reverential decorum to their performance. The fact is, that in nine cases out of ten, such persons being daily accustomed to a "different" kind of music, feel quite out of their element in great works, into the spirit of which they cannot enter, and feeling consequently constrained and ill at ease, are afraid to attempt expression lest it may betray some misconception. It is thus they freeze the genial current of their author's ideas, rendering him incomprehensible to some, and tedious to all. Such excellent concerts as that of last evening will always have our heartiest support; and we trust that all who like M. Billet venture upon the exclusive performance of works of high character may be adequately rewarded by the public.—Morning Post.

M. HENRI PANOFKA, the popular and talented composer and professor of singing, whose "Practical Singing Tutor" has been adopted by a number of our professors, among others Miss Dolby, has just finished a "Complete Method for all Voices," which will be published forthwith.

KENTISH TOWN LITERARY INSTITUTION.—The Members of this young Institution gave a very creditable performance of the Messiah on Monday evening in Trafalgar Place. The vocalists were the Misses Fuge, Newton, Mrs. Sheppard, Mrs. Matthews, and the Messrs. Wilkins, Naylor, Alderson, Yerlett, J. B. Husk, and Johnson. Mr. J. B. Husk obtained an encore in "Why do the Nations." We should recommend the conductor, Mr. Husk, to attend more particularly in future to Handel's time. The "Hallelujah" Chorus and "The people walked in darkness" were taken much too fast. Mr. Richard Ward, who played the trumpet, should be especially noticed. His tone is clear and true, and he bids fair to become no small addition to the orchestra. This Institution is entitled to encouragement, and will no doubt obtain it at the hands of the public.

NOVEL CONCERT.—On Friday, the 24th January, a concert was given in the Public Rooms, Ripon, by Mr. T. Sowerby, organist of Trinity Church, assisted by Miss M. Hargraves, Miss J. Pickles, and Mr. W. Hutchinson, from Leeds, to one of the most fashionable and crowded audiences we ever witnessed. The chief attraction was that all the performers were blind, and still they executed the pieces in a manner which would have done credit to those who do not labour under such a disadvantage. Many of the pieces were encored, and they were all received with great applause. On the previous Tuesday the same party gave a concert at Kirby Malzeard, and on Thursday at Boroughbridge, at both of which places they had crowded and respectable audiences.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

We have stopped the press to say we have just received the Prospectus for 1851. We have not room this week to enter upon details. One of the items will be hailed with delight by the opera-loving public; namely the engagement of the unrivalled ALBONI. The prospectus contains a strong array of talent, and includes several new names and many interesting particulars, all of which will be discussed next week.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Proprietors of the MUSICAL WORLD beg to remind those Subscribers who have not yet forwarded their Subscriptions, that unless the same be paid to MESSRS. MYERS and Co., 37, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, prior to the publication of the next number, they must discontinue forwarding it. Those Subscribers who may have paid MR. W. S. JOHNSON (the late Publisher), in advance for the present year, will please to send an order to MESSRS. MYERS and Co., to receive the money from him.

For the convenience of our West-End Subscribers, Advertisers, and Correspondents, Messrs. WESSEL and Co., 229, REGENT STREET, have kindly consented to receive Advertisements, Subscriptions, and Communications for the Editor.

Advertisements.

A POLLONICON.

TUESDAYS, THURSDAYS, SATURDAYS—Mornings, at Two, Evenings, at Eight; Miss Poole, Mr. and Mrs. Donald King, and Miss Mesent. The Proprietor has great pleasure in announcing the engagement of these delightful Vocalists in addition to the usual Apollonicon performances. Admission s.; Royal Music Hall, adjoining Lowther Arcade.

NEW SONGS, &c.

Are we less happy now?	Charles W. Glover	...	2s.
Joy is a bird	Ditto	...	2s.
In dreams thou'rt with me still	Ditto	...	2s.
Where is my loved one?	E. J. Loder	...	2s.
Dermot and Kathleen	W. H. Aldridge	...	2s.
O the merry spring	Miss Mounsey	...	2s.
Beautiful island of light	S. Nelson	...	2s.
There is no land like our own	W. Wilson	...	2s.
Topilas's New Sabbath Melodies No. 13
Butter little children to come unto me, No. 14
Cast thy bread on the waters, and No. 15
O had I the wings of a dove

T. E. PURDAY, 50, St. Paul's Church Yard.

MR. WILLIAM STERNDALÉ BENNETT'S WORKS.

THE whole of Mr. W. S. BENNETT'S WORKS, formerly published by Mr. Coventry, of Dean-street, are now published only by Messrs. Addison and Helliier, 910, Regent-street; and Messrs. Leader and Cock, 43, New Bond-street, corner of Brook-street; of whom all Mr. W. S. Bennett's compositions, both vocal and instrumental, are to be had for the future.

HAYDN'S ORATORIO, CREATION,

ARRANGED for the Organ or Pianoforte (with Vocal Score), by E. STURGES. Folio type, edition, boards, 10s., in cloth and lettered, 12s., half-bound in calf and lettered, 15s.; plate edition, folio, 21s., with a splendid portrait of the Composer, from a bust taken from life.

The Anthem, "IN THAT DAY," composed and respectfully dedicated by permission to His Royal Highness Prince Albert, by George J. Elvey, Mus. Doc. Oxen private organist to Her Majesty, and organist of St. George's Chapel, Windsor. Price 4s.; single vocal parts, 3s. 6d. Orchestral parts printing. Persons wishing to have the music as performed by the London Sacred Harmonic Society, should order Sarman's Exeter Hall Edition, office, No. 9 in Exeter Hall. The proper allowance to the trade and profession.

MEYERBEER'S GRAND OPERA,

LE PROPHETE, complete with French and Italian words, 42s. Arrangement of the same by Calloott, Osborne, Benedict, Brinley Richards, Herr, Burgmüller, and Thalberg, as single pieces and duets for the pianoforte.

Meyerbeer's Grand Opera, THE CAMP OF SILEZIA, in Two Books, as solos and duets by Calloott and Diabelli.

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 301, Regent Street.

MR. JOHN THOMAS,

PRINCIPAL Harpist at Her Majesty's Theatre, and Professor at the Royal Academy of Music, has the honour to announce that he has returned to London, and that his season for giving instruction on the HARP has now commenced.

He begs also to state that he has established CLASSES for instruction in

HARMONY AND COMPOSITION.

One Class, consisting of Ladies only, meets on Wednesdays; and another, of Gentlemen, on Fridays. The lessons commence each evening at 7 o'clock.

All communications from those desirous of either taking private lessons, or of joining the classes, to be forwarded to Mr. Thomas, at his residence, No. 27, GRAFTON STREET, FITZROY SQUARE.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.

CONDUCTOR, Mr. COSTA.—Wednesday, Feb. 26, Handel's Oratorio, SAUL. Vocalists: Misses Birch, Dolby, Mr. Benson, Mr. T. Williams, Mr. Weiss, and Mr. Lawler. The Orchestra (including 16 double basses), will consist of nearly 700 performers. Tickets, 3s.; Reserved seats in Area or Gallery, 5s.; Central Area, numbered seats, 10s. 6d.; at the Society's sole Office, No. 6, Exeter Hall, or of Mr. Bowley, of 53, Charing Cross.

LONDON SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.

ON Friday next, Feb. 21st, will be repeated Haydn's CREATION and Dr. Elvey's new anthem. Vocalists, Miss Birch, Mr. Lockey, and Mr. H. Phillips, with orchestra of 800 performers. Tickets 2s., 5s., 7s., and numbered seats 10s. 6d. each, at the office of the Society 9, Exeter Hall, and the principal Music Sellers. The Messiah will be performed on Friday the 28th inst.

ROYAL MUSIC HALL, ADELAIDE STREET, STRAND.

SIGNOR MONTELLI'S Fourth Grand Vocal and Instrumental Concert will take place on MONDAY EVENING, February 17th. Doors open at 7 o'clock. Concert commences at Eight precisely. Admissions—Stalls, 3s.; Upper Boxes, 5s.; Balcony Seats, 1s. 6d.; Upper Balcony, 1s. All particulars may be obtained of Agent, W. Ollivier, Concert Agent, 19, Old Bond Street. Programme changed every evening.

MR. AND MISS RANSFORD

BEG to acquaint their friends and pupils that they have removed from 461, New Oxford Street, to their new residence, 55, WELBECK STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, where they request all future communications may be addressed to them.

London, Feb. 15th, 1851.

M. SCIPION ROUSSELOT

HAS the honor to announce to the Members of the BEETHOVEN QUARTETT SOCIETY, and to Musical Amateurs, that he will give a series of THREE PERFORMANCES OF CLASSICAL MUSIC, FOR INSTRUMENTS AND VOICES, including Tylos, Quartetts, Quintetts, and Septetts, selected from the Works of Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and other Classical Composers. Further particulars will be duly announced.

The Meetings will be held at 27, Queen Anne Street, Cavendish Square, on the Wednesday, at a Quarter past Eight o'clock; February the 26th, March the 12th and 26th.

Subscriptions for the Three Performances, One Guinea, to be had of Messrs. Rousselet & Co., Importers of Foreign Music, Instruments, &c., 68 Conduit Street, Regent Street; also Mr. Betts, Music-seller, Royal Exchange.

MESSRS.

COCK'S & CO.'S NEW MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

STEPHEN HELLER'S LATEST PIANOFORTE LESSONS

Students of the Pianoforte will find in the following works of the above distinguished Author an unusual degree of merit, being suited alike for the saloon and practice room, viz.—Chant des Chasseurs, 2s.; L'Adieu du Soldat, 2s.; Chant du Berger, 2s.; Arrangement of Mendelssohn's Chant d'Amour, 2s.; Ditto Parting Song, 2s.; Ditto Chant du Fete, 2s.

GROSSE'S INSTRUCTIONS for SINGING; a new edition, with additions, by C. M. SOLA; embracing copious Exercises for promoting flexibility of voice, singing a second, &c. Folio size, 4s.

NEW SCHOOL MUSIC.—HAMILTON'S MODERN INSTRUCTIONS for the PLANO, the easiest and best book, 19th Edition, 4s.; his Dictionary of 3500 Musical Terms, 3rd Edition, 1s.; his Catechism on Singing, 3s.; ditto on Thorough Bass, 2s.; ditto Violin, 1s.; Clare's Psalmody, twelve books, 3s. each; Clarke's Catechism of the Rudiments of Music, 23d Edition, 1s.; Warden's Psalmody, twenty-three books, 2d. each; and his Chanter's Hand-Guide, in one volume, 5s., or in thirty-four parts, 2d. each.

COCK'S MUSICAL MISCELLANY, published monthly, No. V., for February, 2d.; stamped, 3d. Contents:—Retrospect of the Month.

London: R. COCKS and Co., New Burlington Street; publishers to the Queen. Also, of Messrs. SIMPKIN and MARSHALL, and all Music and Booksellers.

COMPOSITIONS BY E. SILAS.

O SALUTARIS HOSTIA, Sacred Song.

SOLO, for Violoncello, with orchestra or pianoforte accompaniment.

CAPRICE No. 1, for the pianoforte.

LES FANNALLS, Caprice No. 2.

PENSEES FUGITIVES, for the pianoforte.

NOCTURNE, for the pianoforte.

ROMANCES. Sans Paroles.

TRIO for Pianoforte, Violin and Violoncello.

In the Press,

CONCERT STUCK, for Pianoforte and Orchestra.

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 301, Regent Street.

HEALTH WHERE 'TIS SOUGHT!

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Cure of a disordered Liver and Stomach, when in a most hopeless state.—Extract of a letter from Mr. Matthew Harvey, of Chapel Hall, Airdrie, Scotland, dated the 15th of January, 1850.—To Professor HOLLOWAY, Sir,—Your valuable Pills have been the means, with God's blessing, of restoring me to perfect health, at a time when I thought I was on the brink of the grave. I had consulted several eminent Doctors, who, after doing what they could for me, considered my case hopeless. I had been suffering from a Liver and Stomach complaint of long standing, which during the last two years got so much worse, that every one considered my condition as hopeless. I, as a last resource, got a Box of your Pills, which soon gave relief, and by persevering in their use for some weeks, together with rubbing night and morning your Ointment over my chest and stomach, and right side, I have by their means alone got completely cured, and to the astonishment of myself and everybody who knows me.

(Signed)

MATTHEW HARVEY.

These celebrated Pills are wonderfully efficacious in the following complaints:—
Ague Constipation of the Bowels FEVERS of all kinds Liver complaints Tumours
Asthma Bilious Com- Debility Fits Gout Rheumatism Ulcers
Blotches on the Dropsy Head-ache Indigestion Sore Throats Worms of all kinds Skin Bowel complaints Erysipelas Jaundice Tio-Douloureux
Colic Sold at the Establishment of Professor HOLLOWAY, 244, Strand, (near Temple-bar, London, and most all respectable Druggists, and Dealers in Medicines throughout the civilised World at the following prices—1s. 1ld., 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 36s. each Box. There is a considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.

N.B.—Directions for the guidance of Patients in every Disorder are affixed to each Box.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL, 89, LONG ACRE.

M. ALEXANDRE BILLET begs to announce that the second of his series of THREE EVENING PERFORMANCES of CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC, in illustration of the Works of the great Composers, will take place on Tuesday, February 25th; and the third March 11th. To commence at 8 o'clock precisely.

Tickets for a Single Concert, 2s.; Reserved Seats, 4s.; Subscription to Reserved Seats for the Series, 10s. 6d. To be had at St. Martin's Hall; of WESSL and Co., 229, Regent Street, and the principal Music Publishers.

PROGRAMME OF THE SECOND PERFORMANCE.

- | | |
|---|------------------|
| 1. Sonata in E flat minor | PINTO. |
| 2. Prelude & Fugue in G minor (Cat's Fugue) | SCARLATTI. |
| Prelude & Fugue in D major | MENDELSSOHN. |
| 3. Fantasia in A, Op. 16 (Dedicated to ROBERT SCHUMANN) | W. S. BENNETT. |
| 4. Sonata in C minor, Op. 35 (Dedicated to CLEMENTI) | DUSSEK. |
| 5. Allegro di Bravura | CIPRIANI POTTER. |
| 6. Lieder ohne Worte | MENDELSSOHN. |
| No. 4, Second Book. | |
| No. 6, Sixth Book. | |
| No. 1, do. do. | |
| No. 4, do. do. | |

PROGRAMME OF THE THIRD AND LAST PERFORMANCE.

- | | |
|---|--------------|
| 1. Sonata in B minor, Op. 40 (Dedicated to CHERUBINI) | CLEMENTI. |
| 2. { Prelude & Fugue in F | BACH. |
| { Prelude & Fugue in E minor | MENDELSSOHN. |
| 3. Grand Sonata in B flat, Op. 106. | BEETHOVEN. |
| 3. Andante con Variazioni in B flat, Op. 83 (Posth. Works, No 11) | MENDELSSOHN. |
| 5. Rondo in A minor | MOZART. |
| 6. Selection of Studies: | |
| C minor | HUMMEL. |
| E flat | MACFARREN. |
| D minor | HILLER. |
| D flat major | HENSELT. |
| A minor | THALBERG. |

DENT'S IMPROVED WATCHES AND CLOCKS.

E. J. DENT, Watch and Clock Maker, by distinct appointment to the Queen, H.R.H. Prince Albert, and H.I.M. the Emperor of Russia, most respectfully solicits from the public an inspection of his extensive STOCK OF WATCHES and CLOCKS, embracing all the late modern improvements at the most economical charges. Ladies' Gold Watches, with gold dials, jewelled in four holes, 8 guineas; Gentlemen's, with enamelled dials, 10 guineas; Youth's Silver Watches, 4 guineas. Warranted accurate-going Lever Watches, jewelled in four holes 6 guineas.—E. J. Dent, 83, Strand; 33, Cockspur-street; and 34, Royal Exchange (Clock Tower Area).

NEW FLUTE MUSIC.

SIX MELODIES by B. MOLIQUE (Lieder ohne Worte)—Transcribed for the Flute and Piano by J. CLINTON.

- | | |
|--|---------------|
| No. 1. "If o'er the boundless sky," | Price 2s. 0d. |
| "2. "Far Annie." | " 2s. 0d. |
| "3. "When the moon is brightly shining." | " 2s. 0d. |
| "4. "Come all ye glad and free." | " 2s. 0d. |
| "5. "Come dearest, come." | " 2s. 0d. |
| "6. "Oh! that my woes were distant." | " 2s. 0d. |

SIX LIEDER OHNE WORTE, by F. MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLODY, Op. 87.—Transcribed for Flute and Piano by J. CLINTON.

- | | |
|----------------------------------|---------|
| No. 1. "All Deutsches Lied." | 2s. 0d. |
| "2. "Hirtenslied." | 2s. 6d. |
| "3. "Zuleika." | 3s. 0d. |
| "4. "Rheinisches Volkslied." | 2s. 0d. |
| "5. "Venetianisches Gundellied." | 2s. 0d. |
| "6. "Reiseliied." | 3s. 6d. |

Original Melodies for Flute and Piano by G. PERCIVAL, op. 4.

- | | |
|-----------------------------------|-----------|
| No. 1. "Moderato con Espresione." | price 3s. |
| "2. "Andante Malinconia." | |
| "3. "Allegretto Gracioso." | |

Wessel and Co., 229, Regent Street.

MR. W. STERNDAL BENNETT

RESPECTFULLY announces that his SEVENTH ANNUAL SERIES of PERFORMANCES of CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms on Tuesday evening, February 25, March 18, and April 8. To commence at half-past 8 o'clock. Subscription tickets, one guinea; triple tickets (to admit three to any one concert), one guinea; and single tickets (to admit to any one concert), half a guinea. To be had at all the principal music warehouses, and of Mr. W. S. Bennett, 15, Russell-place, Fitzroy-square.

DAVID. EXETER HALL.

ON MONDAY evening Feb. 24th, will be performed for the first time in London, DAVID, a sacred Oratorio by CHARLES EDWARD HOMER. Principal Vocalists, Miss Birch, Miss Williams, Miss E. Birch, Mr. Lockey, Mr. T. Williams, Mr. Weiss, and Mr. Whitworth. The band and chorus will be complete in every department. Leader Mr. H. Biagrove; Organist Mr. G. Cooper; Conductor Mr. C. E. Horsley. Prices of admission—reserved seats (numbered) 10s. 6d., to be had only of R. ADDISON and CO., 210, Regent Street reserved seats in area and gallery 5s., area tickets 2s., upper platform 2s., to be had of all Music Sellers.

CARTE'S PATENT FLUTES.

M. CARTE will introduce his new FLUTES in the course of his Lectures on INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC, at the Royal Institution, Manchester, on the mornings of the 10th, 14th, 17th, and 21st February; at the Collegiate Institution, Liverpool, on the evenings of the 11th, 14th, and 18th February; and at the Church of England Literary Institution, Shrewsbury, on the 19th and 19th February.

Just published, a SKETCH of the successive IMPROVEMENTS made in the FLUTE, with a Statement of the Principles upon which Flutes are constructed, and a Comparison between the relative Merits of the Ordinary Flute, the Flute of Boehm, and Carte's two new Patent Flutes. By RICHARD CARTE.

Publishers: Rudall, Rose, and Co., 38, Southampton-street, Strand; Addison, 210, Regent-street; Keith and Prowse, 48, Chancery-lane; and Cooks and Co., 6, New Bur-lington-street. Price 1s., or if sent by post, 1s. 6d.

NEW BEETHOVEN ROOMS,

QUEEN ANNE STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE.

M. ALEXANDRE BILLET,

Begs to inform his Pupils and the Public that his CLASSES OF PIANOFORTE INSTRUCTION

have recommenced for the season.

Applications for terms, and all particulars, to be addressed to the NEW BEETHOVEN ROOMS, Queen Anne Street.

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC

BY

BRINLEY RICHARDS.

Angela. Romance. Dedicated to the Lady Robert Grosvenor

"Mr. Brinley Richards' 'Angela,' though essentially popular in style, strongly indicates the hand of an accomplished musician."—Morning Post.

Mendelssohn's "First Violet." ... 1 6

Mendelssohn's "Maid of the Ganges." Dedicated to Sterndale Bennett, Esq. ... 2 0

"In the arrangement of these two charming melodies by the lamented Mendelssohn for the Pianoforte, Mr. Richards has very effectively adopted the style of the celebrated Lieder ohne Worte."—Herald.

The Fairy's Dream. Romance ... 2 6

Picciola, ou le Chant du Captif. Dedicated to Mrs. Anderson ... 2 6

Sybil. Romance. (Second Edition) ... 2 6

"The style of these compositions is the most attractive of modern Pianoforte music,—and whether for variety and sweetness of effect, or for frequent indication of a graceful elevation of musical thought, combined with a moderate degree of difficulty in execution, we have never met with three pieces by a native composer which were calculated to give so much satisfaction to a candid reviewer. Nothing can be more useful to young students of the modern school of Pianoforte playing than such compositions as the above."—Dramatic and Musical Review. September.

Premier Nocturne. (Second Edition) ... 2 6

The Irish Emigrant. Arranged as a Rondo ... 2 6

"Among the recent examples of the style of Pianoforte music at present in vogue, few more successfully appeal to the exigencies of popular taste, and more thoroughly realize the best ideal of fashionable elegance than the above-named publications. Sybil, Picciola, Premier Nocturne, and The Fairy's Dream, are all specimens of Mr. Brinley Richards in his most happy and fluent manner. They abound in ad captandum melody, and are overrun with passages both brilliant and neatly turned. The principal objection to the modern Pianoforte music of the drawing-room is a certain affectation of sentiment from which Mr. Richards is entirely free. In his lightest passages there is a certain refinement, which indicates a desire to satisfy the amateur and the professor simultaneously, and must render his pieces acceptable to both."—Musical World. December 7.

CHAPPELL, 50, NEW BOND STREET.

Printed and Published, for the Proprietors, by MICHAEL SAMUEL MYERS, of No. 3 Studley Villas, Studley Road, Clapham Road, in the parish of Lambeth, at the office of MYERS and Co., 37, King Street, Covent Garden, in the parish of St. Paul, where all communications to the Editor are to be addressed, post paid. To be had of G. Purkess, Dean Street, Soho; Allen, Warwick Lane; Vickers, Holywell Street, and at all Booksellers.—Saturday, Feb. 15, 1851.

The Musical World.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

Terms of Subscription, per Annum, 16s.; Half year, 8s.; Three Months, 4s.; payable in advance, to be forwarded by Money Order, to the Publishers, Messrs. Myers & Co., 37, King Street, Covent Garden.

No. 8.—VOL. XXVI.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1851.

PRICE FOURPENCE.

SPONTINI.

This famous composer died on the 24th ult., at his native town, Majolati,* aged seventy-two years. On Wednesday, the 5th instant, Paris paid a solemn tribute to his memory. At eleven o'clock A.M. a large concourse of musicians, men of science, letters, and politics, assembled in the church of the Madeleine, to join the funeral service. Not one of the musical celebrities, from Auber and Berlioz, down to the smallest composer of one-act operas (bouffons); not a singer, from Duprez, Roger, and Couderc, to the pettiest candidate for lyrical distinction; not a pianist, from Stephen Heller, the intellectual, to Rosellen, the light fingered, was absent. It was really an imposing ceremony, although, like that devoted to Chopin about a year ago, by no means an ebullition of national feeling, having been projected and paid for by the friends and relations of the deceased. What the amiable sister of Chopin did for Chopin, the head of the great firm of Erard effected for Spontini, his brother-in-law. To say truth, Spontini, the theatrical composer, had as little hold upon the affections of the great mass as Chopin, the drawing-room pianist. His talent and mode of thought were not fashioned of the stuff that warms the popular breast, while he possessed none of those recondite qualities which ensure a certain peculiar immortality, in a limited sphere of exclusive appreciation.

The whole French press has teemed during the week with essays upon the life and genius of Spontini. By many degrees the best, as it is by many degrees the most comprehensive, of these essays, the feuilleton of M. Hector Berlioz, in the Journal des Debats of Wednesday, the 12th instant, must, nevertheless, not be regarded as a just estimate of the value of the man to whom it is dedicated. M. Berlioz writes as an enthusiast. He displays a thorough knowledge of the life of Spontini, and a familiar acquaintance with his works; but his praise of the musician is preposterous, and his defence of the man untenable. With a warm heart and a fiery brain, a brilliant fancy and a quick intelligence, M. Berlioz possesses every thing but cool reflection and the unfettered spirit of analysis to be the first critic in Europe. The want of these cold but indispensable adjuncts, to temper his judgment and clear away impediments to the free march of reason, is a great drawback to the confidence which might otherwise be placed in his decisions. M. Berlioz does not jump at conclusions; on the contrary, he takes a long and circuitous path to arrive at them; but in the course of his journey, he leaps over every obstacle that may stand in the way of his especial notions, and holds his affection before him as a shield, to ward off contrary argument, while brandishing his prejudice as an arm, to fell conflicting sentiments. From first to last the feuilleton of M. Berlioz must be considered as the speech of an eloquent advocate. His logic is used to turn facts topsy-turvy; his musical acquirement, so invaluable in a good cause, is here but dust thrown into the eyes of the unwary. As an outburst of idolatrous worship—as a fond dallying with a beloved object—as the burning address of a lover to his mistress—the apostrophe of M. Hector Berlioz to Spontini (so greatly his inferior) will be read with intense interest. Those who know neither the man nor his works will probably derive from it a grand idea of both. Geniality of expression, warmth and brightness of style, felicity of metaphor, and ever increasing earnestness, lend to the essays of M. Berlioz a charm not easy to be resisted; and even with the most deeply rooted opinion that Spontini was a very ordinary man, so impressed are we with the glowing language of his eulogist, that we rush from the reading-room to the publisher, and ask for the scores of La Vestale and Fernand Cortez. How, after perusing them, the vision fades away, how the glory of Spontini vanishes into obscurity, we need not stop to describe. Suffice it, we rise from the study of these—the acknowledged masterpieces of the deceased Italian—with a double admiration for the eloquence of M. Berlioz, and a still firmer conviction that the object of his strange and unaccountable hero-worship was, after all, but a common-place composer. One thing alone puzzles us—how the same pen that paid such glowing homage to the prolixity of La Vestale could express itself with frigid indifference about the Enfant Prodigue, in a single act of which there is more invention, feeling, melody, and expression than throughout the length and breadth of Spontini's two chef d'œuvres! We are consoled, however, by the reflection, that it is not the calm opinion, but the blind and feverish passion of the critic which leads him to throw cold water upon excellence, and elevate mediocrity to a place among the stars.

* Near Jesi, in Ancona.

That, during his progress in the world, Spontini acquired many dignities and honours, may be gathered from the following catalogue of his titles:—Luigi Gaspardo Pacifico Spontini, Count of St. Andria, Composer of Music, Member of the Institute of France, Director of Music to his Majesty the King of Prussia, Officer of the Legion of Honour, Chevalier of the Order of Merit of Prussia, Chevalier of the third class of the Red Eagle of Prussia, Chevalier of the Pontifical Order of St. Gregory, Chevalier of the Order of Francis the First of Naples, Chevalier of the Order of Civil Merit of Bavaria, Commander of the Order of Hesse Darmstadt, and Officer of the Order of Leopold of Belgium. How many such distinctions were bestowed upon Mozart?

By the death of Spontini a place becomes vacant in the musical department of the French Institute. Spontini's colleagues were Auber, Halévy, Adolphe Adam, and Carafa. The candidates for the vacant place are MM. Zimmerman, Ambroise Thomas, Batton, Martin D'Angers, Clapisson, Hector Berlioz, &c. To discuss the various merits of these gentlemen would be impertinent, but we may be permitted the insinuation, that if any other than Berlioz be appointed it will not only cast a reflection upon the present members of the Institute, but upon the Academy and France itself. Yet the general opinion seems to divide the chances between M. Zimmerman and M. Ambroise Thomas. A precedent is not wanting for such injustice—Balzac, to wit, who was twice rejected by the Academy for some big-wigged nobody.

BATH versus LIVERPOOL AND LONDON.

As a pleasant contrast to the queer critiques from the Liverpool Mail and London Sun, upon which we have recently animadverted, we may quote a few passages from an able review of the last of a series of quartet concerts given by Mr. Jaques, of Bath. The article appeared in the Bath and Cheltenham Gazette, of the 19th instant. The author must be either a musician or a well-informed amateur; he writes with fluency and thoroughly understands his subject. His opinion of the important place held by quartets and other pieces for the chamber, among the works of the great masters, is eloquently expressed:—

"Chamber Concerts, devoted to quartets, are, we believe, unique in this city, Mons. Jaques having been the first to introduce them. It has given us much pleasure to observe that the enterprise which led him to embark in the speculation, and the good taste which induced him to select as the staple of these amusements the much neglected quartets of the great classical composers, have met with that appreciation which the occasion deserved. We know of no school in which the amateur could more thoroughly refine his taste, or enjoy a more rational luxury, than in the study of these immortal works. Hæc tibi dulcia sunt. Haydn, Mozart, Mendelssohn, and others of their glorious fraternity, have lavished on these children of their fancy the riches of their vast genius. Compositions of this high class require par excellence a mental refinement in the executant, a delicacy of hand, a preciseness in the minutiae of time and tune, and a thorough feeling of the rhythm of the phrases, which when attained mark the perfect musician from the mere fiddler. The most distant approach to coarseness or vulgarity disenchant the listener. It must, therefore, be regarded as no small praise, when we say that these concerts have been distinguished by a purity of taste which left the most fastidious critic nothing to desire."

Such writing as this does honour to the provincial press. We should like to see a little more of it. There is no incoherent jargon of keys and other technicalities, so often employed as cloaks to cover ignorance. Mr. Punch himself, whose sneer is very terrible, would be at a loss to find a single word to carp at. Let our pot-belly'd cotemporary but come to the attack, and, bref, he will be obliged to waddle away, with Toby at his heels. Mr. Punch might perhaps fall foul of the Latin; for hic sibi is bitter. Mr. Punch likes not Latin.

Toby might also bite at the French, and make a bone of it, par excellence. But neither Mr. Punch nor Toby, with the best intentions to be humorous, could pick out anything to laugh at in the English, still less in the common sense of the article. If they went "to Bath," with such an object, their musical subscribers (ourselves among the number) would send them "to Coventry" incontinent.

The following bit about Herr Hausmann's violoncello is more rhapsodical and less musical:—

"And here we pause for a moment to bestow our mite of praise on the finished executancy of Herr Hausmann, the violoncellist. That 'leviathan fiddle' has, we confess, in common hands, at times excited our deepest ire. How laboriously has it growled, groaned, howled, and shrieked, as the operator sawed its vibrating sinews with ruthless and unrelenting hand. If the din was not 'enough to split the ears of the groundlings,' it was more than enough to give them a 24 hours' headache. But, beneath the bow of the German professor, what a lamb-like creature does it become. How readily does it allow itself to be drawn out into sweet converse, emitting tones dulcet and potent, and aerial withal as faery music! How delicately-subdued are its appeals to your finer sensibilities, and though, when needs be, it can speak out like a giant, yet 'tis 'a most delicate monster'—just such a gigantic personage as Handel has depicted in his Acis and Galatea; or, if like Bottom's Lion, he does roar occasionally, why he does so 'as gently as any sucking dove,' for fear of frightening the ladies!"

It would seem that our contemporary was mistaking the violoncello for the double-bass during the inditement of this paragraph, which we leave to Mr. Punch to do the best with. He can make a ball with it for Toby to play with. Shakspeare is misquoted, and metaphor outraged. Not so in the next, about poor Mendelssohn's first quartet, which is true poetry, every word of it, Latin and all, and French to boot:—

"The Quartett in E flat, No. 1, gave us a specimen of Mendelssohn's exuberant genius,—one of those creations which posterity will not willingly let die. Pathetic, sportive, jubilant, sorrow-stricken, sometimes quaint and mystic as the moonlit dances of the Fauns to the dreamy music of old Pan, then solemn as the cathedral organ pealing through clustered columns and along the groined roof in the midnight mass,—varied in its character, yet charming throughout,—is this embodied dream of the great Hebrew composer. Procul este profani. Such music must not be touched by common hands—its brightness would be dimmed by vulgar contact. It should be heard in the hushed twilight, from unseen musicians. What better tribute, then, can we pay to the artistes who so perfectly rendered it on this occasion, than to say that it lost nothing of its effect through the intrusion of the slightest flaw or contretemps?"

Scorn not this, our Punch; bark not at this, our Toby, or a contretemps may arise out of the circumstance. Shakspeare's clown in Othello, who requested the musicians to play a soft tune—for that his master "cared not greatly for music that might be heard"—may, perhaps, be paralleled with the aspiration of the writer for "unseen musicians" in the crepuscule (twilight—we forget ourselves); but up to this point, and no further, may the feet of Satire march. The rest is unassailable. Procul este profani!

Here, too, is a modest appreciation of the fine talent of M. Sainton, which might pass muster in the highest places, as sound and intelligible criticism:—

"M. Sainton's solo on the violin was an agreeable interchange—a flow of melody succeeding to the weird harmonies which had sunk and died away in their own sweetness. We should describe M. Sainton as a violinist of much feeling; his style is characterised by gracefulness rather than by strength; his bowing singularly free, and his tone pure to the highest degree. He has one special excellence; there is no attempt to surprise his audience into admiration by any thing approaching to legerdemain—the bane of the modern professors of the violin. He knows and feels that his instrument is capable of conveying every shade of expression; and, therefore, he wisely keeps within the legitimate powers of the art. His style depends entirely on its intrinsic excellence; and, consequently, his solo was charming throughout. We have heard more surprising performances, but we have seldom been better pleased."

Print legerdemain in "roman," and there will be neither Latin nor French in this excellent paragraph, which is the last we can spare room to extract from one of the most sensible musical criticisms we ever read in a provincial journal. Now, Mr. Punch.

IMPROMPTU BY JENNY LIND.

THE following lines, says the Choral Advocate of New York, "were written by the beloved Swede in an album. You may rely upon their genuineness: indeed, they contain such evidence. Frederica Bremer had written, in the same album, a few lines concerning rest; which, it would seem, suggested to Jenny Lind the subject of this happy stanza."

"In vain I seek for rest,
In all created good;
It leaves me still unblest,
And makes me cry for God.
At rest—be sure—I shall not be,
Until my heart finds rest with Thee!"

JENNY LIND.

We have no doubt that the above lines are authentic, but we should like to see the original.

REID COMMEMORATION CONCERT.

(From our own Correspondent)

The annual concert of the Reid Commemoration was given last Thursday, when Mdle. Angri, Herr Ernst, Signor S. Tamburini, and Mr. Stockhausen made their first appearance before a Scottish audience. Mr. Frank Mori was the accompanist, and Mr. A. McKenzie conducted the orchestra.

Your readers will have noticed, from an article that appeared in the columns of the Musical World, last week, that the tickets of admission to this concert are distributed gratuitously to the public; and that the expenses are, or ought to be, defrayed from the large fund, £70,000, left by General Reid, for the purpose of establishing a choir of music, &c., in the University of Edinburgh. Amongst other stipulations, he desires that a concert be given annually, at which some of his own compositions must be performed. Of late years, there seems to have been some sad squabbling between the "Senatus" and the present Professor. Every one seems to agree—and by every one, we mean the Courts of Law, the magistrates of the city, the press, and the public—that the Senatus are behaving in the most shabby manner possible; and, as Lord Robertson so happily expressed it, are, by the niggardly sum they have allowed the Professor, fixing his salary at the minimum of three hundred a year, when it was in their power to have allowed him a thousand, "starving music down to the lowest pitch." Not only this, but although in the receipt of a revenue of £3,000 per annum, they have actually refused to pay more than £200 for the expenses of this given concert, leaving Professor Donaldson to pay the balance, amounting nearly to a third of his whole salary, from his own private resources. Were the Professors of the University only to hear what is said of them in society, their ears would tingle for a month. As far as I could learn, however, there seems to be only some half-dozen of them against whom the remarks are directed; they being the chief delinquents, and, as is hinted, the appropriators of the largest share of the funds, which have been expended for purposes never contemplated by the testator.

Hitherto our attention has been turned too little towards the musical doings of Edinburgh; but this matter, as well as others, will in future receive a greater share of notice. It is hardly necessary for me to enter into any lengthened criticism of the concert itself; your columns bear almost weekly testimony to the excellence of the artists engaged. The orchestra was certainly composed of great talent, and although weak in some parts, particularly the chorus, I must give them especial praise for the manner in which they performed the andante and minuetto from Mozart's Symphony, No. 3. The conductor, Mr. McKenzie, is also entitled to approbation. He performed his duties steadily and satisfactorily. All the arrangements were, as usual, under the charge of Mr. Wood, the principal music-seller in Scotland; and whose establishments in Edinburgh and Glasgow are amongst the largest and most ably-conducted in the empire. Signor S. Tamburini was, unfortunately, prevented from appearing, having been seized, as Mr. Wood stated in his apology, with a violent hoarseness.

On Saturday, the same party, minus the orchestra, again performed, at what Mr. Wood is pleased to call a great popular concert. On this occasion, Mr. Silas, who appeared in London last season, played, with Herr Ernst, the two last movements of Beethoven's grand Sonata, dedicated to Kreutzer. I was delighted to observe that this exquisite work of genius was listened to with great attention throughout, and was much applauded. The attendance was excellent. Great hopes may yet be entertained of Scotland as a musical country.

Dramatic Intelligence.

DRURY LANE.—A grand spectacle founded on Scribe's L'Enfant Prodigue, not on Auber's grand opera, composed to Scribe's book, as the bills indicate—inasmuch as Auber's music plays an unimportant part in the affair—was brought out on Wednesday with all the resources of the theatre. The style in which this melodrama is put upon the stage speaks in the highest terms for the spirit and enterprise of the management. The scenery is gorgeous, the dresses costly and appropriate; the mise en scene carried out with surprising fidelity in the minutest details; and the subordinates numerous and various; the cast of the principal characters in the main irreproachable. Against one department only of the production we are called upon to protest. Auber's music should not have been meddled with. The Enfant Prodigue is a chef d'œuvre of a great master. As presented at Drury Lane it is a parcel of shreds and patches without meaning or connection, and consequently without interest. Had the music been set aside altogether, or had some native composer been engaged to fill up the melodramatic pauses and illustrate the dances, with strains of his own, we should have found no reason for complaining; but it was unjust to Auber to treat his fine music so unceremoniously. The thousands of pounds which Masaniello, Fra Diavolo, and other inspirations have brought into the treasuries of the London theatres, ought to have commanded a larger amount of respect for their gifted author. Music, however, is out of Mr. Anderson's peculiar line, and, from the superior taste and judgment displayed in his immediate province, together with the pains evidently expended on the getting up, we cannot believe that he would wilfully have done injustice to a great composer, and sacrificed him on the altar of Mammon. Mr. Laurent will probably inform us that it was impossible to do all the music of Auber's opera at Drury Lane. Granted, then why introduce any of it? There was no necessity for Auber in the matter. The piece, placed on the stage as it is, and supported as it is, would have succeeded without making a burlesque of a great and serious work.

But to proceed to a more agreeable task, to the chronicling of the unequivocal success of the piece, which is entitled Azael, or The Prodigal. The feeling in its favour from beginning to end was unanimous and enthusiastic. After the first act Mr. Anderson and Mr. Vandenhoff were honored with separate recalls, and each individual scene was hailed with a burst of acclamation. When we said above, that the entire resources of the theatre were made available, we spoke within the mark. The wealth of other establishments was made contributory. The Surrey Zoological Gardens supplied two camels, and Astley's several horses for the processions.

We have already, in the letter of our Paris correspondent, detailed the plot of the Enfant Prodigue, which has been closely followed in the Drury Lane version. The characters and incidents are nearly identical. One or two alterations, however, have been made, and, we think, not for the better. In the original the escape of Jephthele from the temple of Isis is effected through the instrumentality of Lia the dancing girl; while in the Drury Lane translation Azael is made to save her by threatening the priests with the sacrificial axe, and allowing her to fly from the temple in the confusion. The alteration is decidedly for the worst. The principal parts are thus distributed:—Reuben, the father, Mr. Vandenhoff; Azael, the Prodigal, Mr. Anderson; Amenophis, the traveller, Mr. Emery; Bucharis, High Priest of Isis, Mr. Cooper; Sesthos, Mr. Rafter; Jephthele, Miss F. Vining; Nefte, Mrs. Walter Lacy; Palmea, Priestess of Isis, Miss Eliza Nelson; First and second Priestess, Misses Julia Bleaden and De Camp; Lia, principal dancer of the Almees, Mdle. Victorine Legrain; First Almee, Madame Louise, Second Almee, Mdle. Palser, &c., &c.

This array of talent looks well on paper, nor will it be found to disappoint expectation when brought to the test. Mr. Anderson played the Prodigal Son with an amount of buoyancy, feeling, and passionate energy which even in him may be pronounced remarkable. The whole of the last act was exceedingly natural and powerful, and made a great impression on the house. His abject demeanour when meeting his father on his return home, and his heart-broken expressions of penitence, were finely true to nature. Mr. Anderson's performance of Azael will have no small share in achieving the success of the new piece. Mr. Vandenhoff, as the father, had not so much to do as Mr. Anderson, but he had two scenes of great power, which he gave with artistic feeling and passion. The parting with his son was very touching. Mr. Vandenhoff's pathos is easy and manly, and does not partake of the mawkish sentimental. Mr. Cooper had less to do than his two confreres; nevertheless, what he did he did skillfully—witness his leer to Lia, worthy of the most virulent Memphian priest-voluptuary, and his glorious progress from dull sobriety to dead drunkenness in the temple. Miss F. Vining and Mrs. Walter Lacy, in their several parts of Jephthele and Nefte, were both excellent. These parts could not have been better supported. In her second dress Mrs. Walter Lacy wore one of the most magnificent and becoming costumes we ever witnessed on the stage. While upon the article of dress, we cannot pass over the splendour and propriety that distinguished the apparel of every individual in the piece. The three principal Almees were represented by Mesdames Victorine Legrain, Palser, and Louise. Each of these choregraphs danced a pas seul in the grand ballet in the square of Memphis, and each in turn obtained a decided demonstration of popular favour.

Mdlle. Legrain was separately honoured with several bouquets. The singing in the principal parts was confined to Mr. Rafter, Mr. S. Jones, Miss Eliza Nelson, Miss Julia Bleaden, and Miss de Camp. Mrs. Walter Lacy, by the way, introduced a ballad, and sang it very prettily.

The scenery, we have said, was gorgeous and magnificent; so much so, indeed, that any words of ours must fail to do it justice. The first scene, the interior of Reuben's tent, presented a splendid look out on the arid desert. Despite the astronomical anomaly of making the sun set and rise in the same point of the heavens, this scene was very beautiful and natural. The Square of Memphis is not unlike one of the Semiramide scenes at Covent Garden. The sacred procession of Apis across the stage was very grand and striking; the standards and emblematical signs shone with gold and colours, and the famous bull of Memphis made a conspicuous figure in the back ground. The dresses were rich and diversified. In this scene the stage was nearly covered with people. The interior of the Temple of Isis is one of the most imposing scenes we have ever seen. The whole stage is exposed to its utmost limits, both in height and breadth. An enormous staircase ascends, but by gentle gradations, to nearly the height of the top of the flies. Groups of figures, in all sorts of uniforms, are observed diversely occupied. All are indulging in some favourite diversion. The Almees dance, the Priests drink, then hand the goblets to the ladies, who all partake too freely of the potatoes, and overpowered, sink to sleep beside their drowsy pastors. This is a most exciting scene, but the termination is very different from the manner in which it is done in Paris. The last scene also is remarkably beautiful. It represents the home of Azael seen from without, and offers some splendid points of colouring. It would be hardly fair to omit the names of the designers and painters, Messrs. Jones and Cuthbert, in our notice of the new spectacle; nor should we pass by Mr. Phillips, under whose direction the properties and appointments were produced; nor those of Mr. Palmer and Mrs. Clarke, the devisers of the costumes.

And now, having, we trust, done justice to all parties, wishing the new Grand Spectacle the long and brilliant career it so eminently deserves, we take our leave of it for the present.

OLYMPIC.—The new five-act, or rather seven-act drama, produced on Monday night, under the title of Sixtus V.; or, the Broken Vow, appears to be a draft from the Theatre Historique of Paris; and, in its prolixity, its feverish incidents, its stirring and impossible situations, its bare dialogue, and its fragmentary characters, affords unmistakable indications of the source from whence it has been drawn. Dion Bourcicault, we are told in the bills, is the author of Sixtus V.; but Dion Bourcicault, we are sure, wrote little or none of it, neither meddling with the language nor the personages, and probably effecting nothing more than a literal translation from the original. That he wrote none of the dialogue we have internal evidence in the absence of good things that would have been said, had he taken the trouble to infuse a little of his own spirit into Hugo, the swash-buckler friend of Don John of Austria, who really might have been made a worthy stage person. On the other hand, we fancy we espy Dion Bourcicault's hand in certain dramatic contrivances and surprises, which do not smack of the Theatre Historique. Be this as it may, although the new romantic drama would have been assuredly improved had Dion Bourcicault considered it worth his while to re-write it, we have to chronicle a success such as is seldom accorded to a new or old production at this or any other house. The principal fault of Sixtus V. is its length. It is said to be in five acts, but as the first and fourth acts have each two tableaux, and as a curtain descends between each tableau, occupying the same space of time as is taken up between the acts, there are in reality seven acts. The smallness of the Olympic stage, and the requirements for the scenic effect, necessitates this division. To obviate this, the piece demands considerable curtailment, as it absorbed more than four hours in the performance the first night.

The Broken Vow is the true title of the new historical play, or romance. The incident drawn from the life of Pope Sixtus the Fifth is merely an episode.

Adrien Peretti is a young hunter living in a lonely cottage, on the hills of Albano. He fancies himself of humble birth, but is in reality as highly descended as the daughter of the Colonna, the fair Bianca, with whom he has formed a hidden and romantic attachment. The secret of his birth is made known to him by Hugo, an ancient comrade, who had been in the wars of the Low Countries, and returns flushed with importance and a few rix-dollars. Hugo befriends Adrien in his amour with Bianca, and they go together to demand her hand from the father. Their proposals are rejected with disdain, and they depart from the palace of the Colonna vowing vengeance. And now commences a series of changes and counter-changes, captures and escapes, plots and counter-plots, concealments and discoveries, meetings and separations, defiances, entreaties, risings, surprises, fortunes and misfortunes, which might have served Ann Radcliffe admirably for the machinery of a new novel, and might have furnished sundry hints to Messrs. Dumas, Soulier, Sue, and Co. for their exciting concoctions, but which we have neither time nor patience to follow. Suffice it that Adrien, despite of all resistance, marries Bianca; that Bianca is torn from Adrien immediately after her marriage and immured in a convent; that she remains a whole year in the convent, and is at last prevailed on to take the vows of a nun; that Adrien forces his way into the convent to no purpose; that Bianca repudiates her vows, and is poisoned and buried by the nuns; that Adrien and Hugo force their way to the tomb, and find her only half-poisoned; that the Inquisition next seizes upon the young lady and takes her under its tender care; and that finally the life of Bianca is spared by the appointment to the vacant pontificate of the Cardinal Montalto, who was a friend to her and Adrien from the commencement, although he was necessitated to throw out a show of indifference to the fate of the young couple. Thus all ends happily for those in whom we are interested, with the exception of poor Hugo, who has been put to the torture by the gentlemen of the Inquisition—but not to the death. The friend of Don John of Austria is supposed to be in a state which will permit him to recover from the embraces of the thumb-screw.

The character of the Cardinal has little or nothing to say to the main business of the story. He comes and goes, and appears to be invested with some power over the destinies of the hero and heroine; but in reality he has no immediate effect on their fortunes; and the incident in the end by which he is made Pope, and is thereby enabled to save them, is entirely ruled by fortuitous circumstances. Unlike Richelieu, whom he might have been made to resemble, his skill and intellect fail to direct or even influence passing events. He is a weak instrument, and claims neither our esteem nor our admiration.

The manner in which The Broken Vow is put upon the stage would alone entitle it to the favour of the public, and ensure it a prosperous run. The scenery is remarkable for its beauty and appropriateness. Each scene—and there are seven—is not merely dioramic: it is set or built, and occupies the entire of the stage. The most striking of the seven are the first scene—a view of a broken aqueduct near Albano; the Convent of St. Ursula; the crypt of the Convent; and the grand hall of the Vatican, at Rome. All these were admirably put upon the stage, and were received with cheering acknowledgments by the audience. Nor were the dresses in any respect inferior. The introduction of real buff coats for the soldiers, in place of the old-fashioned cloth of resemblance, should not be overlooked, as a sign of a move in the right direction.

Mr. Leigh Murray played Adrien Peretti, and gave a highly picturesque reading of the character. It is essentially a melodramatic part, and must be judged accordingly. Mrs. Leigh Murray displayed considerable dramatic talent as the Countess Colonna, the mother of Bianca, an up-hill part; and Bianca was sustained by Miss Louisa Howard in a very engaging and lady-like manner. In its mock humility, its pretended weakness and imbecility, and its assumed sycophancy, the character of the wily Cardinal was well adapted to Mr. W. Farren's peculiar style. He supported it throughout with great effect. Mr. Henry Farren was the Hugo; and we do not remember to have seen this gentleman so well fitted in a part. He made a right hearty and bluff swagger-bully, and looked the good-natured cut-throat to the life.

The applause was tremendous after the different divisions of the play, and was redoubled at the fall of the curtain. The cheers and calls for the author at the end, however, remained unresponded to for a long while, until the patience of the audience ran the risk of being exhausted. Neither author nor delegate of the manager appeared. At last Mr. Norton came on and said that Mr. Bourcault had left the house previous to the termination of the play, and that Mr. Leigh Murray was unable to appear before them in consequence of the great fatigue he had undergone—and order was restored.

Th the trowas crowded in every part.

Reviews of Music.

- No. 1. "NE'ER THINK THAT I'LL FORGET THEE." Ballad; written by MRS. GILBERT A'BECKETT. Leader and Cock.
- No. 2. "AND MUST WE, THEN, IN SILENCE MEET?" Ballad; written by MRS. GILBERT A'BECKETT. Leader and Cock.
- No. 3. "DO NOT SMILE." Ballad; words by J. D. DOUGLAS, Esq. Leader and Cock.
- No. 4. "IT IS O'ER, THAT HAPPY DREAM." Ballad; words by BERTIE VYSE, Esq. Music by Mrs. Gilbert A'Beckett.
- "THE ROYAL NURSERY QUADRILLES, OR POPULAR NURSERY TUNES," composed by MRS. GILBERT A'BECKETT. Cramer, Beale, & Co.

Among the female amateurs who are constantly adding to the stores of elegant drawing-room music in this country, the lady whose name is affixed to the above compositions holds a distinguished place. Added to a more than ordinary musical feeling, Mrs. A'Beckett has studied to such purpose, and in such a good school, that none of those imperfections in harmony and modulation—which but too often, in the works of our amateurs, spoil an otherwise graceful thought—are observable in her productions. The accompaniments to her songs are as neat, and correctly written, as, for the most part, her melodies are flowing and natural; so much so, indeed, that it is difficult to believe they have proceeded from the pen of an amateur.

The ballads which head this notice are favourable examples of Mrs. A'Beckett's talents. No 1, in E flat, which is adapted to some pretty verses of her own—for Mrs. A'Beckett is a poet as well as a musician—although well defined, and essentially vocal, is the least original of the four. It is, however, superior to the common run of fashionable ballads, and the accompaniment is remarkable for its easy smoothness. No 2, in E—the words of which are also by Mrs. A'Beckett, and, like the preceding, partake of the sentimental colour—is greatly superior in a musical point of view. The air is more marked, and not less melodious, while it possesses this advantage, that it cannot be traced to any other source. There are some charming points in the accompaniment, one of the most attractive of which is the ritornella that precedes and follows each of the couplets. It is adapted to a contralto or mezzo-soprano voice. This ballad, in the hands of an unaffected singer, would scarcely fail to please. No. 3, in D, has an agreeable touch of the Swiss character in the tune, which will gain it many admirers; at the same time, we are bound to say it is not copied from any known example of that popular style of melody. The accompaniment, as usual, is exceedingly well written. No. 4, in A, is decidedly the happiest of the songs. Though in form a ballad, in character it rises above it. The melody, larghetto, is highly expressive and vocal, while a graceful accompaniment of triplets, skilfully conducted, fits it admirably, and imparts an additional interest. Mrs. A'Beckett must have composed this ballad in her happiest mood; the "happy dream" which forms the burden of the words, could not have been sung in happier strains. Bertie Vyse, Esq., the poet, has reason to exult at beholding his verses thus raised to significance by musical companionship.

"The Royal Nursery Quadrilles" are, what their title imports, an easy set of quadrilles for young performers. They are, nevertheless, excellent of their degree, pretty and animated, while the popular nursery tunes which constitute the prominent motives of each successive figure, are selected with a judicious view to contrast, and are effectively helped out by sundry original phrases, in minor keys, which of course are Mrs. A'Beckett's own. One of these, in B minor, is very nice, and the chord of the "Neapolitan sixth" (as some theorists entitle it) in the antepenultimate bar, raises "Little Jack Horner" into a sphere of sentiment somewhat at variance with "sitting in a corner" and "eating Christmas pies."

"YE LITTLE BIRDS THAT SIT AND SING," Madrigal—Brinley Richards. Calkin and Budd.

Mr. Brinley Richards has felicitously caught the spirit of Thomas Heywood's (1651) quaint verses, which, after the invariable custom of madrigals, treat of Phyllis walking in her garden, of birds chirping in her bower, at the instigation of some dying swain, who, afraid of her frown, sends winged emissaries to bask in its gloom, little thinking that the lowering brow of the wanton maid only preserves its cloud in vexation at his absence. Silly swain! Hadst thou gone thyself to Phyllis, instead of despatching sparrows, thy fate would have been other. Phyllis yearned not for the harmony of beaks—such could not arrest her favour—but for lover's vows and protestations, seasoned with tears and illustrated with kneelings, and only frowned to make her smile the sweeter when it came; and that would not have been long; for Phyllis, like all other maids, would have yielded hadst thou wooed her closely. Silly Swain! Stupid Swain!! Bucolic Booby!!! Mr. Brinley Richards, evidently understanding the matter in this light, has made the birds warble simply, Phyllis frown capriciously, and the swain languish dolefully. All, however, comes to an end, as it made a beginning, in the common chord of F, the key in which Mr. Richards has pitched his madrigal. Not only in a poetical sense has Mr. Richards justly interpreted this lyric of Master Thomas Heywood, but the style of his melody and harmonies is closely fashioned on the best Elizabethan models. He has carefully avoided chromatics, and has furnished several bits of that peculiar close imitation which characterises our elder madrigalists. The part writing however, is more simple and quite free from those harsh and unanticipated progressions, those forced resolutions, doubtful cadences, and obstinate sequences, which, contrary to the opinions of those who pronounce ex cathedra on these matters, we cannot hold among the beauties of our venerable music-makers. Nothing can be simpler or better defined than the first phrase. Except a transient passage into D minor, occurring twice upon the word "alleys" (indicating a sort of mystic veneration on the part of Mr. Richards, for the private retreat of Phyllis, which he may be imagined to have visited in the guise of a sparrow, sitting on a branch and chirping his own madrigal at the dying Swain's bequest), not a single modulation occurs. The clever passage of imitation, commencing in A minor, on the words

"Goe pretie byrdes," in which the theme is responded to "bar-wise," and finishing with a close in C major, on the word "lowre," is suggestive of the feathery minstrels departing, one by one, in alternate succession, at the desire of the over-anxious and not sufficiently rash adorer. The episode beginning in C minor, on the words "Ah me! methinks she frownes," is very plaintive, and thoroughly expressive of the lover's despair. The transition into E flat, the return to C minor, and the coda in G minor, which arises out of this episode and serves as a bridge over which Mr. Richards walks back to his original key, are all beautiful and in excellent keeping; while the variations of treatment after the reprise of the first motive, add greatly to its effect, and bring the madrigal to an animated and satisfactory close.

Mr. Brinley Richards must not rest satisfied with giving the public a solitary instance of his acquaintance with the old madrigalian style. Let him give a second and a third, and his admirers will speedily demand a fourth.

"CELLARIUS WALTZ".—Composed and Dedicated to Miss Pardoe, by ANNIE BENTLEY. CRAMER, BEALE, & Co.

The authoress of this waltz, we believe an amateur, must be praised for having avoided, in the treatment of a very familiar theme, every trace of common-place thought. Miss Bentley's "Cellarius Waltz," indeed, is almost as good as any of the countless imitations of the original with which the musical press has teemed for some years past. Not only is it graceful but showy and brilliant, and likely to flatter the fingers of the executant, and excite the feet of the waltzers, in an equal degree. The waltz consists of a theme in E flat, a trio in A flat, and a short but animated coda in the original key, which follows the return of the first subject. Young ladies, who may wish to conciliate and find admirers in a ball-room, by helping the rest of the company to dance, through the instigation of strains at once tuneful and exhilarating, will find Miss Bentley's "Cellarius Waltz" well suited to their purpose.

"GRAND MARCH OF ALL NATIONS." THOMAS BAKER. Jullien & Co.

Our opinion of this grand finale to Jullien's Great Exhibition Quadrille, with its affluence of national melodies, its imposing tympanic reverberations, its variety of bye-themes, Jullienic and original, foremost and freshest of which stands the curt and characteristic burden of the march, which prefaces, interrupts, joins together, and mingles with all the other motivi, and which may be pronounced as one of its composer's most uncompromising and resolute inspirations, its shouts of loyalty, protestations of universal brotherhood, and, finally, its union in amicable relationship of "God save the Queen," "Rule Britannia," and "Mourrir a Patrie," has already been made public. We need not, therefore, repeat it, since by "Abs" and by "Adnan," it is known through the length and breadth of the empire. All it becomes us to say at present is, that Mr. Baker has performed his task in a very able manner, having adapted the whole to the capacity of performers with moderate powers of execution, without omitting a single effect to which the circumscribed limits of the key-board can give possible utterance. This arrangement of the "Grand March of all Nations," be it understood, is wholly distinct from the edition of the quadrille which has been adapted exclusively for private balls and reunions. A large sale may be predicted for this piece.

"ROSE LEAVES"—Study for the Pianoforte—THOMAS BAKER. Jullien and Co.

In the present composition Mr. Baker puts forth claims to consideration as an original writer, and comes out honourably from the ordeal. "Rose Leaves,"—somewhat fantastically entitled, we admit—is a brilliant study in E minor, excellently adapted to delier, or loosen the fingers, while the episode in the major, besides being melodious and nicely harmonised, will improve the pupil in the legato style. This study displays Mr. Baker in the double capacity of a well-informed musician and a graceful thinker. It is useful and pleasing in an equal degree.

"GREAT MASTERS FOR LITTLE PUPILS."—Nos. 1, 2, and 3.—
THOMAS BAKER. Jullien and Co.

From adaptation and original production Mr. Baker here turns his attention to the elementary. We object to nothing except the title of this serial, which differs in no other respect from a dozen similar publications. It is merely a selection of operatic and other airs from various masters, so arranged as to be brought under the fingers and within the intelligence of young performers in particular, and tyros in general. The selections are well varied; the adaptations good, although even the fundamental harmonies of the original are not always strictly adhered to (for reasons easily to be guessed); and the work may be pronounced generally useful, because well suited to the object proposed. Let us, nevertheless, confess, that we think the studies of beginners are more likely to lead to advancement and real musical feeling through the medium of works expressly written for the pianoforte—the sonatinas and easy rondos of Clementi, Steibelt, Dussek, and others, for example—than through miniature versions of sacred and orchestral operatic pieces, in which the original idea must necessarily be stunted and distorted, in order to be brought within the proposed compass. The little works we have specified being complete, although bagatelles in length and pretension, will accustom the learner to symmetry of outline and well-developed form, the full appreciation of which can alone lead to the acquirement of a sound musical taste. The other things will come in time when the pupil is able to play them as they are written. "Work first and play afterwards," is a maxim that applies to every kind of study, and should be invariably impressed upon the minds of pupils, by masters who sincerely desire their advancement.

Original Correspondence.

MAYO MISPELLED.
(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Wilton House, Blackheath, Feb. 10th, 1851.

SIR,—As I see my name in Signor Montelli's advertisement in the Times of this day, misspelled Mago, and in his list of tenors, Majo, may I beg the favour of you to make it known, through the medium of your widely extended and valuable publication (of which I am a constant reader) to the world, that my name is Mayo.

In doing this, you will place under great obligations to you,
Sir, Your very obedient servant,

"STANLEY MAYO."

MR. MACREADY'S BENEFIT.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—Being one among many who have been disappointed in their application for places, for the above occasion, and finding that many of those who have been more fortunate than myself are trading in them, and thus raising the price without its being in any manner likely to aid the receipts of the Theatre, it has occurred to me, that through your columns, I might suggest to those who have the management of the affair, the propriety of selling the pit tickets (or even those of the galleries) by public auction, as was lately done in America, in the case of Jenny Lind, appears thus directly augmenting the Benefit fund, and securing to those who would be inclined to pay this competition price, the coveted admission, without the great inconvenience of waiting so long at the doors, and being half crushed by the pressure of the crowd.

I remain, Sir,

Your obliged servant,

RICHARD JEFFS.

12, Margaret St., Cavendish Square,
Feb. 20, 1850.

Zumzerzhire, Feb. 21st, 1851.

DEAR SIR,—I be going to trouble he, once more about hour Hinglish Musickers. I have been thinking, that it would be a very good thing, to give these voringers a good drashing, now they be coming hover to this great Herxibition, I dont mean to drash em, in any way but musick. I think that zomebody, should come vorrard, and put a zum of money, for a challenge between hour Hinglish Pianer Players, and the voriegn Pianer Players, I don't mean to zay but what the voriegners may play their own pieces, that they compose best, but I wont have that zort o' vork—I should think that the great Building should be a cleard hout one day, on purpose for a zertain number of these Voriengners and a zertain number of our Hinglish, and there to be an Hum-pire to but down the pieces, that each should play, and I bound to ventur hundred to one, that hour Hinglish musickers will beat em, I think I shall come hup, and have an hinterview wi Prince Halbert, on the zubject Ill put hout my zhare, awe the money any day youll like—I think its nothing but right, zomething shoud be done, you ze every other trade will be trying, not to be houtdone, by the voriegn; law bless thee, I can put my hand, upon a dozen Hinglish Pianer players thatle tackle any voriegn, on fair ground in musick I know, there's the Horgan to, now what a noble Hinstrument, Why I am zure, we got zome blind Horgan Players will play the voriegn, hout-a-zight any day, Can he tell i anything about them cheap Condoling Pianers, the vact is, I want to buy one, vor my daughter, but they tell i they wont do, because they be made by steam—and that they be all zeccond Hand, they doant make nothin but zeccond Hand ones, wil he be zo good, as to zatisfy me on this here point,

"Yours resp.

"VARNER ZHARP."

MACREADY'S FAREWELL.

(From Punch.)

MR. PUNCH's last advices from Elysium bring intelligence of a great stir in that quarter. The shade of Shakspeare, with the shades of Garrick, Kemble, and Kean, as shades in waiting, will be at Drury-lane on Wednesday next, the 26th, on the farewell performance of Macready. A very handsome bit of laurel has been provided by Shakspeare for the occasion; whilst the grand spectral actors will have their tributary bouquets of asphodel and amaranth to dedicate as their offerings.

Were Punch sovereign despot of England—which he has no wish to be, except on special occasions, and the one he is about to name is certainly one of the most special—he would exact tremendous bail of Mr. Macready that he should, in the course of next summer, make certain appearances; and, if such bail were not given, Mr. Punch would commit Mr. Macready under close guard, to—let us say, the Star and Garter, Richmond, with the range of the Park, sending him with a guard of honour (and safety) to the Haymarket Theatre, personally to put in the following appearances, for the instruction and pleasure of the several foreign nations, to be represented by their people, here in London, during the great show. We ought, at least, to prove what we can do in tragedy; therefore, Punch would hold Mr. Macready responsible for such exhibition. Hence, Mr. Macready should play—

Hamlet—For the visitors from Denmark;

Cardinal Wolsey—To the folks from Rome;

Prospero—To the Milanese;

Benedict—To the gentry from Messina;

King Lear—To the Ancient Britons, wherever they might come from;

Othello and Iago—To the Moors and Venetians;

Claude Melnotte—To the ladies from Lyons;

Richelieu—To our lively neighbours from Paris;

Macbeth—(at half price) To all friends from the North.

Of course, the list might be appropriately lengthened; and were Punch sovereign despot, he would lengthen it; as he is not, he must make the most of the "farewell," and array himself in his best for Wednesday next, to do farewell honour to Macready, and—no, we do not despair—for awhile to Shakspeare.

Foreign.

PARIS.—(From a Correspondent).—Among the numerous musical entertainments which have been given lately here, I must especially allude to that of Mons. Ferdinand Praeger, the talented and well-known London professor and composer, which took place in Saxe's rooms, on Monday evening, the 3rd instant. This was in all respects a brilliant affair, and attracted a large and fashionable audience. Praeger had a difficult task to encounter. He had to play two hours before a critical audience, and during that time to submit his own music only to the ordeal of their opinions. It speaks no little in favour of his talents as a composer and pianist to say that his hearers not merely were not ennuyé by the single-handed and somewhat hazardous display, but listened throughout with marked attention, and appeared highly gratified both with the piano-forte playing and the music submitted to their consideration. The programme consisted (Part I) of a "Nocturne Romantique; Grande marche triomphale, Elegie;" "La Petite Fadette" scene pastorale; (Part II) "Le Chalet;" "Mazurka;" a Prayer and "Valse fantastique;" "Reverie Nocturne;" "Grand morceau de Concert," a "Romance" and "Galop de Bravoure." Each piece was received with favour, and Mons. Praeger may be said to have achieved a decided success. His music was praised for its novelty and boldness, and his playing for its power and brilliancy. You cannot expect a lengthened analysis in a brief letter, but the French journals will supply all I have left unsaid. At the end of the concert such was the impression produced by Mons. Praeger, that a unanimous call was made on him for one morceau more and every one in the room complimented him on his success.

I intended to have sent you a short memoir of Spontini, but I see you have anticipated me. There were, nevertheless, some particulars attached to his life, death, and reputation, which might have been acceptable to your readers. Perhaps on a future occasion I may venture to discuss the merits of one, about whom at this moment there seems to be such a diversity of opinion. At the funeral service in his honor, two pieces—a trio in E flat, for female voices, and a Marche funebre in F minor, from the Vestale—were executed upon the organ, by M. Lefébvre-Wély, who prefaced the ceremony by an improvisation, the principal feature of which was the excessive obtrusion of a stop which suggested the idea of a sick clarionet more than anything else. M. Wély, nevertheless, is a first-rate organist, if not a first-rate improvisator. The trio was played at the communion, the march at the end of the service. The Offertory, accompanied by M. Vauthrot on the small organ, was borrowed from the trio of prisoners in Fernand Cortez, to which the Latin words had been adapted by M. Dietsch, recently appointed "chapel-master" of the Madeleine. M. Dietsch is known as the composer of several masses and other sacred pieces. MM. Auber and Pierre Erard (brother-in-law of the deceased) acted as chief mourners.

TOURS.—(From our own Correspondent).—Madame Montenegro, with Monsieur and Madame Santiago, have been giving a series of Italian operas here with great success. On Sunday evening I was present at the representation of Lucrezia Borgia, which was given with a perfection of ensemble seldom witnessed out of Paris or London. Madame Montenegro is a complete mistress of dramatic music, and with a fine quality of voice combines superior tragic powers. From the first air "Come è bello" to the last she sang and acted throughout in a manner that raised the most enthusiastic cheers from the audience, and was called for at the end of each act. Madame Santiago was the Orsini; her voice is of good quality, and she is a thorough musician. Her deep tones were excellently displayed in the famous brindisi, "Il segreto per esser felici," in which she was raptuously encored. Monsieur Santiago was Gennaro, the music of which part he sang with taste and feeling. The duo with Lucrezia was most vociferously encored, both artistes singing it with an amount of feeling and energy which called forth repeated bursts of approval from all quarters. Duke Alfonso was sustained by Signor Ghislanzoni, who sang the music correctly and in good taste. On Tuesday evening I was surprised to find the Favorite was to be given in French, Madame Montenegro filling the part of Leonora, and Signor Santiago that of Ferdinand. It appears that Madame Montenegro has broken up her troupe, and with the assistance of Monsieur and Madame Santiago sings in French or Italian whichever may suit the capabilities of the impresario, by whom she may be engaged on her star-rising expedition. Her pronunciation of French is perfect; I could scarcely discover the least accent; and Monsieur Santiago was equally "native" in this respect. I was lifted into the theatre by the crowd, and with difficulty got my stall, which I had the precaution to secure in the morning. The people told me that there were three hundred people more in the theatre than the authorities allowed money to be taken from at the doors. All this, however, was very disgraceful on the part of the police, of whom there were only some half dozen. Peace being restored, the opera proceeded, and was a finished and highly spirited performance on the part of Madame Montenegro and Monsieur Santiago. The duo, in the last act, was encored, and Madame Montenegro with Signor Santiago were twice obliged to appear at the fall of the curtain. As I am en route to Montes I dare say I shall again fall in with these charming planets.—CHARLES.

BERLIN.—Meyerbeer insisted on paying fifty dollars for his ticket at the recent benefit for the composer of the Czar and Zimmermann, Lortzing. The Demon of Night, an opera in three acts, by Jaques Rosehain, is in rehearsal, and will be produced at the Grand Opera, shortly after it has been given at the Academie Royale in Paris, where it is now in active rehearsal. The well-known pianist, improviser, and composer, Dr. Theodore Kullak, has obtained permission to visit London in the spring. On the 27th January the Royal Chapel-master, Carl Moser, the famous violin virtuoso, departed this life in the 77th year of his age. His son August Moser, also a talented violonist, is on his way back to Europe, too late to fulfil the last wishes of his dying parent. On the birthday of H.R.H. the Prince Charles, a family festival took place in H.R.H. Palace, to which the King and Queen and all the members of the Royal Family were invited. The Royal Princes and Princesses gave several Tableaux Vivans, interspersed with songs by the music directors Jahns, and piano-forte compositions by Weber, Meyerbeer, Rossini, Kullak and Thalberg, all performed by the Court Pianist, Dr. Kullak. The vocal music included German, Italian, and English songs.

VIENNA.—Wilmers, the pianist, is here, and has announced his third concert for the 23d March. His reputation is much greater at Vienna than in any other part of Europe. It will be remembered, that though he married an Englishwoman, Wilmers failed to please in London. Dessauer's opera, Paquita, was produced at the Opera-House on the 30th January. It was coldly received. This well-known song composer has not shown any striking talent for instrumentation or dramatic effect. Weber's Oberon has been produced here with great splendour, and received with immense enthusiasm.

LEIPZIG, Jan. 26.—(From a Correspondent).—Mr. H. Litolf, who, although an Englishman, enjoys the reputation of being one of the first living pianists, at a concert in the Gewandhaus, played a trio of his own composition, assisted by Herr David and Herr Rietz, which pleased much, most particularly the adagio. On the same occasion Beethoven's Septuor in E flat, Op. 20, was performed. At the fourteenth Subscription Concert we had the overture of Der Freyschutz; a fantasia for violoncello, by Kummer, well executed by Herr Grütz-macher; a concerto for violin composed and performed by Chapel-master Dreyschock; and a symphony for full orchestra, in G minor, by Julius Rietz, of which more on another occasion. On the 3d February, Chapel-master Rietz conducted a splendid concert at the Gewandhaus, for the benefit of the widow of Lortzing (composer of the popular opera Czar and Zimmermann), which left a surplus of 530 dollars. Madame Trege produced a great sensation by her expressive rendering of Mendelssohn's Zuleika (Op. 57), a song by R. Schumann, and another by David. (From the set dedicated to Miss Dolby.) Schubert's Symphonie, always effective here (and a great favourite of Mendelssohn's), opened the second part of the concert. His Majesty the King of Prussia has granted to the widow of Lortzing a pension of two hundred dollars.

FRANKFORT.—Lortzing's last Opera, Die Vornehmen Dilettanten, has been produced here with decided success.

ATHENS.—The season at the opera commenced with I Puritani. The theatre was newly decorated, and there was a full attendance.

MANHEIM.—An opera, by the Viennese composer, Ernst Pauer, was given at the theatre here, on the 12th January, with success. It contains twenty-eight pieces, many of a popular character.

DUSSELDORF.—Clara Schumann (late Wieck) gave a concert on the 23d January. She played Mozart's Trio for piano, clarionette and tenor; Beethoven's Sonata in G, for piano and violin; a Notturmo by Chopin; an Impromptu by Herbert Burgmuller (brother of the late F. Burgmuller); and some Leider ohne Worte, by Mendelssohn.

LISBON.—The former prima donna of the Grand Opera at Paris, Madame Stolz, is now singing with Clara Novello, in Lisbon. These ladies were "at daggers drawn," and their mutual hatred greatly deteriorated from the effect of the opera. In the famous duet of Semiramide (the scene of the embrace) they forgot their differences, and became sworn allies for the evening. The other singers were all hissed. [We have some more particulars of this matter, which we may probably publish.—ED.]

ROME.—The success of Catherine Hayes continues unabated. Notwithstanding the authorities have forbidden the representation of several operas in which she was to have appeared, there are still a great number in her repertoire, which command success. On her benefit night Miss Hayes will appear in selections from the Lucia, Maria de Rohan, &c. &c.

Provincial.

PLYMOUTH.—(From our own Correspondent.)—On Monday week an amateur performance was given at the Theatre Royal. These entertainments have of late become very common here in consequence of their attraction and increasing merit; indeed, did not one know that the performers were bona fide amateurs one would almost be inclined to think them Mr. Newcombe's regular troupe, which is always of the best kind. The Wonderful Woman was admirably acted by all. The light hearted Marquis de Frontignac, in the hands of Captain Disney Roebuck, was excellent;

there was a piquant nonchalance throughout that was assumed with great tact and skill. Mr. Roebuck was played up to capitally by Lieutenant Warren, who made a fop of the first water. Mr. Wheeler, as the good old Cobbler, distinguished himself with much eclat, while the Rodolphe of Captain Austen was hardly equal to his merits as an amateur artiste. Hortense, a most difficult character, was well acted by Mrs. Hudson Kirby, and Miss Mary Hill was equally successful in Cecilia. The Brigand followed, and brought into play Captain Roebuck's acting in melo-drama. His costume was magnificent and appropriate, and from beginning to end his acting was excellent and striking. The pathetic passages were given with a depth of feeling seldom if ever surpassed by an amateur performer, while the merriment assumed at having entrapped the old Steward was no less happy and no less true. His action was dramatic and graceful; and take the two evergreens, Wallack and Fred Lemaître from the stage, and according to my humble opinion, nowhere, soit amateur ou artiste, will you find a more pains-taking and creditable representative of Alessandro Massaroni than Captain Disney Roebuck. As this gentleman had the piece pretty well to himself, little need be said of the others engaged in it, save that Mr. Wheeler was an excellent Prince Bianchi, being natural and gentlemanlike, with a good "make up" in addition. Captain Austen, as the cunning old Steward Nicolo, justly deserved all the applause he obtained. The two young artists, Albert and Theodore, by Lieutenant Heysham and Lieutenant Blake, were ably represented. Indeed the whole performance gave the utmost satisfaction to a brilliant audience.—T. E. B.

GRANTHAM.—Miss Cobb's Annual Concert was given on Tuesday evening, under the immediate patronage of his Grace the Duke of Rutland, the Marquis of Granby, Lords C. and D. Manners, Sir J. Thorold, Sir W. Welby, &c. &c. The principal performers on the occasion being, Miss Cobb, Mr. F. H. Bodda, Mr. Henry Nicholson (flautist to his Grace the Duke of Rutland), Mr. Henry Farmer, of Nottingham (solo violin), and Mr. J. Farmer (pianoforte), with three gentlemen of the town whose glee singing reflected great credit, not only upon themselves but also upon Miss Cobb, under whose care they have for some time placed themselves. The encores during the evening were numerous, including Miss Cobb's songs, "Home of Love" (violin obligato), and "Her Mocking Bird," (Flute obligato). Mr. Bodda was similarly complimented in three of his songs. Flute and violin solos were admirably played by Messrs. Nicholson and Farmer, though they laboured under great disadvantage from the pianoforte being more than half a note too flat. However a very successful and pleasing Concert terminated with the National Anthem, in the chorus of which the entire audience most loyally joined.—(From a Correspondent.)

SALISBURY.—The Distin Family gave an Evening Concert at the Assembly Rooms, on Tuesday the 11th inst., which was numerously attended. The programme comprised selections from Belisario, La Sonnambula, Lucia di Lammermoor, La Figlia del Reggimento, and some miscellaneous compositions, vocal and instrumental. Time and constant practice have improved the purity of tone and finish peculiar to the performance of this family, and the most critical ears are gratified by the harmonic blending of the tones of the four instruments. The celebrated Scena from La Sonnambula and Costa's Terzetto a Canone—"Vanne a colei"—were interpreted with admirable feeling and fidelity, and a selection from the works of Kucken and Weber gave the Messrs. Distin an opportunity of exhibiting the combined powers and sweetness of their patent Euphonic Horns. Mr. Gorman presided at the pianoforte, and Miss Moriatt O'Connor assisted the brothers Distin in the vocal department. The room was crowded to inconvenience.

BATH.—On Wednesday evening, Mons. Jaques gave the third and last of his present series of Classical Chamber Concerts. A crowded and fashionable audience assembled at his residence in Edgar-buildings. The executants were M. Sainton, first violin, M. Jaques, second violin, Mr. R. Blagrove, tenor, and Herr Hausmann, violoncello. The concert opened with Beethoven's quartett in C minor, No. 4. The audience yielded themselves up to the spell of the great master, and as each movement died away into air, were unanimous in their expressions of delight. The quartett was followed by a sonata in G minor, by Ries, for piano and violoncello. In this we had an opportunity of hearing M. Jaques on his own instrument, the pianoforte. His style is evidently formed in the best schools; his touch is firm and brilliant. A quartett of Mendelssohn (No 1, in E flat), a violin solo, by M. Sainton, admirably executed, finished the first part of the programme. The second gave us an opportunity of hearing a lady whose abilities have already been acknowledged by the musical circles of Bath and the metropolis. For some time past Madame Jaques has been prevented by ill-health from playing in public. The piece allotted to her this evening was a Caprice in E for the pianoforte with quartett accompaniments, composed by Sterndale Bennett, in which the thoroughly-educated lady pianiste evinced her wonted qualities of touch and tone. She was warmly and deservedly applauded. The concert concluded with Beethoven's grand Trio in D, op. 70, for piano, violin, and violoncello, Mons. Jaques at the piano; and Mozart's quartett in C, No. 6. In the course of the evening, Mr. R. Blagrove played a solo on the concertina.—Bath and Cheltenham Gazette.

KINGTON.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The members of the Kington Musical Society, conducted by Mr. Ridley, held their third meeting for this season, on Tuesday last. The performance commenced with Mozart's overture to La Clemenza di Tito, followed by Parry's chorus of the "Fairies." "Tis Evening Hour" by Dearle, succeeded, and was followed by the trio, "The Night is Rainy," which, with the glee, "Hark Apollo," gained encores. In the second part, Bishop's serenade, "Sleep Gentle Lady," and the quartett, "I gave my Harp to Sorrow's Land," by the same composer, were performed. During the evening a Nocturne by Thalberg was brilliantly played by the conductor on the pianoforte.

MANCHESTER.—Mr. Carte has commenced a series of Lectures, at the Royal Institution, Manchester, on classical and unclassical music. His first lecture, on the 10th instant, was fully attended. The illustrations, in which Mr. Carte (on his new patent flute), Mr. Seymour (violin), Mr. Thorley (violoncello), and Mr. D. Banks (pianoforte), assisted, were listened to with marked attention and applause.

GLASGOW.—(From a Correspondent.)—The potent and magic Jullien has been received like an ancient conqueror entering the city in triumph—Timour or Sesostris. Like a conqueror came he attended—for what vanquisher ever had his praises heralded by such a trumpeter as Vivier; for whom rattled such drums as those of the National Guard; what band—Roman legion, Persian cohort, or Macedonian phalanx—could compare with Jullien's regiment of invincibles. Xerxes might have envied him his tambour-major, and Alexander desired to exchange his Homer for Jetty Treffz. The good people of Glasgow gave the superfluous conductor a regular highland welcome. The prospect of his coming was pleasing to their anticipations, and his arrival a white day in the calendar of their lives. I was excessively grieved I was unable to attend any of the concerts, but as I had promised to send you an account of all the musical doings in the city of the "Saut herring," I could not remain silent, though I needs must transmit my account at second hand. Jullien and his troupe have, in sober earnestness, excited an immense sensation. What between Jullien himself, Vivier, Jetty Treffz, the Drummers and their major, and the band, the universal topic of conversation would appear to be absorbed in one subject. Nothing is talked of but Jullien and his corps—nothing else excites a sensation. The press, though naturally cold in matters that relate to music, are, when they speak of Jullien, warmed into unusual panegyric. Take, for example, the following notice, extracted from the Daily Mail of Friday:—"It is not alone the celebrity of Jullien's name—not solely his rectitude of principle—not alone his good qualities as a man, that may recommend him to the warmest patronage our citizens can afford; but his innate genius and power of control over the masses of sound which he evokes, are enough of themselves to determine him in the mind of every man of thought as a genius—remarkable for energy, remarkable for power, and equally remarkable for a just appreciation and right rendering of great composers. We have been precluded, in consequence of the pressure of other matters, from noticing M. Jullien as we would wish, and as he deserves. He is always great, and ever original, and he never fails in anything he attempts. No musician with whom we are acquainted has produced so much originality, and none has ever essayed it with so much effect. He is never "from home" when his orchestra is around him, and we are sure that his reception here will prove to him that his earnestness finds its way to the hearts of those who, like ourselves, admire genuine thought given with the pith of musical expression." I must repeat, I am sorry I was unable to attend concerts that appear to have given the most unqualified satisfaction.

Miscellaneous.

M. ALEXANDRE BILLET'S CLASSICAL CONCERTS.—Having quoted a long article from the Morning Post on the first concert of this eminent pianist, it is unnecessary for us to enter into any lengthened details. The programme was essentially remarkable for novelty. A sonata of Beethoven, in F sharp major, has never, as we think, been played in public before, its unusual key and recondite character having acted as insuperable barriers to the enterprise of pianists in general. M. Billet, however, is a lion who devours the music of the great masters with an insatiable appetite. He knows everything and plays everything with equal facility, though, it would appear, not with the peculiar grace demanded by a certain fastidious contemporary. He simply plays the works of each master as they were intended to be played by those who wrote them; this, however, to the hot adherents of what, with a considerable quantity of romance, is termed the "Romantic School," though, in reality, no more romantic than a Gibus hat, it would seem, is not quite enough. Such enthusiasts demand a variety of intellectual grimaces, contortions and shiverings of the rhythm, unmeaning excess of accent, until the whole becomes a jumble of loose and unbanded expression, in the midst of which the composer would find a great difficulty in recognising his own work. They who looked for these were doubtless disappointed with M. Billet. They did not find it in his graceful reading of Beethoven's graceful sonata, in his pointed delivery of the preludes and fugues of Bach and Handel, in the simple and nervous execution of Woelfl's elaborate and masterly sonata in C minor, in his elegant interpretation of Mendelssohn's beautiful variations in E flat (posthumous work), also the first time in public, in his vigorous rendering of Haydn's fiery old sonata in B minor (again the first time in public), or in the fine mechanism and unaffected style which marked his delivery of the various studies of Steibelt, Cramer, Mendelssohn—not Ries, as stated in the bills—Moscheles, and Chopin, two of which, those of Mendelssohn and Moscheles, were enthusiastically encored, and brought the concert to an animated climax. M. Billet ought to have explained to the audience his intention to substitute for a study of Ries the magnificent prelude in F minor from the "Etudes de Perfectionnement" of Mendelssohn, which produced an effect that rarely, if ever, accompanies the performance of Ries's laboured effusions. That the numerous public attracted to St. Martin's Hall by the announcement of M. Billet's name in simple connection with the great pianoforte writers, without any other vocal or instrumental co-operation, were fully satisfied and delighted with his performance, was testified by the frequency and warmth of their applause, and by the great majority remaining until the last note was played. They were evidently not adherents of the so-called "Romantic School," but of that which, with a greater show of reason, is styled the "Classical." M. Billet's next concert is announced for Tuesday evening, the same day as Mr. Sloper's third, and Mr. Sterndale Bennett's first.

LINDSAY SLOPER'S SOIREE.—The programme of the second of these entertainments, which took place on the 11th inst., at the new Beethoven-rooms, was, if anything, better than its predecessor. It opened with Beethoven's trio in E flat (remarkable as being op. 1 of the composer—for a first published work, a phenomenon in the history of the art), in which Mr. Sloper was assisted by Messrs. Blagrove (violin) and Hancock (violinello). The next instrumental performance was a selection of two pieces from the Lieder Ohne Worte, and a "Sieben Charakteristische Stücke" of Mendelssohn.* The song without words was No. 5, in D, with the moving bass, one of the most beautiful in the second book. The characteristic piece was the allegro con moto in A major, which Mendelssohn has entitled "Schnell und Beweglich," that rapid torrent of semiquavers which poor little Filtsch played with such astonishing effect at his concert in the Hanover-square-Rooms scarcely a year before his death. No two pieces could have been better suited to Mr. Sloper's remarkably neat and finished style of play. Dussek's sonata in G major, the second from op. 35, dedicated to Clementi, although a masterpiece of grace and elegance, is scarcely known at all. Mr. Sloper's admirable playing, however, made it unanimously acceptable, and it was received with the applause seldom bestowed, except upon well-known and favourite works. Mr. Sloper deserves credit for the introduction of this specimen of one of the greatest masters of the pianoforte, and we accord it him willingly. But let credit be given where credit is due. M. Alexandre Bilet, a foreigner but recently established in this country, last year, at St. Martin's-hall, set an example which the majority of our classical pianists who give Chamber Concerts are now beginning to follow; and we find such names as Dussek, Steibelt, and Pinto much more frequently in their programmes, than, but for Mr. Bilet, who first shewed the courage to revive them, in all likelihood would have been the case. In the second part Mr. Sloper, assisted by the same artists, introduced his MS. trio in C minor; a work which, though not in the ad captandum style—as indeed might have been expected from so thoughtful and accomplished a musician as Mr. Sloper—is brilliant and attractive, displaying the capabilities of the several instruments with great power of contrast and a variety of pleasing effects. Two studios in E flat and G minor, from the third book of Op. 47 of Stephen Heller, and the "Chant de Chasseurs" of the same gifted composer, served to display Mr. Sloper's command of the greatest difficulties of the modern school of playing; not the modern romantic school, as it is called by its admirers, but that school which, in emulation of older masters, strives to make music address itself to the intellect as well as the ear, to elevate as well as to delight. Of this school Stephen Heller is a distinguished follower, and Mr. Sloper, by the style in which he gave expression to the German composer's thoughts, shewed himself a sympathetic co-adherent. The last performance of Mr. Sloper consisted of the andante in E flat major, and the allegro vivace, in C major, from Molique's Six Melodies, Op. 36, admirably played by himself and Mr. Blagrove. These melodies, without being copies, approach nearer to the Songs Without Words of Mendelssohn than any other compositions of the same character with which we are acquainted. The vocalists were Miss Birch and Miss E. Birch, who sang in their most charming manner a charming variety of duets and airs from Mozart, Cherubini, Salvator Rosa, Sterndale Bennett, and Clari, accompanied by Mr. Sloper on the pianoforte. The selection and the performance gave entire satisfaction to a crowded audience.

MR. JOHN MEYRICK, upwards of thirty years connected with the great Music Establishment of Preston, afterwards Coventry and Co., died lately highly respected and much lamented by all who knew him. Mr. Meyrick was a clever and intelligent man of business, and of amiable and conciliating manners.

THE LONDON SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—We understand that the committee of this society, encouraged by the favourable reception of Dr. Elvey's new Anthem, have resolved to recommend to the Subscribers, at their next general meeting, to give two Annual Prizes for the composition of Orchestral Anthems which will form every year a part of their performances. Further particulars will be announced hereafter.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—Handel's Israel in Egypt was repeated on the 12th to a crowded audience.

M. FERDINAND PRAEGER has returned to London from Paris, where he has been performing on the pianoforte, with the greatest success, some compositions of his own.

* Known in England as The Temperaments.

MR. C. MARSHALL'S DIORAMA OF A TOUR THROUGH EUROPE.—This is a very interesting exhibition, the scenery is well painted. Mr. Marshall's description is very entertaining and quite to the purpose. The room was well filled on Monday evening last, and the audience departed highly pleased with what they had heard and seen.

DIORAMA OF THE LIFE AND CAREER OF NAPOLEON BUONAPARTE.—The admirers of the great warrior, Napoleon, will find sufficient interest in the various views here represented to afford them amusement and information. Some of the pictures are very nicely painted; among which we may mention the Pyramids, the Retreat from Moscow, the Coronation, and St. Helena. We think Waterloo might be improved—some of the horses being very indifferent; and we doubt if Napoleon was in the position represented in the picture. An interesting lecture is delivered at each performance, accompanied with appropriate music. Altogether the diorama of Napoleon is well worthy of a visit.

MR. W. RAE.—This talented pianist gave the first of a series of three Classical Concerts at the New Beethoven Rooms, Queen Anne Street, on Wednesday week. Mr. W. Rae was assisted by Herr Molique (violin), and M. Rousselot (violinello), instrumentalists, and Miss Owen as vocalist. We shall reserve to ourselves the right to criticise the performances until the close of the third concert. Meanwhile it is but fair to state that Mr. Rae was entirely successful, and that he won the unanimous suffrages of all present.

M. JACQUES BLUMENTHAL, the popular composer and pianist is in Paris, but will return to London immediately.

EXETER HALL.—An event of unusual interest is announced to take place on Monday, viz., the performance of a new grand oratorio by an English composer. Mr. Charles Horsley's David, which was produced at Liverpool in October last, with such great success, is at present an object of curiosity and interest to the entire musical community of the metropolis. Every one will be present on Monday to hear it. We have no doubt whatever of its enthusiastic reception.

MR. R. MACPHERSON.—Died, at 5, Ranelagh Street, Pimlico, Mr. R. Macpherson, teacher of music. He was a man of retired habits, and thoroughly acquainted with the polite languages, a composer of merit, and often alluded to in the Musical World. His age was about 40. He left his native place, Edinburgh, about fourteen years ago; and has been a portion of that time on the continent. His last composition is "A lay for the Church," just published; the poetry by Andrew Park; and as he had no relatives here, it is advisable that this brief notice should gain publicity. He died on the seventh, of asthma.

MICHAEL ANGELO.—A letter from Rome states that a picture dealer of that city, named Campani, has lately become the possessor of a picture by Michael Angelo. He bought an old picture at a sale in London, and having cleaned it, discovered that it was the portrait of Victoria Colonna, wife of the Marquis de Pescara, general of Charles V., a lady celebrated by the great painter in one of his poems, and whose likeness he declares he had taken. M. Campani, conceiving that this might be the picture alluded to, submitted it to the Pontifical Academy of the Fine Arts at Rome, which has unanimously declared it to have been painted by Michael Angelo. It has been exhibited to the public, and the connoisseurs value it at 165,000*fr.*

MDLLE. COULON gave a Concert at the New Beethoven Rooms on Tuesday evening, for the benefit of a reduced family. Miss Bassano, rendered Donizetti's popular air, "In questo sem-plice" with great spirit and success, and Miss Ransford was much applauded in "C'est une caprice" from Les Diamans de la Couronne. Madame Lemaire, Madame de Montreal, and Signora de Haro also contributed their services to the vocal department, as well as Herr Brandt, and Signor Montelli. The instrumental portion of the concert was ably supported by Mdle. Coulon on the pianoforte, Mr. Mori on the violin, Mr. Frederick Chatterton on the harp, M. Rousselot on the violinello, and M. Frelon on the harmonium à percussion. Mdle. Coulon performed Beethoven's grand finale in D minor, and Thalberg's fantasia in Elisir d'Amore, in both of which she exhibited refined feeling and great facility of execution. The conductors were Signor Cittadini, and Messrs. Chimon and Frelon.

MISS EMILY NEWCOMBE.—This talented young artiste has done well to secure the valuable services of Jullien and his troupe to give two Concerts on the 26th and 27th inst. With such talent as Jetty Treffz, Vivier, Jarrett and last not least the Tambour Major and his corps of drummers, the Theatre will as usual on the announcement of this young lady's concert be a bumper.

OLE BULL is on a musical tour in Asia. It is said that he has already accumulated a fortune of two million francs.

MR. WILLIAM HENRY STEIL, Professor of Music, died on the 3rd inst., aged 64, at his residence, Poole, Dorset.

MR. JAMES WALLACK.—This popular and admirable actor will make his first appearance, after his long and severe indisposition, on Monday, at the Haymarket Theatre.

MR. J. WILLIAM WALLACK, from America, is engaged at the Haymarket Theatre. He is a son of Mr. Henry Wallack, formerly stage manager of Covent Garden Theatre, and brother of James Wallack. Report speaks highly of his ability.

MR. LINDSAY SLOPER's third soiree will take place on Tuesday.

MR. W. REA will give his second soiree of classical music next Friday.

MR. VON. HOFF, the vocalist, is in Milan, where he has been singing with much success at various private soirees.

MDLLE. GRAUMAUN has returned to town after a successful provincial tour. A mistake was made by our Liverpool correspondent, in his letter last week, in reference to this charming and accomplished singer, who was as warmly appreciated at Liverpool, as elsewhere. On the present occasion, Mdlle. Graumaun was encored in a song of Mendelssohn's and greatly applauded in one of Schubert's.

MR. W. STERNDALÉ BENNETT commences his seventh annual series of classical pianoforte soirees on Tuesday.

MR. NOVELLO, of Dean Street, Publisher, has obtained an injunction against Mr. James, for publishing Mendelssohn's Lieder ohne Worte.

BANQUET TO MR. MACREADY.—The musical arrangements for the Banquet to Mr. Macready, on his retirement from the stage, have been confided to Mr. Edward Land. The music for the occasion will be almost exclusively selected from that incidental to Shakespere's plays. Mr. Land will be assisted by the most eminent vocalists of the day. The Banquet is to be held at the Hall of Commerce, Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, Bart. in the chair. It is impossible even now to obtain a ticket at any price.

MISS EYLES gave her first Soiree Musicale on the 17th inst. at the Whittington Club, to a numerous audience. Miss Eyles, who is making sure progress in her profession, obtained a well-deserved encore in Macfarren's brilliant rondo, "Gone! he's gone!" from the Sleeper awakened, which is becoming the rage with contraltos, native and foreign. Miss Messent was encored in "Tell me my heart," and Mr. Land in a new song by Nelson, "I saw not her face." Mr. John Thomas played a solo on the harp in a highly effective manner, and Miss Bayntum (a debutante) displayed very considerable promise in a fantasia on the pianoforte. Mr. Land was the conductor.

LONDON SACRED HARMONIC.—Yesterday evening "The Creation" was repeated to a crowded hall. The performers were as before. Miss Birch sang and looked as well as ever. Mr. Locket was, as usual, vociferously encored in the popular song, "In native worth," and Mr. Phillips acquitted himself with his accustomed ability. The chorus was faultless. Dr. Elvey's new Anthem preceded the oratorio. The Messiah was announced by Mr. Surman for next Friday.

THE MUSICAL POLICE OF BOSTON.—The robbers are again beginning to bestir themselves in and about Boston, despite of Marshal Tukey and his trumpet, Cadi Clapp and his banjo, and Sheik Starkweather and his double action cross-cut piano. Every week or so a bank "cracks" in the neighbourhood; the intervals are supplied with highway robberies, while the short hours are interspersed with burglaries and small "touches" about the steamboats and railway depots. While all this is going on, we do not hear of any arrests, or have the satisfaction of reporting any recoveries. All that we hear is, an occasional blast of self-glorification from the Marshal on the trumpet, a light velvet touch or so on the piano from the Patriarch, with a tink-a-tink accompaniment on the banjo of Starkweather, like the dropping of a long stream of sixpences and shillings through the fingers, to the bottom of a very deep pocket. These fellows have fine times; so have the thieves, who thrive by their negligence.—N. Y. National Police Gazette, 9th Nov., 1850. Lately, the store of Messrs. Fuller & Cotton was broken into, and robbed of goods to the amount of one thousand dollars; on the day before that, several pocket-books were taken at the depots; in the course of the same week, an attempt was made on two banks, near enough at hand to indicate Boston as the starting place of the felonious depredators; while smaller crimes and depredations, of various degrees of importance, prove that the resident gangs of rogues labor with industry and impunity, if not with the most brilliant luck. They none of them are molested, and while they are picking pockets, forcing bolts, and crying "stand and deliver" to true men, we hear nothing but the dulcet symphony of the musical police. We are inclined to think that the People of Boston will wake up some one of these days to the necessity of a reform, but we fear it will be when the trumpet has sounded too many false charges to the public detriment, and when the venerable minstrels who carry "bunches of keys at their girdles," have grown too fat with toll at the public expense.—Boston National Police Gazette.

Our Scrap Book.

ON THE ORIGIN OF THE ORGAN.—Although the organ is mentioned so early, it is not to be imagined that it was the noble, magnificent, and complicated instrument at present used. The hydraulic or pneumatic organ, the principal of all wind instruments, appears to have originated on the rustic pipes, or syrinx, allotted by the ancients to Pan and their other rural deities; to them, however, the invention of the pipe was indirectly communicated by the Hebrews, by means of the sacred writings of Moses. In the Hebrew it was called Huggab, i.e. the pan pipes, which, say the commentators, was a kind of syrinx, or fistula. The septuagint, instead of harp and organ has, psaltry an cithara. The Arabic has tympanum et citharum. From which it appears that the translators, ancient and modern, of all parts of the world, not knowing what were the real forms and properties of the Hebrew instruments, have given to them the names of such as were of the most common use in their countries.—(From T. H. Tomlinson's lectures on Ancient Music.)

ON THE FORM OF THE ANCIENT LYRE, &c.—There is as little agreement amongst the ancient writers with regard to the form of the lyre, as there is respecting the number of its strings. Hermes is said not only to have been the inventor of the lyre but also of a system of music adapted to it. For a considerable period the practice of music was confined to the priests, and appropriated exclusively to religious and solemn occasions. The theory and practice of the art subsequently were generally diffused amongst the Egyptian people; but according to Plato they were restricted by their laws to certain fixed melodies, which they were not permitted to alter. Under all these disadvantages, however, there can be no doubt but that the science flourished, and that new instruments were added to those already in use, which (the lyre especially,) were greatly improved. But it does not appear from history that the Egyptians, Phœnicians, Hebrews, or any ancient people, who cultivated the arts, except the Greeks and Romans, had musical characters; and these had no other symbols of sound than the letters of their alphabet, which likewise served them for arithmetical numbers and chronological dates.

With respect to music it is asserted by Diodorus Siculus that the cultivation of it was prohibited by the Egyptians as useless, being persuaded that it rendered the minds of men effeminate. But opposed to this assertion there is one from Plato, who travelled into Egypt, with a view of getting acquainted with the arts and sciences that flourished there, and was particularly attached to music, and says, "The plan which we have been laying down for the education of youth was known long ago to the Egyptians viz., that nothing but beautiful forms and fine music, should be permitted to enter into the assemblies of young people. Having settled what those forms and what music should be, they exhibited them in their temples; nor was it allowable for any imitative artists to invent any other forms different from those established, or in any of the branches of music to make any alteration." Herodotus too, who travelled into Egypt more than 300 years before Diodorus, and 100 before Plato, is so far from mentioning any prohibition against the practice of music there, that he gives several instances of its use in their festivals and religious ceremonies.

"The Egyptians," says he "were the first inventors of festivals, ceremonies, and transactions with the gods, by the mediation of others, and used not only to celebrate their festivals once a-year, but have many times appointed to that end; particularly in the city of Babastes, where they assemble to worship Diana with great devotion. The men and women embark promiscuously in great numbers, and during the voyage some of the women beat upon the tabor, whilst part of the men play on the pipe; the rest, of both sexes, singing and clapping their hands together at the same time." Strabo also says, that the children of the Egyptians were taught letters, the songs appointed by law, and a certain species of music established by government, exclusive of all others. Indeed, the Greeks unanimously confess, that most of the ancient musical instruments were of Egyptian invention, as the triangular lyre, the monaulos, or single flute, the tymbal or kettledrum, and the sistrum, an instrument of sacrifice which was so multiplied by the priests in religious ceremonies, and in such great favour with the Egyptians in general, that Egypt was often called in derision the country of sistrums; as Greece has been said to be governed by the lyre. Therefore the prohibition mentioned by Diodorus Siculus, inconsistent as it may seem with what he elsewhere says of the music and musicians of Egypt, may be accounted for by the study of music, in very ancient times, having been confined there solely to the priesthood, who used it only on religious and solemn occasions.—(From T. H. Tomlinson's Lectures on Ancient Music.)

MUSIC.—Music, like vegetation, flourishes differently in various climates; and in proportion to the culture and encouragement it receives; to love such music as our ears are accustomed to appears to be an instinct generally subsisting in our nature, and appears less wonderful that it should have been held in the highest estimation at all times and in most nations. The science of musical sounds, though it may have been deprecated as appealing only to the ear, and affording nothing more than a momentary gratification and fugitive delight, may with justice be considered as the art that unites corporeal with intellectual pleasure, by a species of enjoyment which gratifies sense without weakening reason; and which, therefore, the great may cultivate without debasement, and the good enjoy without depravation. It would be almost lost time to search for the origin of those arts which have been handed down to us from remote ages of antiquity, shadows, clouds, and darkness, rest upon their first beginnings; and the names of their inventors are obscured by fables and traditions. Natural causes, however, may sufficiently account for its origin without having to refer to any miracle for the event. The elements of music are in everything around us; they are found in every part of creation—in the chirpings of the feathered choristers of nature; in the voices or calls of various animals; in the melancholy sound of the waterfall, or the wild roar of the waves—in the hum of the distant multitudes, or the concussion of sonorous bodies—in the winds, alike when the dying cadence falls lightly on the ear as it agitates the trees of the forest, as when the hurricane sweeps around, and in terrific accents betrays the voice of Him who "rides upon the whirlwind and directs the storm." All these contain the rudiments of harmony, and may be easily supposed to have furnished the minds of intelligent creatures with such ideas of sound as time and the accumulated observation of succeeding ages could not fail to improve into a system.—Tomlinson's Lectures on Ancient Music.

It is probable that vocal music was practised, or at least that the ancients were acquainted with the difference in the tones of the human voice and its capability for harmony, before instruments were thought of; and the latter, without doubt, owed their origin to the observation of effects flowing from the natural causes already mentioned. Diodorus Siculus, and other authors, attribute the invention of wind instruments to observations made on the whistling of the wind in reeds, and the pipes of other plants. The different tones of sounding strings must have been observed very early, and thus have given birth to string instruments, whilst instruments of percussion, such as tabors and drums, most probably originated from the sonorous ringing of hollow bodies when struck. In the first conception, all these instruments were rude and imperfect, and would afford little pleasure to the modern musician. The instruments used in all barbarous and savage nations tend to show not only that their early efforts in the art were, as might be expected, extremely rude, but that wind instruments, and those of percussion, were the first used. Mr. Weld, in his notices of the Indians of North-west America, tells us that their native music was very rude and indifferent, and equally void of melody and variety. The following is a description of a dancing party which he encountered one night on the island of Bois Blanc:—"Three elderly men seated under a tree were the principal musicians. One of these beat a small drum, formed of a piece of a hollow tree covered with a skin, and the two others marked time equally with the drum with rattles formed of dried squashes, or gourds, filled with pease; at the same time these men sung; which the dancers joined in." There is also an account given by Captain Cook of the natives of the islands in the Pacific, which equally proves the rudeness and simplicity of the music of savage tribes. Soon after the arrival of the captain at Otaheite, one of the chiefs gave him a specimen of the music of the country. Four persons played upon flutes made of a hollow bamboo, about one foot long, which had only two stops, and therefore could not sound more than four notes by halftones. They were sounded like our German flutes, except that the performer, instead of applying the instrument to his mouth, blew into it with one nostril while he stopped the other with his thumb. To these instruments four other persons sung, and kept very good time, but only one tune was played during the concert, from which we may naturally come to the conclusion that in all uncultivated and barbarous nations their music has been of a similar description. Wind and pulsatile instruments have invariably been found, stringed ones much more rarely, and all their airs and melodies, if, indeed, they deserve the name, are of the rudest kind.—From J. H. Tomlinson's Lectures on Ancient Music.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

For the convenience of our West-End Subscribers, Advertisers, and Correspondents, Messrs. WESSEL and Co., 229, REGENT STREET, have kindly consented to receive Advertisements, Subscriptions, and Communications for the Editor.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A SUBSCRIBER.—(Sheffield)—Mr. Balfe's address is No. 14, Bruton Street, Grosvenor Square.

Our notice of Mr. Hullah's Monthly Concert last night, at St. Martin's Hall, is unavoidably postponed till next week.

Advertisements.

ROYAL MUSIC HALL, ADELAIDE STREET, STRAND.

GRAND VOCAL AND INSTRUMENTAL ENTERTAINMENTS every Evening, Monday, Wednesday and Friday, Sig. Montelli's Italian Operatic Concerts. Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, Apollorion and Vocal Concerts. Stalls, 2s.; Balcony Seats, 1s. 6d.; Promenade and Upper Balcony, 1s. Programme varied every evening.

SIGNOR CAMILLO SIVORI

BEGS to acquaint his friends that he will return to London the end of March. Address, Cramer, Beale and Co., 201, Regent Street.

M. JACQUES BLUMENTHAL

BEGS to acquaint his friends and pupils that he will arrive in London for the season the middle of next month. Address, Cramer, Beale and Co., 201, Regent Street.

MISS CATHERINE HAYES.

THE Public are respectfully informed that Miss Hayes will return to London for the season after her fulfilment of her engagement at Rome. Her departure for America is fixed for the early part of Autumn. All letters and communications to be addressed to the care of Cramer, Beale and Co., 201, Regent Street.

HERR ERNST

BEING absent on a PROVINCIAL TOUR, requests that all Letters, Communications, and Engagements during his absence from town, may be addressed to Herr Ernst, under cover to

M. FRANK,

12, MARGARET STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE.

MR. KIALLMARK

HAS the honour to announce that he will give THREE PERFORMANCES OF CLASSICAL AND MODERN PIANOFORTE MUSIC, at the NEW BEETHOVEN ROOMS, 27, QUEEN ANNE STREET, on Monday Evening, March 3rd, and Monday Mornings, March 17 and 31. On which occasions he will be assisted by Miss E. Birch, Miss Pyne, Herr Kroff, Messrs. Frederick Chatterton, Moliue, Hausmann, Gratton Cooke, Miss Annie Pilsar, and Sig. Regondi. Subscription Tickets, for reserved seats, One Guinea; single tickets, for reserved seats, Half-a-Guinea; and Single Tickets, for unreserved seats, Seven Shillings each; may be had of all the principal Musicians, and of Mr. Kiallmark, 224, Fitzroy Sq. Robert W. Ollivier, Concert Agent, 19, Old Bond-st., Piccadilly.

MR. JOHN THOMAS,

PRINCIPAL Harpist at Her Majesty's Theatre, and Professor at the Royal Academy of Music, has the honour to announce that he has returned to London, and that his season for giving instruction on the Harp has now commenced.

He begs also to state that he has established CLASSES for instruction in

HARMONY AND COMPOSITION.

One Class, consisting of Ladies only, meets on Wednesdays; and another, of Gentlemen, on Fridays. The lessons commence each evening at 7 o'clock.

All communications to be forwarded to Mr. Thomas, at his residence, No. 27, GRAFTON STREET, FITZROY SQUARE.

MR. LINDSAY SLOPER'S THIRD AND LAST SOIREE OF CHAMBER MUSIC

WILL take place at the NEW BEETHOVEN ROOMS, 27, QUEEN ANNE STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, on TUESDAY next, the 25th inst., to commence at half-past Eight o'clock precisely. Mr. Lindsay Sloper will be assisted by Miss Dolby, Mr. Whitworth, Herr Moliue, and Mr. Rousselott. Tickets, half-a-guinea each, may be had at the principal Music Warehouses, and of Mr. Lindsay Sloper, 7, Southwick Place, Hyde Park.

PROGRAMME OF MR. W. STERNDAL BENNETT'S

FIRST PERFORMANCE OF CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC, TUESDAY next, February 25, at the HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS:—Trio, W. S. Bennett; Sonata, "Didone Abbandonata;" Pianoforte, Clementi; Sonata, pianoforte and violin, Beethoven; Concerto in C minor, J. Seb. Bach; Sonata, pianoforte and violoncello, Mendelssohn. Instrumentalists—Messrs. W. Dorrell, W. S. Bennett, M. Sainton, and Signor Piatti, &c. Vocalist—Miss Williams. To commence at half-past 8 o'clock. Subscription to the series, one guinea; single tickets, half-a-guinea; triple tickets (to admit three to any one concert), one guinea. To be had of Mr. W. S. Bennett, 15, Russell-place, Fitzroy-square, and at all the principal music warehouses.

DAVID. EXETER HALL.

ON MONDAY evening Feb. 24th, will be performed for the first time in London, DAVID, a sacred Oratorio by CHARLES EDWARD HORNLEY. Principal Vocalists, Miss Birch, Miss Williams, Miss E. Birch, Mr. Lockey, Mr. T. Williams, Mr. Weiss, and Mr. Whitworth. The band and chorus will be complete in every department. Leader Mr. H. Blagrove; Organist Mr. G. Cooper; Conductor Mr. C. E. Horsley. Prices of admission—reserved seats (numbered) 10s. 6d., to be had only of R. ADDISON AND CO., 210, Regent Street reserved seats in area and gallery 5s., area tickets 3s., upper platform 2s., to be had of all Music Sellers

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.

CONDUCTOR, Mr. COSTA.—Wednesday next, Feb. 26, Handel's Oratorio, "SAUL." Vocalists—Misses Birch, Dolby, Mr. Benson, Mr. T. Williams, Mr. Weiss, and Mr. Lawler. The Orchestra, the most extensive available in Exeter-hall, will consist of (including sixteen double basses), nearly 700 performers! Tickets, 3s., 5s., and 10s. 6d. each—at the Society's Sole Office, 8, in Exeter Hall; or of Mr. Bowley, 53, Charing Cross.

LONDON SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.

ON FRIDAY next, Handel's Oratorio, "MESSIAH." Principal Vocalists—Miss Louisa Pyne, Mrs. Temple, Miss M. Williams, Mrs. Donald King, and Mr. Lawler. Principal First Violin—Mr. H. Blagrove, and 30 others; Second Violin—Mr. Watkins, and 24 others; Viola—Mr. Glanville, and 20 others; Violoncello—Mr. Lindley, and 11 others; Double Bass—Mr. Howell, and 11 others; Flute—Messrs. Card, and another; Oboe—Mr. G. Cook, and three others; Clarinet—Mr. Egerton, and 3 others; Bassoon—Mr. Hardy, and 3 others; Trumpet—Mr. Harper, and 3 others; Horn—Mr. C. Harper, and 3 others; Trombones—Messrs. Smithies, Horton, and Healey; Double Drums—Mr. Chipp. The Chorus will consist of about 180 Trebles, 150 Altos, 180 Tenors, and 180 Basses, making a Total of above Eight Hundred Performers. Organist—Mr. T. Jolley. Conductor, Mr. Surman, (Founder of the Exeter Hall Oratorios.) Tickets, Area, 3s.; Reserved Seats in the Area, Rows, 5s.; Reserved Seats in the Improved Gallery, 5s.; in the North or South Gallery, 7s.; Central Area Reserved Seats, numbered, 10s. 6d. To be had of the principal Music Sellers; and at the Office of the Society, No. 9, in Exeter Hall.

COMPOSITIONS BY E. SILAS.

SALUTARIS HOSTIA, Sacred Song.
SOLO, for Violoncello, with orchestra or pianoforte accompaniment.
CAPRICE No. 1, for the pianoforte.
LES FANFALES, Caprice No. 2.
PENSEES FUGITIVES, for the pianoforte.
NOCTURNE, for the pianoforte.
ROMANCE SANS PAROLES.
TRIO for Pianoforte, Viola and Violoncello.

In the Press,
CONCERT STUCK, for Pianoforte and Orchestra.

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street.

BLUMENTHAL'S LAST PIANOFORTE WORKS.

NOCTURNE IMPROMPTU	3s. 0d.
LES DEUX ANGES, MORCEAU CHARACTERISTIQUE	3s. 6d.
DEAU VALSES	2s. 6d.
LA PLAINTÉ, Ballade	3s. 0d.
JEAN DORMANTE	3s. 0d.
THREE MAZURKAS	3s. 0d.
NOCTURNE	2s. 6d.
FETE COSAQUE, Caprice	3s. 6d.
THREE MELODIES	3s. 0d.
LA SOURCE	3s. 6d.

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street.

MEYERBEER'S ITALIAN ARIETTES,

SUITABLE for Drawing Room Singing.—1, La Violetta; 2, Amor; 3, L'Orfana; 4, Inconsolabile; 5, L'Auretta Messaggiara; 6, Vola vola. All just published, 2s. each, postage free. New Catalogues gratis.

T. Boosey and Co., 28, Holles Street.

CURES FOR THE UNCURED!

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.—Cure of a Bad Leg of more than sixty years' standing.—Mr. Barker, of No. 5, Graham's Place, Drypool, near Hull, had ulcers on his leg from the age of 18 until upwards of 80, and although for many years he had sought the first advice in the country, nothing was found to cure them. He often suffered excruciating pain for long periods together, which incapacitated him from attending to his business. He had given up all hopes of getting a cure, when at last he was persuaded to try Holloway's Pills and Ointment, which he did, and however wonderful it may appear, the leg was thoroughly healed by their means, and by continuing to use the Pills alone after his leg was well, he has become in health so hale and hearty as now to be more active than most men of fifty. N.B.—the truth of this extraordinary statement can be vouched for by Mr. J. C. Reinhardt, 22, Market Place, Hull. February 20th, 1850.

The Pills should be used conjointly with the Ointment in most of the following cases:—

Bad Legs	Coco-Bay	Contracted and	Lumbago	Scurvy
Bad Breasts	Chiego-foot	Stiff Joints	Piles	Sore-heads
Burns	Chilblains	Elephantiasis	Rheumatism	Tumours
Bunions	Chapped hands	Fistulas	Scalds	Ulcers
Bite of Mosche-	Corus (Soft)	Gout	Sore Nipples	Wounds
toes and Sand-	Cancers	Glandular Swell-	Sore-throats	Yaws
'Files		ings	Skin-diseases

Sold by the Proprietor, 244, Strand, (near Temple Bar,) London, and by all respectable Vendors of Patent Medicines throughout the Civilized World, in Pots and Boxes, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each. There is a very considerable saving in taking the larger sizes.

N.B.—Directions for the guidance of Patients are affixed to each Pot or Box.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL, 89, LONG ACRE.

ALEXANDRE BILLET begs to announce that the second of his series of THREE EVENING PERFORMANCES of CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC, in illustration of the Works of the great Composers, will take place on Tuesday, February 25th; and the third March 11th, to commence at 8 o'clock precisely.

Tickets for a Single Concert, 2s.; Reserved Seats, 4s.; Subscription to Reserved Seats for the Series, 10s. 6d. To be had at St. Martin's Hall; Messrs. WHEEL and Co., 229, Regent Street, and the principal Music Publishers.

PROGRAMME OF THE SECOND PERFORMANCE.

- | | |
|--|------------------|
| 1. Sonata in E flat minor | PINTO. |
| 2. Prelude & Fugue in G minor (Cat's Fugue) | SCARLATTI. |
| 3. Prelude & Fugue in D major | MENDELSSOHN. |
| 4. Fantasia in A, Op. 16 (Dedicated to AD. BERT) | W. S. BENNETT. |
| 5. Sonata in C minor, Op. 35 (Dedicated to CLEMENTI) | DUSSEK. |
| 6. Allegro di Bravura | CIPRIANI POTTER. |
| 7. Lieder ohne Worte | MENDELSSOHN. |
| No. 4, Second Book. | |
| No. 6, Sixth Book. | |
| No. 1, do. do. | |
| No. 4, do. do. | |

PROGRAMME OF THE THIRD AND LAST PERFORMANCE.

- | | |
|---|--------------|
| 1. Sonata in B minor, Op. 40 (Dedicated to CHERUBINI) | CLEMENTI |
| 2. {Prelude & Fugue in F | BACH. |
| 3. {Prelude & Fugue in E minor | MENDELSSOHN. |
| 4. Grand Sonata in B flat, Op. 106. | BEETHOVEN. |
| 5. Andante con Variazioni in B flat, Op. 83 (Posth.) | MENDELSSOHN |
| Works, No 11) | |
| 6. Sonata in A minor | MOZART. |
| 7. Selection of Studies: | |
| C minor | HUMMEL. |
| E flat | MACFARREN. |
| D minor | HILLER. |
| D flat major | HENSELT. |
| A minor | THALBERG. |

DENT'S IMPROVED WATCHES AND CLOCKS.

J. DENT, Watch and Clock Maker, by distinct appointments to the Queen, H.R.H. Prince Albert, and H.M. the Emperor of Russia, most respectfully solicits from the public an inspection of his extensive STOCK of WATCHES and CLOCKS, embracing all the late modern improvements at the most economical charges. Ladies' Gold Watches, with gold dials, jewelled in four holes, 4 guineas; Gentlemen's, with enamelled dials, 10 guineas; Youth's Silver Watches, 4 guineas. Warranted accurate-going Lever Watches, jewelled in four holes 6 guineas.—J. Dent, 82, Strand; 33, Cockspur-street; and 34, Royal Exchange (Clock Tower Area).

NEW FLUTE MUSIC.

SIX MELODIES by B. MOLIQUE (Lieder ohne Worte)—Transcribed for the Flute and Piano by J. CLINTON.

- | | |
|---|---------------|
| No. 1. "If o'er the boundless sky." | Price 2s. 0d. |
| " 2. "Fair Annie." | " 2s. 0d. |
| " 3. "When the moon is brightly shining." | " 2s. 0d. |
| " 4. "Come all ye glad and free." | " 2s. 0d. |
| " 5. "Come dearest, come." | " 2s. 0d. |
| " 6. "Oh! that my voice were distant." | " 2s. 0d. |

SEVEN LIEDER OHNE WORTE, by F. MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY, OP. 57.—Transcribed for Flute and Piano by J. CLINTON.

- | | |
|-----------------------------------|---------------|
| No. 1. "All Deutsches Lied." | Price 2s. 0d. |
| " 2. "Hirtentied." | " 2s. 0d. |
| " 3. "Zuleika." | " 3s. 0d. |
| " 4. "Rheinisches Volkslied." | " 2s. 0d. |
| " 5. "Venetianisches Gondellied." | " 2s. 0d. |
| " 6. "Reiseliad." | " 3s. 0d. |

Original Melodies for Flute and Piano by S. PERCIVAL, op. 4.

- | | |
|------------------------------------|-----------|
| No. 1. "Moderato con Espressioni." | price 3s. |
| " 2. "Andante Malinconia." | |
| " 3. "Allegretto Grazioso." | |

Weasel and Co., 229, Regent Street.

MEYERBEER'S GRAND OPERA,

LE PROPHETE, complete with French and Italian words, 42s. Arrangement of the same by Calcott, Osborne, Benedict, Brinley Richards, Esq., Schumacher, and Thalberg, as single pieces and duets for the pianoforte. Meyerbeer's Grand Opera, THE CAMP OF SILESIA, in Two Books, as solos and duets by Calcott and Diabelli.

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street.

A POLLONICON.

TUESDAY, THURSDAY, SATURDAY—Morning, 2; Evening, 8. Engagement of Miss Poole, Mr. and Mrs. Donald King, and Miss Messent; who appear each Morning and Evening in addition to the usual Apollonicon performances. Admission 1s.; stalls, 2s. Carriages at 4 and 10. Royal Music Hall, adjoining Lowther Arcade.

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC

BY

BRINLEY RICHARDS.

Angela. Romance. Dedicated to the Lady Robert Grosvenor

"Mr. Brinley Richards' 'Angela,' though essentially popular in style, strongly indicates the hand of an accomplished musician."—Morning Post.

Mendelssohn's "First Violet." ... 1 6

Mendelssohn's "Maid of the Ganges." Dedicated to Stern-

dale Bennett, Esq. ... 2 0

"In the arrangement of these two charming melodies by the lamented Mendelssohn for the Pianoforte, Mr. Richards has very effectively adopted the style of the celebrated Lieder ohne Worte."—Herald.

The Fairy's Dream. Romance ... 2 6

Picciola, ou le Chant du Captif. Dedicated to Mrs. Anderson 2 6

Sybil. Romance. (Second Edition) ... 2 6

"The style of these compositions is the most attractive of modern Pianoforte music,—and whether for variety and sweetness of effect, or for frequent indication of a graceful elevation of musical thought, combined with a moderate degree of difficulty in execution, we have never met with three pieces by a native composer which were calculated to give so much satisfaction to a candid reviewer. Nothing can be more useful to young students of the modern school of Pianoforte playing than such compositions as the above."—Dramatic and Musical Review, September.

Premier Nocturne. (Second Edition.) ... 2 6

The Irish Emigrant. Arranged as a Rondo ... 2 6

"Among the recent examples of the style of Pianoforte music at present in vogue, few more successfully appeal to the exigencies of popular taste, and more thoroughly realize the beau ideal of fashionable elegance than the above-named publications. Sybil, Picciola, Premiere Nocturne, and The Fairy's Dream, are all specimens of Mr. Brinley Richards in his most happy and fluent manner. They abound in ad captandum melody, and are overrun with passages both brilliant and neatly turned. The principal objection to the modern Pianoforte music of the drawing-room is a certain affectation of sentiment, from which Mr. Richards is entirely free. In his lightest passages there is a certain refinement, which indicates a desire to satisfy the amateur and the professor simultaneously, and must render his pieces acceptable to both."—Musical World, December 7.

CHAPPELL, 50, NEW BOND STREET.

MISS CATHERINE HAYES

AND

MILLE. JENNY LIND.

THE only English Ballads sung by the above distinguished vocalists are, "Take this lute," by Benedict; "Oh, summer morn," by Meyerbeer; and the "Lonely Rose," by Balfe, sung by Mlle. Lind; "Those happy days are gone," by Lavenue; "Why do I weep for thee," by Wallace; "O, sing to me," by Osborne; and "My last thoughts are of thee," by Maynard, sung by Miss Hayes.

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street.

THE SCORPION!

NEW PIRATICAL SONG.—Sung by Mr. R. PAGET, for whom it was expressly written and composed. Words by EDWARD FARMER. Music by G. SIMPSON.

"This song, which has attracted considerable attention in the provinces, through the singing of Mr. R. Paget, of Atherstone, is essentially remarkable for the qualities that ensure popularity and command encores. A flowing melody, easily retained, and addressed to the general ear. The accompaniment is easy to play, but effective and appropriate. This song is written with irreproachable correctness, and is happily adapted to the great majority of voices. It has every chance of popularity, and will doubtless be shortly laid hold of by some of our public singers."—Musical World, Feb. 8th.

"The subject of this song being the boast of a pirate, demands the spirited and energetic treatment which the composer has accorded to it. To a melody of great merit are united suitable and well-conceived harmonies. The song has found an able interpreter in Mr. R. Paget, of Atherstone, who by his singing has created quite a sensation upon each occasion of its repetition."—Dramatic and Musical Review.

London: Campbell, Ransford, and Co., 53, New Bond-street, and may be had of Mr. R. Paget, Atherstone, Price 2s. 6d.

NO. 71, DEAN STREET, SOHO.—TO MUSIC PUBLISHERS, PROFESSORS, AMATEURS, and OTHERS.—Mr. J. FULLER is instructed to SELL by AUCTION on the premises, 71, Dean Street, on WEDNESDAY, February 26th, at 11 o'clock, the remaining Stock of Music, comprising miscellaneous works of the most classic authors (the plates of which are destroyed), consisting of Overtures in parts, Quintets, Quartets, Trios, Solos, and Duets, allotted to suit the convenience of private purchasers; together with a quantity of Waste Paper, counting-house Fixtures, Deal Painted Cupboards, and other useful items. May be viewed the day prior and morning of sale, and Catalogues had on the premises, and at the Auction Offices, 161, Albany Street, Regent's Park.

THE COMMODOUS PREMISES to LET,

HER MAJESTY'S

THEATRE, 1851.

THE following Outline of the Arrangements for the Season is respectfully submitted to the Nobility, Subscribers, and Patrons of the Opera. It is presented with the confident hope, that the successful exertions made, may be considered not unworthy of the forthcoming Brilliant Season, and of the high reputation and character of HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

ENGAGEMENTS FOR THE OPERA:—

SOPRANI of high merit, who will appear for the first time in England, are MADLLE CAROLINE DUPREZ,
 Of the Italian Opera, Paris,
MADLLE. ALAYMO,
 Of the Pergola, Florence, and Principal Theatres of Italy; and MADAME BARRIERE NINI,
 Of the Royal Theatre of Turin, the Pergola, Florence, and all the principal Theatres of Italy;
MADLLE. FELLER, MADLLE. ZAGNOLI.

The following Artists have been re-engaged:

MADAME SONTAG, MADLLE. PARODI, MADAME GIULIANI, MADLLE IDA BERTRAND,
 and
MADAME FIORENTINI,
 Who appeared at the close of last Season.

AN ENGAGEMENT HAS ALSO BEEN MADE, FOR A LIMITED NUMBER OF NIGHTS, WITH

MADLLE ALBONI.

SIGNOR GARDONI, SIGNOR SCOTTI,
 (His first appearance.)
MR. SIMS REEVES, AND SIGNOR CALZOLARI.
SIGNOR COLLETTI,
SIGNOR FERRANTI, SIGNOR SCAPINI,
 (Of the Italian Opera, Paris, their first appearance.)
SIGNOR F. LABLACHE.
SIGNOR LORENZO, SIGNOR CASANOVA,
 (Of the Italian Opera, Paris. His first appearance.)
 AND
SIGNOR LABLACHE.

OTHER ARRANGEMENTS OF GREAT INTEREST ARE IN PROGRESS.

Director of the Music, and Conductor,
M. BALFE.

Leader of the Orchestra M. TOLBECQUE.
 ————Ballet M. NADAUD.
 Maitre de chant des Chœurs HERR GANZ.

GREAT CARE HAS BEEN USED IN THE SELECTION OF THE ORCHESTRA.

The effect of the Choruses will be increased by the addition of several Choristers from Germany.

THE BEST FOUNDED HOPES ARE ENTERTAINED THAT

M. MEYERBEER

Will superintend the production of a
NEW GRAND OPERA,

On which the Great Composer is at present engaged.

THIS OPERA WILL COMPRISE SOME OF THE MOST INTERESTING
 MELODIES OF THE "CAMP DE SILESIE."

An Entirely NEW GRAND OPERA, Composed by

M. THALBERG,
 The Libretto by

M. SCRIBE, will shortly be produced; and a NEW OPERA by

M. AUER,
 Now composing Expressly for
MADLLE. ALBONI.

A POSTHUMOUS WORK OF DONIZETTI

Has likewise been secured.

VARIOUS NOVELTIES, in addition to the most admired Works of the Repertoire, will be produced on a scale of completeness adapted to the BRILLIANT SEASON OF 1851.

MADAME FIORENTINI will appear at the opening of the Theatre, in AUBER'S OPERA OF GUSTAVUS.

MADemoisELLE CAROLINE DUPREZ

Will appear the first week in April.

MADAME SONTAG

Will appear immediately after Easter.

MADemoisELLE ALAYMO

Will also appear immediately after Easter.

ENGAGEMENTS FOR THE BALLET.

MADLLE. CARLOTTA GRISI,
MADLLE. AMALIA FERRARIS, MADLLE. MARIE TAGLIONI, MADLLE. PETIT STEPHAN,
MESDLES. TEDESCHI, MATHILDE, ALLEGRI,
 Their First Appearance:
MESDLES. ROSA, AUSUNDON, JULIENNE, LAMOUREUX, LUCILE, EMILIE, AND JENNY PASCALES, AND

MADLLE. CAROLINA ROSATI,

M. PAUL TAGLIONI, M. GOSSELIN, M. CHARLES.

And a numerous CORPS DE BALLET, selected from the French, Spanish, Hungarian, Italian, and English Corps de Ballet.

THE LIBRETTO OF A NEW GRAND POETICAL BALLET,
 To be produced early in the Season, has been supplied by

M. DE ST. GEORGES.

It will include the whole available talent of the Ballet; and to give effect to its production, an engagement has been effected with the greatest Dramatic Mime of Italy,

MADemoisELLE MONTI.

MAITRE DE BALLET M. PAUL TAGLIONI

SOUS MAITRE DE BALLET M. GOSSELIN.

REGISSEUR DE LA DANSE M. PETTI.

COMPOSERS OF THE BALLET MUSIC, SIG. PUGNI & MR. E. J. LODER.

PRINCIPAL ARTIST TO THE ESTABLISHMENT, MR. CHARLES MARSHALL.

MADLLE. FERRARIS

Will appear at the opening of the Theatre in a New Ballet, composed expressly for her by M. PAUL TAGLIONI.

MADLLE. CARLOTTA GRISI

Will appear at the beginning of April, in the character of ARIEL, in the New Opera of LA TEMPESTA.

MADLLE. ROSATI AND MADLLE. MARIE TAGLIONI

Will appear immediately after Easter.

Other arrangements are in progress. The Subscription will consist of the same number of nights as last season. The Theatre has been thoroughly renovated, and Artists of great merit are now employed on the Decorations.

The Season will open early in March, with (First time at this Theatre) Auber's Opera of

GUSTAVUS,

In which Madame Fiorentini, Madlle. Feller, and Signor Calzolari, will appear.

An entirely New Ballet, by M. Paul Taglioni, entitled

L'ILE DES AMOURS,

Principal parts by Madlle. A. Ferraris, Mesdles. Tedeschi, Ausundon, &c., and
 M. Paul Taglioni.

Printed and Published, for the Proprietors, by MICHAEL SAMUEL MYERS, of No. 3 Studley Villas, Studley Road, Clapham Road, in the parish of Lambeth, at the office of MYERS and Co., 37, King Street, Covent Garden, in the parish of St.
 Paul, where all communications for the Editor are to be addressed, post paid.
 To be had of G. Purke's, Dean Street, Soho; Allen, Warwick Lane; Vickers, Holywell Street, and at all Booksellers.—Saturday, March 1, 1851.

The Musical World.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

Terms of Subscription, per Annum, 16s.; Half year, 8s.; Three Months, 4s.; payable in advance, to be forwarded by Money Order, to the Publishers, Messrs. Myers & Co., 22, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden.

No. 18.—VOL. XXVI.

SATURDAY, MARCH 15, 1851.

PRICE FOURPENCE.

REMOVAL.

MUSICAL WORLD OFFICE.

M. S. MYERS & Co.

BEG TO ANNOUNCE THAT THEY HAVE

REMOVED

FROM 37, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN,

TO No. 22, TAVISTOCK STREET,

THREE DOORS FROM SOUTHAMPTON STREET,

Where all Communications for the Musical World, are requested to be sent.

M. S. MYERS & Co. take this opportunity of informing those Ladies and Gentlemen about to give Concerts that they execute every description of

PRINTING

Programmes, Tickets, Posting Bills, &c., &c.,

PRINTED IN FIRST-RATE STYLE, AND ON THE SHORTEST NOTICE.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY

The seven directors of this exclusive society, a list of whose names we have not at present within reach, have proclaimed a stringent edict during the recess. The Saturday rehearsals are, for the future, to take place in private. The members and associates are no longer to be admitted, nor the friends of the seven directors, who used to compose the majority of the audience on these occasions.

We were struck with the liberality of the members and associates, in resigning a privilege of which the directors had no right to deprive them, and still more with the magnanimity of the seven directors, in foregoing the advantage of treating their friends to a morning concert, gratis. But since recovering from the first shock of admiration, we have learned that the real promoter of the new regulation was Mr. Costa. Not satisfied with fixing the hours of rehearsal at two hours before, instead of two hours after the sun's meridian, Mr. Costa has come to the conclusion, that a concert is one thing, and a rehearsal another, and that while a concert requires an audience a rehearsal is better without one. We should be sorry to enter the lists against the great conductor in this argument, being well able to understand that delicacy will not allow him to act the part of schoolmaster in presence of two or three hundred lookers-on, unconcerned in anything but their own particular amusement. How shall Mr. Costa teach seventy gentlemen to play, before a crowd of indifferent spectators? Fifty out of the seventy may have pupils in the room—for it is hardly necessary to remark, that the members of the Philharmonic orchestra cannot possibly exist upon Philharmonic pittance—in which case, it becomes a most ungracious task for a conductor to single out one or more from the ranks, as malefactors or players of wrong notes. But Mr. Costa is as much in the right on the present occasion, as on most occasions when he legislates for the benefit of those under his controul. He has swept the Hanover-square rooms of intruders, and henceforth the Saturday rehearsals will, in all probability, be so well deserving of the name as to induce a regret that only one can be afforded for each concert.

We wholly reject an idea, which has gained credit in some quarters, that the free admissions were stopped in order to keep out the members of the press, who were becoming too familiar with Philharmonic state secrets. Nothing can be more unfounded. Admitting, for the sake of argument (what of course we entirely disbelieve), that the management of the Philharmonic Society has for many years been more or less engrossed by a certain compactly allied clique of professors, who have superintended its affairs very clumsily,—admitting (what we reject with contempt) that, out of the seven directors, only three have any real power, the rest being dummies, and that these three re-elect themselves annually—admitting (which we equally discredit) that, in consequence of the despotic authority of the three directors, no independent member of the Philharmonic Society will allow himself to be proposed as a candidate for the directorship, which entails upon the general apathetic body the loss of such services as those of Mr. Sterndale Bennett, Mr. Cipriani Potter, and others—admitting (an evident absurdity) that the band of the Philharmonic Society is not what it ought to be, and (a still more evident absurdity) that the members of the press are quite able, if they please, to point out and animadvert upon its feeble points—admitting all these (and many more stupid and libellous insinuations), for the sake of argument, and admitting (which truth forbids!) that the reputation of the Philharmonic Society has suffered in the good opinion of the public and the profession, what has the press to do with the matter? The duty of critics—for the exact fulfilment of which they are allowed the eminent advantage of purchasing their season tickets—is clearly to eulogise in becoming terms the admirable policy of the seven (how silly to say three!) annually elected (how impertinent to say self-elected!) directors, to declare their unqualified delight with every performance, and to assure their readers that nothing, no, nothing in the world, can possibly be better,—not even the Musical Union. With this straightforward path before them, with this simple and pleasant devoir, the responsibilities of our brethren become easy and uniform. Praise everything; that is it—tout bonnement. Under such evident conditions, the rumour that the presence of reviewers gave rise to the expulsion of every body from the rehearsals (even the members, who might reasonably set such an edict at defiance), is scarcely worth a thought; and the occlusion of portals previously patulous can no longer be a mystery, or a cause of dissatisfaction, to our contemporaries of the stylus and the ink-bottle.

We allude thus early to the matter, in order to make known our approval. The three ——— the seven directors, in our opinion, have acted most discreetly, and if, after all, the first concert on Monday last (as our Reporter seems to think), developed no signs of improvement in the general execution, but rather the contrary, this could not, by any ingenious sophistry, be laid to their charge.

We have another agreeable fact to announce. On Wednesday there was a trial of some new orchestral works, and among other pieces a MS. symphony by Mr. Cipriani Potter. Of course we were not invited, since it would have been unpleasant to a rising composer like Mr. Potter to have the quality of his talent adjudicated, and the fate of his symphony decided, in the presence of strangers. We are glad to find that there is a likelihood of reviving the excellent system of trials, which should never have been abandoned. Novelty is loudly asked for by the Philharmonic subscribers, who will, no doubt, feel greatly indebted, should the directors be graciously pleased to try some of the unknown symphonies of Spohr. Among these, it is hoped, one may be found more worthy of a place in the Philharmonic programmes, than the MS. overture in D, tried several years ago and rejected by the united fiat of the directors; or than the overture to Der Alchemyst, which, even after being rehearsed, was judged by the same collective wisdom unfit to be produced at the concerts—although a year or two previously, by some unpardonable oversight (for which of course the directors were blameless), it was played at a concert, under the composer's own guidance, and the subscribers, professional and amateur, (unhappily in ignorance of the adverse opinion of the directors), encored it without a dissentient voice. On another occasion, of course, they will be better prepared to discover and condemn the faults of this inartistic composition. It cannot be denied, however, that Spohr is a promising musician, and worthy of encouragement. The directors might relax a trifle of their severity in his favour, and afford him a chance at one of the trials. Something may come of him if the Philharmonic will but tender a helping hand. Without that, he may struggle in vain for anything beyond a German reputation, and a sly nook in the tradesman's musical temple—Exeter Hall. But what is all this in comparison with Hanover Square?

We tremble for the word which shall decide whether the symphony of our countryman, Mr. Potter, is worthy or unworthy to be served up to the Philharmonic subscribers. Should the verdict be favourable, however, Mr. Sterndale Bennett might submit his overture, The Wood Nymphs, for the approval or rejection of the same competent tribunal, with a reasonable chance of success. Meanwhile, congratulating the subscribers and ourselves upon the fact of the trials being resumed, and humbly tendering the expression of our reconnaissance to the directors, we conclude, for the present, with the promise of returning to the subject next week. We have too many things to say, to be squeezed into the proportions of a single article.

ENGLISH MUSIC IN HIGH PLACES

Things are looking up. The public always patronised English music when the opportunity was accorded. Managers, less liberal, have still been induced to speculate in the same material, for their own advantage. Royalty has lately given signs of following the stream. We have perused, with real gratification, some of the recent programmes of the music performed before her Majesty at Windsor Castle and Buckingham Palace. Among other pieces, the overture of the Naiades, by Sterndale Bennett, has been introduced on more than one occasion. Selections from Macfarren's Sleeper Awakened have also been performed, and a brilliant and characteristic march by Loder, called Prince Arthur's March, composed in honour of the youngest of the Royal Family, and arranged for a military orchestra, has been several times executed under the able direction of Mr. Godfrey—to the evident satisfaction of the illustrious connoisseurs. These emanations from compatriotic pens are of a far higher class than much of the music which for so many years resounded in the Castle halls—to the evident dissatisfaction of the illustrious connoisseurs. Having at last found their way into the arena of arenas, they are likely to keep their position in the august programmes, as surely as they were slow to reach that high distinction. But they are only a few that occur to us. The names of our best musicians are now frequently to be seen, not only in connection with the festal music at the Castle, but with the orchestra and chamber performances of the Royal band and quartet party, and even with the select evening concerts at the palace in St. James's Park, where erst the languishing measure of Italian cantilena formed the exclusive source of recreation.

We are pleased to note this change in so influential a quarter, since it must be evident to all, that, only through Royal support, which brings the patronage of Aristocracy in its train, can the long-cherished scheme of a National Opera be set on foot, with any well-based hope of ultimate prosperity. Once obtain this, and there would be no necessity for a subvention, which may suit the French very well, but is not fitted for English views of speculative independence. Let the Queen and the Prince betray an interest in the progress of a native school of art, and the people will quickly follow in the wake of Majesty. Unhappily, our public, though a good public in its way, and not an indifferent judge as times go, must positively be led by the nose. The press might do it, but will not. Let us hope better of the Queen, the natural protector of her loyal subjects, including the entire body corporate, from statesmen to fiddlers.

THE OAKEN CROWN.

THE great difficulty now-a-days in the artistic world is to avoid the decoration of the order of the Oaken Crown, with which His Majesty the King of Holland invests every one he or his envoys can catch hold of. Here, but now, is poor De Beriot, who, because he has educated three pupils to play contemporaneously in unison, on fiddles, is forthwith endowed, nil he will be, with the order of the couronne de chêne. Had his Dutch Majesty flung the decoration at the heads of Tenhaven, Scheurs, and Standisch, to be divided among them, there would have been nothing to complain of; but at De Beriot's age it is really too bad.

By the way, the Belgian papers are rhapsodical about these youths. One of them, the Indépendance Belge, says that Ernst, Sivori, and Vieuxtemps, together, would not be able to do what the three pupils of De Beriot can effect. It is very possible, however, and equally probable, that Ernst, Sivori, and Vieuxtemps would not take the trouble to attempt it.

The system of teaching the Violin at the Brussels Conservatoire, which at present obtains, would astonish some professors who follow the good old plan of instructing one at a time. De Beriot makes six of his pupils scrape together, and with the modesty which distinguishes him, confines their studies entirely to his own music. There are, besides Tenhaven, Scheurs, and Standisch, young Vieuxtemps, younger Monasterio, and still younger somebody else, whose name does not recur to us. The six are noted for their joint execution of the concertos of De Beriot, which honourable authorities do not hesitate to pronounce astonishing.

On the other hand, sceptics may ask, what kind of general players they are?—whether they can read new music with facility?—whether they have any style individually?—and twenty other questions of the sort, which, we are inclined to think, will be somewhat difficult to answer, in a plain straightforward manner. M. De Beriot, however, is not a man to be easily discomfited, and ignores what it is to run away from a difficulty. He will doubtless explain to the amateurs of Germany, France, England, and even Italy and Spain, why a more delightful as well as original, a more legitimate as well as extraordinary musical effect, can be produced by six violinists playing the same notes in unison, than by one violinist, who, however great his talent, cannot possibly bring out a volume of tone of the same breadth and power. The coldness resulting from a certain unvarying and monotonous precision, is of course a small matter, the great end of art in the present day, being not so much to move the soul by expression, as to satisfy the ear by mechanical correctness. M. De Beriot will be in a condition to overrule all such petty objections, at the audience which, doubtless, Mr. Ella will accord to his young protégés; and we have little fear but that Tenhaven, Scheurs, and Standisch will be found worthy to appear before the aristocratic audience of the Musical Union, or even at the concerts of the Philharmonic Society, should they come to London—which is not probable just now, Mr. Lumley having engaged them for a considerable period.

At the same time all this does not excuse the attack upon De Beriot, who has done nothing that we know of to offend the king of Holland.

Reviews of Music.

"CAPRICE POUR LE PIANOFORTE." EMANUEL AGUILAR
Wessel and Co.

IN selecting the key of D flat, Mr. Emanuel Aguilar attacks the sentimental side of the caprice, properly so called, although the designation, or rather qualification of character and tempo—allegretto quasi allegro—evinces a leaning to something more sparkling and ad captandum. The truth is, Mr. Aguilar has mingled the two elements alluded to, with considerable fancy and no small amount of musical skill. His first theme is a flowing cantilena, accompanied with that peculiar disposition of the arpeggio which distinguishes the majority of modern Italian arias. This developed, he introduces a tripping passage of semiquavers, which branches out into an important feature during the course of two pages, and falls easily and naturally into a kind of Sicilian ritornella in the dominant key, which, in its turn, gives way to a free fantasia, wherein fragments of the original theme are fancifully led through a well devised series of modulations, until, by the approved, if not novel, expedient of a pedal passage on the dominant, the composer once more attains his subject in the key of the tonic, though completely divested of its primitive character, by a new suit of harmony and accompaniment. The semiquaver episode then re-appears, as before, upon an interrupted cadence, and once more brings back the Sicilian ritornella in the primal key, the whole concluding with a brilliant coda, in which octaves are liberally distributed to either hand. To play this piece in a satisfactory manner requires elegance of style and neatness of execution, in equal proportions. Mr. Aguilar, while thinking for himself, has much of that fantastic refinement (or refined fantasy) which imparts such a peculiar colour to many of the pieces of Chopin; and he has also evidently imbibed a little of the same composer's independence of what a certain school of musicians persist in declaring indispensable to good taste and legitimate effect—we allude to plan; but, like M. Chopin, Mr. Aguilar has proved that music (for the piano) may be rendered both agreeable and interesting, without any magnanimous adherence to that exclusively classical restriction; and Mr. Aguilar, like M. Chopin, is tolerably certain to find a pretty good number of admirers and adherents, provided he continues to write such pieces as the Caprice in D flat, Op. 12.

"LA FETE VILLAGEOISE." EMANUEL AGUILAR.—Wessel & Co.

Colonel Blood, in his attempt to appropriate to himself the jewels of the crown, was arrested by a sbire, and for that time frustrated in his purpose. Emanuel Aguilar, in the solitude of his chamber, fearless of sbires, had been inclined to pluck a gem from Auber's Diamans de la Couronne, which has for years constituted a rich mine whence musical delvers have desperately digged diamonds, need have been under no such apprehemion. But Mr. Aguilar apparently had his eye, or rather his ear directed, or rather set, towards another point of the musical compass, or rather clock. Doubtless at some soirée dansante, or haply at the Italian Opera, Mr. Aguilar has heard a certain chorus, in the bridal scene of an opera entitled Lucia di Lammermoor, by one Donizetti, which has produced such an effect upon him that, sitting alone in the solitude of his chamber, his fingers running listlessly over the keys of the clavier, the theme, in a strange measure and a new key, has moulded itself into proportions, and persuaded his not unwilling fancy, that it (his fancy) had given birth to an original tune. That he was convinced of this, and that the thought found favor in his ear, is apparent in the elaborate frame in which he has set it, the several departments whereof consist of an andante in F, in the form of an introduction, and a variety of episodes, the most delectable of which is one in B flat, page 5, where a form of accompaniment, much used by Steibelt, the well-known composer of the "Storm-Rondo," (and notamment in that Rondo), is happily brought to bear. Besides its light and pleasing character, the Fête Villageoise—which, in respect of simple melody, might have fairly passed muster in the days of the "bowyers and flechers" (bowmen and arrowmen—whereof Robin Hood and Little John), when pastorals, may songs, caryllons, and roundelays were the bone and marrow of tune—is to be commended for its brevity, and for the facility with which it adapts itself to the fingers of performers to whom Thalberg, Prudent, and Blumenthal are caviare. Bref—Mr. Aguilar might have written a more original, but hardly a more taking and unpretending morceau, or one more likely to prove acceptable to a large class of masters, not to say pupils. Nathless, let us own that we prefer Mr. Aguilar in Ercles' vein, soaring a higher flight, plunging a deeper line, surveying a wider field, aiming at a more distant mark, absorbed in a browner study—as in the Caprice in D flat, Op. 12.

"THE REGAL GRAND MARCH."—E. J. WESTROP.
Z. T. Purday.

A spirited movement for two performers on the piano, commencing with a regular march maestoso, and introducing Lindpaintner's popular song "The Standard-bearer," as a trio. Although presenting no point for the especial notice of the critic, its merit clearly not being that of originality, this march is quite independent of deprecatory comment, since, besides being written with facility and correctness, it may be advantageously used as a teaching piece for young performers, who are too frequently presented, by indiscreet professors, with much worse music.

"THE CARLISLE POLKA."—W. H. MONTGOMERY.—J. Williams.

More polkas! When will Christmas be over? Not, it would seem, until Her Majesty's late visit to Castle Howard (represented by a modern building with a cupola, and swans sailing in a fair pond, hard by a tree and shrubs, under which may be supposed to hove gudgeon) be forgotten, which is unlikely to be "effsoons," while Mr. Montgomery's pen is able to describe such dashing dance tunes as the present. Carlisle being near the Border, Mr. Montgomery has dexterously endowed the first page of his polka with that peculiar jerk, contrived by a short note falling lithely on a long one, which gives such a peculiar character to the Scotch tunes. In the second page, however, this peculiarity is absent, which emboldens us to the presumption, that Mr. Montgomery had it in his mind's eye to represent those merry times, long past, when—truce for a period having been plighted, mutually, by pulverising Percy and double-daggered Douglas, exchanging friendly fists, instead of paying each other the unsought tribute of "Scot and Lot" (for which Falstaff, undesirous, prostrated himself full length upon his abdomen, feigning immediate mortality)—the boors and maidens of the north of England kept jovial carousal with the laddies and lassies of the south of Scotland, due north of them, and the naginary border was rubbed out by the gum elastic of good Illo whisp, to the tunes of "Boys and Girls come out to play," and "The Campbells are 'going'" (vice "coming"), intermingled in boisterous strains of unpremeditated counterpoint. If such were Mr. Mont-gomery's idea, he has carried it out very happily. Both his tunes are good, verging on the border of the national measure and rhythm of either side Tweed, and we can well imagine that, when performed by I. Weippert's band (which the title-page informs us has been its fortunate destiny), the effect it produces must inevitably perpetuate the memory of the fact of Her Majesty's visit to Castle Howard in the breast of every loyal polker and polkee at those popular and tres-suivies (very followed) reunions of busy feet, greeting hands, reclining waists, sustaining arms, glistening eyes, glad hearts and stirring strains, which bear the name of Weippert, at one of whose soirées dansantes we trust, on some near occasion, to be ourselves refreshed and tickled with an audition of Montgomery's "Carlisle Polka," which we cheerfully propose to all our light-heeled friends, as a sparkling and original contribution to their repertoire of music that provokes to the dance.

"THE CRYSTAL WALTZES."—C. A. PATEY.—Charles Jefferys.

When we say that Mr. Charles Patey prefaces a suite of Valsees with a graceful cantilena à l'Italienne in 8 time, we have adduced all that could possibly be adduced, by the most savage and punctilious critic, in disfavor of the "Crystal Waltzes," which are pretty, animated, nicely contrasted, and conveniently arranged for the piano. We might also add original, to all except No. 2, which smacks a little of this, that, and the other, though we have not space to recapitulate, had we the memory to notify the various points of resemblance. No. 3, on the contrary, smacks of nothing but itself, and itself is remarkably winning. No. 4 is also tres dansante, and piquant, to boot. In the coda the principal subjects are gathered together into one dish, and tossed into a well-flavored pot-pourri, neither too much nor too little of any subject being introduced. The whole is neither too long nor too short, and may be recommended as a better set of waltzes than many not so good.

"THE FUGITIVE, OR LOVE AND LOYALTY."—ANDREW THOMSON.
Campbell, Ransford & Co.

This is one of a selection of the melodies of Scotland, by Mr. W. H. Bellamy, to which Mr. Andrew Thomson has added the symphonies and accompaniments. It is a very favourable specimen. The air, "Oh! speed thee, Lord Nitheisdale," though not one of the most commonly known, is by no means one of the least characteristic of the old Scottish tunes. The verses (by Mr. Bellamy, we presume), seem to embody the old story of a warrior, wearied with blood and toil, to whom a lady, probably his true love, affords protection in her tent, watching over him while he sleeps. The accompaniment of Mr. Andrew Thomson betrays a good ear for harmony, and a just appreciation of the character of the melody. The only point for criticism is the somewhat too frequent occurrence of the modulation into the sub-dominant, by means of D flat, the 7th of the key note. Where the flat 7th occurs in the melody the effect is good, but we do not like its anticipation in the bar immediately preceding. Mr. Thomson should remember that the chord of A flat belongs naturally to the key of E flat, and it is not absolutely necessary, on every occasion of using it, to walk over the bridge of the flat 7th of the tonic. By omitting the D flat in one or two instances monotony would be avoided, and an otherwise unimpeachable accompaniment be rendered perfect. On second thoughts, however, in line 2 of the opening symphony, the last chord of bar 4, and the first chord of bar 5, would be both improved by the addition of an E flat in the right hand, which would establish, what at present is doubtful, whether the author intends two consecutive chords of the 6th, or the common chord followed by the chord of the 6-4. As it stands the effect is bare.

"THE SPANISH MAIDEN."—NIGRI. A. W. Hammond.

The Spanish maiden yearns for her native land, and yearns in a bolero. It is somewhat singular, by the way, not to say anomalous, that whether a Spanish maiden be in a melancholy or happy train of mind, whether she be thinking of her absent love, lamenting her marble halls, dancing on the greensward, musing in a bay-window of the Escorial, hieing gaily on one of St.

Francis's mules to milk her cows in the pasture, confiding a billet doux to a trusty duenna for the gallant of her choice, telling her beads in a church at the foot of the altar, waving her handkerchief at a bull-fight or dropping her glove at a tournament, pinching the strings of a guitar to some old romaunt of chivalry where Moors are all giants, dwarfs, magicians, and devils, while Spaniards are emblems of constancy, daring, courage and manly beauty, flitting along at night in the silent streets like a dark ghost, all bementled to conceal the blushes that mantle (no pun) on her cheeks, which, indeed, were she unhooded, would rather be felt than seen by the happy Caballero who waits for her hard by with cloak and sword and mask and feathers (granting the moon at its full, for that fair mistress of the midnight sky shows not these tricks of shame upon the maiden's face), getting up early in the morning and opening the casement to let the first rays of the sun pry into the secrets of the chamber, going to bed late at night after taking her last look at the stars and heaving a last sigh for her beloved in whose behalf she kneels and offers up a prayer to the mother of the Saints, musing on Galatea, doting on Galaor, or roaring with Sancho Panza, riding on a trusty barb conceited of his burden, pursuing the falcon which will not come back even for the love of her sweet eyes, preferring to peck out these and the heart of his quarry in the wilds of the far-off wold unseen and out of call-shot (graceless and ungrateful falcon—or better, vile and scurvy hawk—or better, cautious carrion-sucking "haggard"—(Shakspeare)—that leavest such soft quarters as the maiden's fist without a wail, a sigh, a vale!) sailing blithely in a golden boat that gently parts the bosom of the sparkling Guadalquivir (the only Spanish river that would seem to have excited the poets from Byron to Bunn)—whether, indeed, she be eating, drinking, or fasting, doing penance in tears, or exulting at a feast—whether one, or any, or all, or none of these (the reader will pardon our cutting short the catalogue), whether one, or any, or all, or none of these be the theme or themes supposed to occupy the attention, and fill the soul of the Spanish maiden; composers of music, German, Italian, French, and English, all, in short, but Spanish, who should know best, typify the fact in the bounding strains of a bolero. Why this should be, we beseech Nigri to explain, since, to express his theme—the yearning for home aforesaid—he puts into the mouth of his maiden a bolero, the one half of which, by right of notes, belongs to Spohr's Jessonda ("Amid the battle's raging"), and the other half whereof is a bolero, or part of a bolero, of his own imagining. In anticipation of his answer, we may say that Nigri's bolero, as it stands, is a good bolero; although, being lively and tripping, it is somewhat out of sorts with the words, which are moody and moony. Overlook this, and take into account that Nigri has skilfully hit the capacity of nine voices out of ten, and the "Spanish Maiden" may pass for something better than herself.

"LOVE, ART THOU WAKING OR SLEEPING?"—Serenade. Written by J. BIRD, Esq. Composed by WILLIAM WARREN.—H. WHITE.

The words of this serenade are pretty and well written, and the music is pretty and well written; but the poet, Mr. Bird, to use a homely phrase, has cabbaged a couplet of one of Shelley's sweetest lyrics; while the composer, Mr. William Warren, to employ a higher style of parlance, has brushed off the bloom from one of Macfarren's most beautiful songs, and re-laid it upon the shoulders of his own tune; but, meanwhile, the sun has dried it up, and instead of bloom it becomes mildew, and gives an air of sickly staleness to Mr. Warren's effusion. The poet's appropriation may be traced to the little poem, "On a faded Violet," the leading ideas of which Shelley has developed in several of his minor lyrics; and the musician's intermeddling may be recognised in the cavatina from Don Quixote, "Ah! why do we Love?" Apart from these de-considerations, which it is difficult to separate from our idea of the song, "Love, art thou waking or sleeping?" may pass as a favourable specimen of its class.

"LET THE HEART BE GAY,"—Ballad. Written by J. W. LAKE, Esq. Composed by J. BLEWITT.—H. WHITE.

Messrs. Lake and Blewitt, on the other hand, conscious of their own resources, disdain to trespass on their neighbour's orchard, plucking their own fruit in their own garden, and laying it before their friends at dessert with the fuller complacency. In his poetry Mr. Lake expresses a wish "that the heart be gay," and expresses it after a manner of his own, commanding the "harp of pleasure" to be struck, and care banished, for surely "mirth is nature's treasure;" and in the last distich he declares, that "like an angel bright, love adorns with roses"—what Mr. Lake refrains from expounding, as one who says, why should the poet write down all, and leave nothing to the imagination of his hearers? The veteran, J. Blewitt, has supplied a strain to be commended, if only for its downright English character, and in the ritornella, by means of arpeggios disposed in small notes, he has given upon the piano the effect, as it were, of a harp. We like this song, which is well suited for a vigorous tenor in good condition, since there is not an ounce of pretence or affectation about it.

"CONTENTMENT."—SONG—EDWARD DEANE.—Wessel and Co.

There is an easy nonchalance about the melody of Mr. Edward Deane's song, which sorts well with the theme of the poet. At the same time, it is sufficiently tuneful and vocal, and were the accentuation a little more varied, we should have no point to criticise. The incessant repetition of a crotchet followed by a quaver, through seven pages, becomes monotonous at page 2. This is a pity, since the accompaniment, a species of perpetuo in semiquavers, is written with remarkable cleverness and thorough feeling for harmony. But here, also, in the bass, the prevalence of the crotchet-quaver is too great, and affects the monotony of the voice part. Much of this might have been avoided if Mr. Deane, at the episode, "Oh be happy while you may," which is very charming, changed his measure and accent as well as his key. But, unhappily, he continues his 1, 2,—3, and so loses the chance afforded him. In stating these objections, we feel bound to qualify them with the ready allowance that, "Contentment" is in a much better school and shows a much higher musical feeling, than the great mass of songs which come under our notice.

ON THE DEATH OF MRS. MURRAY GARTSHORE.

The March winds eddying whirl
Around her grave;
Chill as the heart's despair
That could not save.

Others like her, so young,
To death have gone;
Others as bright, as pure,
Have laid them down.

But none more deeply loved;
To friends and fame,
Endeared by every act,
That bore her name.

The turf will spring again,
As lightly shed
As if no sod had moved
For that fair head.

The woods still fill'd with birds,
Who carol clear,
Though one sweet voice is hush'd
For ever here.

Many who heard that strain,
In passed hour,
Oh! can they too forget
Its thrilling power?

All nightingales that sing,
Or night, or day,
Can they console for her
Now passed away?

Ah, life! succession strange—
Shadow, and dream—
To die, and be forgot,
A bitter theme.

Yet looking on her grave,
Such dark thoughts cease;
I read upon its cross,
"Mary in peace."

F. CARTWRIGHT.

THE FIRST PHILHARMONIC CONCERT.

The season commenced on Monday evening, with a full room and an average programme. The subscription, it appears, continues prosperous, and the directors continue obstinate. Who can blame them? So long as they can attract subscribers, so long will the general body be satisfied with their legislation. Meanwhile, the progress of that art, for the benefit of which the Philharmonic Society was professedly instituted, is left to newspaper discussion, the Sacred Harmonic Society, and Mr. John Ella. The Philharmonic is a Society incorporated, as it were, not for the object of advancing the interests of music, but for the annual performance of a stereotyped series of symphonies and overtures, and the annual appearance of a certain social circle of instrumental soloists and vocalists. Under this system the heartiest good-fellowship prevails, and the intrusion of any strange elements into the consolidated union is as rare as it is unwelcome. The advantages derived from this well-knit scheme, by the members and associates of the Society, who are not component parts thereof, may easily be estimated. An eager calculator, who, in the heat of his enthusiasm, should propose to represent them by a sign denoting the smallest possible quantity, would exceed the truth. In fact, no advantages are derived by any body whatever, except by the members of the social circle alluded to, and those whom they may be pleased to patronise. But this has nothing to do with the concert of Monday, of which the following was the programme:—

PART I.

Sinfonia in D, No. 2. Mozart.
Aria, "Ah, già trascorse il dì" (Zelmira), Mr. Whitworth Rossini.
Septett, Op. 20, for Violin, Viola, Violoncello, Contrabasso, Clarinet, Bassoon, and Horn; Messrs. Sainton, Hill, Lucas, Howell, Williams, Baumann, and C. Harper Beethoven.
Aria, "Amor nel mio penar" (Flavio) Miss Dolby Handel.
Overture, "Oberon" Weber.

PART II.

Sinfonia in C minor, No. 1 Mendelssohn.
Aria, "Se il nostro pianto" (Il Seraglio) Mr. Lockey Mozart.
Duetto, "Ah, tu non sai" (Margherita D'Anjou) Meyerbeer.
Miss Dolby and Mr. Whitworth
Overture, "Leonora-Fidelio" Beethoven.

Of the performance generally we regret our inability to speak in terms of great enthusiasm. Visitors are now excluded from rehearsals; but, unless a manifest improvement in the execution be gained, we are at a loss to estimate the value of this reform. We observed nothing to indicate that such was the case in Monday's concert. Mozart's symphony was played with the utmost steadiness, precision, and correctness of time, but without the requisite light and shade. The overture to Oberon was a blustering performance, in which the brass instruments carried off the palm, maintaining their right to be heard with a clamour that admitted of no denial. Mendelssohn's symphony, which, being rarely performed, should have been more carefully rehearsed, was not nearly so well played as that of Mozart. The intermezzo in G minor, instead of being given, almost throughout, pianissimo, was played mezzo-forte quite throughout, besides being taken much too slow, which, in a great measure, robbed it of its character. The best executed movement was the andante in E flat, in which the solo instruments being liberally employed, individual, instead of general, exertion was brought into request. The allegro and finale were both executed with a certain energy, but without refinement or variety of tone. The first movement was loud throughout, though the phrases which compose the second subject (divided among the wind instruments) were inaudible. In the finale one fine point was completely obtained; the staccato theme for stringed instruments, preceding and afterwards combining with a phrase allotted to the clarinet. Here the piano was perfection, and suggested the questions, if once, why not always?—if here, why not everywhere? Beethoven's overture was scrambled through, and made no impression. The Septet was excellently played, as might have been expected from the names of the performers, but was altogether out of place. Our opinion of the impolicy of introducing chamber music at these concerts is well known, and need not be repeated. The vocal music was well selected and well sung, but there was too much of it. The three songs were all slow songs, and the duet as long as the three songs together.

We have called the above an average selection, by which term we would not have it understood that the music was not of the highest order; but the combination was unhappy, the pieces were ill-balanced with respect to each other, and the consequent effect was dull and unsatisfactory, and this without reference to the merits or demerits of the execution. The overture of Beethoven, being unfamiliar to the band and the audience, it was exceedingly unwise to place it last. That of Oberon might have occupied the last place with advantage, since, being of an ad captandum character, it does not exercise that strain upon the attention which, in the case of such an overture as the Leonora Fidelio, is inevitable. The Leonora Fidelio (as the directors call it) is one of the overtures to his single opera, which the difficult judgment of Beethoven rejected, and exhibits the shadow of the general plan (coming overtures cast their shadows before) and the germs of many of the effects of the splendid prelude, universally recognised as Leonora. It was, therefore, too interesting a piece to be placed at the fag end of a long concert, as a retreating march to celebrate the early departures. It was not surprising that the audience, under these circumstances, should have entirely failed to appreciate it. Imperfectly as it was performed on the whole, the greatest and most satisfying point in the concert was Mendelssohn's first symphony, which, though one of the earliest of his works, is also one of those most characteristic of him, and without making any allowances for youth or inexperience (it was written between the age of 14 and 15) is one of the most masterly and gorgeous pieces for the orchestra ever composed.

MUSIC AT THE GREAT EXHIBITION.—A statue of "Bavaria," is to be one of the things exposed in the Crystal Palace—a statue of such colossal proportions that six and twenty musicians are to play in its head.—Credat Judeaus.

Original Correspondence.(To the Editor of the Musical World.)

SIR,—In reply to your Correspondent, "An Amateur," the following is the correct title of the Song he wants, by Fr. Zeiller, "Die Nachtigall," song for one voice with accompaniment, piano-forte and violoncello, or horn, Op. 1; published by Diebelli and Co., Vienna.

I think the song may be got at Ewer's, Newgate Street.
I am, your obedient Servant,
116, George-street, Edinburgh, D. HAMILTON.
3rd March, 1851.

THE REID CONCERT.

(To the Editor of the Musical World.)

Edinburgh, 28th Feb., 1851.

SIR,—Being a constant subscriber to your Journal, I have before me your account of the performances at the Reid Concert in this City, and am greatly surprised to see it contain statements utterly at variance with what I myself witnessed at the Concert, and with the remarks of the Edinburgh Newspapers.

You say, "The orchestra was certainly composed of great talent"—I did not observe a single person of "great talent," in the orchestra, although there are not wanting such in Edinburgh. It was nothing more than the ordinary orchestra of the Musical Association, minus their conductor and best violoncello. The party who officiated as conductor being the same that usually plays first violin, and who on this occasion, as I understand, assumed the baton for the first time. "He performed his duties steadily and satisfactorily." It was apparent to every one present that the utter unsteadiness of the orchestra greatly distressed both Ernst and Angri, so much so, that the former, when encoired in his fantasia from Otello, declined to repeat it, but gave, instead, a piece without accompaniment. And Madlle. Angri, in the song from Lucrezia, repeatedly turned to the conductor in apparent remonstrance. You indeed confess that the orchestra was "weak in some parts particularly the chorus," weak enough, certainly—but chorus there was none.

The only way in which I can account for the statements in the "Musical World" being so totally at variance with what actually took place is on the alternative supposition that either your "own Correspondent" was not present at the Concert, and wrote in ignorance—or that he wrote not for the information of the public, but for the purpose of puffing "the first music-seller in the Empire." The Reid Concerts will continue, as hitherto, to be to a certain extent, jobbed, until the Professor takes the management on himself.

I send you two Edinburgh papers containing what every one that witnessed the Concert must consider very mild remarks on the orchestral doings—and beg to compare them in that respect with your "own Correspondent."

If I am to judge of the veraciousness of your Musical critiques generally, from the nature of this, in which I have chanced to be able to judge for myself, I must consider them calculated, not to inform, but entirely to mislead.

I remain, Sir,
A SUBSCRIBER TO YOUR PAPER.

P.S.—I enclose my name and address.

OLD FLUTES AND NEW.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—There is a great deal of common-sense and good feeling in the letters of your Correspondent, Marsyas; but it appears to me that he aims more at pointing out and bewailing the unfortunate differences of opinion amongst flautists, than suggesting any means of healing them; while one or two of his remarks are not unlikely to make matters even worse. He says, "I believe there are very few of our English Flute professors who are not in some way or the other interested in the sale of instruments." This observation, combined with the tenor of his last letter, cannot fail to create an unfavourable impression against flautists, which they do not deserve. With two exceptions, namely, Mr. Carte of the firm of Radall and Rose, and Mr. Card, of St. James's-street, Piccadilly, I believe no London professor has any interest, more than the ordinary interest of the profession, in the sale or manufacture of flutes—although each may have his favourite instrument and manufacturer. Though I acquit Marsyas of any intention to offend, I fear there are many who would feel aggrieved at the imputations thrown out in his last letter. He has placed two contradictory opinions in juxtaposition; but has made no effort to enlighten your readers as to the real state of the case. Mr. Clinton says, in his Treatise upon the Flute, &c., &c., that the open-keyed system is productive of veiled sounds. Some months after the publication of that work, Mr. Carte brings out a similar one, called, "A Sketch of the Flute," &c., in which, he says that the open-keyed system is totally free from such mischief. Thus direct contradiction is given to Mr. Clinton's statement. Now, Sir, I have played upon the Boehm Flute for some time, and I can, therefore, assert, without fear of contradiction, that Mr. Clinton's exposé of that subject is strictly true. He says, that in rapid passages the fingers have so constantly to be retained upon their various holes and keys, that the Boehm Flute, although nominally an open-keyed flute, becomes virtually a shut-keyed instrument; and the undeniable proof of his assertion is given by Mr. Carte himself, in his Book of Instructions for the Boehm Flute, in which there is scarcely an exercise without examples of exceptional fingering, which result in a veiling of sound. In reference to the contradictory opinions between the tone of the wood and metal flute, there is a greater appearance of reason, as a sound which is pleasing to one ear may be harsh to another, and counter statements frequently enable us to form our own judgment with tolerable accuracy. I know nothing personally of either Mr. Clinton or Mr. Carte, but I know that though the Clinton Treatise has afforded me considerable information and enlightenment (for which, by the way, I have to thank you, as my attention was drawn to it from your favourable notice), neither of them will induce me to relinquish my present Boehm Flute, made by Godfrois, of Paris. I have changed my fingering once, and will never be induced to do it again. Trusting that you will spare me a corner in your entertaining and instructive periodical,

I remain, Sir, your constant reader,
Clerkenwell Green. INDEX.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—Having heard the dinners of the Royal Society of Musicians extolled as among the best of such entertainments in the metropolis, and feeling some interest in the objects of the society, I attended the anniversary meeting on the 7th inst. For public dinners in general I have no affection; to my mind they always convey impressions of magnificent dulness and lukewarm cheer—soups ambiguous, fish promiscuous, sauce difficult—everybody scrambling, everybody grumbling, everybody wishing for something, and everybody getting what they don't want, and nobody what they rightly stand in need of. Then those poor waiters! It was quite wretched to witness their efforts on the present occasion, to hear how everybody abused them. Does no society "dine" (excuse the allusion) at the Freemasons' Hall, except the Royal Society of Musicians? You will say that I am fastidious, but no—I remember that I paid one and twenty shillings for a dinner, and if I only could believe that three parts of that sum (or even two parts—or even one part—or even a fraction) would be applied to some charitable purpose, I should not utter a word of discontent. But knowing this not to be the case, I claim a right to grumble at having paid a guinea for a shocking bad dinner—ill cooked, ill served, and hard of digestion, and accompanied by wine of most indifferent flavour. A chapter on public dinner grievances, however, not being my present object, let me return to the Royal Society of Musicians.

The entertainment, in a musical way, was excellent; that alone was worth the guinea, and but for the wine would have helped to digest the dinner comfortably. The President of the day was the Earl of Carlisle, than whom a more efficient could not have been found. His eloquence and gentlemanly tone delighted every one. So far, all went well—but every good thing has some "drawback." In this case, it came in the person of an energetic little man, of Italian aspect, who, under pretext of proposing the chairman's health, inflicted his tediousness and empty loquacity upon the whole company for upwards of half an hour. I never, in the whole course of my life, listened to such a mass of disjointed rhapsodies. I really pitied the distinguished nobleman to whom this ovation was addressed, and should have felt still more mortified had I thought for one moment that the speaker was really looked upon as the acknowledged representative of the general intelligence of the Society. What on earth could have induced the committee to appoint such an advocate? Pertinacious as the orator was, his garrulity would not have been so intolerably tiresome, had he confined himself to the subject matter of the meeting, instead of doing which, he rambled in "admired disorder" over every topic but the appropriate one—liberally apostrophising all our great warriors, kings, statesmen and literati, from William the Conqueror, who objected to candles, down to William Pitt, who founded the National Debt. To the House of Brunswick he seemed well affected; nor did he omit to declare his approbation of Sir Robert Peel.

Had I not cause, Mr. Editor, to feel annoyed that so much of the evening should have been engrossed by this preposterous preacher, who, by the way, precluded his announcement of the various donations with precise and minute confessions of the exact amount of intimacy he, the preacher, enjoyed with the respective donors. If the Secretary and Treasurer be too modest, or too timid, to address such a meeting, they should depute the task to some competent speaker, who may have the good sense to remember, that egotism and prolixity are not the principal qualifications for addressing an assembly—even an assembly of musicians.

I am, Sir,

DINER-OUT.

A NATIONAL OPERA.

(Continued from our last.)

In pursuance of the remarks in last week's number, we would begin by observing that to touch on any musical subject in point, is to walk on a heavily-charged mine, which, when least expected, may explode, according as one of the many conflicting interests may be considered slighted by its lynx-eyed guardians, or one of the innumerable but unconfessed jealousies which unfortunately exist aroused, perhaps by an unguarded word. It is difficult at all times to get rivals to coalesce, and hardly less so to persuade artistes that there is no absolute necessity for rivalry. The obvious consequence of want of unanimity is to reduce a general question to an individual one, and, unconsciously making self the basis, musicians proceed to build up schemes which are incompatible with the interests of the profession, and suicidal to all efforts at establishing a National Opera on a permanent plan. "Chacun pour soi et Dieu pour tous," is a sentiment by far too prevalent; it is the essence of dissension, and its adoption has hitherto held music in an equivocal position. We would wish to see the profession elevated; but unfortunately musicians are split into too many parties to encourage us to hope for unanimity in that quarter; yet union is the source of strength.

It is not our intention to chronicle the "decline and fall" of English opera, since we desire to look forward; but we allude to it en passant, in the hopes of being able to trace some reasonable cause for its present unhappy condition. No doubt, success depends on circumstances beyond control, and contingencies which the cleverest cannot foresee; but we question whether this will apply in the present instance. It would be unfair to throw the entire blame of failure on managers—equally so to lay the reproach solely on the artistes—and not less so to accuse the public. The public, and especially the London public, has too much discrimination to put up with the same mediocre entertainment day after day, and soon seeks amusement elsewhere. Finding second-rate artistes playing characters which should be sustained by first-rate talent, the public abandons them to empty houses. On the other hand, if the receipts of the house render managers unable to afford the exorbitant terms which first-rate artistes are too prone to exact, there is no alternative but to engage inferior artistes. Hence the injury to the credit and reputation of English opera, by associating it, in a great measure, with names of little or no standing. It is but too clear where the blame of failure rests in this point of view. But in an article which professes to treat of English opera in a national point of view, to escape all imputation of party advocacy, it is better to avoid individualising. We shall, therefore, merely allude without naming, to those English composers whose fame and recognised talents are a sure guarantee of their ability to support with credit the reputation of a National Opera, if once more fairly started. It should be a subject of regret, however, that there is a lack of good libretto writers to support them—one reason why English operas, generally speaking, are often uninteresting. The libretto of an opera produced with great success little more than a year ago at the Princess's, promised to redeem in a measure this deficiency; but (though we do not mean this observation to apply to the case cited, but lay it down as a general rule which may partially account for the want of operatic authors) where there is no field for exertion, talent lies dormant, and idleness is more prejudicial even than a too frequent and rapid production.

Of course the same reasons which seal our lips regarding composers, bind us to silence respecting the merits of English singers, who might form great and valuable attractions to the public. It is quite certain that we can find singers enough whose past careers place beyond question their power to represent worthily any works they may be called on to perform.

To place English opera on the stage again with a fair prospect of success, an effort should, we think, be made without regard to immediate profit on the part of managers and artistes, and we would especially endeavour to impress on the latter the necessity of doing something for the love of their art, recommending them to look less to the amount of remuneration than to the stability and prosperity of the undertaking, which they would by their talents help to bring to a successful issue.

It should not be forgotten that the taste for English opera has fallen greatly into abeyance from the ill-advised attempts to keep it before the public; that it has been driven from one theatre to another—now finding a refuge at the Surrey, now forced into unhealthy existence at the Marylebone, until at last, English opera is reduced to make an evanescent appearance on the boards of the Soho Theatre, supported by novices and amateurs. Like all matters of luxury and refinement, the taste for English opera requires to be fostered, which must at first be effected by the united exertions of the musical profession. The recent unfortunate efforts to prop it up have rendered this more than ever necessary. "Aul Cæsar aul nullus," should be its motto, and if it cannot assume its proper rank it is better it should cease to exist.

But we have the materials at hand necessary to force a correct public taste, and place English opera in its proper sphere. The indulgence of the public need not be solicited for the untried efforts of novices, while we have artistes of known talent and reputation to sustain the credit of the undertaking. All the component parts of the machine are ready. It requires but the aid of some enterprising and judicious manager, acting in co-operation with the principal music publishers, and the first artistes, to put them together and set the whole in motion, with, we feel convinced, a very fair prospect of a prosperous result.

It would argue extreme folly to run the risk of certain failure, by exposing new works to the peril of condemnation through the incapacity of inexperienced performers. If anything is to be done for English opera it must be on a scale commensurate with its pretensions. The best of everything should be had, and the theatre raised to such a standard as to render it an object of ambition to appear in it, not degraded to such a state as to make it impossible for any artiste of standing to join it without derogating in professional rank. We are aware that under existing circumstances this cannot be accomplished without zealous co-operation on all sides. There are some, we know, among the musical profession who are willing to assist in any feasible scheme that may be suggested to remedy the evil, and well would it be if all its members entertained as liberal views on this subject as we have heard expressed by those whose names alone are guarantees of strength. With such a disposition generally evinced, the establishment of English opera on a scale honorable to its character, and to the profession, would scarcely present a single difficulty. But our concluding remarks must be reserved for a future occasion.

(To be continued.)

Dramatic Intelligence.

HAYMARKET.—This theatre was crowded by all the playing community on Saturday night, the cause of attraction being Mr. J. W. Wallack, the "celebrated American tragedian," as he was styled in the bills, who made his first appearance in Othello. Mr. J. W. Wallack is a nephew of Mr. James Wallack, and son of Mr. Henry Wallack, the popular actor and sometime manager. Mr. J. W. Wallack is a young man, and has been serving his theatrical noviciate on the American stage. From all we know of the American stage, we are inclined to the opinion, that a juvenile artist might have chosen many other arenas on which his talent and capacities would have been developed with more purpose. Miss Cushman, the most accomplished tragedian who ever came to this country from across the Atlantic, with all her art and judgment, could not free herself from those faults of style and manner which are apparently ineradicable in one who has studied histrionism in Yankee-land. Mr. J. W. Wallack is a bold man to have undertaken so difficult a part as that of Othello for his first essay. The character of the Moor has proved caviare to most of our great performers, including John Kemble, Cooke, Young, and, it may be said, Macready. Nevertheless, every actor has his speciality, and having his speciality, has a pet part; and we suppose that Othello is a pet part with Mr. J. W. Wallack. Mr. J. W. Wallack has many advantages to befit him for tragedy. His figure is tall and commanding, his face handsome and highly expressive (that is, as far as we could see through the ochre), his voice sonorous and of good compass, his motions easy, and his attitudes graceful. His acting betokens great energy and determination, and he is certainly no imitator—at least no imitator of the Kemble, Kean, or Macready school. Here are many and unmistakeable requisitions to become a first-rate actor, and yet has not Mr. J. W. Wallack arrived at that desirable point of the artist's hope. In the first place, we are not entirely satisfied with the management of his voice. The tone is partly nasal and partly guttural, betraying something of the Jonathan peculiarity—a fault, perhaps, unavoidable after playing for some years in American theatres. Neither is the voice always happily managed in the contrasts, nor does it modulate itself effectively to all occasions. This was evident on Saturday night, more especially in the tender passages with which Othello abounds. Mr. J. W. Wallack has yet to learn to draw the line between the pathetic and the lachrymose. Of Mr. J. W. Wallack's graver faults, as undue emphasis, false cadence, errors of judgment and conception, we are less willing to discuss the merits, as, having seen him in one part only, we may not be so competent to form an opinion. Much allowance must be made, too, for a first appearance, and under circumstances of a peculiar nature, to which we need not allude further, than by saying, the young actor was induced to appear at a particularly unfavourable moment. In pointing out Mr. J. W. Wallack's deficiencies, we are influenced by no other consideration than that of drawing his attention to them, that it may lead to improvement. It were easy for us, following the example of a cotemporary, noted for its startling opinions on theatrical performers, to laud Mr. J. W. Wallack's Othello in uncompromising terms, but we should thereby wrong the evidence of our own senses, and do the actor no good. Let Mr. Wallack avoid those golden-mouthed would-be friends, who attempt to cry him up as an already accomplished artist, having little or nothing to learn, and turn an attentive ear to the stern, but wholesome counsels of those who take the trouble to indicate the stones and stumbling-blocks scattered over the narrow and difficult pathway that leads to the temple of fame. Verbum sap.

Mr. J. W. Wallack obtained a most flattering reception on Saturday night. On his entrée, he immediately prepossessed the whole audience in his favour. His well-turned figure and commanding height, his calm and dignified bearing, and the splendour of his dress (for even by such things is popular approval won), made a decided impression. In the first act, Othello rather feels (or should feel) his way with the spectators, than enlists their immediate sympathies, and Mr. J. W. Wallack had the good sense to refrain from "making points" at the expense of the character—a fault too often to be ascribed to some of our best actors, who cannot have patience and bide their time, and do full justice to the poet's conception. In the speech before the senate, Mr. J. W. Wallack would have been more impressive had he been more simple and unstudied. His gesticulations, too, might have been less redundant, and his voice less violently forced. A too frequent shaking of the head—a trick of custom—must be avoided. The last line,

"This only is the witchcraft I have used," was a grand redeeming point. It was delivered with so much earnestness and downright meaning, with so much simplicity and propriety, and in so perfectly natural a tone of voice, as to elicit a spontaneous and hearty cheer of applause. It was evident that interest was mingled with the curiosity excited by the young actor, and that the audience was determined to give him fair play. The remainder of the first act presented nothing striking; nor does the whole of the second act call for any particular observation. We could have willingly dispensed with Mr. J. W. Wallack's saltatory display, when Othello rushes to meet Desdemona at Cyprus. This was infinitely more amusing than natural or dignified. We liked very well the line, or semi-line,

"My life upon her faith!"—

it was hearty and impulsive. In the scene where Othello interrupts the combat between Cassio and Montano, Mr. J. W. Wallack's declamation was far too measured and stilted, if we may use the word. His exit was, however, well done. The third act, take it altogether, was decidedly Mr. Wallack's best effort in the performance, although it by no means entirely satisfied us. We find great fault, for instance, in the delivery of the grand farewell speech. The intense and overwhelming sorrow of the Moor seems to have escaped the comprehension of the actor, and a very puny, alleviable grief to have been substituted. What had Othello to do with weeping at such a moment? The fire of his wrath, to say nothing of his despair, would have dried up a Niobe of tears. There were several good points in the dialogue with Iago—though the tone of voice was not always regulated so as to give the truest notion of what the artist was expressing—and the speech commencing, was delivered with so much force and truthfulness as to bring down three distinct rounds of applause. This was the culminating point of Mr. Wallack's Othello, and of no other part have we to speak in terms of unmeasured praise. In the fourth and last acts there was much to commend and something to except; but we must not follow the performance too minutely in detail. It is enough to say that Mr. J. W. Wallack was rapturously received at the end, and, to all appearance, achieved a signal success.

"Villain, be sure thou prove my love," &c.

Mr. James Wallack performed Iago in his wonted careful and solid manner. There is not much of the fiend in Mr. James Wallack, but there is plenty of the man. Miss Laura Addison's Emilia was excellent; and Miss Reynolds was as attractive as ever in Desdemona. So was Mr. Selby in Roderigo. Thanks to Mr. Macready's departure, Mr. Selby has returned once more to Shakspeare in general, and Roderigo in particular.

On Monday next Mr. J. W. Wallack appears as Macbeth. This will be a more daring and a bolder attempt than Othello. Miss Laura Addison, we suppose, will be the Lady Macbeth. This will be a more daring and a bolder attempt on the part of the lady than Emilia. Well, everything must have a beginning, and what should hinder Miss Laura Addison from essaying Lady Macbeth? Nothing, that we know. We shall be glad to see Miss Laura Addison in a character that will tax her abilities to the uttermost.

Provincial.

PLYMOUTH.—(From a Correspondent.)—On Monday the 10th inst., the gentlemen amateurs of the neighbourhood sustained the principal parts of the well known drama, Don Cesar de Bazan. The performance, for the benefit of the manager Mr. J. R. Newcombe, drew a crowded house. Captain Disney Roebuck as Don Cesar, a part he has frequently played with great success, was loudly cheered at the principal points of the play. In the course of the entertainment, Miss Emily Newcombe performed on the piano with equal taste and execution, "Souvenirs de la Sonnambule," "Souvenirs di Capuletti," and the national quadrilles; after which, the amateurs again presented themselves in the farce, You can't Marry your Grandmother. Lieutenant Warren, R.N., as Algernon Bloomly, and Lieutenant Heysham, 13th M.N.I., as Ready, displayed self possession rarely to be met with in amateurs; and kept the house in a ceaseless roar of merriment. The Review, or the Wags of Windsor, concluded the performance.

DORCHESTER.—The last concert for the season of the Dorchester Philharmonic Society, took place on Thursday evening at the Town-hall, and attracted a numerous audience. If we may judge from the interest these concerts create, we should certainly affirm that a relish for classical music (which is their distinguishing feature) is on the increase in Dorchester, and it must be matter of regret to many that the present highly successful season is now brought to a close. The performances commenced with Haydn's Surprise Symphony, capitally rendered by the band; and the spirit with which the different movements were given, reflected the highest credit on the leader, Mr. Smith, to whose exertions, if we mistake not, we are indebted for the original foundation of this society, and for a considerable share of its subsequent success. Miss Ransford next delighted the audience with "Bel Raggio;" and subsequently, in "Love rules the Palace," established herself in the admiration of her hearers. Mr. R. Linter, who conducted, in his "Anticipations of Scotland," made us perfectly satisfied with England and English musicians, which feeling was fully confirmed during the evening while listening to several instances of his execution on the piano-forte.

HULL.—On Monday an operatic company commenced their engagement at the theatre, by the performance of Maritana, Mrs. Alexander Newton taking the part of Gitana. Her voice, though not naturally full and powerful, is very sweet and under good control, and there is a refinement about her singing which satisfies the ear. Mr. Travers, as Don Cesar, filled the character with spirit and ease. There is rather too much of effort in his singing, but on the whole it is effective. His cavatina, "Yes, let me like a soldier fall," was re-demanded, and so was his song, "There is a flower that bloometh," in the same act. Mr. and Mrs. Weiss, who sustained respectively the parts of Don Jose and Lazarillo, are already favourably known here, and deserve the reception accorded to them. Besides being a correct and careful singer, Mr. Weiss possesses a deep, powerful voice, and in the choruses is a host in himself. Mrs. Weiss manages a rich, full organ with tact and feeling. With Mr. Travers they sang admirably the trio in the second act, "Turn on, old Time," which was loudly encored. Mr. R. Latter, as the king, displayed a pleasing voice, but there is a formality in his acting of which he should endeavour to free himself. The opera went off very well, and was repeated last night. On Tuesday, the Daughter of the Regiment was performed, Mrs. Weiss sustaining the principal part.

WORCESTER.—The Right Hon. the Earl of Harrowby, and nine other gentlemen, have consented to act as stewards at the ensuing Musical Festival. Much less difficulty has been experienced in obtaining the required number of stewards on this than on any former occasion, and there is an evident determination among all ranks that these festivals shall be maintained in their full integrity. The guarantee fund already exceeds 600*l*.

Some years ago I had an opportunity of judging personally of the style of Indian music, which perfectly correspond with the description given by Mr. Weld and Captain Cook. There were six Indian warriors and their chiefs, who exhibited the various dances of their country. They were dressed in full costume, with their bows and arrows, spears, clubs, and tomahawks; their arms and ankles were encircled with a great variety of ornaments, and beads of different descriptions, which, on account of their being put on loosely, caused a rattling sound on the least motion. They were, in the first place, seated round a fire smoking their tomahawks in deliberate consultation, which continued some time. On a signal given, they all arose, and commenced what they termed the dance of peace, and the chief acted as musician, playing on his tamtum, or little drum, with the greatest gravity, the warriors keeping time with their bodies, and displaying their activity by various figures. After the dance of peace or amity was over, it appeared that they could not come to any amicable terms, (for it was supposed they were two conflicting tribes), for after another short consultation it was decided that they could not settle the point in dispute without having recourse to arms. On a signal being given, the chief again took the tamtum, and commenced his tune for war. The warriors then seized each his club, tomahawk, or whatever weapon he chose to fight with, and the two tribes danced together, flourishing their instruments of war before the enemy, menacing each other with the most terrific screeching and yells; and the violence of their actions were more like a set of demons than human beings; and when they had arrived at the greatest pitch of excitement, the battle commenced, with all the horrors of Indian warfare, the chief continuing his tune, and exciting them to battle by the different short and quick beats of his tamtum. The scene was true to nature.—Tomlinson's Lectures on Ancient Music.

Foreign.

PARIS.—(From our own Correspondent)—At the last concert in the Salle St. Cecile, under the direction of M. Seghers, there were some quaint features. A chorus in four parts, called "Amarylles," attributed to Louis XIII., who consoled himself for Richelieu's ascendancy in the pursuit of the fine arts, and especially music, proved that the weak predecessor of the "Grand Monarque" who ruined France so splendidly, could write music with as little pretensions to melody, as any of his professional cotemporaries, one of whom most probably wrote it for him. Three fragments from Le Ballet comique de la Roynie, composed by one Balthazar de Beaujoyeulx, director of music to Catherine de Medicis, were neither bons nor joyeux, but lairs and lugubres; in short, Balthazar de Laidlugubre would have been a fitter name for this melancholy musician. These pieces sound all the tamer from coming after Mozart's Don Giovanni, which was played with spirit. M. Seghers conducts well, but his orchestra is anything but perfect. Mdlle. Iweins d'Hennin, a very good concert singer, in an air by Nicolo Isouard, from Jeannot et Colin, and a ballad from Weber's Preciosa, showed both feeling and vocal talent. A symphony in C Major, by M. Henri Reber, a musician who is the idol of a certain exclusive party here, did not make any great impression. It is excessively laboured, although it contains some good orchestral effects. The overture and triumphal March of Ferdinand Ries, a piece of vapid bombast, concluded the concert somewhat scurvily. M. Weckerlin, associated with M. Seghers in the management of the concerts St. Cecile, is the antiquary who fished up Louis XIII. and Balthazar de Beaujoyeulx from the depths of oblivion.

A young pianist, Mdlle. Charlotte de Malleville, whose talent is further remarkable for its classical bias, has resumed her performances of chamber-music in Sax's concert-room. Mozart, Beethoven, and Handel, were the great names in the programme at the first concert. French pianists, however, appear to believe that Handel never wrote anything else for the Clavécin, but the "Harmonious Blacksmith" with variations.

A new opera in three acts, by Ambroise Thomas, is in active rehearsal at the Opera Comique. M. Thomas seems now to be the man in vogue. The Caid laid the foundation of his fortune, and the Songe d'une Nuit d'Été accomplished it. The Demon de la Nuit, by M. Rosenhain, was promised for Wednesday; it is completely ready. M. Gounod's Sappho is also very forward. Cerrito and St. Leon having left for Madrid, their place is filled pro tempore by Flora Fabbri (who was introduced by Mr. Bunn to a London audience, in 1846), and Mdlle. Tagliioni, who will shortly start for London. The Tempesta has been once more repeated, but the wounds of Mdlle. Rosati having burst out afresh, it is indefinitely adjourned. At this representation the last scene of the opera (suppressed with the rest of the act on the first night), was restored by M. Scribe. Mdlle. Duprez took her benefit on Monday, previous to her departure for London. Part of Otello, in which Duprez appeared, and an act of the Barbiere for Santag, Lablache, and Calzolari were given. Calzolari is by this time on his way to London. Mr. Lumley has engaged M. Balanchi, a bass singer, pupil of Duprez. The pupils of Duprez are in vogue. M. Oswald, a barytone, appeared at the grand opera the other night, as Alphonso, in the Favorite, when Mdlle. Masson, the charming mezzo soprano (also a pupil of Duprez) appeared for the second time since her reentrée. The Enfant Prodigue has been given twice since I wrote. Each time it is heard, new beauties are disclosed. The Huguenots has also been played, with Mad. Viardot and M. Roger.

Sims Reeves has arrived, and his debut is anticipated with the greatest curiosity. I think the great English tenor will have a triumphant success. Mad. Ugalde having quite disembarassed herself of the influenza, Halévy's Dame de Pique has been resumed, and divides the favor of the habitués of the Opera Comique with Grisar's amusing and vivacious Bon soir Mons. Pantalon, which has beat the Porcherons hollow. Mad. Montenegro made her debut at the Italiens on Tuesday.

It is impossible to mention half the concerts that are going on now in the Carnaval time. Alard has begun his quartets, quintets, trios, &c., at Sax's concert-room. These are very agreeable, but I must confess that the toujours perdrix system is too much adhered to. These French musicians seem either unaware or indifferent to the fact that such a composer as Mendelssohn exists. In Sax's room, as in the theatre of the Conservatoire, the same unpardonable apathy to the claims of this great composer exists. It should be added that the German artists, who know better, are either too cold or too jealous to enlighten the ignorance of their French camarades. M. Seghers and M. Felicien David, both excellent men, both require to be told that Mendelssohn has written other overtures besides Melusina. As for Berlioz, since he has established the Union he appears to have entirely forgotten his old fellow-student, or rather fellow-aspirant, in the ancient city. Has Berlioz unremembered Rome, and the Walpurgis-Nacht, and the symphony in A major, with the tarantella and the ghost-like slow-movement, and the Isles of Fingal, and twenty other things, wild, and wonderful, and beautiful, which at one period he was wont to speak of in terms of unmeasured eloquence such as belong to himself alone among musical critics? I had hoped that Berlioz, ere now, would have shewn Paris what Mendelssohn is, and read a lesson to the tardy and conceited and exclusive and bigoted Conservatoire. But alas! Berlioz is like other men; when the time comes the will dies! or perchance Spontini, the great Spontini, has engrossed his whole thoughts for the last two months. Jullien should come to Paris and tell the connoisseurs what Mendelssohn has done.

Valeria, in which Rachel is two Rachels, has been a bone of contention. The meddling Commission des Theatres has taken exception to the piece, and proposed its suppression. All Paris laughs at the impertinence of this self-constituted power, which I have great hopes is on its last legs. They plead the falsification of history against the authors, MM. Lacroix (the poet), and Maquet (Alexander Dumas' most active collaborateur). These gentlemen, in constructing their drama, forgot to consult Suetonius and Tacitus, representing the wife of the Emperor Claudius as an injured woman, whose misfortunes arise from her exact resemblance to a courtesan named Lysisca. Rachel plays both parts, and it is as Lysisca that she sings the bacchic couplets for which M. Offenbach has written some very pale music, which only Rachel's genius could make effective. The idea of tying dramatists to the back of historians is quite new, and if carried out, would upset half the dramatic literature of Europe. MM. Lacroix and Maquet, in splitting the notorious Messalina into two personages, have shown boldness and ingenuity, and the furor created by the drama is a sufficient guarantee that the Parisian public does not share the pedantic objections of the Commission des Theatres. At all events the Theatre Francais is crowded to inconvenience, whenever Valeria is given, and Rachel has added a new laurel to her brow.

CARLSRUHE, (MARCH 3.)—Herr Stigelli on his way to London, afforded us yesterday an opportunity of hearing him in a Matinée—a musical treat which we shall long remember.

The famous Tenor needs no comment of ours, but we may candidly express our opinion, that we consider him one of the first ballad vocalists living. Herr Stigelli gives a second concert to-morrow.

Miscellaneous.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Madlle. Caroline Duprez, accompanied by M. and Madame Duprez, reached London on Thursday. Calzolari, Signor Bianchi (a new basso), and Madame Fiorentini, are already at their posts. The season will open with Lucia di Lammermoor, in which Madlle. Duprez will make her debut. Auber's Grand Opera, Gustave, is in active preparation. Madlle. Duprez will perform the Page, and Madam Fiorentine, Madame Ankerström. A general rehearsal of the new Ballet à la Watteau, in which Amalia Ferraris will appear, has already taken place. Carlotta Grisi is expected in a few days from St. Petersburg. The opening night is fixed for Saturday the 22nd instant.

MONSIEUR AND MADAME DELOFFRE have arrived in town for the season. They met with the most flattering success at their Concerts in Paris.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—The first performance of Samson on Tuesday, was greatly successful. Mr. Costa had bestowed his best energies on the themes, and besides writing additional accompaniments himself, managed the indispensable curtailment with rare skill. The execution was admirable on the part of band and orchestra, as on the part of the solo vocalists, Misses Birch and Dolby, Messrs. Lockey, Whitworth, and M. Phillips. Samson, so long kept in the back ground, is likely to follow close upon the heels of the Messiah and Israhel, thanks to the Sacred Harmonic Society, and to Mr. Costa, its indefatigable director. It is announced for repetition on the 26th, when we shall enter fully into the merits both of the work and its performance at Exeter Hall. The attendance, on Tuesday night, was as full as the building could accommodate.

MDLLE. ZINGGELER'S CONCERT.—The young lady who gave this concert at Willis's rooms is afflicted with the dreadful calamity of blindness, and consequently labours under disadvantages unknown to her more favoured compeers. Mdlle. Zinggeler possesses a mezzo soprano voice of sweetness and good quality, without much power, which requires training before its true flexibility and tone can be developed. The concert on Thursday evening was the means of introducing this vocalist to an English audience for the first time, but we understand her intention is to return immediately to Germany, so that there will be no further opportunity of judging her merits. The room was exceedingly well filled, and the audience apparently of a superior class. Mdlle. Lavinia and Signor Marchesi received an encore in Rossini's "Dunque io sono," and Mdlle. Zinggeler was recalled after a Swiss melody, which she replaced by another. The other singers were Mesdames Rummel, and Magner, and Messrs. Drayton, Herbert, and Stockhausen, the last of whom gave some Swiss melodies in excellent style. Mr. J. Thomas was highly successful in a fantasia on airs from Lucia, for the harp. Herr Goffrie narrowly escaped an encore in De Beriot's Tremolo, which he performed with great spirit. He was also much applauded in two duets for violin and pianoforte, in which he was joined by his cara sposa, Mdme. Goffrie, who in her turn appeared to the audience through the medium of Schulloff's Carnaval de Venise. Made. Goffrie unites considerable powers of execution to expression and delicacy of touch. The piece she performed is replete with difficulties, all of which were easily set aside by the fair pianist, who gave the composer's meaning as the composer intended it should be conveyed. So that the Carnaval from Made. Goffrie's fingers fell neither dull nor spiritless upon the car. The applause was most liberal. Herren Goffrie and Rummel were conductors; and we have reasons for believing that Mdlle. Zinggeler's audience were throughout satisfied with their evening's performance.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.—The 113th anniversary festival of this useful society, which was established in 1738 for the relief of aged and indigent musicians, their widows and orphans, came off yesterday week at the Freemasons'-hall. A larger number sat down to dinner than has been known for some years, and the provisions supplied appeared to give general satisfaction. The president of the day was the Right Hon. the Earl of Carlisle, who, in returning thanks when his health was proposed by Mr. Rovedino, delivered a very eloquent discourse on the humanizing influence of music, which produced an edifying effect upon the assembly. From the general statement it appears that during the past year the sum of £2,676 17s. 9d. was received from interest of property, subscriptions, and donations, and £2,622 3s. 9d. expended in the objects of the society. The donations on the present occasion—headed, as usual, by a munificent gift from the great firm of Broadwood and Sons—was considerable, and the announcement of the various items was followed by applause proportionate to the amounts bestowed. After dinner Non nobis Domine was excellently sung by the company (nearly all professionals), and the series of toasts—loyal, special, and complimentary—was agreeably interspersed with musical performances, vocal and instrumental, of more than ordinary attraction. A very efficient band of wind instruments, under the direction of Mr. Harper, performed several times during the evening, and accompanied the singers in the National Anthem. The principal vocalists were Misses Dolby, Ellen Lyon, and Poole, Messrs. Lockey, Manvers, and a quartet of well known glee singers. The best glee was, "Get up, get up, for shame," a prize composition by Henry Smart. The best songs were Laura Barker's cantata, "Ida Ida," finely sung by Miss Dolby; "The watchword of Progress—Go on," by W. L. Phillips, which Mr. Lockey gave with the utmost spirit; and a ballad, called "Loving hearts," in which Miss Poole was deservedly encored. A concertante by Mayaseder, for violin and piano, brilliantly executed by M. Sainton and Mrs. Anderson, was received with the loudest applause; Mendelssohn's "Wedding March," given with great force by Mr. Harper's band, was encored and repeated; and a solo on the clarinet by Mr. Lazarus, played in a masterly manner, elicited the loudest applause. Mr. Cipriani Potter presided at the pianoforte. The company remained till rather a late hour, and seemed greatly pleased with the musical entertainment. Mr. Anderson, who has succeeded Mr. Parry in the post of honorary treasurer, was indefatigable, both in superintending the musical arrangements and promoting the general convenience of the guests.—(From the Times.)

GLOVER'S "JERUSALEM."—We observe that this oratorio is shortly to be performed at Crosby Hall, London, and are glad to find that the Finsbury Sacred Harmonic Society has thought it worthy of its consideration. Works of as high character as the "Jerusalem" are not as ephemeral as cynics would have us believe. We hope that ere long Mr. Glover will make an effort to bring his second oratorio, "Emmanuel," before the public, and that it will be performed in a complete and effective manner.—Manchester Examiner.

HERR OBERTHUR, the well known harpist and composer, has arrived in London for the season.

MR. C. R. WESSEL, the eminent music publisher, has returned from Germany, where he has been travelling for the last four months in quest, we presume, of interesting novelties in his department. We have little doubt that Mr. Wessel has returned with his portfolio richly furnished, and that the musical public will speedily reap the advantage of his discoveries.

SIGNOR CALZOLARI, the accomplished tenore di bravura of her Majesty's Theatre, has arrived in town.

HERR STIGELLI, the Teutonic vocalist, has arrived in London, after singing at Milan and Verona with great success.

RUBINI.—This celebrated vocalist, we are happy to hear from Herr Stigelli, who was recently on a visit to him at his country house, has nearly recovered from his late illness.

MR. MÜHLENFELDT's first "Soirée" is announced to take place at the New Beethoven Rooms on Wednesday.—(See Advertisement.)

MADLLE. GRAUMANN's "Matinée Musicale," at the Beethoven Rooms on Monday, promises to be attractive—Ernst plays.

MR. KJALLMARK's second "Matinée Musicale," announced at the New Beethoven Rooms for Monday next is likely to be fashionably attended.

A MUSIC-HALL is about to be erected at Bradford at a cost of £10,000.

MR. W. H. HOLMES' MATINEE MUSICALS.—Mr. Holmes gave a Matinee at the New Beethoven Rooms, on Saturday, in the course of which, many features of very considerable interest were introduced. Mr. Holmes, whose great and various powers place him in the highest rank of pianists, played Mendelssohn's Orchestral Rondo, in B minor, in a masterly and brilliant manner; and also Beethoven's Sopata, in C sharp minor, which it has become fashionable to designate with the romantic title of "The Moonlight." Miss Rushforth, a pupil of Mr. Holmes, played with him, very ably, an arrangement as pianoforte duets, some of the English Words for violin and pianoforte, of Molique. Mr. Bodda played also with Mr. Holmes, a highly effective arrangement for two pianofortes of Spohr's quintet, in C minor, for pianoforte and wind instruments; it was in every respect an admirable performance. Mrs. John Macfarren played a Rondo in E flat major, with clearness, precision and excellent style; she most fully confirmed the good impression which she created in the past by her brilliant rendering of Herz's clever duet, in the music in Guillelme Tell, with Mr. Walter Macfarren. Mr. Thompson, a pupil of Mr. Holmes in the Academy, played a movement of a Concerto, in C, of Mozart, in a manner equally creditable to himself and to his master. Mr. Bodda sang in his usual useful style, the song "Beautiful Night," from The Sleeper Awakened. Miss Messent sang a new and very pleasing song of Mr. Holmes, "Light behind a cloud," and Miss Dolby two songs of the same composer, as no vocalist but herself could sing them. The rooms were crowded by an elegant and discerning audience.

MR. CHARLES MARSHALL'S DIORAMA.—The lovers of pictorial sights, illustrative of foreign countries, will be both amused and interested by a visit to Her Majesty's Theatre, where Mr. Charles Marshall is now exhibiting his great moving diorama of a tour through Europe. We can speak of the painting of this work in express and high terms of admiration. Mr. Marshall has literally surpassed all his former efforts in his new diorama, and we question much if greater excellence has ever been arrived at in similar essays of the pencil. Not only the excellence of the illustrations but the variety also demands its due share of praise. The diorama is divided into three grand routes; the first includes a journey from Dover to Constantinople, the principal scenes of which are on, or contiguous to, the Danube. The view of Constantinople is singularly brilliant and imposing. Some of the Hungarian scenes are vividly depicted, one especially which represents a wedding feast, in which the guests display a striking variety of costumes. A wild and gloomy pass in the Carpathian mountains will command attention. The second route takes the spectator through some of the most beautiful scenery in Italy, leads him across the Alps, and finishes in the Swiss Cantons. Here Mr. Charles Marshall has an ample and tempting field for the exhibition of his pencil. Rome the seven-hilled, and Venice the enchantered, are illustrated with singular art. The views of Venice, more especially, are admirable. The square of St. Marc, and the Bridge of Sighs, with "a palace and a prison on each bank," are both vigorous and animated pictures. The water in the lagoon is wonderfully transparent. The journey over the Alps is illustrated by some powerful scenes; among others, the grand valley of Gondo, the villages of Simplon and Interlachen, the jagged mountain, the valley of Lauterbrunnen, &c. &c. This route terminates with a view of Mont Blanc, seen from Sallanche, an admirable picture. The third and last section of the diorama embraces several of the principal beauties of the Rhine, beginning at Bingen and descending to Cologne. This division of the picture will, in all probability, be found most acceptable to the spectator, and is, perhaps, painted with more accuracy of detail and greater general effect. We shall not particularise any of the nine pictures of which this part of the diorama is constituted; they are all exceedingly beautiful, and each is a masterpiece of its kind. To recommend Mr. Charles Marshall's work, after what we have said, is unnecessary. In the exhibition of the diorama a gentleman attends, who describes with voluble minuteness each scene as it passes in review. Among the numerous moving sights to be displayed before foreign eyes in 1851—for we doubt not Mr. Charles Marshall will continue to exhibit his picture, even when compelled to remove it from the Tourists' Gallery, alias Concert-room of Her Majesty's Theatre—we know of none, certainly, which is entitled to more support—none, certainly, which surpasses it in point of excellence, and very few, indeed, which can be said to equal it.

ITALIAN OPERATIC CONCERTS.—Sig. Montelli commences a second series of these popular Concerts, at the Royal Princess's Concert Rooms, on Friday next, when several talented artistes, both vocal and instrumental, are announced to appear.

MR. WILLIAM DAY, the well-known Professor of Music, father of Miss Day the pianiste, and of Mr. J. Day, the Violonist, died on the 3rd of March, at his residence, 37, Upper Belgrave Place.

M. JACQUES BLUMENTHAL, the accomplished pianiste and composer, has arrived in London after a six months' sojourn in Switzerland, where he met with the greatest success.

MR. MONRO.—On Monday the 3rd inst., at his lodgings in Red Lion-square, died Mr. Jno. Monro, aged 65 years. Mr. Monro was the son of a respectable hairdresser in Edinburgh; and manifesting in early life a taste for music, was placed by his father in the shop of Messrs. Muir, Wood, & Co., music-sellers in that town. Mr. Muir gave him every opportunity of study, assisted him in the cultivation of his art, and at the age of seventeen sent him to London, with an introduction to the Duchess of Hamilton, in the hope that her ladyship might interest herself in getting him appointed musical teacher to the late Princess Charlotte. Failing in this, he applied to the late George Goulding, of the firm of Goulding, D'Almaine, & Co., where he obtained employment for several years. About the year 1806, Mr. Monro left Messrs. Goulding & Co., and offered his services to Messrs. Purday & Button, the music publishers. Mr. Purday, father of the present publishers, brought out some of his works, and employed him as commercial traveller. Shortly after, however, he left the business, and followed that of professor for several years, after which he determined to return to his former occupation, and finally established himself as a publisher in Skinner-street, Snow-hill, whence he removed eventually to Holborn-bars, where he remained in partnership with Mr. May, his brother-in-law, until an attack of paralysis, in 1848, compelled him to relinquish business altogether. As a composer, Mr. Monro never aimed at anything beyond easy lessons for the pianoforte, and ballads—among which latter, several arrived at considerable popularity, viz., "Ellen Aureen," "The Boatswain's Shril Whistle," "Mary the Maid of the Green," &c., introduced to public notice by John Barnett, the composer, then a boy. Mr. Monro was self-taught, but understood the grammar of his art sufficiently well to write correctly. His last work was a set of six songs, called "Border Ballads." We may add that Mr. Monro was a respectable performer on the organ, and enjoyed the situation of organist of St. Botolph's Church, Aldersgate-street, until his illness compelled him to relinquish the situation.—(Abridged from the letter of a Correspondent.)

MR. P. EZEKIEL, the Pianist, took his Benefit on Monday at Sussex Hall, Leadenhall Street. The room was well attended, and the selection popular and good. The principal vocalists were Sig. Ronconi, Mr. H. Drayton, and Miss Bassano. The former gentleman sang "Tu vedrai," from Bellini, and a Barcarola of Donizetti in a style that needs no criticism. Miss Bassano gave "In questo Semplice" with her usual energy and dramatic effect, and afterwards sang the Scotch ballad "Auld Robin Gray," a song which she seems to have made her own and which she delivered with the impassioned feeling that she invariably imparts to its simple melody, and its touching and beautiful story. Mr. Henri Drayton also sang with great taste and expression, particularly in Knight's pretty song "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep." We must not omit Mr. P. Ezekiel's piano-forte playing, which is neat and brilliant. The rest of the performers, especially Mr. Jonghman, who gave "Largo al factotum" with excellent effect, acquitted themselves creditably.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

MR. E. T. (Reigate).—In the modern acceptation of the terms andantino is to andante what allegretto is to allegro—consequently faster. In ancient times we have little doubt that these terms had other meanings. We find Handel sometimes noting a movement, "andante allegro."

Our Scrap Book.

MALIBRAN.

WHAT potent pencil can depict the scene,
That owned the sway of song's majestic Queen?
Yes! what bright fancy can those moments scan,
When sunk the setting sun of Malibran?
There, the surpassing sweetness of her song
Thrill'd with admiring awe a raptur'd throng!
There, in the fervour of each fearful tone,
The flash of more than inspiration shone!
And there, with all the majesty of art,
Her heaven-taught genius triumph'd o'er the heart!
But, with that mighty energy's display,
The strain'd supports of nature yielded way!
Her soul aspired in fairer climes to glow,
And burst the ties that bound it here below;
The powers of struggling sense were overcome,
And that transcendent voice in death was dumb!
But who that marked the splendour of that scene,
Can pause unmoved and muse o'er what has been?
Or, who that heard her parting accents' tone,
Will cast her image e'er from mem'ry's throne?
No! the wild fervour of that last display,
The meteor blaze of life's expiring ray,
And each convulsive burst of piercing strain,
That mark'd the dawn of Death's redoubted reign,
These, on the page that tells of nobler man,
Shall fix the immortal name of Malibran.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.—The following are among the bequests of well-known individuals to this institution:—Handel, £1,000; Signora Storace, £1,000; J. Crostill, £1,000; W. B. Earle, Esq., £754; G. Henekey, £300; C. Knyvett, £200; J. P. Saloman, £200; C. A. Feischell, £200; C. Bowles, £200; A. Macklin, £200; Mazzinghi, £100; Mrs. Jane Dodman, £100; and Miss Caroline Eliza Fenn, £1,000. The society received one-fourth of the profits of the Royal Festival in Westminster Abbey, 1834—£2,250. The new Musical Fund, established in 1786, and the Choral Fund, established in 1791, and the Royal Academy of Music, received similar amounts.

THE MUSICAL SENTIMENT.—To the mere musician music is nothing more than a mass of notes, sharps, flats, rests, and holds; to play accurately and in time seems to him the height of perfection; and as merit of this kind is somewhat rare, it must be acknowledged that he is not altogether wrong. But what a distance from this mechanical execution, which leaves the soul of the hearer as unmoved as that of the player, to that harmony of feeling which is gradually communicated from the performer to the audience; to those delicate shades which colour the thought of the composer, show forth its sublimity, and frequently lend it new beauties; to that expression, in short, without which music is but an idle noise! Suppose an orchestra, a company of ordinary singers, who, in their dull execution, leave our sensations at rest: let an ardent leader, a musician endowed with all the requisite powers of mind and body, appear in the midst of them; suddenly, the sacred fire communicates itself to these inanimate beings; the metamorphosis produced in an instant may even be such that we can hardly persuade ourselves that we have the same players and singers. One who has not been so liberally endowed by nature, as to be able to communicate lively impressions to those who surround him, is at least capable of receiving them; which explains the secret of those sudden transformations which we behold in individual performers, according as they are well or ill directed. The cultivation and regulation of the passions and feelings so as to be able to awaken any required emotion, to any degree, at any instant—a cultivation which goes beyond mimicry and mechanism and has its seat in the soul, is one of the vital branches of musical education, and yet, strange to say, it is by far the most neglected. When will men shake off the stupidity and sluggishness of their nature, and thus become one living soul, one thrill of feeling, one exquisite sensation?

Advertisements.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.

CONDUCTOR, Mr. COSTA.—Wednesday, March 26, will be repeated Handel's SAMSON. Vocalists—Miss Birch, Miss Dolby, Mr. Lockey, Mr. T. Williams, Mr. Whitworth, and Mr. H. Phillips. The Orchestra, the most extensive available in Exeter Hall, will consist of (including 16 double basses) nearly 700 performers. Tickets, 3s.; reserved seats in area or gallery, 5s.; central area (numbered seats), 10s. 6d.; at the Society's office, 6, Exeter Hall; or of Mr. Bowley, 53, Charing-cross.

LONDON SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY,

EXETER HALL. On FRIDAY, March 28th, Handel's "JEPHTHA," being the Centenary Performance of this Oratorio. Principal Vocalists—Miss Birch, Mrs. Temple, Miss Kenneth; Mr. J. Young, Mr. Lockey, and Mr. Lawler; Conductor, Mr. Sarman, founder of the Exeter Hall Oratorios. Tickets, 3s., 5s., 7s., and central numbered seats, 10s. 6d. each, to be obtained at the Principal Musicians, and at the office of the Society, No. 9, in Exeter Hall, where may be obtained the best Edition of the Music of the above Oratorio, Printed in Score and Single Parts.

MONTELLI'S ITALIAN OPERATIC CONCERTS.

THE NOBILITY, GENTRY, and the PUBLIC, are respectfully informed that the second series of these Concerts will take place at the Royal Princess's Concert Rooms, Castle Street, Oxford Street, commencing on Friday next, March 21st, 1851, when the most talented Vocal and Instrumental Artists in London will have the honor of appearing. Terms of Admission, Reserved Seats 4s., Unreserved Seats 2s. 6d., Gallery 1s. or by subscription for Ten Concerts, Reserved Seats £1 10s. Unreserved £1 1s.

SIGNOR BOTTESINI,

MUSICAL DIRECTOR OF THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA AT HAVANNA, BEGS to apprise the Musical Profession and the Public that he will arrive in London at the beginning of May, and remain during the entire Season.

Letters and applications for engagements to be addressed to Sig. BOTTESINI, Weasel and Co., 229, Regent Street.

To be published, March 3rd, GRATIS.

DANIELL'S MUSICAL OILIO,

Or, CATALOGUE of his COLLECTION of SECOND-HAND MUSIC, IN which will be found some of the Works of the most Eminent Composers, many works that are old and curious, Treatises on the Sciences, &c.; also some Popular Modern Pianoforte Music, marked at less than one-fourth part of the publication price. On sale at 33, Mortimer-street, Cavendish-square. Any lady or gentleman ordering the Catalogue by post will please to enclose two penny stamps.

APOLLONICON.

ROYAL MUSIC HALL, ADJOINING LOWTHER ARCADE. TUESDAY, THURSDAY, SATURDAY—Morning, 2; Evening, 8. Mr. Mather's admired Performances. Miss Poole, Miss Mesent (Evening); the Misses, Mr., and Master Collins (Emma, Pianoforte and Vocal; Victoria, Violoncello and Vocal; Rosina, Violin, Concertina, and Vocal; Mr., Violin and Flute; Master, Violin). Mr. F. Chatterton's Juvenile Harpists (the Lockwood Family). Obosc and Director, Mr. Grattan Cooke. Admission, 1s.; reserved seats, 1s. 6d.; stalls, 2s. 6d.

MOAT'S NEWLY-INVENTED VIOLIN BOW,

REGISTERED in France and England.—Musical Professors and Amateurs are invited to inspect this admirable invention, by which the performer is enabled to produce the utmost degrees of power or delicacy.

Made of the most exquisite Brazil, and silver mounted... 32s.

Doitto, ditto, mounted in German silver... 22s.

Doitto, ditto, plain ebony... 16s.

J. J. Haite, Musical Instrument Maker to the Army and Navy, 76, Leadenhall Street, sole London Agent.

WANTED

FOR a Cathedral in the West of Ireland, an organist, who would undertake the management and instruction of the Choir. A competent salary will be given according to qualifications. A knowledge of the Hullah System would be desirable. Satisfactory reference required. Apply to the Hon. and Rev. The Dean of Tuam, the Rectory, Headford.

DENT'S IMPROVED WATCHES AND CLOCKS.

E. J. DENT, Watch and Clock Maker, by distinct appointment to the Queen, H.R.H. Prince Albert, and H.I.M. the Emperor of Russia, most respectfully solicits from the public an inspection of his extensive STOCK of WATCHES and CLOCKS, embracing all the late modern improvements at the most economical charges. Ladies' Gold Watches, with gold dials, jewelled in four holes, 8 guineas; Gentlemen's, with enamelled dials, 10 guineas; Youth's Silver Watches, 4 guineas. Warranted accurate-going Lever Watches, jewelled in four holes 6 guineas.—E. J. Dent, 23, Strand; 33, Cockspur-street; and 24, Royal Exchange (Clock Tower Area).

EWER & CO.'S LATEST PUBLICATIONS.

- Mendelssohn's Posthumous Works*—
 No. 10. Andante and Variations for Pianoforte, Solo ... 3s.
 " 11. Andante and Variations for ditto... 3s.
 " 12. Andante and Variations for Pianoforte, 2 performers... 6s.
 " 13. Three Songs for a deep voice ... 4s.
 " 14. Seventh Book, Lieder ohne Worte ... 5s.
 " 15. Six Songs for Soprano ... 5s.
 " 16. String Quintet, No. 2 ... 12s.
 " 17. Six Vocal Quartets for mixed voices Opheus No. 20 ... 5s.
 " 18. Son and Stranger, an Operetta, the text adapted from the German by H. F. Chorley. Pianoforte Score ... 15s.
 The Overture for Pianoforte, 2 performers ... 4s.
Mozart—Six Pieces for Violin and Pianoforte, Op. 41, in two Books, each 4s.
Durley, J.—Three Melodies for Violin and Pianoforte, Op. 17 ... 6s.
Horsley, C. E.—Three Songs—The Poet to his Bride, The Entreaty, Flowers ... 4s.
Opheus—A collection of 2, 3, and 4 part Songs and Choruses for the use of Choral Societies, Families, and Schools ... 6d.
Melmer's Fifty Melodies for Children ... 1s.
Do. Music-book for the Young ... 1s.
 Ewer & Co., Newgate Street.

MESSRS. COCKS AND CO'SNEW MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS FOR THE PIANO.

BY BRINLEY RICHARDS.—"The Angel's Song," 2s.; "The Storm March," 3s. By Stephen Heller.—LATEST PIANOFORTE LESSONS. Students of the pianoforte will find in the following works of the above distinguished author an unusual degree of merit, suited alike for the salon and the practice-room, viz., "Chant du Chasseur," 2s.; "Le Adieu du Soldat," 2s.; "Chant du Royaume," 2s.; arrangement of Mendelssohn's "Chant d'Amour," 2s.; ditto, "Parting Song," 2s.; ditto, "Chant de Fête," 2s.

BY G. A. OSBORNE.—Splendid Fantasia on Airs from Don Juan, 4s.; ditto from the Barbier de Seville, duet, 5s.; ditto on Kucken's Schlusmarch, 4s.; ditto on Trab, Trab, 3s.; Wallenstein's Le Soupir Redowa, 1s. 6d.; and Schottisch de Paris, 2s.; Schulhoff's Carnaval de Venise, 4s.; Cantabile, 2s.; his Mozart's Minuet, 4s.; and Serenade Espagnole, 3s.; Oraten's May-flowers (for young performers), three books, each 2s.; Gloria's Adieux de Marie Stuart, 4s.; Campanella, 4s.; and Harmonie du Soir, 4s.

NEW SCHOOL MUSIC.—Hamilton's Modern Instructions for the Piano, the easiest and best book, 20th edition, 4s.; his Dictionary of 3,500 Musical Terms, 37th edition, 1s.; his Catechism on Singing, 3s.; ditto on Thorough Bass, 2s.; ditto Violin, 1s.; Clare's Psalmody, 12 books, 3s. each; Clarke's Catechism of the Fundamentals of Music, 23rd edition, 1s.; Warren's Psalmody, 23 books, 2d. each; and his Chantier's Hand-Guide, in one vol., 5s., or in 34 parts, 2d. each; Green's Very Easy Instructions for Singing, 4s.

GOTTFREID WEBER'S THEORY OF MUSICAL COMPOSITION.—A New Edition, Edited by JOHN BISHOP, containing upwards of one thousand pages, in 2 vols., royal 8vo., whole cloth, boards, price 31s. 6d. Also, CZERNY'S NEW PRACTICAL SCHOOL OF MUSICAL COMPOSITION. Translated by JOHN BISHOP. 3 vols. folio, each 31s. 6d.

ALBRECHTSBERGER'S (Master of Beethoven) COMPLETE THEORETICAL WORKS. Translated by the late ARNOLD MERRICK, Esq. 2 vols. 8vo., 42s.

CHERUBINI'S COUNTERPOINT and FUGUE. Translated by J. A. HAMILTON, 2 vols. 8vo., 31s. 6d. And

DR. BOYCE'S COLLECTION OF CATHEDRAL MUSIC. A new Edition by JOHN WARREN. In three large folio vols. of upwards of 1300 pages, price £6 6s. London: R. COCKS and Co., New Burlington Street, Publishers to her Majesty. New Catalogues, Gratis and Postage Free.

BEETHOVEN QUARTETT SOCIETY.

THE SIX EVENING PARTIES are fixed.—April 2nd, 16th, and 30th; May 14th, and 28th; June 11th; the four morning—April 24th, May 8th, 22nd, June 2nd. Subscriptions for the six nights, two guineas; for the four mornings, one guinea and a half; for the ten performances together, three guineas. To the profession tickets (not transferable) will be half the above price. To be had of Messrs. Rousselot and Co., 66, Conduit-street, Regent-street.

PROGRAMME OF MR. W. STERNDALE BENNETT'S

SECOND PERFORMANCE of CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC, TUESDAY evening March 18, at the HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS:—Trio in E flat, pianoforte, clarinet, and viola, Mozart; duo, pianoforte and violin; selections from W. S. Bennett's pianoforte works; and Lieder ohne Worte, Mendelssohn. Instrumentalists—Messrs. W. H. Holmes, W. S. Bennett, and Lazarus, Herr Molique, Messrs. Dando, and Lucas. Vocalist—Miss Dolby. To commence at half-past 8. Single tickets half a guinea each; triple tickets (to admit three to any one concert) one guinea—to be had at all the principal music warehouses; and of Mr. W. S. Bennett, 16, Russell-place, Fitzroy-square. The third and last performance will be on April 8.

MR. CH. MÜHLENFELDT'S FIRST SOIREE

OF CLASSICAL AND MODERN PIANOFORTE PERFORMANCES, Will take place at the NEW BEETHOVEN ROOMS, 27, Queen Ann Street, on WEDNESDAY next, the 19th inst. To commence at Eight o'clock. Mr. Mühlendorf will be assisted by Miss Dolby, Messrs. Sainton, Broadbent, and Aguilar. Subscription Tickets (for both Soirées), 15s. each; and Single for one Soirée, Half-a-Guinea each. May be had at the principal Music Warehouses, and of Mr. MÜHLENFELDT, 57, Gloucester Place, Portman Square.

MR. SOIPION ROUSSELOT'S

SECOND CLASSICAL PERFORMANCE, next Tuesday the 18th, at eight o'clock, 27, Queen Anne Street. Grand Trio, Mozart, aria Fidelio. Quartet in A minor, Mendelssohn; Vocal Quartet, Mendelssohn; Third Grand Trio, Beethoven. Lieder—Zuleika Italian, and Vocal Quartet, Mendelssohn; First Quintet, Beethoven. Instrumentalists—Messrs. P. Sain'on, H. Cooper, H. Hill, Goffie, and Rousselot. Vocalists—Mlle. F. Rummel and Messrs. Hoffregen, Tung man, Gregore, Mayerhofer, the vocal quartet society under the direction of Mr. Rousselot. Tickets may be obtained of Messrs. Rousselot and Co., 66, Conduit-street.

MR. KIALLMARK'S

SECOND PERFORMANCE of Classical and Modern Pianoforte Music, will take place at the New Beethoven Rooms, 27, Queen Ann Street, on Monday Morning, March 17th, at Two o'clock precisely; on which occasion he will be assisted by Miss E. Birch, Miss Pyne, Herr Kroff, Messrs. Molique, and Grattan Cooke.—Pianist accompanateur, Mr. Lavenue. Single Tickets for reserved seats, Half-a-Guinea; and Single Tickets for unreserved seats, Seven Shillings each; may be had of all the principal Music-sellers; and of Mr. Kiallmark, 32 A, Fitzroy Square; Robert W. Ollivier, Concert Agent, 19, Old Bond Street, Piccadilly.

MR. W. H. HOLMES

(Professor of the Pianoforte at the Royal Academy of Music), HAS the honor to announce a PERFORMANCE OF THE MUSIC OF A NEW OPERA (composed by W. H. Holmes), at the HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS, on WEDNESDAY Morning, May 28, at 2 o'clock. Further particulars will be duly given.

LA GORLITZA.

THE Original and only Authentic copy of the "Gorlitza," as composed by "Varin," inventor of this popular dance—accompanied with a beautiful new "Cracovia," by "Benauss," is published by Messrs. HALE & SON, Cheltenham, at Messrs. ADDISON & Co.'s, Regent Street, London, and may be had at all Music-sellers.

Ask for "Varin's Gorlitza," the only authorized edition, published by Hale and Son.

MISS CATHERINE HAYES.

THE most favourite English Ballads sung by the above distinguished vocalist, are, "Why do I weep for thee?" by Wallace; "O sing to me!" by Osborne; "Those happy days are gone," by Lavenue; "To be beloved again," by Linley; and "He said he would come back to me," by Maynard. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street, and 67, Conduit-street.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

FOR Improving the Voice, and removing all Affections of the Throat. Strongly recommended to Clergymen, Singers, Actors, Public Speakers, Persons subject to relaxed Throats, and to all persons desirous of cultivating their Voices, and ensuring a good and clear articulation. They have also been found highly beneficial to those afflicted with Nervous, Hysterical, or Stomachic Coughs. To be had in Boxes, at 1s. 1jd., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each, of every Medicine Vendor in the kingdom. Musical Agents in London, Messrs. Leader & Co., 63, New Bond Street; Wholesale Agents, Messrs. Barclay & Sons, Farringdon Street.

Testimonials of their efficacy are published with each Box, from Mad. Grisl Miss Romer Mr. Harrison Mr. J. Barnett
 Mad. Persiani Mad. Albertazzi Mr. Allen Mr. George Linley
 Mad. Eugenie Garcia Miss Cooper Mr. White Mr. Rodwell
 Mrs. Alfred Shaw Sig. Lablache Mr. Wase Mr. Nelson
 Miss Rainforth Sig. Giubilei Mr. Kroff &c., &c.

HEALTH WHERE IT IS SOUGHT!

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Cure of a disordered Liver and Stomach, when in a most hopeless state.—Extract of a letter from Mr. Matthew Harvey, of Chapel Hall, Airdrie, Scotland, dated the 15th of January, 1850.—To Professor HOLLOWAY, Sir,—Your valuable Pills have been the means, with God's blessing, of restoring me to perfect health, at a time when I thought I was on the brink of the grave. I had consulted several eminent Doctors, who, after doing what they could for me, considered my case hopeless. I had been suffering from a Liver and Stomach complaint of long standing, which during the last two years got so much worse, that every one considered my condition as hopeless. I, as a last resource, got a Box of your Pills, which soon gave relief, and by persevering in their use for some weeks, together with rubbing night and morning your Ointment over my chest and stomach, and right side, I have by their means alone got completely cured, and to the astonishment of myself and everybody who knows me.

(Signed) MATTHEW HARVEY.
 These celebrated Pills are wonderfully efficacious in the following complaints:—
 Ague Consumption of Fevers of all kinds Liver complaints Tumours
 Asthma the Bowels kinds Lumbago Ulcers
 Bilious Com- Consumption Fits Piles Worms of all
 plaints Debility Gout Rheumatism kinds
 Blothes on the Dropsy Head-ache Scrofula or King's Weakness, from Skin Dysentery Indigestion Evil whatever cause
 Bowel complaints Erysipelas Inflammation Sore Throats &c., &c.
 Colic Jaundice Tio-Douloureux

Sold at the Establishment of Professor HOLLOWAY, 244, Strand, (near Temple-bar, London, and most all respectable Druggists, and Dealers in Medicines throughout the civilised World at the following prices—1s. 1jd., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 32s. each Box. There is a considerable saving by taking the larger sizes. N.B.—Directions for the guidance of Patients in every Disorder are affixed to each Box.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

THE Nobility, Subscribers, and the Public, are respectfully informed that this THEATRE WILL OPEN on SATURDAY, MARCH 22ND,

When will be performed Donizetti's Opera, entitled

"LUCIA DE LAMMERMOOR;"

in which Mdle. CAROLINE DUPREZ will make her first appearance.

To be followed by a New and Original

"BALLET A LA WATTEAU,"

Composed by M. Paul Taglion; the Music by M. Nadaud; the scenery by Mr. Charles Marshall; in which MDLE. AMALIA FERRARIS WILL APPEAR.

The Grand Opera of "GUSTAVUS"

is in active preparation.

The part of Madame Ankerstrom will be supported by Madame FIORENTINI.
The part of Oscar, by Mdle. CAROLINE DUPREZ; and Signor CALZOLARI will sustain the part of Gustavus.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

THE DIRECTORS have the honour to inform the Nobility, Gentry, Subscribers, and the Public, that the Season of the ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA will COMMENCE ON SATURDAY, MARCH 29th.
Full particulars will be duly announced.

NEW SACRED SONGS.

MR. JOHN BARNETT has just published TWO new SACRED SONGS, which, from their extreme simplicity and beautiful expression of the poetry, bid fair to become very popular. The words are from the pen of Bayley. They are called, 1. "He that gathereth in Summer," price 2s. 6d.; 2. "The Sabbath Eve," price 2s. 6d. Both are published by CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street, and may be obtained of every music-seller in the United Kingdom.—There is a re-issue of Alfred Tennyson's two popular songs, "Tears, idle Tears," and the conclusion of the "May Queen," both composed by Mr. Barnett.

NEW SONGS.

Freedom, Light and Love,	H. Hermanson,	2s.
Homes of Merry England,	E. Dearle,	2s.
Better late than Never	E. Land,	2s.
Fleur de Marie (second edition),	G. Barker,	2s. 6d.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Romance and Toccata,	B. Jewson,	3s.
Grand March, Drinn, Drinn,	E. J. Westrop,	2s.
Oak Leaf Polka,	A. C. Rowland,	2s.
Kentish Graces, Waltzes and Polka,	J. Blewitt,	3s.
Summer Flowers, Waltzes,	E. J. Westrop,	3s.
Autumn do., do.,	do.,	3s. 6d.

COMIC SONGS.

The Glorious Exhibition.	A. Park,	1s.
The Papal Aggression,	J. W. S.,	1s.

London: Z. T. Purday, 45, High Holborn.

BLUMENTHAL'S LAST PIANOFORTE WORKS, NOCTURNE IMPROMPTU

LES DEUX ANGES, MORCEAU CHARACTERISTIQUE	...	3s. 0d.
DEUX VALSES	...	2s. 6d.
LA PLAINTÉ, Ballade	...	3s. 0d.
L'EAU DORWANTE	...	3s. 0d.
THREE MAZURKAS, 3rd Set	...	3s. 0d.
NOCTURNE	...	2s. 6d.
SCENE DE BALLET	...	3s. 0d.
FETE COSAQUE, Caprice	...	3s. 6d.
THREE MELODIES	...	3s. 0d.
LA SOURCE, New Edition	...	3s. 6d.

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' "VESPER HYMN,"

ARRANGED as a Fantasia for the Pianoforte. The publisher has great pleasure in announcing a new Edition of this admired composition by Mr. BRINLEY RICHARDS, and to state that he has added to his Catalogue all the newest works of this popular writer.

"Under this modest title, Mr. Richards presents us with a fantasia of novel form, remarkable for originality of effect. An introduction in F, in which fragments of the melody are displayed in full harmony, alternated with brief allegro passages, capriccioso, leads to an episode, in which the idea of the bell that tolls for vespers is poetically indicated. The well-known tune is then led through a series of variations, or ricercate or changes, in all of which the traits de bravoure are different, and skillfully contrasted, while the keys of D flat and A flat are judiciously employed in some of them, to relieve the monotony that would otherwise arise from the constant adherence to the original tone. The variations are graceful and showy, increasing in brilliancy up to the climax, which involves a capital echantillon of the Thalbergian pattern. Mr. Richards has shown an extended acquaintance with the resources of the clavier in this morceau, and the utmost ingenuity in maintaining an easy variety of style during the continuous repetition of the melody over the space of eight pages. The only fault of "The Vesper Hymn" is its brevity."—Musical World.

Charles Olivier, 41, New Bond Street

LEE & COXHEAD'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

MUSIC for the ORGAN or HARMONIUM.

THE AMATEUR ORGANIST—a collection of soft and full Voluntaries, arranged in six Books, 3s. each, by EDWARD TRAVIS.
THE AMATEUR INTERLUDEST—a collection of short interludes to play between the Verses of the Psalms, in one Book, price 4s., by EDWARD TRAVIS and J. P. DYER.
THE AMATEUR PRELUDEST—a collection of Preludes, with the Organ Stops carefully marked, in one Book, price 4s., by EDWARD TRAVIS.

SACRED VOCAL MUSIC.

KELLER'S Collection of ANTHEMS, CHURCH SERVICES, CHANTS, &c., arranged for the Voice and Piano, in six Books, price 3s. each, with six beautiful and appropriate Designs by Brandard, arranged by ALFRED KELLER; the six Books can be had in one Volume, elegantly bound, price 18s.
THE PSALMODIA BRITANNICA—a selection of Psalms and Hymns for the Voice and Organ, in six Books, price 3s. each, arranged by EDWIN FLOOD, and may be had in one Volume, neatly bound, price 18s.
N.B.—A New Edition of "Hark, the Sabbath Bells," by EDWIN FLOOD. Price 2s.

MUSIC for the FLUTE.

THE AMATEUR FLUTIST—a selection of favorite Airs from the Standard Foreign Operas, arranged in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY NICHOLSON, with an Accompaniment ad lib. for the Violin, Violoncello, and Pianoforte.
THE FLUTIST'S ALBUM—a collection of favorite Quadrilles, Waltzes, Polkas, &c., arranged in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY NICHOLSON, with an Accompaniment ad lib. for the Piano, Violin, and Violoncello.

MUSIC for the VIOLIN.

THE AMATEUR VIOLINIST—A selection of favorite Airs from the Standard Foreign Operas, arranged expressly for the first position of the Violin, in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY FARMER, with an accompaniment ad lib. for the Piano, second Violin, and Violoncello.
THE VIOLINIST'S ALBUM—a collection of favorite Quadrilles, Waltzes, Polkas, &c., arranged expressly for the first position of the Violin, in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY FARMER, with an Accompaniment ad lib. for the Piano, second Violin, and Violoncello.
N.B.—A New Edition of "Farmer's Violin School." 5s.

A NEW PIANOFORTE SCHOOL, by ALBERT KELLER,

price 4s.
"We can confidently recommend this Pianoforte Tutor as the best extant: Mr. Keller has adopted the judicious method of arranging the scales and exercises amongst the lessons, by which plan the pupil is taught those essentials without turning to a formal book of scales, &c.,—the fingering is carefully marked without being crowded, and is evidently written by one who has had great experience as a teacher."
Also, "Delices de la Jeunesse," in 12 sets, price 2s. each, written expressly to follow the above Tutor, by C. W. Glover.

London: Lee and Coxhead, 48, Albermarle Street, and all Book and Music Sellers.
Catalogues gratis.

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

THALBERG	Irish Airs
STREICH	Les Hironnelles
J. HERZ	La Symplice
MÜLLER	Pragmat
MÜLLER	Anna Bolena
MÜLLER	Third Romance
BRISSON	L'Arabesque
TALEXY	Mazurka brilliant
ROECKEL	Clotilde
ROECKEL	Marche Romaine
RICHARDS	Danish Air

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street.

AGUILAR'S PIANOFORTE WORKS,

PUBLISHED BY WESSEL & CO.

NOCTURNEin F sharp major, Op. 3	2 6
ARITHUSE, Melodiein A, Op. 4	3 0
L'IMPATIENCE, Valse	Op. 5 3 6
THE DAHLIA POLKAS	Op. 6 4 0
LES PLAINTES DES ZEPHIRS, Morceau de Salon	Op. 7 4 0
DEUX MORCEAUX, No. 1. "Etude"	Op. 8 2 0
LA FETE VILLAGEOISE, Morceauin F, Op. 9	3 6
MARCHEin D, Op. 10	3 0
EUPHROSINE, Polka	Op. 11 2 0
CAPRICEin D flat, Op. 12	4 0

Wessel and Co., 229, Regent Street.

Printed and Published, for the Proprietors, by MICHAEL SAMUEL MYERS, of No. 3 Studley Villas S. 40, Clapham Road, in the parish of Lambeth, at the office of MYERS and Co., 22, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden, in the parish of St. Paul, where all communications for the Editor are to be addressed, post paid. To be had of G. Purke's, Dean Street, Soho; Allen, Warwick Lane; Vickers Holywell Street, and at all Booksellers.—Saturday, March 15, 1851.

The Musical World.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

Terms of Subscription, per Annum, 16s.; Half year, 8s.; Three Months, 4s.; payable in advance, to be forwarded by Money Order, to the Publishers, Messrs. Myers & Co., 22, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden.

No. 12.—VOL. XXVI.

SATURDAY, MARCH 22, 1851.

PRICE FOURPENCE.

REMOVAL.

MUSICAL WORLD OFFICE.

M. S. MYERS & Co.

BEG TO ANNOUNCE THAT THEY HAVE

REMOVED

FROM 37, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN,

TO No. 22, TAVISTOCK STREET,

THREE DOORS FROM SOUTHAMPTON STREET,

Where all Communications for the Musical World are requested to be sent.

M. S. MYERS & Co. take this opportunity of informing those Ladies and Gentlemen about to give Concerts that they execute every description of

PRINTING

ON VERY REASONABLE TERMS.

Programmes, Tickets, Posting Bills, &c., &c.,

PRINTED IN FIRST-RATE STYLE, AND ON THE SHORTEST NOTICE.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

THE prospectus has at length been issued, which sets all doubts at rest about the future. Covent Garden opens on the 29th, with much the same troupe as last year. The non-appearance of the customary programme gave rise to speculations, which, being effectually knocked on the head, no longer demand consideration. We just allude to them, in passing, lest folks might fancy we were unaware of their existence. So, pray, let there now be an end of the matter.

The Republic is defunct! The prospectus does not say so; but it is true nevertheless. We can vouch for it on the best authority—no thanks to the prospectus. Therefore let there be no more talk of Republics. Mr. Frederick Gye is the Republic, and may exclaim, after Louis XIV., "L'état, c'est moi!" The fact is, Mr. Gye has undertaken the sole responsibility of management in all its branches, theoretical and practical, with its risks of loss and chances of profit. And now let us see what sort of a programme he has to offer his subscribers.

The first consideration is, of course, the company, and notament the singers. The soprani look well, since under that head we find the superb Grisi, the artistic Viardot, and the graceful Castellan. The last is the real soprano, although she has delicious contralto tones in the lower register of her voice. Grisi is anything and everything—the birth-right of genius. Viardot is whatever you please—the prerogative of intellect. Both are hosts in themselves. A new name completes the list—Mdlle. Giuseppina Morra, of whom, knowing nothing, we are not prepared to venture an opinion.

Contralti.—Here, indeed, was the weak point last season. Mdlle. de Meric, as first and sole contralto (for Madame D'Okolski did not count) was really out of her element. Though clever and promising, the weight was too much for her shoulders. Every one will rejoice, then, to know that the fiery Angri has been re-engaged, although every one will be sorry not to find Mdlle de Meric in her ancient and proper place, as second contralto. A Mdlle. Vintale, however (another fresh importation), has been engaged instead, of whose claims to notice we are again in the dark. Two contralti are enough if the second be a good one, insufficient if the second be of inferior pretensions. But let us not anticipate. For aught we know, Mdlle. Vintale may be another Alboni.

The only seconda donna is Mdlle. Cotti. Every soprano, now-a-days, is put down as prima donna; but we can remember the day when such singers as Moltini, and more recently Corbari, came under the category of seconde donne. "Tempora mutantur et nos," &c.

The tenors are fronted by Mario and Tamberlik—two great and redoubtable generals, in whose science and prowess equal confidence may be placed. These are puissant names, and would alone give lustre to a lyrical theatre. Nor is the addition of Enrico Maralti, a very useful and intelligent singer, to be announced without a feeling of real gratification. The subordinates are Signors Luigo Mei and Soldi. Where is Lavia? The question is one, we think, which deserves an answer, and we shall probably put it again on another occasion.

From the barytones we miss Tamburini and Massol. We shall console ourselves in some measure for the loss of Tamburini, if, by reason of his absence, the best use be made of the great and varied powers of Ronconi, who now stands foremost in the catalogue. Great as is Ronconi's reputation, we can assure our readers that as yet he is but half known in England. It behoves the management, then, to make the best of this trump card. Massol is not replaced, and indeed could not well be replaced in his line. He has seceded, however, to the parent establishment, for reasons best known to himself, and which, if known to us, would probably be utterly indifferent to our readers. Rommi and Salvatore are the other barytones. We need not recapitulate the merits of Rommi, who, in his peculiar walk, is invaluable. A singer who is "up" in every conceivable part, and ready to play it at an instant's notice, may be styled "invaluable" without exaggeration; and such is Signor Rommi. Salvatore comes from Naples and Barcelona. In his day, both as an actor and a singer, he has enjoyed the highest renown, and ought long ago to have been heard in London.

The basses are seven. First and foremost appears the stalwart Formes, with his splendid voice and fine dramatic talent. Then we have the useful Tagliafico, "the King of Stone Statues;" next Polonini, the versatile and vivacious, the real Italian buffo; next, Gregorio, Ferrari, and Rache, whose merits take not long to recount; and, lastly, Bianchi (from Berlin), another late acquisition, of whose by-gones we are unfurnished with a history. Mr. Lumley has Bianchi, and Mr. Gye Bianchi. Which is the better remains to be seen. We trust it is not merely the difference between an I and an L. If number be synonymous with strength, the department of the basses may be considered formidably strong at the Royal Italian Opera.

Mr. Costa continues in his post as "director of the music, composer, and conductor," which is equivalent to an assurance that the band and chorus will be on the same efficient scale as heretofore.—Vivat Mr. Costa! Mr. Godfrey also comes again with his military band, and if hope may be translated into certainty, with a new clarinet (not in C), and an ophicleide that plays in tune.

Mr. Harris, the indefatigable, has seceded, for which the subscribers to the Royal Italian Opera will be sorry. He has crossed the market to Mr. Lumley, for which the subscribers to her Majesty's Theatre will be glad. We are both sorry and glad, since we attend both theatres, and wish well to each. N'importe. The earth will still go round the sun, and not vice versa, as the drowsy synod of Thurles would have it established, in the hope of getting rid of a certain vertigo common to bigots and enthusiasts of all denominations.

It is unnecessary to give a list of the thirty-three operas already furnished at all points, and fit for use at an instant's notice. Suffice it, the management projects giving all the most popular of them at least once, for the edification of the anticipated hundreds of anticipated thousands who are on their way to London at the present crisis. Moreover, eight novelties are posted, of which five will surely be given. First, there is Il Flauto Magico (which we have suggested many a time and oft); second, there is Fidelio (which we have suggested many a time and oft); third, Euryanthe (which we have, &c. &c.), fourth, Faust (which, &c.); fifth, Les Martyrs of Donizetti (which we have never suggested); sixth, La Vestale, by Spontini, (which we have never suggested) for neither of these are we egregiously predisposed, although we shall sit them out, if they be brought forward, with sufficiently placid composure. Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, and Spohr, however, will, we trust, be accorded the first place; after them, should there be room, Donizetti and Spontini may be allowed to walk in, without detriment to any one. Seventh, we are promised L'Enfant Prodigue; and eighth, Sappho, both of which new works are, it appears, the sole property of the theatre. Auber's delightful opera, which enchanted us at Paris, will not be likely to disenchant us in London. Of M. Gounod's Sappho we would rather be silent. Our hopes are not bright in its behalf (as our readers may well understand by referring to No. 3 of the present volume of the Musical World), and we object to act the part of ravens, croaking unlucky prophecies. M. Gounod has been taken by the hand by Madame Viardot, and if that does not make his fortune it is not Madame Viardot's fault, but M. Gounod's. We sincerely trust that the chance may set him up, and shall watch the result with interest.

The ballet will be, as before, purely incidental to the grand operas of the French school. Mdlle. Taglioni and M. Alexandre are re-engaged as principal dancers. We do not wish for anything better than the lady in her particular walk, while M. Fuschs is decidedly progressing. Messrs. Grieve and Telbin continue at the head of the scenic department.

The subscription will comprise forty-six nights. It is not settled with what Opera the theatre will open. Of course there will be no time to get up a novelty, which is a pity, after the brilliant results of the two preceding years with Masaniello and Der Freischutz.

So far the arrangements of Mr. Gye are likely to give satisfaction to the subscribers and the public generally, and a prosperous season may be reasonably anticipated for the Royal Italian Opera. If it is only to hear Mr. Costa's orchestra (to say nothing of Grisi, Viardot, Castellan, Mario, Tamberlik, Formes, and Ronconi—and to say nothing of the Prophete and the Enfant Prodigue)—surely every stranger who comes to London for the great Exhibition of all Nations will at least go once to Covent-garden—and this will be enough of itself to set the establishment "a-going."

A NATIONAL OPERA.

(Concluded from our last.)

IN concluding our remarks, which have reached a greater length than we intended, although much has been left unsaid, we would observe that it is unnecessary and unadvisable to enter into any details, or to propose any definite plan for re-establishing English Opera. This part of the question must be left to the consideration of those who take the matter in hand. Its discussion here might give rise to an unprofitable controversy. We would, however, again urge the futility of making any attempt, unless on a scale sufficiently grand to justify the hope that Her Majesty may not only grant her patronage to the undertaking, but honor the performances with her presence. Render the entertainment worthy such distinction, make it something above mediocrity, and enable the press—whose influence and good opinion can hardly be over-estimated—to afford it a liberal and conscientious support. It is difficult to resist the temptation of sacrificing prospective benefit for present gain, and a very homely proverb is often quoted in extenuation; but if managers and artists would reflect a moment, they would find that the course we recommend is the wisest and the best, since it adds stability to the enterprise. A permanent income is surely preferable to short-lived prosperity, succeeded by the dismal prospect of empty houses and a bankrupt treasury. Mediocrity may flourish while it enjoys the charm of novelty, but higher pretensions can alone stand the test of time. It is better, therefore, if the scheme cannot be undertaken on a proper scale of magnitude, to "wait a little longer," until better times arrive; although the present crisis offers a favourable opportunity, if the musical profession knew how to profit by it. The character of English Opera should be raised, as nearly as possible, to a level with those foreign establishments, which it could never yet pretend to rival—or rather equal, since rivalry cannot properly be said to exist between a National Theatre and an Italian Opera.

To avoid even the appearance of competition, the theatres should not be open on the same night. There is evidently room for all. Will those foreigners, who accumulate fortunes in England, begrudge their English patrons and supporters a National Opera in their own capital? We believe them incapable of any such selfishness. But a greater difficulty than the opposition of foreigners is foreshadowed in the probable cabals of the professional cliques and coteries.

In such a scheme as we advocate, the only hope of success lies in the active co-operation of all who possess either influence or talent in the profession. Some will reply, that their interests must necessarily clash with such an undertaking; but this absolute fallacy should not be allowed to stand in the way of its accomplishment. Managers may hope to gain more by exclusive speculation, or foreign talent, and therefore will be opposed to any effort to assist native artists. But such a state of things is highly pernicious, and the sooner it is altered the better. A fair field and no favour is all that is required. The reign of protection, it is true, has been crushed by the voice of the nation; but is this a reason why a few foreign artists should enjoy a monopoly in this country, to the detriment of native professors as a body? No: there must be a fair field for all; and such would be the case, if English artistes were true to themselves and their cause; but while egotism is the source of their actions, and every member of the profession says, "La profession c'est moi!" so long will a few individuals, of greater worldly knowledge than the rest, continue to keep the market in their own hands, to the exclusion of the others. If these declined to assist us—English Opera not being established for the advantage of any particular half-dozen individuals—it would be necessary to call in the aid of foreign talent, to give that support to English composers, on an English stage, which those, whose first duty it should be to offer it, are pleased to withhold.

To conclude, let us repeat, that the principal cause of the past failures of English Opera has been mis-management of the resources at hand. Great talents have appeared in each branch of the art, and the public has not failed to approve of them; but the ensemble has never yet even attained respectability, in comparison with those establishments abroad which are devoted to a similar object.

FAREWELL TO MACREADY.

(By ALFRED TENNYSON.)

Farewell, Macready! since to-night we part.
Full-handed thunders often have confest
Thy power, well used to move the public breast.
We thank thee with one voice, and from the heart.
Farewell, Macready! since this night we part.
Go, take thine honours home; rank with the best—
Garrick, and statelier Kemble, and the rest
Who made a nation purer through their art.
Thine is it that our Drama did not die,
Nor flicker down to brainless Pantomime,
And those gilt gauds men-children swarm to see.
Farewell, Macready! moral, grave, sublime.
Our Shakspeare's bland and universal eye
Dwells pleased, through twice a hundred years, on thee.

Our Scrap Book.

In an account of the civil list of Ireland, for the year 1831 printed by order of the House of Commons, is the subjoined statement of the musicians in the establishment, and their salaries:—

	£	s.	d.
Master and Composer of Music,	88	1	0
Deputy,	88	1	0
Attendant on Balls,	91	16	4
Kettle Drummer,	61	16	4
5 Trumpets, each £17. 7s.,	86	15	0
7 Violins,	121	9	9
2 Tenors,	34	14	0
2 Hautboys,	34	14	0
2 French Horns,	34	14	0
4 Bass Viola,	69	8	0
Dulcimer,	8	9	8

In Ireland, the deputy receives as much as his principal, and the drummer nearly as much as the composer!

JOHNSON A BEAU.—The apartments of Dr. Johnson in the Temple were on the first floor in No. 1, Inner Temple-lane, and are associated with more than one anecdote related by his biographer, Boswell. Not the least amusing is the account of the visit which was paid him by the well known belle-esprit, Madame de Boufflers, in 1763, as related by Topham Beauclerk to Boswell. "When Madame de Boufflers was first in England," said Beauclerk, "she was desirous to see Johnson. I accordingly went with her to his chambers in the Temple, when she was entertained with his conversation for some time. When our visit was over, she and I left him, and were got into the Inner Temple-lane, when all at once I heard a noise like thunder. This was occasioned by Johnson, who, it seems, upon a little recollection, had taken it into his head that he ought to have done the honors of his literary residence to a foreign lady of quality, and eager to show himself a man of gallantry, was hurrying down the staircase in violent agitation. He overtook us before we reached the Temple-gate, and brushing in between me and Madame de Boufflers, seized her hand and conducted her to her coach.— London and its Celebrities.

By the way,

Have you observ'd that there's a sort of talk
In music; something that appears to mean
More than we give its lovely tongue the credit of,— Positive argument, and chains of reasoning?

Louise. Often. De Torcy used to love an air
I played on the spinnet, that seemed to question,
Answer, and question, and so run the round
Of some sweet logic; every link of it
Being so drawn from, so deduc'd, from t'other,
That at the close you felt as much convinc'd
Of some fine truth, although you knew not what,
As though an angel had been talking it.

From Lovers' Amazements; a Drama, by Leigh Hunt.

THE HAYMARKET THEATRE IN 1749.—The following advertisement appeared in the newspapers of the day:—"At the New Theatre in the Haymarket, on Monday next, the 16th inst. (January), to be seen a person who performs the several most surprising things following—viz. First he takes a common walking-stick from any of the spectators, and thereon plays the music of every instrument now in use, and likewise sings to surprising perfection. Secondly, he presents you with a common wine-bottle, which any of the spectators may first examine: this bottle is placed on a table in the middle of the stage, and he (without any equivocation) goes into it in sight of all the spectators, and sings in it: during his stay in the bottle, any person may handle it, and see plainly that it does not exceed a common tavern bottle. Those on the stage, or in the boxes, may come in masked habits (if agreeable to them), and the performer (if desired) will inform them who they are. Stage, 7s. 6d.; Pit, 3s.; Gallery, 2s. To begin half an hour after 6 o'clock. Tickets to be had at the Theatre. The Performances continue about two hours and a half. N.B.—If any gentlemen or ladies, after the above performances either singly or in company, in or out of masks, are desirous of seeing the representation of any deceased person, such as husband or wife, sister or brother, or any intimate friend of either sex (upon making a gratuity to the performer) shall be gratified by seeing and conversing with them for some minutes as if alive. Likewise (if desired) he will tell your most secret thoughts in your past life, and give you a full view of persons who have injured you, whether dead or alive. For those gentlemen or ladies who are desirous of seeing this last part, there is a private room provided. These performances have been seen by most of the crowned heads of Asia and Europe, and never appeared public anywhere but once; he will wait on any at their houses, and perform as above, for five pounds each time. There will be a proper guard to keep the house in due decorum." Although it might be supposed morally impossible that mankind could be so egregiously imposed on, yet the scheme took, and on the evening of the exhibition, the house was crowded with nobility and gentry of both sexes. About seven o'clock the theatre was lighted, and the audience sat a considerable time without even the amusement of a single fiddle. Their patience being at length worn out, a chorus of cat-calls ensued, heightened by loud vociferations and beating of sticks; when a fellow came from behind the curtain, and, bowing, said, that if the performer did not appear, the money should be returned. At the same time some person in the pit called out, that if the ladies and gentlemen would give him double prices, the conjuror would get into a pint bottle. Soon after this a young gentleman in one of the boxes took a lighted candle and threw it on the stage, which alarming the greater part of the audience, they made the best of their way out of the theatre, some losing their cloaks and hats, and others their wigs and swords. A party, however, staid in the house to demolish the inside, when, the mob breaking in, they tore up the benches, broke the scenes, pulled down the boxes, and entirely demolished the theatre; all which they carried into the street, preceded by the curtain fastened to a pole as a flag of triumph, and converting the same into a large bonfire. A strong party of the guards was sent for, but they did not arrive in time enough to prevent the resentment of the enraged populace. No material damage ensued from the confusion in the house, except a young nobleman's chin being hurt, occasioned by his falling from the gallery into the pit.—Harrison's Survey of London, 1775.

BUT would you say in Woman's gentle ear,
How charms divine as hers to man are dear?
Yes! would you speak that sentiment refined,
That tender homage of the love-taught mind?
Then let the power of music's voice appeal,
And the fond fervour of the soul reveal
For, in its plaintive soul there works a charm,
Which can the storm of angry passion calm,
Which in impassion'd eloquence can speak,
When the best accents of the tongue are weak,
Can bid the coldness of contempt depart,
And touch the secret springs of Woman's heart

DRURY LANE.—A new drama by Dion Bourcicault, called The Queen of Spades, is in rehearsal, and will be shortly produced.

MR. G. A. OSBORNE, the well known pianist and composer, is seriously indisposed.

M. ALEXANDRE BILLET'S CONCERTS.—We were prevented, from lack of space, from noticing the third and last of these concerts, which was as good as either of the others. Clementi's Sonata in B minor (Op. 40) is one of those pieces which M. Billet plays with the most fire, and was as effective as on a former occasion. The Preludes and Fugues were from Bach and Mendelssohn; Bach in F, and Mendelssohn in E minor—splendid specimens of the masters, and both admirably executed. It is unnecessary to add anything to what we have already, on more than one occasion, adduced of M. Billet's manner of playing the grand Sonata, in B flat, Op. 106 of Beethoven, by many degrees the most difficult piece of music ever written for the pianoforte. This is the third time M. Billet has introduced this extraordinary and original work in public, and it is due to our English audiences—so unmusical, if we are to believe French literary and musical authorities—to say that, on each occasion, they have paid the strictest attention to the Sonata, notwithstanding its enormous length, and never evinced the slightest sign of weariness or flagging interest during its performance. We cannot repeat too often, that had M. Billet done nothing more than introduced this great and comparatively unknown work—the very type of Beethoven's latter self—to the acquaintance, and, what is more, to the sympathies, of his audiences, he would have done sufficient to entitle him to the unanimous respect of musicians. Mendelssohn's Andante con Variazione (Op. 83), in B flat (No. 11 of the Posthumous Works), is already, a few weeks after its publication, like its fellow in E flat, the delight of pianists, who introduce it in public and private with equal success. We are glad of this, not merely as showing the universal interest of members of the profession in all that remains of Mendelssohn, but because we think the more such music, in the shape of original airs with variations becomes spread, the more probable will be the speedy downfall of a bad school too long in the ascendant. M. Billet was as successful with this charming piece as with its companion in E flat, at a previous concert; while, in the passionate rondo of Mozart, in A minor, he showed himself possessed of quite as much expressive sentiment as, in the selection of studies from Hummel, Macfarren, Hiller, Henselt, and Thalberg, he developed brilliant and energetic execution. We are glad to find, by our advertisement, that M. Billet intends giving a second series of these Concerts, at St. Martin's Hall.

Original Correspondence.

"THE FLUTE CONTROVERSY."

(To the Editor of the Musical World.)

SIR,—I propose in this letter to enter a little into a critical review of the subjects I have already addressed you, relating to the Flute. I will do so in the spirit I have all along adopted, and which I truly feel, viz.: a wish to state no more than what is compatible with justice and truth, but just so much as will answer the purpose in view.

In my last letter I quoted the substance of two passages from pamphlets by Messrs. Clinton and Carte, without comment, beyond the singularity of the contradiction there was between them. It is but fair now to state that Mr. Clinton published his book about three months, I think, before Mr. Carte's made its appearance. In that book he stated that Mr. Boehm had offered him the purchase of his metal cylindrical Flute, but owing to his strong objection to its material, and its complicated mechanism, he declined its purchase. This, by the way, is the Flute now offered for sale by the firm of Rudall, Rose, and Carte. He stated its tone to be harsh, shrill, unvoiced, and owing to the liability of the note breaking with any sudden effort, as in a sforzando (an evil which is inherent in the cylinder), "a constrained and painful exertion of the breath was occasioned, which made it injurious to weak lungs." There is both sense and reason here; how the contradiction was made by Mr. Carte, who, for some reason I can hardly understand, takes occasion to meet this assertion without disproving it, by saying, apparently without design, that the metal Flute is in tone sweet and resonant, and "so easily played on, that the most delicate person may use it." An assumption this, which we find no argument to prove, we will pass over without further comment, and go on to speak of the tone of each as we find them—I mean, test of metal against wood. Let us, by way of illustration, have a trumpet or horn constructed of wood, and see if that quality of sound the composer intended shall be produced from either; that shrill piercing sound peculiar to metal, indicating certain effects in music, will be entirely lost, and a soft reedy volume of tone will be produced instead; so, conversely, we may say, that peculiar reedy and mellow sound intended by a composer in his flute score will be altogether lost in one constructed of metal. The same remark will apply to clarinet or oboe, which all have an affinity in quality of sound: that assimilation to the human voice the Flute has above all instruments, is entirely lost when the metallic sound is predominant—I shall not stop to prove this—any one with an ear can satisfy himself by once hearing the two. Another subject of still higher importance demands attention, viz.:—the relative advantages of the open and shut-keyed systems. It will be enough here to say that the old flute was constructed on the shut-keyed, and the Boehm on the open-keyed system. The old flute was miserably out of tune, and its tone bad and confined, owing to the smallness of its apertures. Nicholson enlarged his holes to make the tone come out more freely—he partially succeeded—Boehm, to make it come out still more freely, had all his keys open, all of which it was necessary to close by the action of the fingers above the note sounded; thus rendering all the instrument open below that note, or much as if that portion was cut off. But he exceeded his purpose. In trying to effect good he effected too much. The low notes were difficult, weak, and uncertain, owing to the enormous amount of key stopping, and the upper octave sharp and bad, owing to the number of holes open. His failure is too palpably seen by its having been now discarded by all professors, and the thousands of pounds invested in its purchase by amateurs have been sunk to no purpose. What was required, was to construct a flute without smothered or veiled sounds and in good tune. Boehm, it will be seen, by giving his flute too much opening, caused defects which did not exist in the old flute. Mr. Clinton was the first, seeing their defects, to revert to the old shut-keyed system, and as yet he stands alone in having done so. He altered the position of his holes to their true places, as Boehm had done, chambered his bore to a greater extent, and by adding an extra hole for C 7—quite a new idea—he attained that note in perfect tune; extra keys for A 7 and E 7, rendered those notes in tune. Now by enlarging his holes and bore to a due proportion, he obtained all the results Boehm was aiming at, without their defects, viz.:—a freedom of tone, and, by the proper placing of his holes, a correct intonation. Mr. Siccama's flute I have not mentioned here, for it so far antedates these late improvements, that it ranks as a "genus per se." Its defects lie chiefly in that obstacle, C 7; its upper octave is bad, and its C sharp, all holes open; but Mr. Richardson's admirable playing on it so completely veils these defects, that they who use it must judge for themselves and overcome them as well as he does.

One word in conclusion about Mr. Carte's New Patent Flute, and I have done. Mr. Carte acknowledges the defects of Boehm's Flute, and sets about constructing one, nevertheless, on the same principle—the gist of his objections to it refer almost wholly to the cramp execution it affords—and so to obtain a perfect flute, he endeavours to effect this end, by removing the action of two keys from the thumb and little finger of one hand, to the first and second fingers of both hands, in some cases still employing the first and old method, and thus increasing the complication of fingerings. The form of the cylinder, against which I could name serious objections, is retained. I had heard a year ago of a new design for the flute by Mr. Carte being in progress: I little dreamt it would have resulted in this "opus Exiguum." The notion is preposterous that a system so radically defective as Boehm's should be made practicable and good simply by the removal of the action of two keys.

I am really sorry to find so talented an artist should stake his reputation and his money on so small a work: so long as the open-keyed system is worked upon, so must its defects, which are radical, remain,—the number of keys to be shut in descending to the lower part of the instrument, its complicated mechanism, its enormous price and uncertain intonation, cannot hopefully or effectually be remedied, and I can only add, quoting the words of the talented professor named above, whose post is in the Academy of Music, "that any attempt to improve the open-keyed system must end in disappointment and failure."

I may express a hope, earnestly wishing, as I do, the union of conflicting parties, that whatever be the system ultimately adopted, neither parties may be losers in the struggle, that the art may again revive from its present depressed state, and that the end of these differences may be the production of one uniform instrument, which shall reflect lustre upon the talent of our country, and crown the exertions of those who have toiled in its cause.

I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,

8th March, 1851.

MARSHALL.

COSTUME AND MISE EN SCENE.

(To the Editor of the Musical World.)

Dear Mr. Editor,—They tell me I am a bold man; I think I may add an adventurous one. I have essayed the Haymarket Theatre four times since the advent of the new tragedian. Why? Simply actuated by a sincere and really disinterested intention of ascertaining the character of the youthful aspirant's histrionic pretensions. Of these, for the present, and for the purpose of this communication, I do not desire to speak. Doubtless, they have been, and will be, treated by more accomplished hands in the ample resources of your able journal. What I want to call attention to is this—Who dresses Macbeth? I mean the piece. Is it fair to require me to recognise Banquo in a horse blanket or a railway rug? Is it fair to set my mind astray on the subject of whether the newest Newmarket pattern has been strictly adhered to in clothing the aforesaid gentleman's assassins? Is it fair, when Macbeth himself calls upon the Weird Sisters, to compel me to ask him, "What is't you do?" when I see him similarly attired, literally, in a comfortable-looking railway wrapper. I think not; but in return would demand, Which of ye hath done this? I may be wrong, but I like not the fashion of their garments.

One word more. How comes it that one performer (Mr. Caulfield) is suffered at the Haymarket!—the "last home for the legitimate"—to appear in three different parts in the tragedy?—"the bleeding serjeant!" as the bill says—a leading singing witch—and an English general?

Mr. Editor, this wont do.

DRAMATICUS.

WORDS FOR MUSIC.

THE DEBUTANTE.

When, as the trusting girl you're seen,
And tears from every eyelid fall,
When you appear as love's own queen,
This will not be to act at all.
But have you skill that you could play
A perjured maiden's guilty part—
Could you her faithfulness pourtray,
And still preserve your own pure heart?

You'll speak of love you do not feel
In that new life which now you seek,
While here you tremble to reveal
A love you feel, yet dare not speak.
But blush not stranger words to say,
Confess my own you'll always be;
And only acting in the play,
Keep all your native truth for me.

SUTHERLAND EDWARDS.

Foreign.

PARIS.—(Extract from a private letter.)—Paris, 12th March. —At the Theatre des Italiens, last night, Mr. Lumley achieved another success. I refer to the debut of Madame Montenegro, which, from the favourable notices of your foreign and provincial correspondents, I awaited with curiosity. Norma was the opera selected for the occasion; and fame having preceded this lady's appearance, from Milan and Madrid, every seat was occupied at an early hour. Madame Montenegro is of Spanish extraction. With a figure tall and commanding, she has an unmistakeable air of distinction, which at once prepossesses in her favour. In the first act there was nothing particularly striking, excepting "Casta Diva," which she sang with taste and feeling; but in the second, in the scene with Pollio, her dramatic talent was favourably demonstrated. The audience were taken by surprise. They were evidently not prepared for the dramatic capabilities of Madame Montenegro, whatever they might have expected from her as a vocalist. Her duet with Adalgisa (with Madame Guiliani) was the signal for a burst of enthusiastic applause, which was renewed with vigour and good will at the finish of the prayer in the last act, after which Madame Montenegro was recalled. Gardoni, who never sang better, seemed in excellent health, his voice having gained considerably in strength since last season. Casanova, whom I remember in Italy, has a voice of power and volume, and uses it with judgment. Altogether, the success of Madame Montenegro was complete, and may possibly lead to the addition of her name to the already brilliant prospectus of "Her Majesty's Theatre."

PARIS.—The success of Sims Reeves at the Italiens has been as decided as the most sanguine of his countrymen could have possibly desired. The opera was Linda, in the choice of which Mr. Reeves proved that he did not wish to empty all his resources before his new public. He was received in the most generous manner—that is, he was received without any demonstration of enthusiasm, but, after a few bars of his opening recitative, the house literally rang with the applause, which was continued vociferously at the end of the aria d'intrata; and again and again, in the duet with Linda (which Madame Sontag sang with even more than her usual perfection, as if desirous of paying honour to her English comrade, who has shared so many of her own triumphs in London), and à maintes reprises, during the progress of the opera. The opinion of the foyer about the physical and artistic qualities of Sims Reeves was unusually unanimous. "Quelle belle voix," "Quelle manière large de phraser," "C'est le vrai type du tenor," were echoed from one to the other. In short there was not a dissentient voice, but the verdict was undividedly in favour of the young English tenor, or "Le Bel Anglais," as the ladies called him when out of hearing of Mrs. Sims Reeves. The next part in which Sims Reeves will appear is, I believe, Gennaro, in Lucrezia Borgia.

Alary's new opera is in rehearsal.

The Demon de la Nuit, by Rosenhain, has been produced at the Grand Opera with success. The second act was much admired. I shall write you more at length next week.

NEW ORLEANS.—Jenny Lind is to give her first concert at St. Charles' Theatre, on the 10th of Feb.

PHILADELPHIA.—Madame Bishop has appeared at the Walnut-street,

NEW YORK.—Parodi, who daily grows in public favour, intends to pay a visit to Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Richmond, Charleston, Havannah, and New Orleans. Strakosch, the pianist, will accompany her on this tour.

Herr Krauz has been giving concerts at Tripler Hall.

George Loder, the conductor, has had a complimentary concert given to him by the profession.

The Mendelssohn Birth-day Festival took place, on Monday evening, in the Melodeon, which was well filled. The principal features were the quintet, in A op. 18, the violin concerto, a vocal duet, and the quartet in F minor, for piano, &c. The concerto was heard for the first time in Boston, and was, we think, the richest thing in the programme. Mr. A. Fries, if he did not come up to the full requirement of this difficult and highly intellectual composition, nevertheless displayed a command of his instrument which quite surprised us. The duet, a very lovely composition, was beautifully sung by Miss Stone and Mr. Ball. Mr. Kriesmann showed his national appreciation of the music of the great master in his rendering the songs allotted to him. Mr. Perkins played the piano part in the quartet with ease and grace, though with hardly sufficient point and energy. Mr. Parker, another young Bostonian, performed a sonata on the organ, which being so novel an affair, was not sufficiently appreciated by the audience at large, though its beauties, both of composition and performance, were apparent to the connoisseur. Appropos of Festivals, why cannot there be got up a Haydn or a Mozart Festival? We opine a programme might be made from the works of either of these great composers (to say nothing of Beethoven) which would well repay the undertaking.

A congress of the musical profession and the supporters thereof is proposed to be held in London during the World's Fair, thus bringing together composers, performers, instrument makers, and amateurs. The latest rumour would absent Jenny Lind from this mass meeting, and solace the residents of New York with one dollar concerts at Castle Garden after the engagement with Barnum is fulfilled. Salvi, the well known tenor, is stated on like authority to be engaged by Barnum as Miss Lind's assistant in future concerts—the first to be given at New York in April,—his engagement with Don Marti expiring in March. The Barnum concerts at Havana were, as we expected, comparative failures; the first producing 5,000 dollars, and the other two 2,700 dollars each. At the fourth or charity concert less aversion was displayed to high prices, and the best seats left unoccupied at previous concerts had a cash demand. No other result could rationally have been anticipated in a city favoured with a fully appointed Italian Opera, and Miss Lind's experience in London might have counselled her and Mr. Barnum to less exorbitant demands upon a merely concert audience.

The result at Havana may induce a trial of the spell which enchanted London, ere Miss Lind returns to Europe. It may be that she will open the Mammoth Opera House, contemplated in Styvesant Place, under the direction of Mr. Fry, the first lessee of Astor Place.

The future management of New York's present Opera House is yet undecided. Parodi's brother is said to be in treaty for it, with intent, no doubt, to act in her behalf. She is said to have convinced the New York critics, by her impersonation of Romeo, that she is more fitting for a man's part than a woman's delicate and gentle calling. In the challenge duet with Tybalt she electrified Japonica-dom by fierce and blood-thirsty denunciations and the martial bearing assumed. From this description of her movements Miss Cushman's Romeo becomes, in comparison, a very feminine masculine.

New York writers are enraptured by Parodi in that character, or pretend to be, and consign Madame Bishop's graceful yet natural personation of Tancredi and Othello to mere oblivion, as unworthy a comparison after beholding "the magnificent and impatient" Teresa Parodi with a long sword and martial gear. Miss Whiting's Juliet is faintly recommended, as well for a tyro.

HAVANNA.—It seems that our efforts in favour of low prices have not been altogether without effect, though the thing comes rather late. Barnum has this day, in a certain indirect way, announced a considerable abatement. Well done, Mr. Barnum! All you drop deserves our praise. But would it not have been better to have done it frankly and openly, in true Spanish style.

After having conceded to the celebrated Miss Lind the praise which her lyric talents justly entitle her to, we may be permitted to remark, that the audience last evening was so large that the sale of tickets for the upper seats was obliged to be stopped. This circumstance gives us to understand two things, to which we desire to call the attention of Mr. Barnum, as the agent of the Swedish prodigy, who is the object of public attention. First, apart from the indisputable lyric merits of Miss Lind, many of the frequenters of the boxes have preferred, on the nights of the opera, to go to the common pit, or even to the commonest places at the concerts. Is it because they could hear better there? or because the temperature is better? or that it is more comfortable? We think not. The fact is, that if those who are accustomed to occupy the boxes abandon them for a different locality, it proves that Barnum, the agent, has failed in his object in obtaining the high prices he set upon the seats, and has caused the people to be less pleased with the Swedish Nightingale than they otherwise would have been, by his thus driving them, through excessive high prices, to the upper galleries, and other places. Secondly, in the hard alternative either to pay the high prices fixed by Barnum, or to lose altogether the chance of hearing Jenny Lind, would not Mr. Barnum find it more profitable to reduce his prices to a more just and moderate medium? A negative answer is given to this—saying that a lower price would discredit the sale, and that the Tacon Theatre would not pay expenses at ordinary prices, as a thousand dollars a night are paid for the theatre, besides another thousand for Miss Lind, and another thousand for her suite and attendants.

But without entering into minute calculations and without discussing the advantage or disadvantage which might result from the application of the fable of the goose which laid golden eggs, it seems to us at first blush, that if Mr. Barnum had contented himself with the opera prices of the Tacon Theatre—which are quite high enough already—he would have made more money by obtaining greater crowds, while he would, at the same time, have given to greater numbers of the Havanna public the pleasure of admiring the rich artistic gifts of Miss Lind.—Diario.

Boston, Feb. 25, 1851.—Last evening we attended the Opera, for the purpose of hearing Romeo and Juliet. The great reputation of Parodi, and the curiosity to hear and see Miss Whiting in Opera, had drawn together a very large audience, who were more enthusiastic than on any previous occasion. Miss Whiting was warmly received, and gave satisfaction to the audience, and promise of future excellence. Parodi's performance was all that could be wished, but she exerted herself so much in order to give effect to the music, that in the scene in the cemetery, she fainted, and was obliged to be carried off the stage. The season with Parodi will conclude on Friday evening, and on Saturday she will give a concert at Assembly Hall, assisted by the Italian Opera company, Strakosch, Hauser, and others. The meanness of the Musical Education Society (who give a concert also on Saturday evening), in engaging both the Tremont Temple and Melodeon, in order to prevent Parodi from giving a concert, has obliged her to take the above hall, which, although it has never been used for a musical entertainment, is the best in Boston. The fifth concert of the Musical Fund Society was given on Saturday evening, at the Tremont Temple, to an audience of about 2000 persons. This Society has long felt the need of a competent director. We have seen Mr. Webb direct a chorus of voices with effect; but when he stands before the Musical Fund, a society containing musicians his superiors, he is out of place. The performances commenced with Haydn's 3rd Symphony (Surprise). Next, followed Mendelssohn's concerto, op. 64, for the violin, played by Mr. A. Fries. This is a grand, noble work, written in the composer's happiest vein. We were somewhat surprised when we saw that Mr. Fries announced to play it, since it requires somewhat more than mechanical execution. The Jubel Overture of Weber was encored, and (it being the anniversary of Washington's birth-day), the American flag was raised from behind the orchestra, and Hail Columbia, and Washington's March substituted in its place; this of course created some enthusiasm amongst our patriotic audience. The society was assisted by Miss Anna Stone, who sang "Gratias Agimus," of Guglielmi, which was encored; she also gave a canzonet of Haydn (the "Mermaid," in a pleasing manner. A solo on the vabre trombone, by Signor Rebechini, was below mediocrity. The "Wedding March" from A Midsummer Night's Dream, by Mendelssohn, was well performed, though with not quite enough spirit. The concert concluded with Reissiger's Overture, "Felsemule."

BALTIMORE.—(March 1.) Mad. Bishop, and Mr. Bochsa are giving concerts here, in the new Assembly Room, with decided success. The Germania Subscription Concerts are going on at Carroll Hall. A festival for the Washington Monument has been given by the Germania, Liederferrauss, and Turner Oungvory Societies. Mdle. Parodi is expected with great anxiety.

ROME.—The operatic season here closed last Tuesday, the 4th of March, with the opera of Maria de Rohan, in which Miss Catherine Hayes appeared for twelve successive nights. Nothing could possibly exceed the sensation her singing and acting created. The enthusiasm of the audiences, whose delight knew no bounds, was manifested after a fashion that must have reminded your fair countrywoman of her glorious reception in her native city. The cavatina and duet from the Linda also created great excitement. The last performance on Shrove Tuesday, took place, as is the custom here in the morning, commencing at 10 o'clock, to allow time for preparations for the ball, as all the amusements of the Carnival invariably terminate before 12 o'clock, in order that Lent should not be infringed on. You will be pleased to hear that the most distinguished individuals among the proudest of aristocracies have paid Catherine Hayes marked attention. No dancing is permitted in Rome during Lent, but the musical parties commenced last evening. Miss Hayes had the honor of being invited to one given by the Princess Borghese, by whom she was introduced to the most distinguished of the noble ladies present. She has also been honoured with the diploma of "Sona della Pontificia Congregazione ed Accademia di Santa Cecilia," one of the oldest and most respectable musical societies in Italy, the last name enrolled in which is that of Madame Malibran. Miss Hayes purposes to leave Rome in a fortnight, and expects to be in London by the 10th of April. She intends to remain in London for the entire season, as she does not sail for America until autumn. She has had no less than ten offers to remain in Italy!

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

Mr. Lumley commences his season to-night with ever yprospect of a brilliant success. Curiosity is on tip-toe about Mademoiselle Caroline Duprez, whose reception in Paris has been unequivocal. Mademoiselle Duprez is eighteen years of age, singularly prepossessing in appearance, and possesses many of the highest requisites for the lyric stage. That she has been thoroughly grounded in her art may be gathered from the fact, that she owes all her acquirements to the instructions of her father. The choice of Lucia di Lammermoor for her first appearance is happy. The youth and gentleness of Lucy are suited to the young debutante, while the brilliancy of the music will serve to exhibit her capabilities as a vocalist to the best advantage. At the first rehearsal on Wednesday, Madlle. Duprez created a highly favourable impression, and was loudly applauded by all present. Her voice was unanimously admired, and her singing praised for its purity and grace. In short, we may look forward to the debut of Madlle. Duprez without any apprehensions as to the result.

Signor Calzolari appears to have made great progress since last year. The management of his head notes betokens improvement, and the quality of his voice has become rounder and more equal.

Mr. Balfe has been working zealously with his band, and we think has effected several striking improvements.

On Thursday evening M. Taglioni's new ballet, L'Ile d'Amour, was rehearsed with costumes and scenery. Amalia Ferraris was received with the greatest favour, and danced her very best. M. Charles is as light and buoyant as ever. The ballet is one of those piquant bluettes, which none can compose more gracefully than M. Taglioni, whilst the pencil of Marshall is more brilliant than ever. The music is by Nadaud, the director of the ballet orchestra. There is a fugue in it.

Dramatic Intelligence.

DRURY LANE.—A piece of very slight pretensions as regards the construction, but smartly and pointedly written, entitled The Morning Call, by Mr. Charles Dance, was produced on Monday with entire success. Mrs. Chillingtone (Mrs. Nisbett) is a widow who has, or fancies she has, a strong objection to reimpose upon herself the connubial bonds. Sir Edward Ardent (Mr. James Anderson), on the contrary, has a violent disposition to submit himself to the "circumscription and confine" of Dan Hymen. Out of these two conflicting elements there is derived manifest and multiple merriment. The baronet follows the love chase with a determination and an enthusiasm worthy the most energetic fox-hunter, and in the end runs his game to earth, alias his arms, and the widow yields to love and perseverance. The acting of Mrs. Nisbett was inimitably arch and captivating, and Mr. Anderson was excellent in his delineation of the warm and irrefusable baronet. A French piece, by Alfred de Musset, called Il faut qu'une porte soit ouverte ou fermée, has furnished Mr. Dance with the idea of The Morning Call.

OLYMPIC.—Charles King is the name of a new petite drama produced at this house. The plot is taken from an anecdote related of Charles the Second, in which a petition in verse was presented by one Charles King to King Charles. In consequence of the mistake of names, sundry contretemps are evolved, and much intricacy and mirth the consequence. Besides Charles King (Mr. W. Farren), the rhyming petitioner, Nell Gwynne (Miss Louisa Howard), Mimi (Mrs. Stirling), a French grisette, and the Merry Monarch himself figure as personages, and all tend to the general confusion. The acting was excellent. In addition to the above characters, Mr Leigh Murray plays a Dutchman with graphuc bluster and homely sentimentality, and a ruggedness of dialect, withal, worthy a true-born "swag-bellied Hollander."

HAYMARKET.—Mr. J. W. Wallack appeared in Macbeth on Monday, but with hardly the same success that attended his Othello. His conception of the king-killing, witch-discomfited tyrant was in general correct, and to our thinking the performance was more impulsive and better considered than that of the Moor, but it exhibited less striking points, was less elaborated and finished, and altogether less refined. The romance and picturesqueness of the character were entirely wanting. Although we have found fault with Mr. J. W. Wallack's Macbeth for its want of elaboration, we must do it the justice to say it seems to have been studied with exceeding care, and rendered with infinite pains. That the actor projected all his talents and energies into the part we have not the least doubt, and herein he is entitled to the fullest credit; but, unfortunately, determination and endeavour are not always suppliances for intellect and power, and study will not always conduce to a complete whole. Mr. J. W. Wallack's Macbeth may yet be vastly improved. There are many things of apparent minor consequence, the remedying of which will be a great advance towards a more perfect representation. The too frequent use of the whining tone of voice—an evident mistake in such a character as that of Macbeth—must be got rid of; loose attitudes and unclassical positions must be eschewed—to say nothing of certain peculiarities of standing, and other trifling habits and customs which time and observation will help to amend. When these are corrected and changed, with the real stuff that we are confident is inherent in the actor, we may look for a highly commendable performance in Mr. J. W. Wallack's Macbeth. We were glad to find Mr. Wallack restoring one or two passages from the original, which even Macready, strange to say, used to omit. The celebrated lines in Macbeth's first soliloquy, hitherto left out,—

"And pity, like a naked new-born babe,
Striding the blast, or heaven's cherubim, hors'd
Upon the sightless couriers of the air,
Shall blow the horrid deed in every eye,
That tears shall drown the wind!"— were received with great cheers. Shakspeare is always triumphant. The above passage has been cried down by the sagacious commentators as a veritable piece of bombast, and unworthy of the speech into which it is introduced. That the metaphor is somewhat far-fetched we are willing to admit, but that it is out of place, or out of keeping with the character, we cannot allow. The state of feeling into which Macbeth had worked himself by the contemplation of the murder must have inflated and distorted every image that presented itself to his mind, and it is likely that Shakspeare took into consideration that which seems to have escaped the keen vigilance of his cobweb-sweepers.

Sweet Laura Addison! Most fair Laura Addison!! Gentle and captivating Laura Addison!!! why, oh why didst thou suffer thy pretty talents to be utterly overwhelmed by that gi-gantic tragedy queen, Lady Macbeth? Couldst thou not perceive that Nature never intended the round and pebbly tones of thy silver voice to utter those fiendish vaunts, and hell threats, and horrid importunities; that thy young and morning face was not constituted to scowl murder; that thy tiny snow fingers were never made to handle daggers with "gouts of blood" on blade and dudgeon; that thy pure woman heart could not encourage such "horrible conceits," nor thy pure feminine brain encounter the "big thoughts that make ambition virtue?" Most merciful Laura! in contriving to kill poor old Duncan (for which, even behind the scenes, we will be sworn, thou wert sorely sorry and yearned in thy tender heart), thou didst murder naught else saving poor Will Shakspeare, and, haply, thy own fair reputation, which never received blow before, but which, on the present occasion, was smashed, pulverised, and utterly annihilated. Wherefore, most innocent Laura—for in thy innocence lies thy extenuation—meddle no further with those frightful, loud-voiced, iron-passioned tragedy queens of Shakspeare! Eschew more especially the society of that she-dragon, Lady Macbeth; she is no company for thee and thy tennities and thy every-day delicacies. Leave such "undaunted metals" to "bring forth male children only;" be thy offsprings all of the tenderer sex, of the very softest constitution, with natures redolent of pap and the milk of human kindness.

The above apostrophe will not, we trust, be unkindly taken. It was penned in no unkind spirit. Miss Laura Addison has always commanded our respect, not unfrequently our admiration. On Monday night she commanded nothing else but our pity. We never saw an artist so entirely unsuited to a part. To criticise it seriously would be ungenerous. Miss Laura Addison is no more fit for such a character as Lady Macbeth than Mrs. Caulfield is for Norma. Nature, art, impulse, power, weight, are all opposed to the assumption. Mr. Webster relied much upon the popularity of the fair actress, and the degree of favour invariably shown to anything he submits to the public for the forbearance of the audience. In another sense it was an impolitic move on the part of the enterprising and energetic manager. Such a Lady Macbeth as that of Miss Laura Addison would have imperilled the success of an older and more accomplished actor than Mr. J. W. Wallack. Mr. Webster may plead in extenuation that there was nobody else in his company to play Lady Macbeth. Without pausing to inquire where was the necessity of producing Macbeth at all—ere yet the echoes of Macready's last triumphs had died away—we might point to Miss Reynolds, Mrs. L. S. Buckingham, or even Mrs. Stanley, any one of whom would have undertaken the part with a result different from that achieved by Miss Laura Addison. We repeat, Miss Laura Addison is a special favourite of ours, but, unless she would forego our favoritism for ever, she must leave Lady Macbeth to older, sterner, louder, and less prepossessing actresses than herself.

Mr. James Wallack's Macbeth was admirable and left nothing for the most rigid critic to find fault with. Mr. Howe was as excellent as ever in Banquo. The rest of the parts were supplied as when Macready played Macbeth. The banquet scene was better managed in some respects than before: and the substitution of helmets for the "umquhile" Scottish bonnet—an anachronism—a decided improvement. The house was but tolerably full.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.—PAULINE.—To those who remember with pleasure the "SERGEANT'S WIFE" and the melodramas in which Miss Kelly achieved her fame, Pauline will bring back emotions which have not been touched by mere modern dramatists. We have never been a witness of any dramatic work in which the simple element of terror was sustained with such extraordinary intensity. The plot of the drama is most simple. A lady of fortune becomes infatuated with a young count—it is not love which inspires her, it is not fear, it is an unaccountable fascination which impels her towards this young man, who seems to possess over her the fascination of the snake over the bird—the mystic power of the mesmeriser over his subject. To the surprise of her relatives, we may add to her own also, she marries him. One would suppose that here the mystery would cease, but Pauline finds that if the Count de Beaufre was a strange being before marriage, he is more inscrutable as her husband. His sleep is disturbed by fearful dreams, he wears fire-arms, and has constantly horses ready saddled, waiting in his stables, as if some sudden emergency or danger were apprehended. The Count de Beaufre is absent at his chateau in Normandy, Pauline at Paris, where the news is rife of certain mysterious robberies and murders which constantly occur in the neighbourhood of her husband's chateau. Filled with anxiety, she starts for Normandy, and finds the count with his two friends, Max and Henri, engaged in a hunting party. He is the dupe of their desperate game; they are the robbers, the murderers, whose deeds continue to fill the country with horror and dread. On a certain stormy night, she discovers that three men stealthily enter the chateau. A noise on the stair which leads to her chamber petrifies her with fear—she casts herself upon her couch and feigns to sleep—a secret panel in the wall opens, and the count, disguised as a peasant, enters; she watches him until he retires by the same entrance. Impelled by curiosity and terror she follows him, and discovers that the vaults of the chateau are the receptacle for the plunder of these bandits. She watches their horrible orgies through an aperture in the door of the vault, but when she beholds bound upon the ground a lady, in whom she recognizes a friend of her own, she is unable to repress an exclamation, by which she betrays her presence. She is seized, and to destroy her evidence, she is immersed in a vault, and left there by her inhuman husband to starve to death.

To pursue this story, and to accumulate terror upon terror, to pile up the agony, would be to anticipate the interest of the reader when he becomes an auditor. Suffice it to say, that the murder is discovered, his innocent victim is preserved, and he only escapes the executioner to fall by the hand of the cousin of Pauline. This duel is the most terrible scene in this extraordinary drama; it is fought across a table with two pistols, one of which is unloaded. The selection of the fire-arms is a breathless moment; the unloaded weapon falls to the hand of the criminal. Poetical justice is thus achieved.

The acting of Mr. and Mrs. Kean was of the very highest order of the melo-dramatic. So powerful and real was Mr. Charles Kean throughout, so singularly impressive was he in every scene, that we lost sight entirely of the inferior aim of the drama, and felt spell-bound by the actor. To understand to the full such a performance as that of Mr. Charles Kean in the new piece, it must be seen. No words can describe it, or do it adequate justice. Mrs. Charles Kean had a part which suited her varying and picturesque style to admiration. The different passions, curiosity, fear, horror, and despair, were depicted with life-like intensity, and produced an immense effect. The excitement created by the acting of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean, was something unusual, and when they appeared at the end to a universal summons, the enthusiasm of the audience was unbounded.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The first concert of the season "for the Exhibition of the Students," took place on Saturday morning, at the Hanover Square Rooms, before a numerous audience of the friends and patrons of the institution.

The programme was a good one, beginning with Mendelssohn's 95th psalm, "Come, let us sing unto the Lord" (not the first time in England, as stated in the bills), and concluding with Beethoven's oratorio, The Mount of Olives. Except the singing of Miss I. Oakley in the former, and Miss Taylor in the latter (both sopranos of great promise), there were no particular points in the performance of these great works to call for praise. Miss Rose and Mr. Swift were the other principals in the psalm, and Mrs. E. Hancock, Messrs. Mason and Blake, in the oratorio, neither of which seemed to have been rehearsed with sufficient care and attention to warrant their execution in public. More gratifying, because more correct and effective, was the execution of a "Kyrie Eliason" and a "Gloria," the composition of Mr. C. Steggall, pupil of Mr. Sterndale Bennett, in the Academy, an effort of remarkable talent and still greater promise. The solo parts in this were taken by the Misses Isabella Oakley, Mary Rose, Sophy Law, Freeman, and the Messrs. Mason, and C. J. Gray, who, in opposition to a general rule, seemed to be quite perfect in their music. The chorus and band were also exceedingly good.

The subordinate vocal pieces were, "With verdure clad," sung by Miss Browne, and "He was despised," by Miss Freeman, both of which were commendable, though by no means extraordinary exhibitions of talent. There were two pianoforte pieces, with orchestral accompaniments—Mendelssohn's Rondo in B minor, and the same composer's second Concerto in D minor. Miss Williams, who played the first, is a rising pupil of Mrs. Anderson, but as yet has neither force nor execution for the task she undertook. The performance of Mr. Cusins, one of the cleverest of the Academy students, was throughout rather that of a master than a pupil, and constituted the decided feature of the concert. Mr. Cusins is also a pupil of Mr. Sterndale Bennett, and it is doubtless as much owing to the well known sentiments of this distinguished professor as to his own ambition and good taste, that the audience had the advantage (so rare at Academy Concerts) of hearing a fine work without any curtailment or mutilation.

The orchestra was conducted by Mr. Lucas, and M. Sainton officiated in his usual post as first violin.

Reviews of Music.

"LA GORLITÇA,"—ALEXANDRE VARIN,—and "LA CRACOVIA,"—RENAUSY.—Hale and Son, Cheltenham; Addison, London.

We have now a clue to this mystery. "La Gorlitça," (not Gorlitz, as put forth by profane pens) appears to be a Livonian dance, in Polka measure—freely translated, a Polka composed by a Livonian. The edition before us (in F) is, according to the inscription upon its forehead, the only one authorised by M. Varin. Whence arises another questio—already vezata, by the way. Who is M. Varin, that should authorise, or interdict an edition (in F or any other key) of the "Gorlitça?" Is he the Livonian who has composed it?—or is he the Frenchman who has not composed it, but, on the strength of an inquisitorial attitude upon a stone of his own setting up, in a bye-path among the Cheltenham hills, fulminates the lightnings of excommunication against all and every who shall presume, unauthorised by him, M. Varin, to set his mark to, or otherwise prepare, with intent to circulate, any editions whatsoever but his, M. Varin's, of the said Livonian polka, intituled, "La Gorlitça." It is possible that Messrs. Hale and Son, of Cheltenham, or Messrs. Addison, more learned than we can pretend to be in the history of the origin and metamorphoses of the "Gorlitça," may be enabled to enlighten the world on that absorbing subject. Meanwhile, we humbly repeat, "Who is M. Varin?" The dance itself is sufficiently quaint and lively, albeit not painfully recherché; and M. Varin, in his arrangement, has carefully excluded any superfluous notes that might delude the digits of a dilettante into a quagmire of intricacy demanding more than usual agility in the act of ex-trication. At the same time, it becomes us to add a shrewd surmise which has just occurred to us:—does not the right of copy-right, appertaining to the present edition, consist principally, entirely, and unconditionally, in the habile ruse whereby M. Varin has changed one letter for another—lanky Z for curved-back C, with a mark underneath for softeners? Are we right in presuming that any one may publish "La Gorlitça," without consulting the pleasure of M. Varin, but that should any one issue "La Gorlitça," sans authority from that quarter, he must look to it, since M. Varin will be at him incontinent?

Renausy, in projecting "La Cracovia," has dropped upon another line of policy. He, also, is from the clouds, and of his antecedents we are in total darkness. After a chord of D dispersed into half arpeggios (ascending) until the higher F is attained, which, by a scale (descending) assisted by the chord of the 7th, falls upon the dominant note, reiterated during the space of two bars, a due mane (the whole being designated "Intrada"), Renausy seizes the well-known "Cracovienne," and, boldly grappling with it, mutilates its familiar features until it assumes a physiognomy which is but a pale distortion of its former self. We can scarcely sufficiently less admire this proceeding. In the trio, Renausy, despising the aforesaid expedient, depends upon his own resources, and furnishes a theme which, original enough, is somewhat scabreux. We object, nevertheless, to the common chord of E flat descending to the common chord of D, and achieving consecutive 5ths and consecutive octaves with the utmost disdain of concealment. This may be found in page 3, line 2, bar 4. Let Renausy apply the caustic to the lower E flat, and when that is burnt away we shall have no further objection to make to "La Cracovia, Nouvelle Danse des Salons," (new dance of the drawing-rooms), except that neuve should be spelt with an o—nouvelle—unless, peradventure, Renausy, like his fellow unknown, Varin wishes to establish exclusive copyright by the substitution of one, letter for another.

It is fair to add, as a recommendation to "La Gorlitça" and "La Cracovia," that they have been introduced by J. and L. Byrn at their academies, in London and Cheltenham, and at the recent annual Bachelors' Ball, in the last mentioned fashionable watering place, where beaux bide, bibulent, hard by the health-restoring Spa.

"THE BENARES MARCH," and "THE BANGALORE MARCH."—ANN S. MOUNSEY.—T. E. Purday.

"The Benares March," and "The Bangalore March," are both excellent and spirited marches, the only reproach to which they are open being the absence of couleur locale. There is nothing eastern in them, which objected, objection ends. The "Benares March," in A, has a bold and richly-harmonised theme; and the first trio, in E, especially the second part, in C sharp minor, is even better. The second trio, in D, is a brilliant specimen of the Italian school, well contrasted, and leading back effectively to the first subject in the original key, which, with some good changes of harmony, and the addition of a showy coda, brings the March to a close in a highly satisfactory manner.

"The Bangalore March" is prettier, and more likely to be generally popular, but is neither so bold nor so recherché. It has great merits, nevertheless. The principal theme is in E flat, and the transition into C minor at the half close is quaint and pleasing. The first trio, in A flat, involves an effective alternation of full chords and florid passages. The half close, in C, is well, but the sudden reprise of the subject, by the unexpected appearance of the chord of E flat, is still better. When the first subject is resumed, the harmony and accompaniment are diversified with singular felicity, materially enhancing the interest. The second trio, in B flat, is dashing and vigorous, and a contrast is obtained by the realisation of a "harpy" effect, through means of dispersed chords rapidly struck. The opening is then resumed, in the original key, of course, (Miss Mounsey never violates the laws of tonality) with some added difficulties that ensure variety, and a short coda which is not the less energetic for its brevity.

These Marches, though admirably adapted to the piano, would be even still more effective for a military band, or a full orchestra, and we recommend Miss Mounsey, who, being a first-rate musician, is competent to the task, to instrument them forthwith. Jullien, the British regiments, and the foreign "Harmonies" would jump at them.

"FOUR ROMANCES FOR THE PIANOFORTE."—EDWARD DEANE.—Wessel and Co.

The same description of beauties, and the same description of faults, which we noted in our review of Mr. Deane's song of "Contentment," are strongly apparent in these romances. They exhibit a refined feeling for the richness and variety that depend on the position and contrast of harmonies, and a strong notion of continuity, the first being far more successfully developed than the last, which, however, we sincerely believe will be fully attained with time and study. Mr. Deane is evidently a young composer, and for that reason alone, independent of his evident talent and nervous avoidance of the common-place, should be an incentive to speak of him with encouragement, and rather assist him by counsel mildly administered, than abash him by unkindness and the free application of the critical flagellum.

The first of the four Romances—allegretto grazioso, in E—has a certain sweetness of melody, and an accompaniment which so nearly flows with natural ease and grace that it is a pity it does not quite. There are several pretty points, and among others we would instance the cadence on the dominant which prefaces the rentrée to the first theme, which, though like Mendelssohn, whose "Rivulet" has not escaped the attention and emulation of Mr. Deane, and who, indeed, is his undeniable model, is hardly the worse for that.

The second Romance—andante con moto, in C minor—being more original, that is, less evidently traceable to his favourite author, is more acceptable. The subjects are both exceedingly neat, and in the second (in the relative major), there is a transition to D, which occurs twice, and produces a charming effect.

No. 3—Cantabile, in E—is the best written, the most melodious, and the most natural of the set. We wish we could add it was the least like Mendelssohn. Unfortunately it is the most like Mendelssohn, in spite of which, or perhaps partly by aid of which, it is a captivating couple of pages, which we shall without ceremony transfer to our own private library, with the sole regret that it is so short.

No. 4—another Cantabile, in D flat—begins with a sort of preghiera in four-part harmony, and is followed by the cantabile in question dealt to the right hand in singing octaves, with small notes intervening, and a skipping bass, not very easy to play. Though it be not without a certain merit, we have less affection for this than for any of the four romances. At the same time, let us do Mr. Deane the justice to add that it is not like Mendelssohn, which possibly may be the reason. In conclusion, we can recommend these Romances as things of unquestionable promise.

"THE NEW PALACE OF ALADDIN, LIT BY THE LAMP OF ALL NATIONS." Words and Music by Magic!—J. Williams.

"Justizia—justizia!" as the Spaniards say when the Hidalgo turns out to be a thief, or a friar a mere "vagrom man," and either is forthwith "comprehended." Here is a poet, who, under the influence of a spirituous fancy, would convey the unvarnished history of the Crystal Palace and the Exhibition of Assembled Nations through the medium of a fairy tale, like any Countess of D'Anois or Madame de Genlis. We do not quarrel with the idea, and we make no bones of the machinery. Prince Albert comes out as a respectable fairy prince, and Her Majesty, Victoria, as a fairy queen, sans pareille, while the Crystal Palace may stand for an enchanted house, and no one complain. But though we affect the fancy and admit the machinery, we like not the verse, nor the music in which it is set forth by the author, who, "Magic" by name, is yet no Magician. The following may serve as a specimen of his verse:—

"A good prince came his race to run
In Freedom's Fairy Land;
His wise and worthy love had won
The dear Queen's jewelled hand!
His glad and merry children grew
All proud to be his own,
And the people bless'd the little crew,
Who group'd around their throne."

Thus launched into the middle of his history, Magic makes the Queen say to the Prince, that, "as Aladdin's Palace doth not wear the glory she would see, she would fain build a new one in its place;" and touching a tree with her wand, "in the grand old park,"

"——— the fine trees waved
The loyal branch and bough,
And oaks that many a storm had braved Became old Courtiers now," whereupon a murmur, like "God Save the Queen," rings through all their leaves, and the loyal trees stoutly declare, that, as royal they have ever been, "loyally they'll fall;" whereby the Prince in a loud voice pledges himself to build the Queen a Palace of her own, that shall "shine with looks from foreign shores;" whereupon the brilliant home is raised, and "the power of bright and lively trade" comes freely to give its dower, while tourney runs its tilt; whereby the whole concludes with the burden as under:—

"—— Victoria's New Aladdin built
The palace of the Land."

The music, also by Magic, begins with an air in B flat, belonging to the family of "O the Rump-Steaks of Old England!"—followed by another tune in the subdominant, which, belonging to no recognised family, is interrupted, at the bottom of page 4, by a fragment of the National Anthem; which, at pages 6 and 7, is diversified by "Rule Britannia" in convulsions; which, in its turn, is genteelly jostled aside by the rag-end of the "British Grenadiers;" which, en revanche, is dismissed to give place to the coda, wherewith the affair happily terminates, to the unalloyed satisfaction of all concerned. Honestly, and with deference, the "New Palace of Aladdin" is a clap-trap, and a very poor one.

Provincial.

GRAVESEND.—On Monday evening, the 10th instant, a vocal and instrumental concert was given in the hall of the Literary Institution, for the benefit of Mrs. Glover, who was supported by Miss Lanelle, from the Theatre Royal, Dublin; Miss Greenwood, Mr. Augustus Eames, from the Lyceum Theatre; and Mr. Austin, the pianist. Owing to the inclemency of the weather, the company was far from numerous. That, certainly, was a pity; but the few who encountered the snow-storm were entitled to be treated with as much consideration as if the theatre had been crowded. It was unpleasant enough to come through sleet, snow, and rain for a musical treat, but the discomfort was aggravated by the curtailment of one-half the performance announced. Miss Lanelle, whose voice is an alto, sang Howitt's ballad "The Coming Footsteps," besides "Just at Twilight," and "I love the Merry Sunshine," with good taste and correctness. Miss Greenwood also acquitted herself very respectably, and Mr. Eames, whose violin performances are well known and justly esteemed, was much applauded in a solo. Mr. Austin presided at the piano, and was deservedly applauded in a fantasia.

BRIGHTON.—A repetition of the inaugural ceremony of opening the Organ presented by her Majesty to the people of Brighton is fixed for April 1st, under the direction of Mr. Surman of Exeter-hall.

PETWORTH.—The performance of the Distin family which had been so eagerly anticipated by the lovers of music in this vicinity, justified the expectations that had been entertained. In the several pieces there was not an instance of wavering or want of decision, but on the contrary, the most difficult chromatic intervals were given with facility and precision. This was decidedly shown in the selection from Mendelssohn, which afforded examples of elaborate execution, and made a powerful impression on the audience. The National Anthem at the close of the performances was given with appropriate energy, and altogether a more delightful entertainment has not been given in this town for years.

GREENOCK.—The Subscription Concerts of the Philharmonic Society were brought to a close in presence of a large audience on Tuesday evening week, and on Wednesday an extra performance was given for the benefit of the funds of the Society. Had further confirmation been required of the appreciation of these concerts, it would have been supplied by the assemblage of Wednesday, when area and gallery were filled to overflowing. The overture to the Barber of Seville, and selections from Weber's Der Freyschutz, Mozart's Don Juan, and Donizetti's Bride of Lammermoor, were efficiently given. The audience were delighted with a fantasia on the pianoforte by Mr. John Willy, a solo on the violoncello by Mr. Hausman, a duet on cornet-a-pistons by the Messrs. Harper, and a solo on the violin by Mr. Willy. The applause with which they were received must have been gratifying to the performers, and was so long continued, that they had to repeat the pieces. The variations on "O no, we never mention her," by Mr. Willy, was a brilliant display; and the great and hearty applause with which he was received on coming forward to play this solo was an expression of public thanks for the admirable style in which he has managed this highly successful series of concerts. Both as a violinist and conductor. Mr. Willy occupies the very highest place. Mrs. E. B. Harper sang very sweetly "The Village Queen," and "Whistle and I'll come to thee;" Mrs. Russell gave "The Cavalier," and "Here's a health, bonny Scotland, to thee," and with Mrs. Harper, two duets. As a finale, "God save the Queen" was given by the full band, the vocal parts being admirably sung by Mrs. Russell, Mrs. Harper, and Mr. E. B. Harper. At the end of the performances, when the players made their final bow, a long-continued cheer burst from the audience, the ladies waving their handkerchiefs. We are confident we express the universal sentiment, when we hope that another season Mr. Willy and his band will be again found in their place offering the community a similar opportunity of enjoying and profiting by a means of gratification so elevating and refined. Thanks are due to Messrs. D. F. Dempster and Thomas R. Lamont, the secretary and treasurer of the Society, for their exertions in promoting the prosperity of the scheme during this the first, and we have no doubt its most difficult season. The perfect success of the largest and most complete plan of entertainment ever offered to the public of Greenock is ascribable in no small degree to their perseverance and skill, and must be to them a source of gratification and encouragement, as it is to the community a reason for awarding them its best and heartiest thanks.—Greenock Advertiser.

EDINBURGH.—The concert which took place in the Music Hall on Saturday week, though but thinly attended, was one of genuine excellence, and we are sure conveyed more real gratification than hundreds of entertainments with far higher pretensions. Tried by that test, it would be difficult to speak too highly in its praise. The Misses Smith and Mr. Augustus Braham were the vocalists; Mr. Hausmann, Mr. Silas, and Mr. Mudie the instrumentalists. Miss Julia Smith delivered several pieces of sacred music with great truth of feeling, and genuine taste and effect. The duets with her sister, Miss Maria, were executed with that perfect harmony, precision, and brilliancy for which they are justly celebrated. Mr. Augustus Braham made a great impression, more particularly in "Waft her Angels." His voice is one of the finest, as regards power, compass and richness, which we ever heard; and his spirit and intelligence are evidently equal to the very highest efforts. A most commanding position in the musical world is within his reach, and he can scarcely fail to attain it at no distant period. Mr. Hausman's violoncello playing is superb, his bowing must be a perfect wonder to amateurs, if not to professional players themselves. He was rapturously applauded. M. Silas as a pianist is evidently accomplished, and plays finely rather than grandly. The same performers gave a second concert the following night. All lovers of good music should have been present.—Edinburgh Evening Post and Scottish Record.

EDINBURGH, March 19th, 1851.—(From our own Correspondent).

—I notice, from your paper of last Saturday, which I have just this moment seen, that a correspondent—who seems to be extremely bilious, and somewhat liable to dyspeptic attacks—has fallen most rapidly foul of two errors of the press in my remark on the Reid Concert. For great talent let him read "local talent," and for "chorus" "horns." Let him also amend his English, and get into better humour with himself and the rest of the world. Since I last wrote you, the dull month of March has commenced, when public entertainments are generally unsuccessful. The only concerts that have been given lately were those of the Misses Smith and Mr. Augustus Braham. At the first, Mr. Silas played two pianoforte pieces, and Mr. Hausman the like number on the violoncello. Both concerts were most unsuccessful. Our Amateur Society, under their talented conductor, Mr. Drechsler, is making considerable progress: their last night of the season will be given next month. Albert Smith makes his first appearance here on the 29th inst., and on the same day the boy pianist, Werner, gives a concert.

Miscellaneous.

ERNST.—This celebrated violinist has arrived in town from his provincial tour, and intends remaining in London for the season. We are sorry, however, to add that Ernst has been confined to his bed from indisposition since his arrival, and was hindered from playing at Middle. Graumann's morning concert on Monday, in consequence. We hope in our next, however, to be able announce his perfect restoration to health.

VIVIER.—The great professor of that instrument, so difficult to profess, the greater performer on that instrument more difficult to perform, has returned from his provincial peregrinations, his previously over-laurel-charged brow, now so bedded in laurels—the insignia of ninety additional triumphs, achieved in the course of a three months' tour with the magnanimous Jullien—that the epithet "overhanging," may be applied to his brows, which, intrinsically open and placid, sink under the weight of a thick surcharge of honors, incidental to his recent and brilliant campaign. Bref—Vivier is now in London for the season. The fact will not, we opine, be long familiar to the world of entrepreneurs, without teeming consequences. What concert, what musical entertainment of any kind, indeed, can be pronounced complete, without the name of Vivier, as a foremost and formidable attraction? In short, no monologue can henceforth succeed, unless it may be made forthwith a dialogue, (or rather, a triologue, quatriologue, or quintalogue—for Vivier plays at discretion maintes notes à la fois;) by the addition of the magic of the French philosopher and comist.

MADLE. GRAUMANN'S CONCERT.—The Matinée Musicale of this charming and accomplished artist came off at the Beethoven Rooms, on Monday, and was attended by a fashionable audience. The Singers were, Miss Dolby, Madlle. Graumann, Madlle. Rummel; Sig. Marchesi, Herr Mengis, and M. Jules Stockhausen. The Instrumentalists were, Mr. Charles Salaman (piano), Madame D'Eichthal (harp), and Sig. Piatti (violoncello). Herr Ernst, and Mr. Osborne were announced, but were prevented from attending by illness. Madlle. Graumann's solo performances were, an arietta by Biletta, "La Pastorella dell' Alpi," "Life's Seasons," by F. Mori, and two German Songs by Mendelssohn, and Dessauer; all of which she sang with perfect grace and expression, and all were warmly applauded. Madlle. Graumann also joined in a quintet from the Cosi fan tutte; in a preghiera of Manuel Garcia with Miss Dolby, Madlle. Rummel, and Sig. Marchesi; in two unaccompanied quartets by Mendelssohn with Madlle. Rummel, Herr Mengis, and M. Stockhausen; and with Sig. Marchesi in a duet from Semiramide. Madlle. Graumann performed an arduous and important part in the entertainment, but her efforts were always welcome, because always pleasing. Among the other features of the Concert, we must rest satisfied with noticing Miss Dolby's "Nobil Signor," and Sig. Piatti's violoncello solo; both of which were admirable performances. The absence of Ernst was a serious drawback to the entertainment, which, however, passed off with infinite spirit.

THE MIDDLE. ST. MARC.—(From a Correspondent.)—Among the most noticeable features at the Vocal and Instrumental Concerts at Sussex Hall, given by Mr. P. Ezekiel, on Monday the 10th inst., was the debut of two young ladies, Miss St. Marc, vocalist, and Mdle. E. St. Marc, pianist, both of whom achieved a success on which they may be congratulated, and a career both of profit and honor may be argued for them in the future. Miss St. Marc, who sang in selections from Rossini and Donizetti, displayed to advantage the capabilities and resources of a remarkably fine voice. Her style combines both fire and sweetness—vivacity and grace, all of which are apparent when the first sensations of momentary nervousness were gone. Mdle. E. St. Marc in one of Herz's difficult yet brilliant complications, exhibited a mastery over the piano, that brought down the audience in a round of enthusiastic applause. The former lady as a pupil of Sig. Ronconi, is one of whom her master may be proud, and the latter reflects equal credit upon her teacher, though we are ignorant of his name. The concert was well attended, and in every respect successful.

MR. W. REA'S SOIRÉES.—The last of this series of classical chamber concerts took place in the new Beethoven Rooms on Friday evening, and was decidedly the best of the three, introducing several features of interest. Mozart's quartett in E flat, by Mr. W. Rea (pianoforte), Mr. H. C. Cooper (violin), Mr. Hill (viola), and Mr. Hancock (violoncello), was performed in a very admirable manner, each movement being invested with its peculiar character. Beethoven's sonata in F, for pianoforte and violin, by Messrs. W. Rea and H. C. Cooper, was also an excellent performance. The scherzo was encored. The sonata in C sharp minor, for pianoforte solo, by the same composer, was executed by Mr. W. Rea in a brilliant style, especially the last movement, which was given with such spirit and decision as to call down the loudest applause. Mendelssohn's trio in D minor, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, by Messrs. W. Rea, H. C. Cooper, and Hancock was not a less unexceptionable performance. The scherzo was delightfully played and the last movement took every one by surprise; the body of tone produced from the three instruments was quite immense. It would have been encored if it had not been for the lateness of the evening. Herr Brandt sang "In Beglia" and "Zuleika auf Fluglen des Gesanges" with taste, and Miss M. Williams Mozart's "Io ti lascio," and Reissiger's "Lovely Clouds" in her own quiet and charming manner; the latter was encored. Miss Watson, a pupil of Mr. T. H. Tomlinson, made a very successful debut on this occasion, and sang the German lied, by Abt, "When the swallows fly towards home," with feeling and true sentiment, receiving the warmest applause. This young lady, whose appearance is much in her favour, possesses a soprano voice of great richness, with sweet and bell like quality of tone; when she has overcome the timidity natural to a debutante we have little doubt that she will make rapid and solid progress; and her voice, with increased experience, will, of course, gain strength and firmness. The rooms were crowded by a discriminating audience whose applause was not less just than liberal. We congratulate Mr. W. Rea on the success of his soirées, which have been among the best of the season.

MR. KIALLMARK'S SECOND SOIRÉE took place in the New Beethoven Rooms, on Monday, before a fashionable audience. Beethoven's Trio in C minor for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, by Messrs. Kiallmark, Molique, and De Munck, was performed with much effect, particularly the slow movement and finale, which were loudly applauded. Miss E. Birch and Miss Pyne sang a duet of Mendelssohn very agreeably, and Miss Pyne, in Mendelssohn's "In questa tomba" was warmly appreciated. Mr. Grattan Cooke performed a fantasia on the oboe, with his usual skill and good taste, and was favourably received. Mr. Kiallmark played Thalberg's well-known Andante in D flat, and Kullak's brilliant mercedu on the scena from Der Freischutz, in a highly effective manner; the latter, especially, exhibiting his mechanism to great advantage. Miss E. Birch sang "Voi che sapete," and Herr Kroff, Beethoven's "Adelaide," with feeling. Few vocalists are better versed in this kind of music than Herr Kroff. The second part began with one of Mendelssohn's grand Duets for pianoforte and violoncello, by Messrs. Kiallmark and De Munck, which was the great point in the concert, and drew forth loud bursts of applause. A fantasia for violin, by Herr Molique, was executed by the composer with the most refined expression and the utmost delicacy of bowing. "The Midshipman's Star," by Miss E. Birch, received much applause, as also did, "She shines before me like a star," by Miss Pyne. The concert concluded with a selection of studies by Chopin, Döhler, and Thalberg, played with the utmost efficiency, and a well calculated variety of effect by Mr. Kiallmark, whose familiarity with the works of the most celebrated composers could not have been more strikingly exemplified. The audience were loud in the expression of their applause. The performance gave general satisfaction.

MR. CHARLES MÜHLENFELDT'S first Soirée was given on Wednesday evening, the 19th inst. Mr. Mühlentfeldt was assisted in the instrumental part by Messrs. Sainton (violin), and Rousselot (violoncello). Miss Dolby was the vocalist. Beethoven's Trio in D major, with which the concert began, was performed in a brilliant style, and Mr. Mühlentfeldt's execution of two of Mendelssohn's Lieder ohne worte, Nos. 1 and 3 of the seventh book, and the andante with variations, one of Mendelssohn's posthumous works, was much admired. Beethoven's Sonata in G major, No. 3. Op. 30, for pianoforte and violin, by Messrs. Mühlentfeldt and Sainton, was performed in excellent style, both as regards expression and brilliancy, and greatly applauded. Mr. Mühlentfeldt also played three new compositions of his own, "Le Desir," Melodie expressive, a study, and a Scherzo Fantastico, the last of which shewed to advantage the pianist's lightness of touch and brilliancy of execution; and was most warmly received by the audience. Miss Dolby sang two well written songs by Mr. Mühlentfeldt, "When the heart wearies," and "The Village Bells" (M.S.), in her usual accomplished style. The concert terminated with Mozart's Fantasia, for the pianoforte in F minor, for two performers, by Messrs. Aguilar and Mühlentfeldt, with the utmost energy and precision. Miss Dolby also sang Mozart's "Quando Miro," the most perfect piece of vocalism we have heard in a concert-room for a long time. In addition to the performances above mentioned, Mr. Mühlentfeldt played two preludes and fugues of Bach.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.—The sixth monthly concert took place on Wednesday evening, when, owing to the inclement weather, there was a less crowded attendance than usual, although the programme provided by Mr. Hullah was one of more than ordinary interest and variety. The "Credo" from Bach's Mass in B minor, a long and elaborate composition, was creditably performed, taking its enormous difficulties into consideration, which would baffle the most experienced conductor, and the most efficient executants in the world. The vocal solos were entrusted to Mdle. Graumann, Miss Kearns, and Signor Marchesi. Mdle. Graumann and Signor Marchesi were very perfect in the trying music they had to sing, the gentleman especially, who produced a legitimate effect in an air with two oboes obligato, which were exceedingly well played, that for the oboe d'amore (or low oboe), by Mr. Nicholson more particularly. The "Credo" was followed by an "Offertorium," the composition of a rising and talented English musician, Mr. Edward Fitzwilliam, the son of the eminent actress, which was remarkably well sung by Mrs. Endersohn and encored. The Offertory, though perhaps a little too theatrical in style, is exceedingly melodious and graceful, admirably written for the voice, and instrumented for the orchestra, with great fancy and skill, and its success will, we trust, act as a beneficial stimulus to Mr. Fitzwilliam in his arduous pursuit of his studies. Mozart's magnificent motet, "Pulvis et Cinis," in which Signor Marchesi took the bass solos, was a great treat. Though less elaborate it was, in our opinion, more impressive than the choral specimens from Bach's Mass. The second act of Gluck's Orfeo, a masterpiece from first to last, (the recitatives and airs of Orfeo sung with great taste by Mdle. Graumann) and a selection, choral, orchestral and solo vocal, from Oberon, in which the principal voice parts were executed by Mdle. Graumann, Miss Kearns, Mrs. Endersohn, and Mr. Herbert, completed the selection. We should really be delighted, once in a way, to hear the overture to Oberon taken at such a pace as to render the violin passages possible, which has not been the case for some years past. Mr. Hullah, however appears to entertain the same notions about this overture of which we have complained in other conductors. At the next concert, among other curious items, Mr. Hullah announces a new Sacred Work by Rossini, and two compositions by M. Gounod of Paris.

MR. STERNDALÉ BENNETT'S CLASSICAL SOIREEs.—The second on Tuesday evening, at the Hanover Rooms, was even better than the first; which is saying a great deal, but not too much. The performances began with Mozart's quiet and delicious trio, in E flat, for pianoforte, clarinet, and viola, which was played with a due appreciation of its character, united to a rare delicacy of execution, by Messrs. Sterndale Bennett, Lazarus, and Dando. Mr. Bennett then introduced three pieces of his own, the first of which, a Tema con variazioni, (op. 31), was new to his audience, while the two last, the Romance, called "Genevieve," and the "Rondo Piacevole" are old and familiar favourites, which possess the quality of engaging the constancy of their admirers, who never grow tired of their company. It is enough to say of the first, that it is worthy of association with those, now for the first time, its companions. The audience would seem to be of our opinion, since they applauded the new comer and the old friends with equal warmth. Miss Dolby next afforded an agreeable variety by the exquisite manner in which she gave Handel's recitative and aria "Aure deh per pietà;" and the first part of the concert concluded with a very fine performance of Beethoven's Grand Sonata for pianoforte and violin, in C minor, by Mr. Bennett and Herr Molique. The second part included the trio of Mendelssohn, (No. 1), in D minor, by Messrs. Bennett, Molique, and Lucas, whose performance was worthy of the music; W. H. Holmes's elegant song, "The Blind Flower Girl," charmingly sung by Miss Dolby, and accompanied by the composer; Beethoven's variations in C major, for four hands, rendered in a masterly style by Messrs. W. H. Holmes and (Bennett; and some of the Lieder Ohne Worte of Mendelssohn in E, book 2; in A minor, book 3; and E major, book 6; which Mr. Bennett played with that perfect expression and neatness of execution that render his performance of these exquisite trifles unique. Being encored in the latter, Mr. Bennett returned to his place at the piano, and played the "Veneziana," in A minor, book 6, and the "Spring Song," from book 5, which did not please less.

Advertisements.

MR. WILLY

BEGS to inform his Friends that he has now RETURNED TO LONDON for the Season, having concluded his engagements in Scotland. March 17th, 1851. 22, Trigon Terrace, Kennington.

MR. WESLAKE

BEGS to acquaint his Friends and Pupils that he has REMOVED to 31, COVENTRY STREET, HAYMARKET. 21st March, 1851.

SIGNOR BOTTESINI,

MUSICAL DIRECTOR OF THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA AT HAVANNA, BEGS to apprise the Musical Profession and the Public that he will arrive in London at the beginning of May, and remain during the entire Season.

Letters and applications for engagements to be addressed to Sig. BOTTE NI, Wessel and Co., 229, Regent Street.

MOAT'S NEWLY-INVENTED VIOLIN BOW,

REGISTERED in France and England.—Musical Professors and Amateurs are invited to inspect this admirable invention, by which the performer is enabled to produce the utmost degrees of power or delicacy.

Made of the most exquisite Brazil, and silver mounted... 32s.

Doitto, ditto, mounted in German silver... 22s.

Doitto, ditto, plain ebony... 15s.

J. J. Haite, Musical Instrument Maker to the Army and Navy, 76, Leadenhall Street, sole London Agent.

BEETHOVEN QUARTETT SOCIETY.

THE SIX EVENING PARTIES are fixed.—April 2nd, 16th, and 30th; May 14th, and 28th; June 11th; the four morning—April 24th, May 9th, 22nd, June 2nd. Subscriptions for the six nights, two guineas; for the four mornings, one guinea and a half; for the ten performances together, three guineas. To the profession tickets (not transferable) will be half the above price. To be had of Messrs. Rousselot and Co., 66, Conduit-street, Regent-street.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.

M. ALEXANDRE BILLET begs to announce a Second Series of three evening Concerts of Classical Pianoforte Music, in illustration of the great Composers. To take place on Tuesdays, April 1st, 15th, and 29th. To commence at half-past Eight.

Tickets 2s., Reserved Seats, 4s. To be had with programmes, at the principal Music Sellers, and at St. Martin's Hall.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.

CONDUCTOR, Mr. COSTA.—Wednesday next, March 26, will be repeated Handel's SAMSON. Vocalists—Miss Birch, Miss Dolby, Mr. Lockey, Mr. T. Williams, Mr. Whitworth, and Mr. H. Phillips. The Orchestra, the most extensive available in Exeter Hall, will consist of (including 16 double basses) nearly 700 performers. Tickets, 3s.; reserved seats in area or gallery, 5s.; central area (numbered seats), 10s. 6d.; at the Society's office, 6, Exeter Hall; or of Mr. Bowley, 53, Charing-cross.

LONDON SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY,

EXETER HALL. On FRIDAY, March 28th, Handel's "JEPHTHA," being the Centenary Performance of this Oratorio. Principal Vocalists—Miss Birch, Mrs. Temple, Miss Kenneth; Mr. J. Young, Mr. Lockey, and Mr. Lawler; Conductor, Mr. Surman, founder of the Exeter Hall Oratorios. Tickets, 3s., 5s., 7s., and central numbered Seats, 10s. 6d. each, to be obtained at the Principal Musicellers, and at the office of the Society, No. 9, in Exeter Hall, where may be obtained the best Edition of the Music of the above Oratorio, Printed in Score and Single Parts.

NEW BEETHOVEN ROOMS,

27, QUEEN ANNE STREET.

MRS. JOHN MACFARREN has the honour to announce that her first MATINEE MUSICALE will take place on Saturday, 12th April, 1851. To commence at Two o'clock. Vocalists—Miss Birch, Miss Dolby, Madme. and Signor Ferrari. Harp—Mr. J. Balsir Chatterton. Pianoforte—Miss Kate Loder, Miss Goddard, Mrs. John Macfarren, Mr. Cipriani Potter, Mr. W. H. Holmes, Mr. W. Dorrell, Mr. Brinley Richards, Mr. W. C. Macfarren, Mr. W. Sterndale Bennett. Conductor, Mr. W. C. Macfarren. Tickets 7s. each, to be had at the Beethoven Rooms, and of Mrs. John Macfarren, 16, Stanhope Street, Regent's Park.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

THE Subscribers and the Public are respectfully informed that the SECOND CONCERT will take place at the Hanover Square Rooms, on MONDAY NEXT, the 24th inst. Programme:—Sinfonia No. 11, (grand) Haydn; Rondo, pianoforte, Mr. W. H. Holmes, Mendelssohn; Overture (Anacreon), Cherubini; Sinfonia, Eroica, Beethoven; Concertino (M8.), Clarinet, Mr. Lazarus, Molique; Overture (M8.), Schloesser. Vocal Performers:—Miss Kearns, Miss Thornton, Miss Williams; Mr. Benson, and Mr. Bodda. Single Tickets, £1 1s.; Double Tickets, £1 10s.; Triple Tickets, £2 5s. To be obtained at Messrs. Addison and Co.'s, 210, Regent Street.

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

THALBERG	Irish Airs
KUHE	Styriennes
STREICH	Les Hironnelles
PREAGERS	Moment Joyeux
MÜLLER	Anna Bolena
ROECKEL	Marche Romaine
RICHARDS	Danish Air
KUHE	Bohemian Air
MÜLLER	Fragment
MÜLLER	Third Romance
BRISSON	L'Arabesque
RICHARDS	Moonlight Serenade
J. HERZ	La Sylphide
ROECKEL	Clotilde

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street.

NEW AND POPULAR VOCAL MUSIC.

G. A. MACFARREN, "Our Village Loves,"	2s. 6d.
G. Brinley Richards, "The Token,"	2s.
Alexander Lee, "The Cheerful Melody,"	2s. 6d.
" " " "The Flight of the Birds,"	2s. 6d.
R. Anderson Rüst, "A Household Narrative,"	2s. 6d.
" " " "That's the truth,"	2s.
George Barker, "I cannot smile dear Mother,"	2s.
Eugene Rolt, "The Musical Fireside,"	2s.
" " " "Dreams (a pictorial Ballad),"	3s.

Those marked thus, ¶ are elegantly Illustrated.

Rüst and Stahl, 320, Regent-street, opposite the Royal Polytechnic Institution.

CARTE'S PATENT FLUTES.

Just published,

A SKETCH of the successive IMPROVEMENTS made in the FLUTE, with a Statement of the Principles upon which Flutes are constructed, and a comparison between the relative merits of the Ordinary Flute, the Flute of Boehm, and Carte's two new Patent Flutes. By RICHARD CARTE.

Publishers: Rudall, Rose, and Co., 38, Southampton-street, Strand; Addison, 210, Regent-street; Keith and Prowse, 48, Cheapside; and Cocks and Co., 6, New Burlington-street. Price 1s., or if sent by post, 1s. 6d.

CRAMER'S STUDIES.

THE first Volume of this work is now published in the upright form newly revised and corrected by the Author, and divided into four parts, price 6s. each. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street.

LEE & COXHEAD'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

SACRED VOCAL MUSIC.

KELLER'S Collection of ANTHEMS, CHURCH SERVICES, CHANTS, &c., arranged for the Voice and Piano, in six Books, price 3s. each, with six beautiful and appropriate Designs by Brandard, arranged by ALBERT KELLER; the six Books can be had in one Volume, elegantly bound, price 18s.

The PSALMODIA BRITANNICA—a selection of Psalms and Hymns for the Voice and Organ, in six Books, price 3s. each, arranged by EDWIN FLOOD, and may be had in one Volume, neatly bound, price 18s.

N.B.—A New Edition of "Hark, the Sabbath Bells," by EDWIN FLOOD. Price 2s.

MUSIC for the ORGAN or HARMONIUM.

THE AMATEUR ORGANIST—a collection of soft and full Voluntaries, arranged in six Books, 3s. each, by EDWARD TRAVIS.

THE AMATEUR INTERLUDIST—a collection of short interludes to play between the Verses of the Psalms, in one Book, price 4s., by EDWARD TRAVIS and J. P. DYER.

THE AMATEUR PRELUDIST—a collection of Preludes, with the Organ Stops carefully marked, in one Book, price 4s., by EDWARD TRAVIS.

MUSIC for the FLUTE.

THE AMATEUR FLUTIST—a selection of favorite Airs from the Standard Foreign Operas, arranged in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY NICHOLSON, with an Accompaniment ad lib. for the Violin, Violoncello, and Pianoforte.

THE FLUTIST'S ALBUM—a collection of favorite Quadrilles, Waltzes, Polkas, &c., arranged in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY NICHOLSON, with an Accompaniment ad lib. for the Piano, Violin, and Violoncello.

MUSIC for the VIOLIN.

THE AMATEUR VIOLINIST—A selection of favorite Airs from the Standard Foreign Operas, arranged expressly for the first position of the Violin, in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY FARMER, with an accompaniment ad lib. for the Piano, second Violin, and Violoncello.

THE VIOLINIST'S ALBUM—a collection of favorite Quadrilles, Waltzes, Polkas, &c., arranged expressly for the first position of the Violin, in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY FARMER, with an Accompaniment ad lib. for the Piano, second Violin, and Violoncello.

N.B.—A New Edition of "Farmer's Violin School." 5s.

A NEW PIANOFORTE SCHOOL, by ALBERT KELLER, price 4s.

"We can confidently recommend this Pianoforte Tutor as the best extant: Mr. Keller has adopted the judicious method of arranging the scales and exercises amongst the lessons, by which plan the pupil is taught those essentials without turning to a formal book of scales, &c.,—the fingering is carefully marked without being crowded, and is evidently written by one who has had great experience as a teacher."

Also, "Delices de la Jeunesse," in 12 sets, price 2s. each, written expressly to follow the above Tutor, by C. W. Glover.

London: Lee and Coxhead, 48, Albermarle Street, and all Book and Music Sellers. Catalogues gratis.

MESSRS. COCKS AND CO'S

NEW MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS FOR THE PIANO.

BY BRINLEY RICHARDS.—"The Angel's Song," 2s.; "The Sturm March," 3s. By Stephen Heller. —LATEST PIANOFORTE LESSONS. —Students of the pianoforte will find in the following works of the above distinguished author an unusual degree of merit, suited alike for the salon and the practice-room, viz., "Chant du Chasseur," 2s.; "Le Adieu du Soldat," 2s.; "Chant du Bercenat," 2s.; arrangement of Mendelssohn's "Chant d'Amour," 2s.; ditto, "Parting Song," 2s.; ditto, "Chant de Fête," 2s.

BY G. A. OSBORNE.—Splendid Fantasia on Airs from Don Juan, 4s.; ditto from the Barbier de Seville, duet, 5s.; ditto on Kucken's Schlum-merlied, 2s.; ditto on Trab, Trab, 3s.; Wallenstein's Le Soupir Redowa, 1s. 6d., and Schottisch de Paris, 2s.; Schulhoff's Carnaval de Venise, 4s.; Cantabile, 2s., his Mozart's Minuet, 4s., and Serenade Espagnole, 3s.; Orsten's May-flowers (for young performers), three books, each 2s.; Gorla's Adieux de Marie Stuart, 4s., Campanella, 3s., and Harmonie du Solr, 4s.

NEW SCHOOL MUSIC.—Hamilton's Modern Instructions for the Piano, the easiest and best book, 20th edition, 4s.; his Dictionary of 3,500 Musical Terms, 37th edition, 1s.; his Catechism on Singing, 3s.; ditto on Thorough Bass, 2s.; ditto Violin, 1s.; Clarke's Psalmody, 12 books, 3s. each; Clarke's Catechism of the Rudiments of Music, 23rd edition, 1s.; Warren's Psalmody, 23 books, 2d. each; and his Chanter's Hand-Guide, in one vol., 5s., or in 34 parts, 2d. each; Grosse's Very Easy Instructions for Singing, 4s.

GOTTFRED WEBER'S THEORY OF MUSICAL COMPOSITION.—A New Edition, Edited by JOHN BISHOP, containing upwards of one thousand pages, in 2 vols., royal 8vo., whole cloth, boards, price 31s. 6d. Also, CZERNY'S NEW PRACTICAL SCHOOL OF MUSICAL COMPOSITION. Translated by JOHN BISHOP. 3 vols. folio, each 31s. 6d.

ALBRECHTSBERGER'S (Master of Beethoven) COMPLETE THEORETICAL WORKS. Translated by the late ARNOLD MERRICK, Esq. 2 vols. 8vo., 42s.

CHERUBIN'S COUNTERPOINT and FUGUE. Translated by J. A. HAMILTON, 2 vols. 8vo., 31s. 6d. And DR. BOYCE'S COLLECTION OF CATHEDRAL MUSIC. A new Edition by JOSEPH WARREN. In three large folio vols. of upwards of 1300 pages, price £6 6s.

London: R. COCKS AND CO., New Burlington Street, Publishers to her Majesty. New Catalogues, Gratis and Postage Free.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' "VESPER HYMN,"

ARRANGED as a Fantasia for the Pianoforte. The publisher has great pleasure in announcing a new Edition of this admired composition by Mr. BRINLEY RICHARDS, and to state that he has added to his Catalogue all the newest works of this popular writer.

"Under this modest title, Mr. Richards presents us with a fantasia of novel form, remarkable for originality of effect. An introduction in F, in which fragments of the melody are displayed in full harmony, alternated with brief allegro passages, capriccioso, leads to an episode, in which the idea of the bell that tolls for vespers is poetically indicated. The well-known tune is then led through a series of variations, or ricercate, or changes, in all of which the traits de bravoure are different, and skillfully contrasted, while the keys of D flat and A flat are judiciously employed in some of them, to relieve the monotony that would otherwise arise from the constant adherence to the original tone. The variations are graceful and showy, increasing in brilliancy up to the climax, which involves a capital echantillon of the Thalbergian pattern. Mr. Richards has shown an extended acquaintance with the resources of the clavier in this morceau, and the utmost ingenuity in maintaining an easy variety of style during the continuous repetition of the melody over the space of eight pages. The only fault of "The Vesper Hymn" is its brevity."—Musical World.

Charles Ollivier, 41, New Bond Street

NEW SACRED SONGS.

MR. JOHN BARNETT has just published TWO new SACRED SONGS, which, from their extreme simplicity and beautiful expression of the poetry, bid fair to become very popular. The words are from the pen of Bayley. They are called, 1. "He that gathereth in Summer," price 2s. 6d.; 2. "The Sabbath Eve," price 2s. 6d. Both are published by CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street, and may be obtained of every music-seller in the United Kingdom.—There is a re-issue of Alfred Tennyson's two popular songs, "Tears, idle Tears," and the conclusion of the "May Queen," both composed by Mr. Barnett.

NEW SONGS.

Freedom, Light and Love,	H. Hermanson,	2s.
Homes of Merry England,	E. Dearie,	2s.
Better late than Never	E. Land,	2s.
Fleur de Marie (second edition),	G. Barker,	2s. 6d.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Romance and Toccata,	B. Jewson,	3s.
Grand March, Drinn, Drinn,	E. J. Westrop,	2s.
Oak Leaf Polka,	A. C. Rowland,	2s.
Kentish Graces, Waltzes and Polka,	J. Blewitt,	3s.
Summer Flowers, Waltzes,	E. J. Westrop,	3s.
Autumn do., do.,	do.,	3s. 6d.

COMIC SONGS.

The Glorious Exhibition.	A. Park,	1s.
The Papal Aggression,	J. W. S.,	1s.
The Census for 1851,	A. Park,	1s.

London: Z. T. Purday, 45, High Holborn.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

FOR Improving the Voice, and removing all Affections of the Throat. Strongly recommended to Clergymen, Singers, Actors, Public Speakers, Poets, subject to relaxed Throats, and to all persons desirous of cultivating their voices, and ensuring a good and clear articulation. They have also been found highly beneficial to those afflicted with Nervous, Hysterical, or Stomachic Coughs. To be had in Boxes, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each, of every Medicine Vendor in the Kingdom. Musical Agents in London, Messrs. Leader & Co., 63, New Bond Street; Wholesale Agents, Messrs. Barclay & Sons, Farringdon Street.

Testimonials of their efficacy are published with each Box, from

Mad. Grisli	Miss Romer	Mr. Harrison	Mr. J. Barnett
Mad. Persiani	Mad. Albertazzi	Mr. Allen	Mr. George Linley
Mad. Eugénie Garcia	Miss Cooper	Mr. White	Mr. Rodwell
Mrs. Alfred Shaw	Sig. Lablache	Mr. Wase	Mr. Nelson
Miss Rainforth	Sig. Giubilei	Mr. Kroff	&c., &c.

CURES FOR THE UNCURED!

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.—Cure of a Bad Leg of more than sixty years' standing.—Mr. Barker, of No. 5, Graham's Place, Drypool, near Hull, had ulcers on his leg from the age of 18 until upwards of 80, and although for many years he had sought the first advice in the country, nothing was found to cure them. He often suffered excruciating pain for long periods together, which incapacitated him from attending to his business. He had given up all hopes of getting a cure, when at last he was persuaded to try Holloway's Pills and Ointment, which he did, and however wonderful it may appear, the leg was thoroughly healed by their means, and by continuing to use the Pills alone after his leg was well, he has become in health so hale and hearty as now to be more active than most men of fifty. N.B.—The truth of this extraordinary statement can be vouched for by Mr. J. C. Reinhardt, 22, Market Place, Hull. Feb. 20th, 1850.

The Pills should be used conjointly with the Ointment in the following cases:—

Bad Legs	Coco Bay	Contracted and	Lumbago	Scurvy
Bad Breasts	Chiego-foot	Stiff Joints	Piles	Sore-heads
Burns	Chilblains	Elephantiasis	Rheumatism	Tumours
Bunions	Chapped hands	Fistulas	Scalds	Ulcers
Bite of Mosche-	Corns (Soft)	Gout	Sore Nipples	Wounds
toes and Sand-	Cancers	Glandular Swell-	Sore-throats	Yaws
Flies		ing	Skin-diseases

Sold by the Proprietor, 244, Strand, (near Temple Bar,) London; and by all respectable Vendors of Patent Medicines throughout the Civilised World. In Pots and boxes, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each. There is a very considerable saving in taking the larger sizes.

N.B.—Directions for the guidance of Patients are affixed to each Pot or Box.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

THE DIRECTORS OF THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA beg most respectfully to inform the Nobility, Gentry, Subscribers, and the Public, that the Season of 1851, will commence on SATURDAY next, MARCH 23.

The Directors have great gratification in presenting to their Subscribers a Programme for the Fifth Season of the Royal Italian Opera, well calculated, as they trust, to sustain the reputation of an Establishment, which, whether the talent of its individual members, or its general excellence and completeness as a whole be considered, is certainly unrivalled by any similar undertaking.

During the Four past Seasons the most strenuous exertions of the originators, the Directors, and the Artistes of The Royal Italian Opera, encouraged by a generous patronage, have been enlisted in the formation and perfection of this great undertaking, and the present Managers have not only the satisfaction of placing at the command of their Subscribers a most complete Lyrical Establishment; but, feeling confident of its undoubted superiority, anticipate the additional gratification during the extraordinary season of 1851, of entertaining a succession of Audiences assembled from all portions of the civilized World.

To meet these circumstances, the Directors have made arrangements not only to produce several Operas entirely new to their Subscribers, but also for the entertainment of the Strangers who may honour the Theatre with their presence, to give each of the grandest works of the Royal Italian Opera Répertoire, at least once during the Season.

This Répertoire now consists of THIRTY-THREE OPERAS, each of which is complete in itself, with Music, Scenery, Decorations, and Costumes, and capable of Representation at a few hours' notice.

SEMIRAMIDE	Rossini.
LA DONNA DEL LAGO	Rossini.
L'ITALIANI IN ALGERI,	Rossini.
IL BARBIERE DI SEVIGLIA,	Rossini.
LA GAZZA LADRA,	Rossini.
IL TANCREDI,	Rossini.
LA CENERENTOLA,	Rossini.
GUGLIELMO TELL,	Rossini.
MOSE IN EGITTO (ZORA),	Rossini.
OTELLO,	Rossini.
FRANCA,	Verdi.
I DUE FOSCARI,	Verdi.
NABUCCO (ANATO),	Verdi.
NORMA,	Belini.
LA SONNAMBULA,	Belini.
I PURITANI,	Belini.
I CAPULETTI E MONTECCHI,	Belini.
LES HUGUENOTS,	Meyerbeer.
ROBERT LE DIABLE,	Meyerbeer.
LE PROPHETE,	Meyerbeer.
LUCIA DI LAMMERMOOR,	Donizetti.
L'ELISIR D'AMORE,	Donizetti.
LUCREZIA BORGIA,	Donizetti.
ANNA BOLENA,	Donizetti.
MARIA DI ROHAN,	Donizetti.
LA FAVORITA,	Donizetti.
LINDA DI CHAMOUNI,	Donizetti.
DON GIOVANNI,	Mozart.
LE NOZZE DI FIGARO,	Mozart.
MASANIELLO,	Auber.
IL MATRIMONIO SEGRETO,	Cimarosa.
LA JUIVE,	Halevy.
DER FREISCHUTZ,	Weber.

During the present Season of the following Eight Operas, Five (at least) will be produced, viz. :—

A NEW OPERA, ... AUBER.
(Founded on Auber's New Grand Opera, l'Enfant Prodigue, now performing with uninterrupted success, at the Académie Royale, at Paris.)

SAPPHO, ... GOUNOD.
(A Grand New Opera, composed expressly for Madame VIARDOT, and about to be produced at the Académie Royale, at Paris.)

IL FLAUTO MAGICO, ... MOZART.
(For the first time at the Royal Italian Opera.)

Just published, the First and Second Parts, in 4to. uniformly bound in cloth, Price 14s. each. TREATISE ON THE THEORY & PRACTICE OF MUSICAL COMPOSITION.

By G. W. RÖHNER.

THE First Part contains an exposition of scales and intervals; of the fundamental consonant and dissonant chords; and of the other various harmonic combinations which enter into the musical system: it treats of cadences; of transition and modulation; of rhythmic and tonal structure; of passing-notes and appoggiatura; and of the adaptation of music to words. The practice is shown by copious examples, which include some elaborate compositions—amongst them a double chorus in eight real parts. Numerous exercises are given for the student's practice, and a Key to them accompanies the book.

The Second Part treats entirely of CONTRAPPOINT. The student is instructed in that system which admits the use of those intervals only which belong to the diatonic series of the two modes and prohibits all dissonances except such as arise through suspensions; and passing-notes: he is at the same time made acquainted with those modifications of the system required to meet the introduction of chromatic progressions and fundamental dissonances, the essential properties of contrapuntal composition being still preserved. The text is copiously exemplified; several of the examples are adapted to words: the part concludes with a double quartet for voices. Conciseness has in each part been aimed at, not, however, at the expense of any details that might be useful to either the teacher or the student.

N.B. Very favourable notices of the work have appeared in most of the leading metropolitan journals—The Eclectic Review, Art Journal, Magazine of Science, Literary Gazette, Critic, Morning Post, Morning Herald, Court Journal, Bell's Life, Weekly Chronicle, Weekly News, Sunday Times, Weekly Dispatch, Illustrated London News, &c., &c.

London: Longman, Brown, Green, and Longman.

LES MARTYRS,	DONIZETTI.
(A Grand Opera, composed expressly for the Académie Royale, in Paris, for the first time in England.)
EURYANTHE,	WEBER.
(For the first time in England.)
LA VESTALE,	SPONTINI.
(For the first time at the Royal Italian Opera.)
FIDELIO,	BEETHOVEN.
(For the first time on the Italian Stage in England.)
FAUST,	SPOHR.
(For the first time in England.)

The New Operas, IL PRIMO and SAPPHO, are the exclusive Property of the Directors of the Royal Italian Opera, and will both be produced during the Season.

The ENGAGEMENTS for the present season are:—

SOPRANI.
Madame GRISI,
Madame CASTELLAN,
Mademoiselle GIUSEPPINA MORRA,
(Her first appearance in England.)
And Madame VIARDOT.

CONTRALTII.
Mademoiselle VINTALE,
(Her first appearance in England.)
And Mademoiselle ANGRI,
(Her first appearance these two years.)

SECONDA DONNA.
Mademoiselle COTTI.

TENORI.
Signor ENRICO MARALTI, Signor LUIGI MELI,
Signor SOLDI, And Signor TAMBERLIK.

BASSI BARITONI.
Signor RONCONI, Signor ROMMI,
And Signor SALVATORE,
(From the San Carlo at Naples, and the Grand Opera at Barcelona, his first appearance in England.)

BASSI PROFONDI.
Herr FORMES, Signor TAGLIAFICO,
Signor POLONINI, Signor GREGORIO,
Signor FERRARI, Signor RACHE,
And Signor BIANCHI,
(From the Royal Italian Opera at Berlin, his first appearance in England.)

Director of the Music, Composer, and Conductor,
Mr. COSTA.

THE ORCHESTRA
Will, as heretofore, be complete in all its branches.

THE MILITARY BAND will be under the superintendence of Mr. GODFREY.

THE CHORUS will exhibit the same efficiency and perfection as heretofore.

The performance of Ballets will be limited to short Divertissements, and those incidental to Operas, as last Season.

Maitre de Ballet—M. ALEXANDRE. Prompter—Sig. MONTERASI.

Première Danseuse—Mademoiselle LOUISA TAGLIONI.

Artiste Costumiers—Mrs. E. BAILEY and MADAME MARIO.

Decorator—Mr. BLAMIRE. Machinist—Mr. ALLEN.

Scenic Artistes—Messrs. GRIEVE and TELBIN.

Boxes and Stalls may be engaged, and full particulars obtained, at the Box Office of the Theatre, which is open from 11 until 5 o'clock.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

THE Nobility, Subscribers, and the Public, are respectfully informed that this THEATRE WILL OPEN

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), MARCH 22ND,

When will be performed Donizetti's Opera, entitled

"LUCIA DE LAMMERMOOR;"

in which Mdle. CAROLINE DUPREZ will make her first appearance.

To be followed by a New and Original

"BALLET A LA WATTEAU,"

Composed by M. Paul Taglion; the Music by M. Nadaud; the scenery by Mr. Charles Marshall; in which MDLLE. AMALIA FERRARI WILL APPEAR.

The Grand Opera of "GUSTAVUS"
is in active preparation.

The part of Madame Ankerstrom will be supported by Madame FIORENTINI.
The part of Oscar, by Mdle. CAROLINE DUPREZ; and Signor CALZOLARI will sustain the part of Gustavus.

Printed and Published, for the Proprietors, by MICHAEL SAMUEL MYERS, of No. 3 Studley Villas, Studley Road, Clapham Road, in the parish of Lambeth, at the office of MYERS and Co., 22, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden, in the parish of St. Paul, where all communications for the Editor are to be addressed, post paid. To be had of G. Purkess, Dean Street, Soho; Allen, Warwick Lane; Vickers, Holywell Street, and at all Booksellers.—Saturday, March 22, 1851.

The Musical World.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

Terms of Subscription, per Annum, 16s.; Half year, 8s.; Three Months, 4s.; payable in advance, to be forwarded by Money Order, to the Publishers, Messrs. Myers & Co., 22, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden.

No. 13.—VOL. XXVI.

SATURDAY, MARCH 29, 1851.

PRICE FOURPENCE.

REMOVAL.

MUSICAL WORLD OFFICE.

M. S. MYERS & Co.

BEG TO ANNOUNCE THAT THEY HAVE

REMOVED

FROM 37, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN,

TO No. 22, TAVISTOCK STREET,

THREE DOORS FROM SOUTHAMPTON STREET,

Where all Communications for the Musical World are requested to be sent.

M. S. MYERS & Co. take this opportunity of informing those Ladies and Gentlemen about to give Concerts that they execute every description of

PRINTING

ON VERY REASONABLE TERMS.

Programmes, Tickets, Posting Bills, &c., &c.,

PRINTED IN FIRST-RATE STYLE, AND ON THE SHORTEST NOTICE.

PROSPECTS OF ENGLISH MUSICIANS.

THE year 1851 appears likely to benefit all the world, one solitary class of individuals excepted—the English musicians. For them it presents, alas! the dreary blank of ordinary years. For them the Great National Exhibition will be an empty show, so far as their own interests are concerned. The Crystal Palace will display before their envying eyes the prosperity of their compatriots, in almost every vocation, the industry and success of foreign manufacturers and artists. But in vain may they look for a corner in the big fair, with which their special welfare and progress are in any way connected.

The English musician came into the world under an evil star. Had we our Cornelius Agrippa at hand, we would take the first that presented himself, and, drawing his horoscope, prove, beyond question, that the position of the heavens was menacing at the instant of his birth. Why is it that in the other musical cities of Europe, native musicians are patronised by the great, courted by the managers and entrepreneurs, paid by the publishers, praised by the critics, and applauded by the public? And why in England should this be all the other way? Where transcendent merit exists, country must be forgotten, genius apostrophised and rewarded; but, in the article of sheer mediocrity, why should we not copy the French, and support our own? The French have their anybodies and nobodies, whom they applaud and enrich. We, too, have our anybodies and nobodies, whom we discourage and leave to starve. The French are likely to be possessed shortly of a Gounod, and the trumpet of prophecy already begins to blow in his behalf. We, too, might have a Gounod, by consulting the directory, and selecting the first obscure musician who has a heap of untried manuscripts in his portfolio; but no trumpet would be blown, no dramatic vocalist would take him by the hand, no literary journal would pronounce him a Beethoven. Here, but now, was Mr. Charles Horsley, with David, an oratorio, which was given at Exeter Hall, before 2000 persons, and applauded unanimously. Mr. Horsley had been fortunate enough to make the acquaintance of Mr. Sudlow, of Liverpool, Mr. Addison, and Mr. Frederick Davison, of London, who did for him what our readers already know. But all to no purpose. A writer of accredited weight places a stone in a sling, and aims it at Mr. Horsley's David. Reversing the order of Scripture, where David deals the buffet, the Goliath of reviewers slays the dwarf musician, who in vain had struck his harp strings, which found no echo in the heart of the giant; that is, he would have slain him, but, as chance ruled it, the stone fell short of the mark, and David is still alive, and at Liverpool. In simple English, we conscientiously believe, that had M. Gounod, or some other alien, but especially M. Gounod, been the composer of David, that oratorio would have been extolled to the skies. True, Mr. Horsley is an imitator of Mendelssohn, or rather belongs to the school of Mendelssohn, as a painter might belong to that of Titian or Raphael, without fear of reprehension; while M. Gounod, on the contrary, does not imitate Mendelssohn, and belongs to no school whatever, his compositions (at least, those we have heard), declaring plainly that their author has never undergone the discipline of tutoring. So that it is quite fair to say, "Mr. Horsley copies Mendelssohn;" but, with deference, we advise M. Gounod to try his hand, and see what he can make of it. We are satisfied that M. Gounod could no more write eight bars in the style of Mendelssohn than he could note down a score with the hairs of his moustache. And yet M. Gounod is a great man, and Mr. Horsley a nonentity!

In any other country than England a society like the Sacred Harmonic would have waited on Mr. Horsley, incessant, and asked permission to execute his David at one of their concerts. But here Mr. Horsley might just as reasonably expect his Royal Highness Prince Albert to call upon him at his chambers, with the expressed intention of trying the overture with him, à quatre mains, as that one of the committee of the Sacred Harmonic Society should give any manifest signs of being aware that such a work as David was in existence. What is it to the Sacred Harmonic Society that an Englishman has composed an oratorio? Nothing. Why, indeed, should it be anything?—and what can a “merus anglicus” know of music, that he should presume to attempt an oratorio? A writer in the Times complains that we have no school of music in England. We agree with him; but it is not altogether the fault of the Royal Academy, although that institution might have done much that it has left undone. It is the fault of our own professors, who, split into adverse factions, allow the enemy to handle them separately, and break them like the sticks in the fable. The Society of British Musicians was a mere shadow of unity, or rather the shadow of a shadow. It was a cricket-ground, on which every boy wanted to have first innings, and he who was fitted for long-stop would insist on being middle-wicket—et ceteris paribus! The whole business was a farce, and the public visited it with well digested apathy. It died of its own impotence, and sunk into oblivion.

It is not simply esprit de corps that our musicians want. They lack, in a great measure, self-esteem, the pride of country, and a pure love of art. We grieve to utter it, but too many things have gone to prove it, and every day confirms it with fresh argument. English musicians should be glad of the successes of English musicians—should aid and abet them in person. Instead of this, one half of the body does not know what the other half is doing, or capable of doing—and which is worse, does not care. This is sad, but it is true, and until mended, there can be no hope for English musicians. So long as, disunited and indifferent to each other's welfare, our professors allow themselves to be sneered at, or coughed out of their proper places, so long will their position be deplorable to themselves and a shame to their country. Let them unite, hands and hearts, and all will go well. We heard a rumour, the other day, about Mr. Ella and a club; but the intelligent director of the Musical Union seems to have gone to sleep, or to have let the project slip from his memory. Something of the kind would be a good first step.

English musicians, awake and bestir yourselves! You have no lyrical theatre, comic, serious, or mixed. You have no orchestral or vocal institution, since the Philharmonic and Sacred Harmonic Societies are both shut against you. You have no publishers, since you will not make use of each other's music, and the publishers, small blame to them, decline to purchase it. You have no club, since you are scattered about in this overgrown metropolis, without a central point of social union, where you might occasionally meet and discuss your hopes and grievances. You have talent, you have numbers, and you have the public and the great Press with you; but, unless you diligently combine to turn your numbers into strength, and use your talent to good purpose, the public will take no note of you, and the Press, with the best of good wishes, can have nothing to say in your defence. The days of Protection are counted. A lasy musician has no more right to claim exclusive privileges, and a home-made shield against foreign industry and foreign skill, than a lasy agriculturist. Look about you then, in right earnest, English musicians, (Irish, Scotch, Welsh, Manx and all),—look about you; meet together, concoct a scheme, mature it, publish it, and launch it on the waves of action. If you will not do this yourselves, no one will do it for you, and you must be content to remain as you are—without grumbling, mind, and without a plea for grumbling. When you hear that the Oratorio of your clever brother, Horsley, is not even a composition, while the “Sanctus” of your dull neighbour, Gounod, is a phenomenon, you must take it for good and for granted. This, and much more, must you hear, and hear without resenting; for what right have you to feel insulted who lack the energy to establish your claims to respect? “The labourer is worthy of his hire”—Union is strength—let these be your mottos; illustrate them in performance, and you may stand erect, and defy the world.

MILITARY BANDS.

We have elsewhere inserted a letter from Mr. Godfrey, in which that gentleman protests against the fairness of a certain passage in the article on the Royal Italian Opera prospectus, which appeared last week. We have the highest respect for Mr. Godfrey's talent, and for the position he deservedly enjoys; but he has entirely mistaken the meaning of our words. We deny any intention of recommending the dismissal of individual performers from his military band, and we are quite aware that all clarionets are not in C. Our observations were simply directed against a particular clarionet, and a particular ophicleide (the instruments, be it understood, not the players) which, in the supper scene of Don Giovanni, were always disagreeably out of tune. On referring to the article, we cannot find anything that may be forced into an expression of disrespect towards Mr. Godfrey or his executants; but should Mr. Godfrey think otherwise, we beg most promptly to disavow every idea of the sort. The motto Mr. Godfrey cites was that of the Musical Examiner, which first appeared when the Musical World was already in its 12th volume. We trust, however, to be able to dispense “Fair play to all,” without displaying the words, over-head, as a banner.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The opening of this great lyric establishment is postponed from to-night to Thursday next, when Semiramide will be given, with the imperial Grisi in her grand part of the Assyrian queen, Angri in that of Arsace (her best assumption), and Salvatore, the celebrated barytone, his first appearance before an English audience, as Assur. The performance will have an engrossing interest.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

On Saturday evening the season—that is, the Opera season—that is, the Italian Opera season—that is, Mr. Lumley's Italian Opera season, began to good purpose. We say to good purpose, because the opening night was such a one as recalled that coruscating period, when triumphs were manifold and success common; when Lord Blank dined at five, and the Opera was not merely the Opera, but as great a necessity to Lady Blank as her perennial routs, her green-tea conversaziones, and her hybernal trips to the country, where the sun, behind its accustoming cloud—veiled like some beauty, half afraid to kill with the undisguised flashings of her eye, who envelopes her countenance in a screen of lace, that, ambush-wise, she may slay without being seen, until they who are hit cry out, "Quel accident!"—where the sun thus shrouded, at Cheltenham or at Bath, in November or December, bides, drinking his own waters, drawn from his own pump, the fog!

As announced, Lucia di Lammermoor was presented, with a feature of great and novel interest, in the person of the young lady who represented the heroine. The night, as we have hinted, was a brilliant one. Belles and beaux blazed in the boxes, especially belles. These, by the studied punctilio of their attire, and the rise or rather fall of their juste au corps, leaving fuller freedom to the glowing epaulette of woman's Order of Merit, (in the acquirement whereof Beauty stands for valour, and a Damoiselle must be as comely as a Damoiseau courageous,) seemed determined to put to shame the impertinent amber curtains—those amber curtains which, for six long years, had waged a cruel war against the sex, casting a garish hue of tawdry over their dresses, kissing their arms with jaundiced lips which shrivelled their satin smoothness, quenching with derisive darkness and fitful glare the sparkle of their eyes, until, "in effect," dandies dived circularly in the Alley of the Fop, lounged lazily in the lobby, sate sluggishly in the stalls (where, supposing dancers to be stars, astronomers would pitch pavilions, and contemplate with curious telescopes), and scarce an opera-glass was elevated to the grand or upper tiers, scarce a foot directed to the box-encircling lobbies, scarce a shilling tendered to the eager functionary, who, with anxious key, stood tip-toe in expectancy, to open the chosen box where beauty moped in solitude, while the deserted dames, who sat in yellow, rated the ungallantry of the times, quoted "Sir Charles Grandison," bemoaned their fate, and cursed their curtains. But, on Saturday night, although the amber hangings were still there, whether the sex had surpassed itself in the exhibition of that art of dress which it knows so cunningly to use, whether the "Executive Committee, Directors, and Managers" of the Grand National Concerts had brushed away the gold by force of symphony (Hieronymus Cardanus, and other occult philosophers, have declared that sound has an influence upon colour—and why not upon yellow?), or whether Mr. Lumley, on his ladder of supervision, eyeing the work of renovation in his theatre, directed the dyers to steep the hangings in a milder dye, we know not; but we know that the amber curtains looked less like the concentrated essence of sun-flowers and sovereigns, and the ladies looked softer and less sad, while a smile of meek forgiveness played upon each pouting mouth, insinuating to the careful observer that, in every box, a cavalier, restored to his allegiance, though unseen by the general crowd, hung languishing at beauty's beck. On the other hand, however, had the beaux been desirous of deserting their belles for a while, to prostrate themselves ab retro in the stalls, lured by the legs that twinkle in the dance, their dé-marche would have been frustrated, since the stalls, already full, showed not a vacant seat, and, unbuckled of their ardour, the diverging dangles would fain have had to seek new refuge at the abandoned back of beauty's box. This overthrows our theory, just above, as demonstrating that the beaux, having no choice of place, could claim no virtue in choosing what left not an alternative; but it establishes another, prophesying in brighter colours the prosperous "to come" which 1851 is likely to inveigle to Her Majesty's Theatre; and so enough, for the present, de sole et luna et astris, of beau, and matron, and belle. Is not the rest to be found in the records of the Post and Chronicle? Surely our task is to note down the events of the performance.

Lucia di Lammermoor is not a new work, and we defy even the "Thucydides of the Opera," as the philosophic humorist of the Herald quaintly styles the scribe who set forth, in eager prose (or, as Vivier would say, in rhyme étonné de se trouver prose), the story of the ballet, to say anything new about it. The music, even when Donizetti first composed it, although sentimental, tender, and pretty, was not over new; how then should it be so now? The favour so long enjoyed by this opera, which some regard as the chef d'œuvre of the tall and dark Donizetti, has been due, for the most part, to the celebrated singers and actors who, respectively and at various periods, have sustained the three principal parts of Lucia, Edgardo, and Enrico. A long list of gifted cantatori and cantatrici is herein contained—Rubini, Moriani (when Moriani), Mario and Sims Reeves (our British Sims); Persiani, Castellan, and Jenny Lind; Tamburini and Ronconi, not to speak of Coletti; and last not least, except in stature, Duprez, the pillar of French dramatic vocalism, and the parent from whose loins has sprung the fair child, who, on Saturday night, before the perfumed and particular parterre of Her Majesty's Theatre, invested the part of Lucia with a new and a youthful glory, and won a fresh triumph for Donizetti's ten-times fortunate chef d'œuvre—Caroline Duprez, Unproud, or, peradventure, unconscious of her recent successes in the metropolis of hostile Gaul (now amicable, pending the Exhibition), where she chained the gloved and scented lions submissive at her feet, making them fetters of their locks, as Dalilah for Samson—unconscious or, perchance, forgetful of these, the young creature stepped forth in the fountain scene, modestly and timidly, as a dove persuaded from its cote by gentle words, who, with meek eyes and downy plumage, regards its tempter wistfully, as if it would say—"Shall I be protected or hurt, caressed or maimed, fed with soft pellets or plucked of my plumes?" Even when assured of the benevolent and unharmed intentions of the jewelled and gibused assembly, expressed in enthusiastic cheers and clapping of palms, the gentle girl did not feel altogether reassured or free from apprehension, but opened her innocent lips with somewhat of nervousness, to give passage to the first few notes of recitative which preface the cavatina d'intrata, "Perche non ho." A "still small voice," but yet a still soft voice was heard, as of that tender Peri at the gates of the erst-offended but now forgiving Heaven, who petitions, by virtue of a sinner's tear, to have her name restored to the celestial free list (Lalla Rookh). There was a tremor in her tones, as though the soft breeze of a lately awakened emotion had gently bestirred the bright green leaves of her aspirations; but there was no evidence of the wavering intonation so often the accompaniment of nervousness in debutantes. It was the vibrating of the Æolian harp, or the tremulousness of water-lilies on the bosom of a smooth stream. No sooner, however, was she launched into the flowing melodies of the cavatina, than the true quality of Mdlle. Duprez' voice was rendered unmistakably apparent. "A soprano, and a pure soprano," was the general exclamation.

tion of the cognoscenti—not large, strong, piercing, and vigorous as in sopranos robust; but small, tender, fluty, sympatica (Thucydides) and heart touching, with notes here and there high up, that suggested the sky-lark, and notes here and there, lower down, that suggested the nightingale. The pretensions of her voice established, every eye was directed to the person of the debutante—an incarnation, as it were, of youth in its most engaging semblance. Nothing Gaelic could possibly be prettier (no offence to Catherine Hayes, who is known to be one of our idols), nothing Gaelic could more strongly appeal to the hearty sentiment of the mass. We shall say no more on this head. Not being limners, who shall expect minute delineation of features at our pens? The salient characteristics of Mdle. Duprez' style of vocalization are extreme neatness, graceful choice of ornament, rounded periods, expression without excess of accent, or redundancy in the use of the rubato, perfect taste in the licenses of the point d'orgue, clear articulation of the words, and combined ease and finish of execution—which admirable qualities may fairly be traced to the inestimable advantages she must naturally have derived from the instructions of her father, M. Duprez. We need not enter into an analysis of her manner of singing the "Perche non ho," although it presented several new features, upon which, were we in a critical mood, or in the humour of elaboration, we might feathily fasten. Let it suffice that Mdle. Duprez accomplished this test of Italian vocability in a mistress-like fashion; nor was there any reason to plead seventeen springs in extenuation of unfinished achievement, points of inexperienced scholarship, or, indeed, any shortcomings whatever. It was a brilliant piece of execution, and the only thing it wanted, physical force, will certainly be attained when coming summers shall have knit the frame, expanded the chest, ripened the form, matured the voice, and developed the resources, mental and corporeal, of this most charming bud of promise, which (or we are no seers, no sayers of sooth) shall one day be a full rose of glowing hue, fragrant odour, and rich embowerage of petals.

Mdle. Duprez' qualifications as an actress were, of course, unhinted at, until that passage, which may be considered (because it actually is) the point whereon the fortunes of Lucy and the sad catastrophe of the drama turn—the passage where Enrico shows his sister the letter. Here, the demeanour of the interesting stranger indicated deep feeling and an intelligent appreciation of the rôle (Thucydides). When signing the contract, Mdle. Duprez entered with a profound sentiment, entirely undefaced by exaggeration, into the histrionic conditions of the scene, making the situation one rather of tearful despair and quiet resignation than a convulsive struggle between still-enduring love and resolute will, adopting in this, and not unreasonably, we think, the reading of Persiani and the Italians, instead of that of Jenny Lind and the Germans—neither of which, by the way, fulfil Sir Walter's notion of his own heroine, however they may square with what is "evolved" (Thucydides) from the dramatic version of Donizetti's librettist. Her execution of the grand scena in the mad scene, and, above all, the aria with which it concludes, "Spargi d'amaro pianto," was Mdle. Duprez' greatest vocal triumph during the evening. With the exception of a cadenza introducing the last reprise of the rondo—out of place, since it did not accommodate itself to the harmony of the composer, and which we recommend her to omit for the future—the whole was as faultless as it was a charming example of expressive and brilliant singing, and we were not surprised at the enthusiasm of the audience from pit to gallery, or at the unanimous recall, thrice reiterated with triple-throated vehemence, which thrice brought back the gentle daughter of a renowned father to be trebly made aware of the approbation of her delighted hearers. So much for the present of Mdle. Duprez, whose success surpassed the most sanguine wishes of her friends and admirers, even, we make bold to say, of the director himself, and who appears to-night in a new part, Oscar, the page, in Auber's Gustave III.

What we have to say of the other artists of the dramatis personæ must be compressed into a very few words. Calzolari, that excellent, and florid, and zealous, and always perfect singer—Calzolari, the chosen tenore di bravura of M.M. Fétis and Lumley, although he sang to perfection at the rehearsal, and although, contrary to the somewhat anomalous sentiments of some of our contemporaries, the part of Edgardo is precisely suited to his powers—and that it is not essentially the property of a tenore robusto, witness Rubini and Mario, whose versions of the part were infinitely preferable to that of Frascini, the man after Verdi's own heart, the "tenore di maledizione" (Thucydides)—Calzolari did not in the evening do himself justice, owing to a circumstance which may be stated in a few words. On the day of performance Calzolari was arrested with a violent attack of influenza, and, as might be expected, under the gripe of that merciless malady, was unable to develop his resources to advantage. We think, in justice to such a clever and well-tried artist, that Mr. Lee, the ready and eloquent apologist of the establishment, should have been instructed by Mr. Balfe to step forward and explain to the audience the sufferings under which their favourite, Signor Calzolari, was labouring; instead thereof, the audience were left to their own surmises, which might have been favourable or the contrary, extenuating or inculcating, according to complexion, temperament, and humour. Luckily, Signor Calzolari, though deprived of much of his physical force, could not be robbed of those qualities of expression and style which belong to his legitimate and purely vocal method; and therefore, though in the aria where Edgardo maledicts the suffering Lucia, strength and energy failed him, in all the tender passages, and especially in the famous "Fra poco," he exhibited those graces which are so remarkable in his singing, and was applauded pro tanto, and that not coldly.

From the other characters let us single out Signor Bianchi (not Bianchi), who, in Bidebent, exhibited a bass voice of agreeable quality and a good method of singing. Still let us own we see no just cause or reason why this part should have been taken from Frederick Lablache, who has always filled it so much to the satisfaction of the manager, the subscribers, and the public.

Signor Romagnoli, a newly imported tenor, in the little character of Arturo, showed a tall, commanding figure, and transposed his solo in the finale of the second act a note downwards; while Signor Lorenzo gesticulated the part of Enrico in a vehement manner, introducing a quantity of bye-play which no doubt illustrated his own ideas of the part.

Throughout its brilliant career, we never recollect the opera of Lucia di Lammermoor to have passed off with more eclat than on Saturday night. This was, of course, owing, in a great measure, to the engrossing interest attached to the debut of Mdle. Caroline Duprez, and to the entire success which attended it. But there were also other circumstances conducing to the general effect; and, among them, a more satisfactory completeness of ensemble than we have for some time been accustomed to at Her Majesty's Theatre, where the "star" system has absorbed two-thirds of the attention of the management, and weakened the resources of the establishment.

Not a little, however, of the success of the evening was due to Mr. Balfe; who, besides conducting the performance with his accustomed energy, readiness, and untiring zeal, has entitled himself to the praise of the well-judging, by the manifest improvements he has made in the band and chorus. The improved quality and strength of the latter was made manifest in the grand finale of the second act, and in other principal points. The band, after the opera, or rather after the National Anthem, which followed it, executed Auber's overture to La Muette de Portici, with brilliant effect, and obtained genuine and well-deserved applause. The improvement of this powerful instrumental force may be easily imagined when it is known, that besides retaining Piatti, Lavigne, Remusat, Tolbecque, and other artists de la première force, the first violins are strengthened by the addition of Herr Laub (principal solist at the Imperial Josephstadt Theatre in Vienna), Herr Deichmann, an artist of well-known talent, Sig. Squassoni (leader of the orchestra at the grand Opera in Parma), M. Bequie de Pegreville (announced—on doubtful authority—as leader of the Italian Opera in Paris), Mr. Viotti Collins, and Herr Labitzky (one of two sons of Labitzky); besides M. Vogel (first tenor at the Grand Opera in Brussels), Messrs. Rowland and Pratten (double-basses from the Royal Italian Opera), and Herr Muller, (double-bass, from the Grand Opera Darmstadt). The weaker parts of the band are to be found among some of the wind instruments (as last season)—not the trombones, which are good, though noisy, nor the ophicleide (from M. Laurent's Casino), which is excellent. Mr. Pratten, by the way, leaves at the opening of Covent Garden.

After the opera, the National Anthem was sung by all the company, at least all at present in London. The principle verses were sung by Mdle. Duprez, who sings very plain and excellent English, and the charming Mdle. Fiorentini, whose handsome presence was warmly greeted.

We have left ourselves but scant room to do justice to the ballet of M. Taglioni, L'Ile des Amours, one of the most fanciful and exquisite of that accomplished inventor's creations, and one of the most successful. Let us at once—our own style being somewhat garrulous and redundant where the ballet is concerned—avail ourselves of the argument, so daintily set forth in the polished prose of our contemporary, The Morning Herald :—

We are transported to the Isle of the Loves, peopled by shepherds and shepherdesses, the dainty Fleurette being the beauty for whom all youths in tights and slashed sleeves sigh. But the elastic Colin has pantomimed himself into the maiden's heart, and the couple are betrothed; when, lo, the governor of the island is smitten like his subjects, with the charms of the fair bergere. He pushes aside the lover, and submits himself instead. We do not marvel that he is repulsed with indignation; but we do when he passes, in the fulness of his chagrin, a law against "love," to which he hopes to give a good working effect by sending all the shepherds to one side of the island, and all the shepherdesses to the other. The bride he takes home to his own castle, to be mollified and tempted by the luxuries of wealth. In the interim, Cupid, whose dignity has been insulted by the act of the potentate, lets fly a cloud of amoretts among the shepherdesses, who have no objection to a little contraband recreation with their supernatural visitants. The shepherds, however, have revolted at the imperial edict, and coming en masse to the rescue of the shepherdesses, are naturally enraged at the mischief that is going on, and they manage, we know not how, to catch the winged depredators, and imprison them in a cage that must, from its appearance, be made of barley-sugar. The court ladies become—(again we know not how)—the gaolers of the fluttering group; but they succumb to the wiles and artifices of the common enemy, and eventually find themselves in the cage which they had engaged to guard. The arrival of the potentate who rules the island with such strokes of enlightened legislation is the signal for open war between the royal forces and the troops of Cupid. We are soon in possession of the result; but our own feeble words are unable to do justice to it. Let us quote the Thucydides of the theatre, who closes his narrative of the proceedings with this masterly and suggestive sentence :—"Love," he says, "wins Youth and Beauty from the grasp of Authority, and ascends with them in glowing triumph, leaving his defeated foe such consolation as he may find in the fit society of the courtly forms, which, stiff and gorgeous with brocade and hoop, armed at all points with Powder, Patch, and Fan, rise from all quarters of the dull nether-earth, where Authority is left to rule, as best he may—these his proper subjects."

How all this is realised upon the stage may be readily imagined when we say, that Mr. Marshall has steeped his pencil, as it were, in sunbeams, and drawn tableaux one, two, three, and four, of which, had Watteau seen them, he, Watteau, would have been jealous. Après of Watteau—whose artificial nature, exhibited in manifold pictures, and emails, and chasings, of which the French are unanimously amorous, has been the foundation of M. Taglioni's pretty ballet—listen to the oracle of the Opera Bar, the smart brochure, which, we are pleased to observe, is again distributed in the boxes and stalls, and which is so manifest an improvement on the lean and ancient bill of fare, and which quotes the Musical World, a proof of good taste and discrimination; the oracle of the Opera Bar will tell you who was Watteau.

Anthony Watteau, one of the most agreeable painters of the French school, was born at Valenciennes, in 1684. His parents were in indigent circumstances, and he was placed with an obscure artist in his native city, to cultivate a talent which manifested itself early. When he was about 16 years old, having already surpassed his preceptor, he connected himself with a scene-painter on his way to Paris, and for some time assisted his associate in decorating the opera-house in that city. When this engagement was completed Watteau found it difficult to rescue himself from the obscurity and embarrassment into which he fell, when happily he became acquainted with Claude Gillot, a painter of grotesque and fabulous subjects, who was pleased with his works and disposition. Gillot afforded him an asylum in his own house, and then instructed him in all he knew of the art, and found an apt agreeable scholar in his protégé. With the help he thus received from Gillot, and his own admiration and attentive study of the Luxembourg gallery, he formed a taste for colouring, which, if not as grand, is at least as agreeable, as ever was employed by any one. He attempted to prepare himself for historical painting, and studied at the Academy with that view; he even was so successful as to obtain the first prize there for an historical picture; but happily he discovered a character of subject quite original, and exactly suited to his taste, for which he wisely deserted history, and which has since formed plenty of aspirants, but has never been so successfully practised. The theatre, the opera, fêtes champêtres, masquerades, pantomimes, puppet-shows, afforded him his figures; the gardens of the Luxembourg and of the Tuilleries, of Versailles and St. Cloud furnished the scenes. In these nature prevails only in colouring, and that is exquisite, rich, delicate, clear and full; bright without grandness, and deep without blackness; laid on with a freedom, fulness and delicacy of touch, which no one ever surpassed. The true character of Watteau's pictures is French gentility, gay, cheerful, debonnaire, of which self-satisfaction is the surest basis. Watteau visited England in the reign of George I., but did not enjoy his health here, and returned to France in about a year, where he died in 1721, at the early age of 37.

Thus was Watteau—a good limner and a zealous.

Mdle. Amalia Ferraris, who was received with the highest marks of favour, has improved, not only as a dancer but as a mimist. Retaining those remarkable qualities of strength, agility, and firmness, which won her such great applause last year, she has acquired a large addition of grace and legereté. She looked the Watteau shepherdess charmingly, and her pantomime all through was very natural and pretty. In the scene where she ridicules the stilted minuet of the antique "grande dame" (admirably represented by Mdle. Petit Stephan), she exhibited a great deal of archness and lively humour. Her pas de Trebuchet (in which she was cleverly seconded by the young and improving Mdle. Aussandon) was very piquant, and in her grand pas de deux with M. Charles, who throughout the ballet is a very squirrel of activity, she introduced some of the most difficult and elaborate of her tours de force, with unfailing success. Mdle. Ferraris was continually honoured by the warmest applause, and has risen another step in the estimation of the public.

The two principal "loves" were Mdle. Tedeschi and Mdle. Aussandon, who looked and leaped their parts to admiration. Mdle. Tedeschi is ambitious. Let her not abandon grace for the sake of mere display; let her not forget that the great charm in feats of strength and activity lies in the ease which half conceals their difficulty from the looker on. Un mot suffit. M. Gosselin was perfectly bombastic, rococo, and amusing, as the amorous governor of the "Isle of Loves," and the subordinate parts were well played by M. M. Venafrà, Gouriet, Ehrick, and Di Mattia. M. Charles has wonderfully improved in his dancing. Nothing now can prevent him from occupying the very highest place in his profession, providing his zeal and enthusiasm continue unabated.

We have already hinted that Mr. Marshall had surpassed himself. Let us add that the costumes were deliciously fresh and gaudily appropriate. In the case of the Grande Dame, however, who danced the minuet, as Mdle. Petit Stephan has very good feet, she might advantageously curtail half an inch of her dress, and let the audience have a sight of them. Something would be gained, and nothing marred, by this concession. The machinery worked admirably, and the cage in which the "loves," and then the ladies of the court, were confined, is a pretty fantastical conceit, well carried out. Although a little long, the ballet went off with increasing applause, and brought the curtain down triumphantly at a quarter past midnight. L'Île des Amours, by the way, is a real ballet of action, and we are grateful to M. Taglioni for having made a new attempt to revive this agreeable species of entertainment, which has been gradually disappearing, to make way for mere skeleton frames, in which a pas seul, a pas de deux, trois, or quatre, and one or two pas de caractères are the prominent figures. We feared, indeed, that the real ballet was going out of fashion altogether. M. Taglioni has pleasantly disappointed us, as he did by the way, even more remarkably, in his spirited Metamorphoses.

M. Nadaud's music is brilliant, light, varied, and thoroughly dansante. There is also, as we have hinted, a fugue in it. True, M. Nadaud has dipped, here and there, into a few of the ballets of the Académie Royale de Musique et de la Danse, as it was once called, and may be again; but he has dipped discreetly, and there is much of his own that sparkles with unborrowed light, and loses nothing by comparison. M. Nadaud is a good musician, and knows his business. He conducted the ballet with his usual talent.

And now we have said all we have to say on the opening night of Her Majesty's Theatre. To night Auber's Gustave is to be produced, with Mdle. Caroline Duprez as Oscar, and Madame Fiorentini as Madame Ankerstrom; while, last not least, the incomparable Carlotta Grisi will make her rentrée in the scene of the masked ball.

MDLLE. CAROLINE DUPREZ.

Our subscribers in the country will doubtless be pleased to read the opinions of some of the metropolitan papers on the debut of this young and highly promising singer, who, were she nothing more than the daughter of her father, the French Braham, would still be an object of universal interest in the musical world. We are, moreover, glad to be able to show that we do not stand alone in our high opinion of the capabilities of Mdle. Duprez. The Daily News, after some preliminary remarks about her birth and parentage, her late success in Paris, her cordial reception on Saturday night, and the agreeable impression produced by her appearance and confirmed during the progress of the opera, thus criticises her vocal and histrionic merits.

"Mdle. Duprez is not one of those who carry an audience by storm. She is very young—not yet eighteen, we understand—and her physical powers have evidently not yet reached their full maturity. She is of middle height, with a slender and somewhat girlish figure, but she is exceedingly handsome and full of grace in all her movements. She has fine features, and her jet-black eyes are of uncommon brilliancy and power. The beauty of her luxuriant tresses adds to the charm of her appearance. Her voice, we are convinced, has not yet attained its full strength and volume. Its tone is thin: in this respect resembling Persiani's, but softer and sweeter. It is, indeed, entirely free from the shrillness which is often found in voices of this kind. It is a pure soprano, and has been so well formed by a skilful method, that, throughout its extensive scale, it has the quality of a fine violin. But it is in the lower tones that its charm chiefly lies; they are exquisitely sweet and mellow. There can be no doubt, in short, that Mdle. Duprez's voice requires nothing more than a little time and moderate exercise (for now that she is lancée upon the stage there is too much danger of its being too severely taxed) to become an organ not surpassed by any singer of our day.

"Mdle. Duprez resembles Persiani, not only in some qualities of voice, but also in the high finish of her execution and the artistical character of her style. Persiani, like Mdle. Duprez, is the daughter of one of the greatest tenor singers and accomplished musicians of his time; and both of them have profited by paternal training and instruction. Mdle. Duprez sings with the most perfect truth of intonation, her voice is pure musical tone without the slightest mixture of any sound caused by faulty emission, her phrasing is beautiful, and her elocution is clear, elegant, and expressive. In her embellishments she is much simpler than Persiani; a difference which we ascribe to the circumstance that her father, as an Italian singer, adopted the more modern style, which eschews the profusion of florid ornament formerly belonging to the Italian school.

"As an actress, Mdle. Duprez has great gifts; but they, probably, require, even more than her vocal powers, to be developed by more maturity of age. It is impossible to be a great actress at seventeen, but Mdle. Duprez already acts with so much grace, feeling, and intelligence, that we can easily imagine her, at five-and-twenty, raised to the very pinnacle of her art. Her Lucia had a great deal of Walter Scott's own conception of the character of Lucy; soft, tender, and devoted; unable to bear the force of violent passion, but driven at once, by her lover's cruelty, to madness and death. In the opening scene, the gentleness with which Lucy bore Edgar's moody irritability was beautifully represented. The horror with which, writhing on the ground, with features convulsed and eyes distended with horror, she listened to his imprecations in the malediction scene, was a trait of originality which showed Mdle. Duprez's genius for her art. In her final scene she exhibited only the softer traits of Lucy's madness—the fond reminiscences mixed with paroxysms of grief. Her whole performance of the part was a charming picture; it might have been stronger, but could scarcely have been more beautiful."

Except in the preference accorded to the lower notes of Mdle. Duprez's voice, and the comparison with Persiani, we agree with most of the above remarks, which evidently proceed from an experienced pen, and contain much vigorous and sensible criticism. The Times, in an article less excursive, but not less emphatically kind writes as follows:—

"Mademoiselle Caroline Duprez was warmly greeted on her first entrance, and at once struck her audience by her light and youthful appearance. Her dress was simple but picturesque, her gestures graceful and unaffected. She was not the Lucia elevated into a tragic heroine, but the artless, sensitive girl, gently winning the sympathies, not taking them by storm. Her age is said not to exceed 18, and as an almost necessary consequence her voice, though beautifully fresh, has not yet attained its full volume. She is not as yet a powerful singer, but nevertheless the organ is equal throughout, and there is not a note without its value. Her training must have been most admirable. Through the whole character her execution was a remarkable specimen of steadiness and truth; every passage was perfectly rendered; not a single fault of intonation was committed; and it should be observed, that she gained in favour as the opera progressed. Those who had been most susceptible of the juvenile want of power at the beginning, were surprised by the effect which she gave to the concluding aria in the mad scene. The grace, delicacy, and precision with which she executed the difficult ornaments were most gratifying to the ear, and seldom do we find the quality of neatness raised to so high a position. The acting of the mad scene is in keeping with all the rest—not a terrific display of violence, but a quiet exhibition of grief. It is a great virtue in Mdle. Caroline Duprez that she does not attempt too much in the histrionic way, but that all she does attempt she carries out thoroughly. The poignant anguish of the marriage scene, for instance, could not have been more impressively represented than by the simple means which the young vocalist employed. She was called at the end of each act, but her great triumph was the aria above alluded to, where she was summoned back by universal acclamations before Edgardo had commenced his finale."

The Morning Post begins by some very apt observations on the dangers attached to a great name, which, says our contemporary, "if a legitimate passport to public interest, is at the same time one which subjects the bearer to an unusually severe scrutiny." Nothing can be truer, and nothing more true than what the writer subsequently admits—that Mdle. Duprez "came most honourably through the trying ordeal." His criticism is as below:—

"Mdle. Duprez possesses a pure, silvery, soprano voice, not very full in quality, but remarkably fresh and youthful. It is firm throughout, and clear as crystal in the upper register, especially from E in the fourth space to C above. Assiduous exercise has rendered it very flexible, without, however, impairing the brilliancy of its tone. Her method is perfect. Nothing can be more artistic than the vocal management, or more systematic than her execution. She has not sung many bars before you feel that whatever difficulty she may attempt will certainly be accomplished; so scrupulously correct is her style, so composed and steady her manner. The young lady's intonation too, if we except a slight tendency to rise (which might, on this occasion, have been the result of nervousness), is irreproachable. As an actress she is judicious and pleasing, her demeanour is lady-like, her countenance expressive and interesting, and her figure, though petite, symmetrically formed. We have rarely seen so carefully studied and level a performance from so young an artist; and when more matured study and experience shall have enabled her to throw off a certain mechanical and tutored air, with which she may now occasionally be reproached, and taught her the art of hiding art, we may look far and wide for her superior. At present she lacks abandon and spontaneous emotion. For this reason it was in those portions of the opera which do not require great powers of expression or dramatic intensity, that her abilities were most advantageously displayed. The aria d'intrata, for instance, was a masterpiece of executive skill. Anything more graceful and finished than her performance of this could scarcely be imagined. The subject was first delivered with captivating simplicity and elegance: its subsequent embellishments were at once thoroughly appropriate and strikingly original; the entrées managed with exquisite taste, and the bravura passages rendered with a brilliant fluency and distinctness of articulation worthy of unqualified commendation. In the duet "Sulla Tomba," and the contract-scene, she was, for reasons already given, less successful. In these, the absence of pathos and dramatic colouring somewhat marred the effect of her otherwise correct and excellent performance. Her execution, however, of portions of the difficult scena in the third act was of rare and redeeming beauty. We never heard the concluding three-four movement given with so much delicacy and point. The conception of the florid air was perfectly original, and its details were elaborated to a degree of elegance and refinement rarely attained by any vocalist. We especially admired her delivery of the chromatic volatine, and succeeding syncopated passages; the effect produced was novel as admirable, and richly merited the enthusiastic applause which it elicited.

"Mdle. Duprez's success was complete; and Mr. Lumley may congratulate himself upon the accession of another bright star to his musical galaxy."

We are sure that Mdle. Duprez will have the good sense to appreciate and be grateful for the hints contained in the above friendly and able estimate of her accomplishments, which, coming from the pen of a musician, carries with it double weight. Not less encouraging is the compte rendu of the Morning Herald, in one of the best critiques we have ever read from the pen of the eloquent and impartial reviewer to whom the musical department of that journal is entrusted. Our contemporary also sets out with some preliminaries, which having elsewhere disclosed, we need not here reiterate. The following will serve our purpose, which we insert, however, with a protest against the fact of Mdle. Duprez possessing a physiognomy of the Israelitish cast:—

"The personal appearance of the debutante at once prepossessed the spectator in her favour. Small in stature, and evidently not yet far emerged from girlhood, piquantly Jewish in the cast of countenance, in demeanour sweetly modest and unassuming, the new Lucia kindled universal sympathy the moment she set foot upon the stage. Although the ordeal through which she was about to pass was a severe one, her self-possession, notwithstanding the vehemence of the salutation, did not desert her, and she delivered the 'Perché non ho,' a test of no ordinary kind, with as much excellence probably as she would have exhibited had the circumstances been less exciting and the stake at issue less important. The characteristics of Mdle. Duprez's voice are sweetness and flexibility, frequently reminding the listener of the instrumental delicacy of the organ of Persiani. Power it certainly has not, and hence we do not imagine that for a year or two, at least, she will be enabled to grapple with parts of the higher tragic class. The cultivation to which her voice has been subjected is betrayed in the smoothness and docility of her execution, which is exquisitely neat and finished, nothing occurring from the first note to the last that is crude or irritating. This easy and unforced delicacy, combined with an intonation uniformly just, ensures most agreeable results; and though as a vocal demonstration no effect is produced that is large or astonishing, we have seldom had so pleasing a Lucia—one so personally accordant with the spirit of the story. She rendered the well-known cavatina to which we have referred with simple and graceful freedom; and we were soon put out of fear for the floriture, all the feats which declare the ripeness of exercise, and the command of voice which it is its function to establish, being plainly within close and immediate reach. The child and pupil of the finest dramatic singer in Europe, the musical education of Mdle. Duprez has been conducted under peculiar advantages; and the fruits are before us in purity of style, correctness of articulation, nicely-balanced phrasing, and elocutionary exactness. These qualities were vividly manifested in the two duets which follow the cavatina, and again in the mad scene. We could scarcely expect to find, in short, a more adroit and better-disciplined order of mechanism.

"But it is only in the executive needs of singing that Mdle. Duprez will gain her present laurels. She seems to be wanting in the quick and fiery impulse which animates the great dramatic artist—though for this her extreme youth must be accountable. A year or two will effect a great difference in this respect. In the meanwhile, her Lucia, as an histrionic delineation, is of inferior interest. The attitudes and the gestures which shape and identify emotion are the suggestions of the master rather than the inspirations of the mind; and this limitation to the line and rule of scholarship makes the outline sharp but truthless. This was apparent in the scene with her brother, when she is imposed upon by the fiction which breaks her heart; and more strongly still in the great and trying situation which closes the second act. The passage of madness was conducted upon similar principles of representation. Like Persiani's, it was a display of the choicest singing; but the dramatic import sought to be developed by appropriate action, and the assumption of maniac wildness, could hardly be said to be impressive for the reasons we have stated. The applause, nevertheless, which echoed through the house, was at all times of the most encouraging kind. Not only was the object of it called before the curtain at the conclusion of the first and second acts, but twice even when the opera terminated. The public never bestowed their compliments with greater emphasis."

Our Morning Chronicle has been misled; but we can inform our readers, having perused the article on Saturday's performance, that Mdlle. Duprez is more lavishly eulogised, and more gently turned upon the wheel of criticism, in that important sheet, than in any of those we have quoted. If we have room we may probably insert a specimen of it in our next. Meanwhile we hope that Mdlle. Duprez, and her bay-crowned progenitor, are satisfied with their welcome, and will consider that the London public and the London press have done justice, not less to their hearts than to their heads, in the reception they have unanimously accorded to the young and charming debutante.

SECOND PHILHARMONIC CONCERT.

THE attendance was as numerous as at the first concert, and the programme better selected, which the following will shew:

PART I.

Sinfonia, No. 11 (Grand)	-	-	-	Haydn.
Quintett, "Tell me, good Ali" (Azor and Zemira)	-	-	-	-
Miss Kearns, Miss Thornton, Miss Williams, Mr. Benson, and Mr. Bodda	-	-	-	Spohr.
Introduction and Rondo, Pianoforte, M. W. H. Holmes	-	-	-	Mendelssohn.
Recit. and Aria, "Non so donde viene," Mr. Bodda	-	-	-	Mozart.
Overture (Anacreon)	-	-	-	Cherubini.

PART II.

Sinfonia Eroica	-	-	-	Beethoven.
Quartett, "The Nightingale," Miss Kearns, Miss Williams, Mr. Benson, and Mr. Bodda	-	-	-	Mendelssohn.
Concertino (MS.) Clarinet, Mr. Lazarus	-	-	-	Molique.
Terzetto, "Night's lingering shades" (Azor and Zemira) Miss Kearns, Miss Thornton, and Miss Williams	-	-	-	Spohr.
Overture (MS.)	-	-	-	Schlösser.

The symphonies are chef d'œuvres, on which it is unnecessary to enlarge, their merits being familiar to every musician and every amateur, more especially to those musicians and amateurs who subscribe to the Philharmonic. Haydn's symphony was played in a manner which left no point for the severest critic to lay hold upon, except the tempo of the minuet; this at first was taken too slow, but in the reprise was restored to the proper time. Strange to say the charming andante, commonly known as the clock movement, escaped its customary encore. The Eroica was given with great energy, but still without that delicacy of finish and variety of light and shade which its faithful interpretation demands. The allegro con brio, the most colossal movement even Beethoven ever wrote for the orchestra, produced an overpowering effect; the finale, the composer's ultimatum as a display of contrapuntal ingenuity, almost as elaborate and masterly in its way as the finale to Mozart's "Jupiter," was never better appreciated by the audience; and the sublime Marcia Funebre made a profound impression, Mr. Costa taking the time to perfection, and carefully avoiding the dragging which is so apt, with many conductors, to deprive the movement of half its effect. The schërzo was very well played; but the trio for the horns was a sad mess, and caused many inquiries in the room as to the absence of Mr. Jarrett from his place in the orchestra, for which we shall endeavour to account in our next. The Marcia, too, escaped its encore, which leads us to hope that the subscribers are beginning to see the inconvenience and absurdity of repetitions in general.

The great event of the evening, at least that which engrossed the general interest, and must be noted as the only novelty, was the performance of Mendelssohn's Rondo in B minor by Mr. W. H. Holmes, a gentleman whose distinguished merits as a pianist should long ere this have introduced him to the Philharmonic subscribers. Our opinion of Mr. Holmes must be familiar to all our readers. That we place him, and have always placed him, among the most remarkable pianists, not in England only, but in Europe, it is scarcely necessary to insist, since happily our view of his merits is that of the entire profession, and in short of every amateur of the piano in this country who has had the opportunity of hearing him, with the capability of judging of his pretensions. In selecting the rondo of Mendelssohn Mr. Holmes would appear to have been determined to test his powers of self-control to the uttermost. A more "fidgetty," and a more difficult piece, for piano with orchestral accompaniments, was never composed even by Mendelssohn himself, most of whose works demand as much calmness and presence of mind as perfect mechanism, varied and passionate expression, firmness and brilliancy of execution. Mr. Holmes, however, has been too long possessed of these desirable qualities to be deprived of them at a moment's notice, and on an occasion when they were more than ever necessary. His performance was a masterly exhibition of manual dexterity, combined with all the highest qualities of expression. There is a peculiar elasticity in this gentleman's touch, which admits of some exquisitely delicate effects peculiarly his own, added to a plasticity of tone, that, yielding to the impulse of the mind, gives birth to a variety of gradation, rendering monotony of effect impossible in his performance. Though evidently very nervous at the outset (and had he not been so, Mr. Holmes could never have been the sensitive, or as the French better express it, sensible pianist he is), the feeling, which thus naturally oppressed him, was almost instantaneously overcome, and established in the full possession of his resources, the pianist gave way to his impressions, succeeded in completely engrossing the attention of the whole audience, and in achieving a great and unequivocal triumph. The applause which followed his performance was as unanimous and enthusiastic as that which greeted his appearance on the platform, and Mr. Holmes may be fairly said to have won for himself, by this coup d'essai, what he has long enjoyed in the estimation of the profession in general, a place in the opinion of the critical audience of the Philharmonic, not inferior to that enjoyed by the most accomplished pianists whose presence has graced the orchestra of the society.

The Clarinet fantasia was interesting in a double sense, as a finished performance in which beauty of tone and perfect mechanism were combined, and (which is not to be wondered at in Herr Molique) as music of a far higher order than is ordinarily written for solo displays. Mr. Lazarus was loudly and deservedly applauded by the whole room. The success of two eminent English performers at one Philharmonic concert is a matter for general congratulation, and we should be delighted to record the same distinction in favor of two English composers.

The hacknied overture to Anacreon was brilliantly played, and much applauded; that of Herr Schlösser, a novelty, since it was never given before, being no more nor less than a piece of empty bombast, will, we trust, be allowed to retire into its former obscurity.

The vocal music was admirably selected, but, with the exception of Mendelssohn's quartet, inefficiently executed. Mr. Bodda deserves credit for selecting the very difficult song of Mozart (a magnificent composition, by the way), and for the zeal which he had evidently employed in studying it; but at present it is too much for him. From the general charge of inefficiency let us exempt Miss Williams, who, as usual, was perfect to a note.

Reviews of Music.

"A MORNING AND EVENING CATHEDRAL SERVICE."—J. L. HOPKINS, Mus. Bac.—Joseph Surman.

The gradually-spreading desire of elevating the character of our Cathedral Service is a sign of the times to which it is impossible to attach too great an importance. Our cathedral organists, influenced by the improved taste of congregations, whence acquired it is not here necessary to discuss, dissatisfied with the elder twaddle to which the apathy of our forefathers gave authority, either draw upon the works of the great composers, church and un-church, or make new music of their own, that more fully, and with more dignity, illustrates the sublime passages of our English Common Prayer, which fall into the Morning and Evening Services of the Church. Mr. J. L. Hopkins, organist of the Rochester Cathedral, is of these latter, and has eagerly girded himself to the task of praising God in music.

If the Morning and Evening Services of Mr. Hopkins cannot be strictly lauded as pure specimens of Church style, or as masterpieces of simple and grand harmony, or as perfect examples of vocal part writing, or as essays in which the several laws of counterpoint are rendered nobly conducive to the highest ends of music, they may at least be extolled as the earnest and sincere labours of one who has evidently the best musical aspirations, united to a just feeling of the solemn task he has taken in hand. The great fault we have to note against Mr. Hopkins is a general indecision of key, especially in respect to the major and minor modes, which he continually confounds, or rather muddles together. Take as an instance the passage beginning, page 4, on the unison, "Thou art the King Glory." The first four bars are in C minor; in the dominant passage, bar 8, we have the chord of C major; and in the first bar of page 5, the chord of the 6th of C minor. How much clearer would the passage be if the whole were in the minor! In the bass solo immediately following, the progression of harmony is exceedingly confused. The E natural, with the C in the bass and B flat for the voice, would naturally lead you to suppose that you were going to F minor; but, instead of taking the A flat in the common chord of that key, Mr. Hopkins makes the B flat a suspension, and the next chord becomes the dominant on B flat, leading to E flat—whereby the ear is disappointed, and the only effect obtained is a confusion between the keys of F minor and E flat. Further on, at the words, "Thou didst abhor," where much the same progression occurs, by retaining the chord of F minor, the confusion is avoided; but, at the end of the passage, on the words, "Sharpness of death," the cadence is even more distorted than in the passage already alluded to. The ante-penultimate and penultimate bars give you clearly reason to expect that the cadence will be on the dominant of E flat; instead of which, on the word "Death," you find yourself, unexpectedly and disagreeably, on the 6-4-2 on B flat, in the oft-threatened key of F minor, which again turns out a disappointment—for, in the third bar, we have another modulation to E flat, and at last a full close on B flat. The fugato on the words, "Thou sittest at the right hand of God," is clever and effective; but surely the A, in the voice part and in the accompaniment, in bar 3 of line 2, should be natural, otherwise there is again a needless confusion between F minor and F major. This otherwise good fugato is damaged by a most perplexing uncertainty of key, commencing with a progression, after the pedale on C, which finds itself, at the end, uncomfortably lodged in the key of C major. In the next page, line 2, bar 2, on the words, "Thou hast redeemed," instead of what would be a flowing and natural cadence in the key of F (which the ear decidedly anticipates), the 6-4 on C changes, in a very unsatisfactory manner, to an anticipated tonic in the key of C major, which again makes its appearance on the words, "Make them to be numbered," as unwelcome, because a unnaturally, as before. Moreover, in the 3rd bar, an inversion of the chord of the 9th on G (the last in the bar) is introduced in an irregular manner. In page 8, line 2, bars 3 and 4, on the words, "Worship thy name ever," there is a passage of contrary motion, between the highest voice part and the bass, which, though exceedingly bold, is by no means agreeable or correct. The voice part has F, G, A, B flat, C, D, E, crotchets, F—while the bass has G, F, E, crotchets, D minim, C, B flat, crotchets, A—which chord of the 6th, thus attained, is followed, in a most unallowable manner by the 6-5-4 on B natural, (an inversion of the chord of the 13th) the effect of which is as unpleasant as it is unexpected. In the last bar of the last line of the same page, and the first bar of the next page, there is some more confusion between major and minor B flat; and, at the bottom of the same page, last bar but two, another inversion of the chord of the 9th is illegally pressed into the service. In the last bar but one of page 11, in the "Jubilate," the chord of the 6th on B flat requires an F added, before it can properly be resolved upon the full chord of F major.

These are but a few of the errors to be found in the "Morning Service;" but they are enough for our purpose, and enough, we hope, since they have been noted with the best intentions, to induce Mr. Hopkins to cast a more critical eye over any future work he may compose, ere submitting it to the public. We may at once say that the "Magnificat" and "Nunc dimittis," which compose the Evening Service, are almost entirely free from these faults, much more clear and masterly, much better arranged for the voices, much simpler, much less clogged with unnecessary modulations and unnatural and unexpected cadences, much more decided as to keys, and infinitely more satisfactory in respect of rhythm and melody in general. When we have specified the last bar of line 1, page 16, where the bass note of the chord of the 6th is unnecessarily doubled in the voice parts, we have done with all objections. Independently of this, there are many really beautiful passages in both pieces. The harmony and the melody, in "My soul doth magnify," and throughout the three following pages, are not only unexceptionably correct, but rich, effective, and strictly devotional in style. The whole of the passage, on the words, "He that is mighty," is not merely free from all error, but positively fine, while the pedale passage on F, in the next page, is charming, and the brief transition to the dominant of C minor, in the second line, as agreeable as it is unlooked for. The treble solo in B flat, "He hath showed strength," and the duet in the same key, and on the same words, are both flowing and melodious. But perhaps the best parts in the whole are the quartet for two trebles, tenor and bass, in E flat, and the chorus, "Glory, glory," in the same key, which follows. In the first, the passage on the words, "Abraham and his seed for ever," is remarkably graceful. Here, indeed, the sequence of 7ths is happily introduced. In the second, the passage on the words, "As it was in the beginning, &c.," again introduced in the "Nunc dimittis," (which has also a very pleasing, though very brief duet for two trebles), is bold and impressive, and brings the work to a climax with appropriate dignity.

Honestly and candidly, we recommend Mr. Hopkins to burn his "Morning Service," and to compose another worthy of association with his "Evening Service," a task of which we are sure he is capable, and which we shall not be sorry to learn he is willing to undertake. Mr. Surman, who has already done us the favour to introduce in public an Anthem by Dr. Elvey, which met with well merited applause, will further render his subscribers and ourselves his debtors by according the same advantage to the "Magnificat," and "Nunc dimittis," of Mr. J. L. Hopkins, which are fully worthy of being presented to the subscribers of the London Sacred Harmonic Society. We know that it is needless to offer this hint to the elder and parent institution, which, with how much justice let others decide, arrogates exclusively to itself such a high and mighty position.

"A LAY FOR THE CHURCH"—SONG OF THE REFORMATION.
Poetry by Andrew Park. Music by R. Macpherson. Z. T. Purday.

We can scarcely admit Mother Church, although, as stated in the joint lay of Messrs. Park and Macpherson, she be three hundred autumns old, to be a fit subject for a comic song, or for a parody; but Mr. Andrew Park, it is evident, holds not with us in this matter, and has manfully made Mother Church the subject of an amusing travesty of Mr. Chorley's "Brave Old Oak;" while Mr. Macpherson, who, eke, it would seem, holds not with us in this matter, has blithely caricatured Mr. Edward Loder's familiar tune. Mother Church, aged 300, if she be no purer than at her birth, is by no means of the purest; and Mr. Park, in his tetrastich, may beau make her "stand with the word in her hand," "crowned" with whatever his poetic fancy may suggest (the idea of Mother Church being crowned is rather droll even for a "lay"—some less squeamish poetaster, on the taste of it, will be giving us a stave in "King Death's" style—"King Church is a rare old fellow!")—Mr. Park may beau do this, and may beau intimate that,

"Tho' Roman guile should her name revile,
And fain would lay her low,
She'll prove that her arm has a god-like charm,
To vanquish every foe!
And still by her truth in perennial youth,
Her fame more lofty rise;
Tho' troubled awhile, she soon shall smile,
This offspring of the skies!"

Mr. Park, we repeat, may beau indite a whole volume of such fustian huitains, and may beau get Mr. Disraeli, or any other red-hot worshipper of past mistakes, to chant it viva voce at a Tory revel—he will not mend the matter. In these days of happy should-be tolerance, the best thing, both for Protestant and Catholic, is to shut their eyes to the past, thank their stars that a man may declare his honest religious sentiments without fear of stake or "question," or, indeed, of any thing but the fiery tongue of bigotted old women and hungry partizans—which, luckily, is an empty sound, harmless but as inducing a desire to slumber—shut their eyes to the past, and read the Musical World in peace and quietness, without a thought of what may be the peculiar sentiments on matters of ecclesiastical ceremony or spiritual faith, of one, any, or all of its countless purchasers and subscribers—of the editor, sub-editor, and unknown number of assistants, who form the staff, even to the printers, publishers, readers, composers, and devils, not to take into count the foreign and provincial agents.

Seriously, we think Church controversies should be confined to prose polemics, or meetings in town-halls and corn-markets. Such things have nothing in common with an innocent, and humanizing, and peaceful, and refining art like music. We, therefore, class them with the "Consumption," and other "Hospital" songs, we condemned in a former number, on the same charge of inappropriateness. We find nothing in the present "lay" of Messrs. Andrew Park and Macpherson to exempt it from the general ban.

Foreign.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 11.—FIRST CONCERT OF JENNY LIND.—The first appearance of Miss Lind before a New Orleans public attracted, as may be imagined, a concourse of brilliancy, beauty, and fashion, such as has seldom, if ever, graced the St. Charles' Theatre. The spacious interior presented a magnificent appearance. Every nook and corner, every "jutting frieze and coign of vantage" was occupied. The capacity of the building was tested to its utmost by the throng which had gathered to render homage to the genius of the Swedish vocalist. We recognized among the vast multitude almost all the eminent artists and amateurs of our city. The arrangements for the accommodation of the spectators were admirable, and no crowding or inconvenience was experienced. The first piece upon the programme was the overture to Mañana, played by an orchestra of some thirty-five musicians, conducted with consummate skill by Mr. Benedict, and received with applause. After the overture we had the pleasure of hearing Signor Belletti in an aria from the Maometto of Rossini. Next came the bright particular star—Jenny Lind herself, dressed with elegance and taste, alike removed from the affectation of extreme simplicity and the extravagance of overloaded ornament. Miss Lind was welcomed with cordiality, though hardly with enthusiasm. The audience, however, warmed to her as she proceeded, and long before the close of the performances they displayed the characteristic ardour of the South, in the fervour and frequency of their plaudits. Miss Lind sang a variety of pieces, as if with the express object of exhibiting the manifold resources of her voice. We thought nothing could be finer than the first air "Come per me sereno;" until we listened to the duo from Il Turco in Italia; and we considered it impossible to surpass the cadence that terminated the air from the Magic Flute, until we were compelled still more to admire the trio from Meyerbeer's Camp of Silesia. We had been told that Jenny Lind lacks soul and we went with that impression. It strikes us that over fastidious critics have done her gross injustice. If by soul is meant dramatic and lyric capabilities, we humbly conceive that the concert is no place for their exhibition. They are appropriately reserved for the opera. But if soul and expression are synonymous terms in music, we fearlessly assert that Miss Lind's singing is full of soul. It is eminently expressive, and appeared to us the exact embodiment of the passions and emotions conveyed by the music. Was not the melody from the Sonnambula replete with tenderness, and did not the allegro that followed pour forth the gushing of overflowing love and joy? Did not the "Non paventar" of Mozart breathe a plaintive spirit that moaned and wailed in wretchedness, until, when consoled by the prospect of returning joy, it breaks out into that thrilling and sublime cadence, which took the audience so completely by storm. And the "echo song;" and the "Herdsman's Song"—were they soulless too? At the hour we write, it is impossible to go into an elaborate analysis of Miss Lind's vocal merits. We must reserve future comments for future occasions. No single article could possibly suffice to explain all that renders her execution so extraordinary, or to furnish those who have not heard her with a just conception of her peculiar style and method.

SERENADE TO JENNY LIND.—The enthusiasm created by this wonderful artist was not to be allayed with the termination of the concert last evening. The orchestra assembled an hour after the concert, and proceeded to Miss Lind's residence in the Pontalba Buildings, where they tendered her a serenade worthy of the occasion. The bright moon-light night, and comparative stillness of the atmosphere, gave a fine effect to the music, and a large concourse of people gathered together as if evoked by the lingering magic of the sounds which entranced the audience of the St. Charles.

SECOND CONCERT, Feb. 13.—A second opportunity of hearing Miss Lind has confirmed our favourable opinion of her talent. Last evening, at the second concert, she performed several extremely difficult pieces, in some of which she has attained a great reputation, and in others her merit has been much disputed. She was evidently suffering from a slight cold, her voice in the romanza from Robert le Diable being somewhat now and then slightly out of control and depressed. This was observable in the opening measures of "Casta Diva," but as she proceeded she gained strength and spirit, and she sang as if inspired. She completely conquered all doubts as to her power of singing Italian music, and was enthusiastically applauded by the brilliant and crowded audience. We thought, however, the "Perche non ho del vente," from Lucia di Lamermoor, the triumph of the evening. The "Bird Song," composed expressly for her by Taubert, gave her an opportunity of displaying another store of musical treasures. She sang it with an unconscious enjoyment, as if she were indeed holding happy, careless converse with a nightingale like herself. The "Echo Song" concluded the evening. Jenny Lind's triumph was complete.

THIRD CONCERT, Feb. 15.—The St. Charles', last night, was full to its utmost capacity. We noticed a large number of our down-town friends present, and observed with pleasure that the most rapturous and enthusiastic plaudits started from the very quarter where the only prejudice and opposition to Miss Lind was apprehended. As the number of our own beautiful ladies increases, so are the brilliancy and splendour of the dress circle augmented; and so, too, may the fair songstress felicitate herself on the taste and appreciative capabilities of her audience. The flashing eyes of our lovely creoles, the most musical and artistic of our population, could not fail to inspire with enthusiasm and arouse to effort the most languid powers of song—but when brought to bear upon the ardent and impassioned soul of so noble a devotee of melody as Miss Lind, they became fountains of the loftiest inspiration. The performances commenced with the brilliant overture to La Gazza Ladra, which under the admirable direction of Mr. Benedict, was executed by the orchestra with precision. A cavatina, from Rossini's Cenerentola was then sung by Mr. Belletti. The merits of this artist have already been proclaimed, and his success in this cavatina fully confirmed our favourable comments.

Next came forward the "Heroine of Song," in her own simple, unaffected, original style. She was tastefully and elegantly dressed in a white satin, with a pink gauze overdress, ornamented with pink flowers. Three red roses bloomed in her bosom, in the form of a heart, and others were tastefully interwoven with her fine auburn hair. After receiving, with an expression of modest unconsciousness of her own merits, the warm applause of her brilliant audience, Miss Lind commenced warbling the aria from I Puritani "Qui la voce." Contrary to what heretofore has been her characteristic in this piece, we found her more effective in the adagio than in the allegro. In "La Danza," Mr. Belletti kept the house in a roar of laughter and applause. We are free to confess, that hardly anything we have yet heard from Miss Lind affected us more vividly than the great scena, from Weber's Der Freyschutz. As we heard the notes of her fine soprano swelling upwards in the prayer, we felt, for the first time, that we had heard a greater singer than it is probable we shall ever hear again. After this she sang an air from Rossini's Turco in Italia, "Squalli da veste e bruna." We, however, pass this, with a mere allusion to her exquisite delivery, and pause upon Bishop's "Home, sweet home." We know not whether it was so, yet a slight foreign accent seemed to tinge the words of the ballad, which only added to the charm of the music. It seemed some far ger, from a distant land, weaving into song her memory home, and mellowing regret with melody. This familiar and popular air was greeted with an applause mere boisterous than usual. It appealed to the hearts of the people, and aroused a thousand tender associations. The "Swedish Mountaineer's Song" brought the concert to a close.

FOURTH CONCERT, Feb. 16.—Last night exhibited a specimen of the worst description of New Orleans weather; it was cold, rainy, damp and disagreeable; the streets were muddy, and difficult of passage, and carriages were held at extortionate rates. Despite all these unfavourable causes a gay and brilliant crowd poured into the dress-circles and parquette of the St. Charles' last night, until every part of the theatre was filled. No less attraction than Jenny Lind could have drawn out such a number of our population on so tempestuous a night. We noticed in the audience a goodly number of the more sedate and gravely inclined of our people—nay, even the pious, who were thus tempted within the walls of a theatre by the irresistible curiosity and desire to test the justness of the praise bestowed on the fair Swede. We did not observe that any of them went away disappointed. Nor do we believe that they will be less fitted to perform their religious duties, by the delightful, purifying, and elevating impressions left by music.

In the early part of yesterday there was a report that the concert would not come off, owing to a severe fit of faintness which has completely prostrated Mr. Benedict. Arrangements were made, however, to supply the place of Mr. Benedict by Mr. Burke. We were happy, however, when the time arrived to find Mr. Benedict at his post, conducting the orchestra with his usual success in the overture to Auber's Gustave.

Mademoiselle Lind introduced herself in the air from Haydn's Creation, "On mighty pens!" which exhibited her powers in a new light. But it was in the aria "Ah non giunge," from La Sonnambula, that Jenny achieved her greatest triumph, and received the warmest applause. It was this which most delighted the dilettanti and extorted such earnest eulogy from Benedict and Belletti, when those accomplished artists presented their compliments to Miss Lind at the close of the first part. In the "Va, dit elle," which most of our readers will remember is the opening ballad sung by Alice, in Robert le Diable, she was hardly less successful. But it was "The Last Rose of Summer" which carried the audience by storm. They could not be quieted till it was repeated. "The Bird Song" closed the concert. Thus terminated Jenny Lind's first week in New Orleans. May she remember the warm welcome she has received from the Orleans, as long as they will retain the impressions of her incomparable talent.

FIFTH CONCERT, Feb. 18.—The fine, bright, bracing weather of last evening drew to the St. Charles' an audience embracing a larger and more brilliant array of ladies than we have yet seen gracing the dress-circle of this theatre. Our Creole population was handsomely represented, and entered, with characteristic ardour and enthusiasm, into the enjoyment of the music. We have never seen Miss Lind look more charming, more earnest and vivacious. Her dress was exceedingly rich and becoming, and her manner showed that she was quite sensible to the skiey influences of our bright and bracing clime. She sang several of her best pieces, and was particularly effective in Mozart's "Non mi dir," in "Prendi per me" from L'Elisir d'Amore, and in the duet with Belletti, "Quanto amore," from the same opera. These were followed by "Home, sweet home," which drew forth rapturous applause. The Echo, or Herdsman's song concluded the concert. We were near forgetting Benedict's charming ballad "Take the lute." It is an exquisite melody, and gives us a very high idea of him as a composer, apart from his merits as a skilful musician, which he proved himself to be in the Idylle and Galope Brilliant of his own composition on the piano-forte. Belletti sang the "Piff, Paff," from the Huguenots, and increased the desire we have had from our first acquaintance with him, to see him on the stage.

Feb. 19.—The Sixth Concert took place last night. Jenny Lind sang "I know that my Redeemer liveth," Casto Diva, "The Last Rose of Summer," "With Verdure Clad," and "Home, sweet home." Mr. Burke played a solo (Il Tremolo) on the violin, and Belletti sang the fine air, "Rage thou angry storm" (in Italian, "Nembi Fremete"), from Benedict's Gipsy's Warning. This was the most brilliant of all the concerts. Meyerbeer's Prophete is being performed at the Orleans theatre, with immense success.

After leaving New Orleans, and before returning to New-York, Jenny Lind and her party will give concerts at the principal towns of the Mississippi. She will probably be at New York in the middle of April. The Concerts will commence immediately, and five a week will be given, as Jenny is anxious to return to Europe. Barnum, having made nearly twice as much money as he expected, has consented to reduce the number of concerts from 150 to 100. So that Jenny and her friends may be counted on in London about June.

LIFE IN NEW ORLEANS.—Mr. Barnum certainly deserves a handsome tribute from all the proprietors of amusements in our city. He has brought here the attraction which has drawn the whole Southwest to New Orleans. The city is overflowing with people, and, fortunately, there are amusements enough for them all. As the St. Charles's will not hold more than 2000 persons at a time, the surplus twenty-five or thirty thousand, who are crowded out, are compelled to seek amusement elsewhere. They find it in every direction. If they relish operas got up in the most splendid style, with fine vocal and orchestral music, they have only to go to the Orleans; where, besides, they will have an opportunity of seeing Creole beauty in all its richness of natural charms, set off by that exquisite taste in dress and ornaments characteristic of the daughters of ancien régime. Or, do they prefer the legitimate drama, pleasingly varied with broad-farce extravaganza, and a little touch of ballet, then they may go to Placide's Varieties, and be enchanted by the untiring versatility of that universal favorite, Mrs. Howard; or laugh themselves into fits over the drolleries of Holland and Tom Placide, and find inexhaustible pleasure in the artistic representations of Harry Placide; or be wafted to the seventh heaven by the seductive pirouettes of Hilariot and Vallée. Or, have they a penchant for the Horse Opera? In this line they can certainly be pleased. There is the Amphitheatre, where plays, spectacles, and equestrian exhibitions are brought out effectively by Spalding and Rogers, those indefatigable caterers for the ring, aided by our classic friend, Van Orden. Then, too, Dan Rice, a great popular favorite, still maintains his hold upon the public, and under his broad tent, on St. Charles-street, and by the glare of his magnetic light, nightly regales large audiences with flashing wit and dashing feats of horsemanship. Then, too, we omitted to mention that on the off nights, at the St. Charles's, that is, the nights when Jenny Lind does not appear, the agreeable ballet corps of the Francks, with that incomparable little agile specimen of fun and humour, Espinosa, affords a most pleasing entertainment. Besides these means of amusements, there are balls and soirées all over the city, where beauty, grace, fashion, and gaiety may be seen whirling in the mazy dance, or giddy waltz, by the most delightful music. With these various amusements and enjoyments, we think New Orleans presents a great scene of pleasure and enjoyment. At the same time, the stir, bustle, and excitement of active business and commercial life, serve to keep our citizens fully, and we hope, profitably employed in the daily affairs of life.—Daily Delta.

BARNUM.—We stepped in yesterday to see Mr. Barnum, the great "impresario" of Jenny Lind. We found him up to head and ears in business, surrounded by several clerks, and attending to some half a dozen different matters at once. He had before him several finished letters waiting to be copied, directed to correspondents in various parts of the world, and relating to his multifarious transactions. Among his various other duties, he had made out to snatch time enough to address a letter to some conspicuous advocate of the temperance cause in New England, urging greater zeal and activity in behalf of that movement. The energy and capacity for business of Mr. Barnum are incredible. The management of so great a venture as that of Jenny Lind's performance would keep pretty well employed almost any man; but, in addition to this, Mr. Barnum has the two principal museums in the United States to look after, in both of which he keeps up an excellent historical company, and brings out popular plays in the most effective manner. He has, besides, his celebrated prodigy, Tom Thumb, who is travelling through the Union under Barnum's auspices and on his account. There is another travelling show of his which is moving towards this city, consisting of a family of Chinese in their original costume, and surrounded by the peculiarities of that highly interesting race. With all these affairs on hand, Mr. Barnum finds his energy and capabilities not even sated, much less exhausted. He is ready and eager for any new enterprise, having in view that great, benevolent and democratic object, of amusing the people. We regard the man who is successful in this great enterprise, a real benefactor of his species, and we do not begrudge him the applause which its successful prosecution may bring. Besides, it should be stated to Mr. Barnum's special credit, that one of the secrets of his success is his liberality, his strict fidelity to his obligations, and the free and almost prodigal expenditure of his ample means in furtherance of his designs. There may be some humbug in the means and appliances employed by him, but we imagine this success, after all, is due more to his energy, devotion, and liberality, than to his cleverness in hitting the popular taste and appealing to the popular fancies.—Daily Delta.

CARLSRUHE.—Herr Stigelli, first tenor of the Theatre, La Scala, in Milan, gave a Matinée Musicale, assisted by Mdlle. Schutz, and Herr Kalliwoda, in the Hall of the Musical Union. A circle of the first connoisseurs attended to hear this artist, whose fame had already preceded his arrival. Having ourselves heard Herr Stigelli, having been enabled to judge of the sweetness of his voice, and the finish of his style, and of his undoubted musical talent, we have no hesitation in agreeing with those reports which have placed him in the first rank of our German "Lieder" singers. We have rarely heard a voice more equal throughout its register, or one of purer quality, and have seldom known an artist with a more genuine musical taste, and better judgement in the choice of compositions. The Lieder by Schubert, which seem to be particularly suited to Herr Stigelli's voice, obtain, through his interpretation, a more than ordinary interest. Three of them "Trockne Blumen" ("Ye Flowrets that to me she gave"), "Der Neugierige" ("I do not ask the Flowers"), "Der Müller und der Bach" ("When my tender heart with love's oppress"), created a most favourable impression on all present. Herr W. Kalliwoda, (son of the well-known composer,) whom we are accustomed to see where anything good is to be heard, received also, for his masterly performance of two of his pianoforte compositions, a full share of the applause of the audience.—Badisch Landerzeitung.

Dramatic Intelligence.

HAYMARKET.—The experiment tried by Mr. John Oxenford on Tuesday night, to reduce Molière's Tartuffe into English blank verse, preserving the original in its integrity and entirety—a task of more than ordinary difficulty—was completely successful. The translation bore all the impress of a new work. The bald and vapid version, more properly, perversion, of one of the dramatic chefs-d'œuvre of the French stage, played for many years on the English boards, under the title of The Hypocrite, is a vulgar travesty, alike disgraceful to the adapter who distorted the original, and to the public who recognised it. Molière's Tartuffe is a monument of ingenuity and skill. It betrays a profound insight into the human heart, and a manner of dealing with persons in real life second only to the comedy of Shakespeare. The characters are invested with great individuality, and admirably contrasted. There are the credulous and infatuated Orgon (played by Mr. Lambert), the fiery and impetuous Damis (by Mr. Davenport), the loving Velere (by Mr. Howe) the sensible, but somewhat argumentative Cleante (Mr. Rogers), the fawning Loyal (Mr. Charles Selby), the calm and gentle Elmire (Miss Reynolds), the tender and easily-led Mariane (Miss Laura Addison—admirably suited to her), the arch and loquacious Dorine (personated with much piquancy by Mrs. Fitzwilliam), and the religion-cloaked and double-faced knave, Tartuffe (Mr. Webster), a miracle of dramatic portraiture. These characters are all involved in a plot of singular clearness in the construction, and are all necessary to its development. The public owe a deep debt of gratitude to Mr. Oxenford for rescuing Molière's prodigious work from the mire in which it has too long been suffered to lie imbedded. Let us hear no more of The Hypocrite, nor of Mawworm, nor his jacket without skirts, nor the filthy, so-called, wit, with which it abounds. Away with it to the colonies "where governors dwell," or rather to the antipodes, where the refuse of society are transplanted; there let it consort with its fellow hypocrites, no more to revisit our shores, nor train our audiences to be pleased with low and worthless trash!

The version produced on Tuesday night went far to prove the capacity of the French language to undergo transmutation into English, when undertaken by an accomplished hand. Mr. Oxenford's translation is a masterpiece. The dialogue is managed with singular felicity, being at once nervous, terse, and preserving the spirit of the original with unexampled fidelity. There is not a single point lost, nor does the translator travel out of his way, or rather out of the way of the original, to gain for one of his characters a novelty, or a super-added grace. If occasionally a slight coarseness be observed, it must be attributed to the somewhat over-scrupulousness of Mr. Oxenford, who was unwilling to depart from his original in the remotest instance, and to the want of refinement of the tongue into which he has transcribed his author.

The piece is represented after the manner of the Theatre Français. The curtain is not allowed to fall during the progress of the drama, and the divisions are indicated by music played between the pauses of the action. Of course one scene is preserved throughout, thus upholding the rigidity of the writers according to the old fashion. The single scene is a very beautiful one, and is put upon the stage with minute care in the details. It represents a room in the house of Orgon, which is built up in imitation of the prevailing taste of the period. The costumes are rich and appropriate.

The acting was good generally, although, to those who were accustomed to behold French artists in the conventionalities of Molière's school, there seemed a want of finesse, refinement, and a certain studied crispness, which appear to be caviare to our actors. Mr. Webster's conception of Tartuffe was clearly founded on the best French models. He was thoroughly serious throughout, and never condescended to the slightest caricature to evoke a laugh, or to sharpen a point. He was dressed to perfection, and looked quite a picture.

The play was listened to with great attention from beginning to end, and created considerable laughter. In one or two instances, as in the quarrel between Velere and Mariane, the merriment was unbounded.

That Molière's masterpiece, rendered almost verbatim into English blank verse, should have been received so favourably, is a sign of the times, which Mr. Oxenford and Mr. Webster would do well not to let escape their memories. There are many more chefs-d'œuvre of the French school well worth their consideration.

Mr. J. W. Wallack appeared in Hamlet, for the first time in London, on Wednesday evening. The youthful and philosophic prince is not well suited to Mr. Wallack's rough and graphic style. He wants delicacy and refinement, and, still more, real tenderness. Passion and earnestness he undoubtedly possesses, and hence the energetic scenes were the best; but, without that softness and gentleness, almost feminine, which Shakspeare has made two of his most salient characteristics, Hamlet is not. The "sweet bells" are "jangled, out of tune and harsh." Mr. J. W. Wallack obtained the most liberal applause, and therefore, doubtless, his performance must have afforded satisfaction to many. His Hamlet, to our thinking, must be studied patiently and assiduously before it can be deemed worthy of being placed by the side of his Othello and Macbeth.

After the tragedy a very merry piece, entitled Make the best of it, was produced with complete success. It is adapted from the French vaudeville, Le Pont Cassé, but the situations are somewhat altered, and the characters and dialogue are thoroughly English. The plot is briefly told. The locale is Wales, even North Wales. Mr. Benjamin Burr (Mr. Buckstone), a gent with a highly susceptible heart, is smitten with Mrs. Driver (Miss P. Horton), and follows her to Wales. He meets her at a lonely inn, and, in consequence of the bridge across the river having broken down, they are unable to proceed on their journey. Like Sterne and the French lady at the Auberge, in the Sentimental Journey, though not quite so badly plighted, they are compelled to remain in the same room, and in order to while away the time until the bridge is rebuilt—theatrical bridges are not difficultly set up—they agree to play a game at cards, and whoso loses is to become the slave of whoso wins for the space of two hours. They play—Burr is the unlucky, and straightway submits himself to the unlimited volition of the lady. Tyranny let loose never lacks minions to exercise its strength upon. Opportunity is the sycophant of power—thanks to dame Fortune. An occasion soon presents itself wherein Mrs. Driver uses her fire-new authority with a persistence and an acerbity worthy of the "autograph of all the Russias." Mr. Driver (Mr. Howe), the erratic spouse of Mrs. D., arrives in company with a theatrical lady (Mrs. Fitzwilliam), upon whom he has passed himself as a single gentleman. Mrs. D. having concealed herself, is made acquainted with the connubial delinquencies of her spouse, and straight begins to exhibit her power over Mr. Benjamin Burr. Little Ben is first ordered to quarrel with Driver and challenge him. Then, when Driver accepts the challenge, he is commanded to apologise; and lastly, despite a stout disinclination towards the lady in particular, added to a general horror of stage performers, he is compelled to marry the actress. Mr. Buckstone was inimitably funny as Mr. Burr, and kept the house in an uninterrupted roar of laughter throughout the piece, the whole weight of which rests upon his shoulders. We shall be delighted to see little Ben once more go through his series of ludicrous involvements. In every part he undertakes, Mr. Buckstone may be soundly said to "make the best of it."

LYCEUM.—Cool as a Cucumber is the title of a new farce produced on Monday night at this theatre. The author is Mr. Jerrold, son of the popular dramatist. The thread of the plot is as flimsy as thistledown, but the dialogue is smart, and well sustained to the end. Mr. Charles Matthews is a wight who has picked up a cigar case, by means of which he introduces himself to the acquaintance of an elderly gentleman, father of the cigar-case loser. His consummate coolness and tact obtain for him unlimited freedom in the family. The son has been banished from the father's house in consequence of daring to cast his affections on a wretch who had nothing but "the three great requisites of love—youth, beauty, and clean linen," (Farquhar, not Jerrold, jun.)—to recommend her. He makes an effort to re-enter his father's house, but is treated by our friend the "wight" as a burglar. The chief amusement of the piece is concentrated here. The "wight" is found out, but makes his peace with father and son, by effecting a reconciliation between them, for which both are grateful. Mr. Charles Matthews played the "wight" with great lightness and buoyancy.

ADELPHI.—A melodrama of the true Adelphi cut, but hardly of the true Adelphi merit, was produced on Monday night. It is called the Disowned, but is not extracted from Sir Lytton's novel, and absorbs four hard hours of time in the representation. When the entire Adelphi company is employed in one piece, when the scenery is gorgeous and beautiful—the dresses striking and becoming, when music and dancing are brought in as aids to acting, and Adelphy brought in, when, in short, the whole resources of the theatre, under the indisputable management of Madame Celeste, are made available, it is scarcely possible for any piece, merely indifferent, not to meet with a certain success. The Disowned, we have not the least doubt, will go infinitely better than it did the first night, when it will have undergone considerable pruning. At present it is an hour, at least, too long, and lags in consequence. The story also, which at present is somewhat concealed in a mist, will shine with a more clearly defined phase, and with a juster light, for being condensed into a narrower compass. By all means, let there be excision, nor spare the knife.

Original Correspondence.

MILITARY BAND OF THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—Having read in the Musical World of Saturday last the following comment on the prospectus of the forthcoming season at the Royal Italian Opera,

"Mr. Godfrey also comes again with his Military Band; and, if hope may be translated into certainty, with a new clarinet (not in C), and an ophicleide that plays in tune,"

I have always been exceedingly unwilling to notice reports in the public journals; on the present occasion, however, there appears something so unfair and like a desire to condemn by anticipation, that, in justice to myself and the musicians engaged under my superintendence, I am induced (most reluctantly), to depart from my usual custom. In the first place, I confess I do not understand what your reporter means when he recommends me to bring another clarinet, not in C. The clarionets used on those occasions vary according to the operas in which they are required; viz., in Semiramide, La Donna del Lago, Norma, &c., C. Bb. and Eb., are necessary. Les Huguenots only requires clarionets in Bb. and Eb., while in the Don Giovanni C. Bb. and A. are used: the C. and A. are both required in the first movement of the Banquet Scene at the same time. The change from those to the Bb. clarionets for the second and third movements is almost instantaneous, there being only three bars rest for that purpose. This will be sufficient, I presume, to excuse my saying that I am totally at a loss to understand what your reporter means by "bring another clarinet, not in C." I am also doubtful of the soundness of his advice as to bringing a new wind instrument of any description without some previous experience of its merits. The instruments I have named, are such as have been used for the same purpose by Messrs. Lazarus, Maycock and Dean, when the Coldstream band had the honor of numbering them amongst its members; and whom, I am happy to observe, are holding three out of the four situations occupied by performers on that instrument at the two greatest musical establishments (Her Majesty's Theatre and the Royal Italian Opera) in this country. With respect to the recommendation of your reporter concerning the ophicleide, however well meant, I fear I should be acting unjustly, (at present), to comply with his wish; but I strongly invite that gentleman—whoever he may be—to pay a visit to the practice-room of the band, from which those performers were selected, and judge for himself; and I also, Mr. Editor, should feel much complimented by your accompanying him; and I pledge my word if, at that visit, any false intonation is perceptible in the basses (four in number), I will acknowledge the justness of the remarks, and act immediately on the advice given. I perfectly recollect reading the first number of the Musical World ever printed; and, if my memory serves me, the leading article began: "Fair play to all." How this pledge has been redeemed I cannot attempt to decide. It is, however, strange that only when fault is to be found (perhaps justly), that the Musical World condescends at all to mention the Military Bands in the notices of the Royal Italian Opera; while the principal leading journals (with one exception) have not considered it derogatory, occasionally, to insert a word of approbation.

I confess myself unable to hold a controversy with persons so much my superiors in the requisites for such a purpose; but I do not yield to any one in love for the art of which I am a very humble member, and can assure you, that if fair and just censure only was the aim, I should be happy to endeavour to profit by any advice so given, although administered with rather a rough hand.

42, Vincent Square,
March 25th, 1851.

I am, Sir,
your obedient servant,
C. GODFREY.

Advertisements.

MESSRS. DE BESNIER AND VERDAVAINNE

RESPECTFULLY announce that the FIRST of their Series of THREE CONCERTS of Classical, Sacred, and Modern Music will take place at the BEETHOVEN ROOMS, 27, Queen-Ann Street, Cavendish Square, on FRIDAY EVENING, the 4th of April. On this occasion, Madame VERDAVAINNE will play Mendelssohn's Grand Concerto in G minor, Bach's prelude and fugue in C sharp; and Cramer's étude melodique, homage à Mozart. Vocalists:—Messdames Zimmerman and Lemaire; Messrs. de Besnier, Montelli, and Bo'tura; Instrumentalists:—Piano, Madame Verdavainne; Harp, Mr. J. Balsir Chatterton, Harpist to Her Majesty the Queen; Violins, Messrs. H. Blagrove and Clementi; Alto, Mr. R. Blagrove; Violoncello, Messrs. Hancock and Hansman. Conductor, Herr Anchnes. Single Tickets for each Concert, Half-a-Guinea. Single Tickets for the Series, One Guinea. Family Tickets to admit three to the Series, Two Guineas. May be had of Messrs. Verdavainne, 57, George Street, Portman Square, and de Besnier, 2, Upper Spring Street, Portman Square.

CIPRIANI POTTER'S SYMPHONY IN D MAJOR:

AS performed at the Philharmonic Concerts. Arranged as a Duet for two performers on one Pianoforte, by the author. Published by T. Boosey and Co., Holles Street; Chappell, Bond Street; E. Mills, Bond Street.

Also by the same author,

SYMPHONY in G minor; and Overture to "Antony and Cleopatra," as Duets.

Published by Addison and Co., Regent Street.

CHAULIEU'S PIANOFORTE WORKS,

COMPRISING CLASSICAL, METHODICAL, and DRAWING-ROOM PIECES, calculated for the improvement of Pianoforte Students, of which, and all his Posthumous Works, Messrs. RUST and STAHL are the Sole Proprietors. Published in Paris at 5s. each, or twelve parts in one vol. at 42 2s.

RUST and STAHL, Pianoforte Makers, and Music Publishers, 330, Regent Street, opposite the Royal Polytechnic Institution.

SIGNOR BOTTESINI,

MUSICAL DIRECTOR OF THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA AT HAVANNA, BEGS to apprise the Musical Profession and the Public that he will arrive in London at the beginning of May, and remain during the entire Season.

Letters and applications for engagements to be addressed to Sig. BOTTESINI,
 Wessel and Co., 229, Regent Street.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' "VESPER HYMN,"

ARRANGED as a Fantasia for the Pianoforte. The publisher has great pleasure in announcing a new Edition of this admired composition by Mr. BRINLEY RICHARDS, and to state that he has added to his Catalogue all the newest works of this popular writer.

"Under this modest title, Mr. Richards presents us with a fantasia of novel form, remarkable for originality of effect. An introduction in F, in which fragments of the melody are displayed in full harmony, alternated with brief allegro passages, capriccioso, leads to an episode, in which the idea of the bell that tolls for vespers is poetically indicated. The well-known tune is then led through a series of variations, or ricercate or changes, in all of which the tratte de bravoure are different, and skilfully contrasted while the keys of D flat and A flat are judiciously employed in some of them, to relieve the monotony that would otherwise arise from the constant adherence to the original tone. The variations are graceful and showy, increasing in brilliancy up to the climax, which involves a capital exhibition of the Thalbergian pattern. Mr. Richards has shown an extended acquaintance with the resources of the clavier in this morceau, and the utmost ingenuity in maintaining an easy variety of style during the continuous repetition of the melody over the space of eight pages.
 The only fault of "The Vesper Hymn" is its brevity."—Musical World.

Charles Ollivier, 41, New Bond Street

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

THALBERG	Irish Airs
KUH...	Styriennes
STREICH	Les Hironnelles
FREAGERS	Moment Jo eux
ROECKEL	Marche Romaine
RICHARDS	Danish Air
KUHE	Bohemian Air
MORI	Romance Sans Paroles.
BRISSON	L'Arabesque
RICHARDS	Moonlight Serenade
J. HERZ	La Sylphide
ROECKEL	Clotilde

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street.

MESSRS. COCKS AND CO'SNEW MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS FOR THE PIANO.

BY BRINLEY RICHARDS.—"The Angel's Song," 2s.; "The Sturm March," 3s. By Stephen Heller.—LATEST PIANOFORTE LESSONS.
 Students of the pianoforte will find in the following works of the above distinguished author an unusual degree of merit, suited alike for the salon and the practice-room, viz., "Chant du Chasseur," 2s.; "Le Adieu du Soldat," 2s.; "Chant du Berceau," 2s.; arrangement of Mendelssohn's "Chant d'Amour," 2s.; ditto, "Parting Song," 2s.; ditto, "Chant de Fête," 2s.

BY G. A. OSBORNE.—Splendid Fantasia on Airs from Don Juan, 4s.; ditto from the Barber de Seville, duet, 5s.; ditto on Kucken's Schlum-merlied, 2s.; ditto on Trab, 3s.; Wallenstein's Le Soupir Redowa, 1s. 6d., and Schottische de Paris, 2s.; Schubert's Carnaval de Venise, 4s.; Cantabile, 2s., his Mozart's Minuet, 4s., and Serenade Espagnole, 3s.; Orsten's May-flowers (for young performers), three books, each 2s.; Gorla's Adieux de Marie Stuart, 4s., Campanella, 2s., and Harmonie du Soir, 4s.

NEW SCHOOL MUSIC.—Hamilton's Modern Instructions for the Piano, the easiest and best book, 20th edition, 4s.; his Dictionary of 3,500
 Musical Terms, 37th edition, 1s.; his Catechism on Singing, 3s.; ditto on Thorough Bass, 2s.; ditto Violin, 1s.; Clara's Psalmody, 12 books, 3s. each; Clarke's Catechism of the Rudiments of Music, 23rd edition, 1s.; Warren's Psalmody, 23 books, 2d.
 each; and his Chanter's Hand-Guide, in one vol., 5s., or in 34 parts, 2d. each;
 Grover's Very Easy Instructions for Singing, 4s.

GOTTFREID WEBER'S THEORY OF MUSICAL COMPO-SITION.—A New Edition, Edited by JOHN BISHOP, containing upwards of one thousand pages, in 2 vols., royal 8vo., whole cloth, boards, price 31s. 6d. Also,
 CZERNY'S NEW PRACTICAL SCHOOL OF MUSICAL COMPOSITION.
 Translated by JOHN BISHOP. 3 vols. folio, each 31s. 6d.

ALBRECHTSBERGER'S (Master of Beethoven) COMPLETE THEORETICAL WORKS. Translated by the late ARNOLD MERRICK, Esq. 2 vols. 8vo., 42s.
CHERUBINI'S COUNTERPOINT and FUGUE. Translated by J. A. HAMILTON,
 1 vol. 8vo., 31s. 6d. And

DR. BOYCE'S COLLECTION OF CATHEDRAL MUSIC. A New Edition by
 JOSEPH WARREN. In three large folio vols. of upwards of 1300 pages, price £3 6s.
 London: R. COCKS AND CO., New Burlington Street, Publishers to her Majesty.
 New Catalogues, Gratis and Postage Free.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.

M. ALEXANDRE BILLET begs to announce a Second Series of three evening Concerts of Classical Pianoforte Music, in illustration of the great Composers. To take place on Tuesdays, April 1st, 15th, and 29th. To commence at half-past Eight.
 Tickets 2s., Reserved Seats, 4s. To be had with programmes, at the principal Music Sellers, and at St. Martin's Hall.

IMPORTANT TO THE MUSICAL WORLD.

THE STATESMAN'S PORTFOLIO of the 1st of April, Price Sevenpence, will contain an important article, entitled "The Study of Music as it is, and as it ought to be." By a Professor of Music of the Royal Academy.
 London: Hope and Co., Publishers, 16, Great Marlborough Street.

MUSICAL UNION. 1851.

WILLIS'S ROOMS.

SEVENTH SEASON.—The Meetings of this Society will take place, at HALF-PAST THREE O'CLOCK, on TUESDAYS,

April	8th	June	10th
"	29th	"	24th
May	18th	July	1st
"	27th	"	8th

Members are requested to pay their Subscriptions to Messrs. Cramer, Beale, &
 Co., 201, Regent Street. Great inconvenience has arisen in the delay of the Treasurers' accounts, by the forgetfulness of Members not paying their Subscriptions early in the Season. J. ELLA.

CRAMER'S STUDIES.

THE first Volume of this work is now published in the upright form newly revised and corrected by the Author, and divided into four parts, price 6s. each. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street.

DIATONIC FLUTE.

BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT. This Instrument is now constructed so as to produce three perfect middle C's without any additional Mechanism. Amateurs may hear this Flute played by Mr. Richardson; and in the Provinces, by Mr. Pratien (at Jullien's Concerts); Messrs. Nicholson, Leicester; Percival, Liverpool; Creed Royal, Manchester; Sykes, Leeds; Jackson, Hull; Corn, Bristol; Clara, Bedford; &c.
 Description of Instrument with Testimonials forwarded free. Manufactory, 135, Fleet Street. A. SICCAMO, Patentee.

CARTE'S PATENT FLUTES.

Just published,

A SKETCH of the successive IMPROVEMENTS made in the FLUTE, with a Statement of the Principles upon which Flutes are constructed and a comparison between the relative merits of the Ordinary Flute, the Flute of Boehm, and Carte's two new Patent Flutes. By RICHARD CARTE.
 Publishers: Rudall, Rose, and Co., 38, Southampton-street, Strand; Addison, 210
 Regent-street; Keith and Prowse, 48, Cheapside; and Cocks and Co., 6, New Burlington-street. Price 1s., or if sent by post, 1s. 6d.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

FOR Improving the Voice, and removing all Affections of the Throat. Strongly recommended to Clergymen, Singers, Actors, Public Speakers, persons subject to relaxed Throats, and to all persons desirous of cultivating their Voices, and ensuring a good and clear articulation. They have also been found highly beneficial to those afflicted with Nervous, Hysterical, or Stomachic Coughs.
 To be had in Boxes, at 1s. 1jd., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each, of every Medicine Vendor in the kingdom. Musical Agents in London, Messrs. Leader & Co., 63, New Bond Street; Wholesale Agents, Messrs. Barclay & Sons, Farringdon Street.

Mad. Grisi	Miss Romer	Mr. Harrison	Mr. J. Barnett
Mad. Persiani	Mad. Albertazzi	Mr. Allen	Mr. George Linley
Mad. Eugénie Garcia	Miss Cooper	Mr. White	Mr. Rodwell
Mrs. Alfred Shaw	Sig. Lablache	Mr. Wass	Mr. Nelson
Miss Rainforth	Sig. Giubilei	Mr. Kroff	&c., &c.

HEALTH WHERE IT IS SOUGHT!

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Cure of a disordered Liver and Stomach, when in a most hopeless state.—Extract of a letter from Mr. Matthew Harvey, of Chapel Hall, Airdrie, Scotland, dated the 15th of January, 1850.—To Professor HOLLOWAY, Sir,—Your valuable Pills have been the means, with God's blessing, of restoring me to perfect health, at a time when I thought I was on the brink of the grave. I had consulted several eminent Doctors, who, after doing what they could for me, considered my case hopeless. I had been suffering from a Liver and Stomach complaint of long standing, which during the last two years got so much worse, that every one considered my condition as hopeless. I, as a last resource, got a Box of your Pills, which soon gave relief, and by persevering in their use for some weeks, together with rubbing night and morning your Ointment over my chest and stomach, and right side, I have by their means alone got completely cured, and to the astonishment of myself and everybody who knows me.

(Signed)

MATTHEW HARVEY.

These celebrated Pills are wonderfully efficacious in the following complaints:—
 Ague Constipation of FEVERS of all Liver complaints Tumours
 Asthma the Bowels kinds Lumbago Ulcers
 Bilious Com- Consumption Fits Rheumatism Worms of all plaints Debility Gout kinds
 Blisters on the Dropsy Head-ache Scrofula or King's Weakness, from Skin Dysentery Indigestion Evil whatever cause
 Bowel complaints Erysipelas Inflammation Sore Throats &c., &c.
 Colic Jaundice Tic-Douloureux

Sold at the Establishment of Professor HOLLOWAY, 244, Strand, (near Temple-bar, London, and most all respectable Druggists, and Dealers in Medicines throughout the civilised World, at the following prices:—1s. 1jd., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and
 36s. each Box. There is a considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.
 N.B.—Directions for the guidance of Patients in every Disorder are affixed to each Box.

The Musical World.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

Terms of Subscription, per Annum, 16s.; Half year, 8s.; Three Months, 4s.; payable in advance, to be forwarded by Money Order, to the Publishers, Messrs. Myers & Co., 22, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden.

No. 14.—VOL. XXVI.

SATURDAY, APRIL 5, 1851.

PRICE FOURPENCE.

MUSICAL WORLD OFFICE REMOVED

FROM 37, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN,

To No. 22, Tavistock Street,

THREE DOORS FROM, SOUTHAMPTON STREET,

Where all Communications for the Musical World are requested to be sent.

M. S. MYERS & Co. take this opportunity of informing those Ladies and Gentlemen about to give Concerts that they execute every description of

PRINTING

ON VERY REASONABLE TERMS.

Programmes, Tickets, Posting Bills, &c., &c.,

PRINTED IN FIRST-RATE STYLE, AND ON THE SHORTEST NOTICE.

JULLIEN AND THE GREAT EXHIBITION.

THE nearer the eventful first of May approaches, the more frequent is the question—what will Jullien do? We regret our inability, at present, to return a satisfactory answer; but we may say thus much—Jullien will do something. The Man of Masses cannot remain in the solitude of his thatch, at a moment when the largest mass that ever assembled within the walls of London when London was well walled and ditched, or that ever crowded its busy streets and thoroughfares since, through the march of civilisation and increase of peoples, it has gradually been dismantled and disfossed, is about to swarm the precincts and interior of the fair old city. The Man of Industry cannot be idle, at a time when the industrial wealth, and progress, and means, and appliances of the entire world are to be laid out and expounded in a glass bazaar, the huge dimensions and eccentric build whereof are so utterly in consonance with his own peculiarities of thought and action. The Man of Presence cannot be absent, when all the nations of the earth are about to be present (no pun, Punch) at the fair. Jullien cannot be solitary, cannot be lazy, cannot be away—to sum up—when everybody is enthroned, remuent, and at hand. Jullien will project a scheme, and that on a scale of magnitude, not merely consistent with his ordinary habits, but proportionate to the occasion, which is preposterous. A monster something will be the issue; no matter what, but a monster. Jullien sleeps not—he fails not to clutch opportunity by the top knot—he will be up betimes, and a doing.

A little bird—we forget the species—has whispered in our ear, that Jullien has already been brought to bed of an idea, which, if allowed to grow into adult maturity, will not only amuse but astonish the nations. His idea, if we recollect aright what the little bird whispered, is musical and multiple. After all, what is the Crystal Palace—its show of wares, hard and soft—its stuffs, corn and cambric—its costumes, common and curious—its machinery, scientific and simple—its works in wax and what not—its this, that, etcetera, to us, poor musicians, turned out of house and home by triple rents and renewed income tax (the deuce take the “aggression,” protestant and catholic!)—what is it all to us, unless, like the blowers of glass, founders of iron, burners of clay, turners of wood and ivory, weavers of flax, rectifiers of railroads, et id hoc genus omne, we have some personal interest in the matter—something that will help to boil the pot, shorten art and lengthen life? What is it to us, with its frippery, its finery, its science and solidity? It is all very well to tell us that the great M. Sax will send over for exhibition, from Paris, all his newly-invented instruments of brass, and wood, and zinc, and gold, and platina, and silver—and that M. Erard, the large manufacturer of French pianofortes, will depose cunningly-carved “cabinets,” “uprights,” queer “à queues,” and sounding “squares;”—and that Messrs. Broadwood, the great manufacturers of English pianofortes, will do something to outdo what they have already done, which is barely possible—and that Mr. Clinton will display a “flute,” for tone and ease of fingering not to be surpassed except by Mr. Carte’s “new patent,” which in these requisites has no superior except Mr. Card’s “lately-invented,” which cannot be excelled in ditto ditto except by Mr. Siccama’s “diatonic,” which defies competition, unless at the holes and keys of Mr. Clinton’s aforesaid; and so on in a round ad perpetuum?—and that Colonel Somebody will put forth an enharmonic instrument, upon which unappreciable tones may not be appreciated—and that Colonel Somebody else will exhibit a musical bed, by means of which we may sleep to the melodies of Halévy, and snore to the harmonies of Gounod? It is all very well to tell us these things, and a dozen more, and to wind up with the comfortable assurance that Sir Henry Bishop (as a worthy correspondent from Bath informs us—which we knew already—vide, No. 2, vol. 26), will preside over the inventions, acoustical, mechanical, and problematical, and allot them a place and a degree; but what does it matter to us, unless there be wherewith, in all, or some, or one of them, to serve our own turn? Nothing!

To what then shall we look for special amusement and personal profit? Surely to something quite apart from these;

to something active, stirring, and palpable. In short to a series, or series of musical performances, of various characters. The same worthy correspondent from Bath, who writes to us in a kindly tone and pays us compliments, of which, though undeserving, we are not the less conceited, suggests weekly concerts of glees and madrigals. We like glees and madrigals, but they are not enough, since maugre the Athenæum, the repertory of English music—school though we have none, as our elder contemporary, the Times, asserts—embraces other things besides "See the chariot at hand," and "Sweet honey-sucking bees," and, with deference to Sir Henry Bishop and Orlando Gibbons, things of a better and a higher sort—such as symphonies, overtures, concertos, oratorios, operas, &c., which surely would amuse, if not instruct, our visitors outré manche et mer of the old earth and new, better than many things to which they are accustomed. We are conscious that this will be denied in the next number of the Athenæum; but n'importe, it is perhaps the truer for that. We present the shield of faith and confidence, to catch the buffet when it comes.

The questions that remain are—what are these performances to be, and who shall direct them? As it is evident that their nature must of necessity be not more musical than mixed, not more perpetual than popular, are we very far from the mark, are we more than reasonably unreasonable, in pointing out, as a fit and proper man—because an active, an energetic, an intelligent, a versatile, a well-considered and indomitable—M. Jullien, who is known to France as well as England, whose fame has travelled to the four quarters of the globe (if a sphere can be said to have corners), in the teeth of adverse winds (if winds may be said to have teeth), and the Lynch-law of hostile and untoward circumstances, and whose eagerness in action is as notorious as his calmness in repose?—are we far wrong in singling out M. Jullien as director? We pause for a reply?

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

On Tuesday Lucia was repeated and the success of Mdle. Duprez confirmed. Calzolari was better and sang better. There is nothing to add to what we said in our last of this performance.

On Saturday Auber's magnificent opera of Gustave III. was produced, with appropriate splendour and entire success. In the libretto of this work Scribe has developed all his ingenuity and skill, and on the music Auber has lavished the resources of his genius in such a manner as to produce a chef-d'œuvre only second to Masaniello. Both, however, are too familiar to our readers to need any description or analysis here. It suffices to speak of the performance.

The cast was as follows:—Amalia (Countess of Ankastrom) Madame Fiorentini; Arvedson, Mdle. Feller; Oscar (page of the King) Mdle. Caroline Duprez; Ankastrom, Signor Lorenzo; Dehorn, Signor F. Lablache; Ribbing, M. Poulter; Gustave III., Signor Calzolari.

Madame Fiorentini is, beyond comparison, the best Madame Ankastrom we ever saw. Her voice, which has gained remarkably since last season, both in strength and freshness, is perfectly suited to the graceful and passionate melodies which Auber has allotted to this, one of the finest of his creations. The cavatina of the second act was magnificently sung, and the duet and trio that follow were not only excellent as vocal efforts, but conspicuous for dramatic expression. But Madame Fiorentini's triumph was most assuredly in the beautiful air of the fourth act, where she supplicates Ankastrom to let her see her child before he kills her. Her expression in this was fervid and exquisite. Madame Fiorentini, although little better than a stranger—since she only appeared three or four times at the end of last season—has already gained the affections of the public, who received her most warmly, and liberally applauded her throughout the opera.

Mdle. Caroline Duprez was a fascinating Page, and sang to perfection in the quintet. But in the romance of the first act she robbed the second couplet of all its melodic beauty, by the introduction of some very inelegant and unsuitable changes. The air in the ball scene is not well fitted for her, and she is compelled to alter without improving it, which latter would be somewhat difficult. Although we cannot approve of her introduction of the rondo finale from Le Serment, since Auber did not write Gustave III. for the express purpose of displaying the capabilities of any singer to whom the part of Oscar might chance to be cast, we are compelled to own that it was a brilliant and finished piece of vocalization. Mdle. Duprez, in the Page's costume looked the very essence of prettiness, archness, and insolence. Her reception was enthusiastic, and her success more than ever substantiated.

Signor Calzolari sang the two airs of Gustave very gracefully; but they are somewhat too high for him, and too unlike the Italian school to which he is accustomed. Signor Lorenzo took evident pains with the part of Ankastrom, and his acting, when he discovers the King's paramour to be his own wife, was exceedingly good. M. Poulter had but little to do, as the conspirator Ribbing; but in the trio of the fourth act, with Signor Lorenzo and M. Frederic Lablache, he came out with remarkable power, and was well supported by the last named gentleman, who as Dehorn, was invaluable all through the opera, keeping the chorus together, and not seldom the principals. This it is to be a good musician. We had almost forgot Mdle. Feller, the new mezzo soprano, who, in the part of Arvedson, the witch, exhibited a strong and musical voice, considerable energy, and a personal appearance of high attractions. Altogether the distribution of the characters was decidedly efficient.

Mr. Balfe had used indomitable zeal in getting up the opera at a very short notice. The overture was capitally executed by the band. The choruses were showy, though not always quite up to the mark, and the concerted music in general went well.

As the better half of Auber's ballet music was omitted, besides the march and final chorus after the King's assassination, we have little to say about this part of the entertainment, except that we infinitely prefer Auber's own version. The duet for Ankastrom and Gustave, in the first act, was also left out, to the detriment of the general effect of the opera. The dances that were left—the galop and a pas de hussards (not in the original, but composed by Auber for M. Taglioni, at the request of M. Taglioni)—were arranged with admirable taste by M. Taglioni, and the presiding genius of Mr. Harris, the indefatigable, was evident throughout the opera, especially in the animated groupings of the second act, where Gustave is recognized and fêted by the multitude, in the cabin of the Sorceress.

Carlotta Grisi's rentrée must be noticed as an isolated fact, and a fact of absorbing interest. The inimitable dansuse, looking more airy, more graceful, and more fascinating than ever, was welcomed, as she flitted on the stage, in the Pas des Folies (music by Sig. Pugnî, with the help of Auber's first theme!), with a storm of plaudits, that did not abate until she had executed what almost amounted to a Grand pas de Salutations. As soon as Carlotta had finished the adagio, in which her poses and movements were more than ever classical and romantic—the great danseuse combines the two schools, joins Phidias and Flaxman hand by hand, or Sophocles and Shakspeare, which Victor Hugo vainly essayed with a genius less perfect than Carlotta's)—as soon as she had accomplished the last ethereal step, another tempest of applause bespoke the delight of the audience. The quick movement that followed—a wild and fantastic allegretto, in which the fancy of M. Taglioni, inspired by his subject, had outdone itself in picturesque conceits—was a triumph of agility, as the adagio was a triumph of grace and ease. The “pointes,” supple and plastic, becoming their genuine and most elegant display, not rigid and stiff (too often their abuse), were introduced with an abandon that showed them to be mere bagatelles to Carlotta. The manner of taking them was natural, and the manner of rejecting them was natural. The rapid evolution of the whole person, during which a “pointe” was seized and disposed of with a simplicity of style that robbed them of all apparent difficulty, was a masterly demonstration of the “ars celeri artem,” that golden rule which Carlotta cherishes with the affection of a real artist and enthusiast. In short, if the innocence of a lamb could be added to the strength of a gazelle, the velocity of a bird, the lightness of a feather, and the elasticity of air, the representative of these mixed qualities, all fused into one charming and irresistible whole, would be CARLOTTA GRISI, who is now more than ever queen of her own domain, where grace, and swiftness, and beauty are one—the necessary attributes of life and being. At the end of the pas, Carlotta was recalled by the whole audience. She was ably seconded by Mdle. Esther Aussandon, &c. &c. &c., a company of “Folies,” dont il serait assez facile de devenir fou.

Gustave III. has been played three times with increasing success, a success which, we are convinced, would have been still more brilliant had the opera been presented according to the score—notatim et literatim. It is to be repeated to-night. Two tableaux, from the elegant ballet called L'Île des Amours, have followed the opera on each occasion. Mdle. Ferraris improves nightly, and obtains the unanimous suffrages of the audience.

Meanwhile, the Metamorphoses, for Carlotta Grisi, is on the tapis; and Mdle. Alaymo, and Coletti, and Massol have all arrived. Mr. Lumley will soon be in the thick of it. The success of Alary's opera in Paris has added a new feature to his programme, already so studded with attractions.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The season commenced on Thursday evening with Rossini's Semiramide, the same opera with which the theatre was inaugurated in 1846. The present cast differs materially from the cast of the first season of the Royal Italian Opera. Grisi still retains her place as the Assyrian Queen, and Tagliafico as the High Priest; but Alboni is changed for Angri in Arsace, and Tamburini for Salvatori in Assur. In the small part of Idreno, also, we find Luigi Mei substituted for Lavia, a most pains-taking and meritorious artist, whom this year we miss from the establishment. Angri made her début the season before last in Arsace, a character which was found well suited to her broad and energetic style; but for some reasons unknown the afterwards popular contralto was not re-engaged last season, and Semiramide was shorn of much of its attractions. Mdle. de Meric, the contralto of the season, not being of sufficient force to give importance to the part.

The directors were justified two years previously in selecting Semiramide to open the campaign. They had sundry reasons for their choice. First, the opera is a favourite one, and deserves to be so. It abounds in beautiful and striking melodies, and has several admirable pieces to show off the singers to the best advantage. Secondly, the choral and orchestral forces are largely and frequently employed, which tends to exhibit the great resources of the opera. In the next place, Semiramide is one of Grisi's finest impersonations, a circumstance which alone would justify the directors' choice. These were a few of the reasons which induced the management to open with Rossini's Grand Opera Seria.

The opening night of a large and important establishment like that of the Royal Italian Opera is always one of unusual excitement. Expectation is rife—Curiosity is on tip-toe—Speculation is voluble and inquisitive—Rumour loud and multiple—and, in the case of the supporters of Covent Garden, Rivalry rampant and bold. The doors are besieged too by a furious crowd; every one anxious for his own comfort thinks not of incommoding his neighbour; self-preservation is the first law of nature, and gallantry is laid fast asleep in the lap of egotism. The renters, also—poor Covent Garden!—the Cosacks of the establishment, are more than generally fierce and proscribing, and eye every member of the free list with scowls and ribbonmen's looks, anything at all but grateful to the gentlemen of the press, who are not honoured with boxes or stalls, but are compelled to stand lowering glances and sharp elbows. The conduct of the renters on Thursday night was just as disgraceful as it has been every opening night of every year since the commencement of the Royal Italian Opera.

The band is nearly the same as last year. Two highly important members have seceded—Mr. Ribas, the first flute, and Mr. Rowland, principal double bass. The place of Mr. Ribas is supplied by Mr. Pratten, from M. Jullien's band. As the directors this year have published no list of their orchestral force in their prospectus, we are unable to ascertain who fills the post formerly occupied by Mr. Rowland. The last named gentleman has gone over to the parent establishment, and is now Mr. Balfe's principal double bass. Notwithstanding these two deductions from the ensemble of last year we did not perceive any falling off in the band. The chorus appears to be as efficient and powerful as ever.

Mr. Costa was received with loud cheers on taking his seat in the orchestra. The overture obtained a well-merited encore. It was played with great brilliancy, and left nothing to criticise, if we except the andante for four horns, in which the bassoon was substituted for one of the horns. Fine as Mr. Baumann's tone is, it did not amalgamate with the brass. Signor Luigi Mei appeared for the first time as Idreno, but did not exhibit any improvement on Signor Lavia. He gave the florid passages which his predecessor omitted, and adhered more closely to the original score; but his unfortunate tendency to flatten marred all his efforts. It is rather surprising that the directors of the Royal Italian Opera, who are such “sticklers” for perfection of ensemble, should invariably put an incompetent tenor into Idreno, a part which, at Her Majesty's Theatre some years ago, was not deemed unworthy of Signor Ivanoff, then one of the popularities of the day. By the way, Idreno's aria, one of the best things in the opera, and one of the most brilliant tenor songs Rossini ever wrote, is always left out.

The entrance of Signor Salvatori, as Assur, was awaited with interest and curiosity. The public have always been led to expect at the Royal Italian Opera the best performers in every line possible to be procured; and therefore when so great a singer and so great a favourite as Tamburini had withdrawn from the establishment, hopes were naturally entertained that an artist of superior acquirements would have been engaged; or, if no such artist were available, one at least who would reflect no discredit on the directors' judgment. Little of Signor Salvatori was known previous to his coming to England. Rumour gave out that he was an actor and singer of no ordinary pretensions, and that he had achieved a high reputation at some of the theatres in Italy. Unfortunately, Signor Salvatori had a severe hoarseness on Thursday night, and a printed notice was distributed in the house, entreating the indulgence of the audience. Under these circumstances it would be impossible to pronounce fairly on the vocal merits of the new barytone. As far as we could judge, Signor Salvatori has a voice of ordinary power, ordinary quality, and ordinary compass. He sings well, is evidently an artist, and acts admirably. Indeed, in one or two instances, he displayed histrionic abilities of the highest order—not even surpassed by his predecessor; but his voice failed to do justice to his efforts, and he did not produce the effect he might have done under more favourable circumstances. If Signor Salvatori had a severe hoarseness, it was highly injudicious to allow him to appear at all. First impressions cannot be easily eradicated. Nor should he have been permitted to introduce the scene at the tomb of Ninus, a morceau which demands a perfect command of the voice in all its resources. We shall be glad to report more favourably of the Signor in our next notice. Meanwhile, it is but right to state our conviction, that Signor Salvatori can never pretend to supply the place vacated by Tamburini.

The imperial Grisi has come back to us with renewed energies, and powers re-invigorated by long rest and care. Since her last appearance at the Royal Italian Opera in August, she has not sung in public. Her voice has consequently improved in freshness and vigour, and we have seldom heard her sing so splendidly, or with such thrilling effect, as on Thursday night. She was welcomed back with all the old furor that never fails to accompany her first appearance of the season. She is certainly thinner than she was last year, and she looks all the better for it. It was curious to watch the intense anxiety with which her first notes were listened to, and the burst of applause which instantaneously followed her first phrase from all parts of the house was an acknowledgment and a delight that Grisi was still the Grisi of bye-gone times, and was still in full possession of her powers. The grand scene "Bel raggio," confirmed this impression still further. It was given with all the power, facility, and delicacy for which it has always been remarkable, not a point being missed, nor an effect lost. The pianissimos were beautifully in tune, and the florid passages delivered with singular ease and precision. This was a great vocal feat, the audience applauded enthusiastically, and Grisi once more reigned supreme as the acknowledged Queen of Song. It is unnecessary to speak in detail of Grisi's acting in Semiramide. Its numerous beauties are too well known to dwell upon them. Enough to say, she acted throughout with all her usual grandeur and power, and never achieved a more triumphant success.

The impetuous Angri obtained a warm reception in Arsace. Her aria d'intrata, "Ecco alfine in Babylonia," was a good commencement, and exhibited the breadth and vigour of her style to great advantage. She was in fine voice throughout the night, and sang with remarkable animation and force. Indeed, bating an occasional exaggeration of the sentiment, and a too frequent tendency to drag the time, the singing of Mdle. Angri was unimpeachable. In the duets with Semiramide, she did not always keep pace with Grisi, and much of effect of the ensemble was lost thereby. Histrionically speaking, Arsace is certainly the best character Mdle. Angri has sustained in this country. It exhibits great dramatic force, and an abandon which indicates more than mere talent and acquirement in the artist. The directors showed much policy in retaining the services of Mdle. Angri, who may be turned to the best account.

Signor Tagliafico is entitled to the highest praise for his careful singing in the difficult and thankless music of Oroe the High Priest. This artist is one of the most zealous and painstaking members of the Royal Italian Opera corps, and is thoroughly efficient in everything he undertakes.

Grisi, Angri, and Signor Salvatori were called for at the fall of the curtain, and made their appearance. "God save the Queen" was then sung by the company—Grisi, Angri, and Castellan taking the solos. The charming Castellan was received with a round of hearty applause.

On Tuesday next Masaniello will be given for Signor Tamberlik's first appearance, when Herr Formes will perform Pietro, Massol's great part, for the first time. Madame Castellan will play Elvira.

Reviews of Music.

"CENSUS FOR 1851,"—COMIC SONG—WRITTEN BY ANDREW PARK. Z. T. Purday.

Having just been served with a schedule, to be filled up with our surname, relation to the head of family, condition, sex, age, rank, profession, occupation, birth, deafness, dumbness, blindness, &c. &c., we can enter with heartiness into the rhythmical plaint of our poetical friend, eke contributor, Andrew Park, who, in a lay of six fyttes, sets forth with unctuous humour the catalogue of inconvenient disclosures forced upon every liege subject of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, at this eventful period, when the heads of our legislature take it unto themselves to count and classify the whole population of these blessed realms. Our author does not draw up his apostrophe in bitterness of spirit, but, with riant raillery and pungent pun, he so takes the hearer by the cachinnatory nerve, that he holds him suspended, as it were, in a noose of laughter, which only drops when Mr. Park (the showman who pulls the string), having arrived at the end of his stave, launches him into an eternity of convulsion, until, beating his sides and holding his mouth alternately, he comes to himself, and cries out lustily, "once more, for pity's sake, once more." The tune to which Mr. Park has musicked his version of the "Census" is apparently an old familiar theme, although at present we have not wherewith to trace its origin. The whole signifies a good after-dinner song, to be listened to without "tray or teen."

"THE HOLYROOD PALACE POLKA."—AS PERFORMED BEFORE HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY QUEEN VICTORIA—J. R. LING. T. Holloway.

The Holyrood Palace Polka is written with Mr. Ling's usual facility and correctness. The introduction, being formed upon "Robin Adair," leaves the commentator a point for discussion, whereof the proposition may be thus worded:—what connexion has "Robin Adair," or to go back further into antiquity, "Eileen Aroon," with Holyrood Palace? Answer—none. Q. E. D. The polka itself is very catching and pretty, and the airs with which it is chequered—"The Lass o' Gowrie," "John Highlandman," "The Campbells are coming," (with lame horses)—give it a Scotch twist which triumphantly establishes Mr. Ling's right to entitle his polka "Holyrood Palace."

"RECOLLECTIONS OF GREAT BRITAIN, AND THE SISTER ISLES. FANTASIA. J. R. LING.—H. Tolkien.

The "Recollections" begin with an introduction, Allegro Maestoso, in G, which, after the course of a page, arrives at the point from whence it started, and gives place to the well known air, "O Nannie wilt thou gang with me?" which Mr. Ling, with his usual partiality for the plaid, has assigned to Scotland, to the prejudice of the Green Isle that hoves hard by in the South West. In revenge, as it were, to compensate for changing its birth-place, Mr. Ling has arranged the venerable ditty in a seemly suit of Thalberg, whereby its physiognomy is so modified that it is doubtful whether its composer, were he to start into life, vigorously brandishing a shillelah, would be able to recognise the offspring of his invention. "Nannie," being thus disposed of, retires in favour of the equally well known air, "Have you not heard of a Jolly Young Waterman?" which, under the title of "Sing, Sing, Music was given" (see Moore's Melodies), Mr. Ling, as it were in propitiation for depriving her of her own "Nannie" and her owner "Eileen," presents to Hibernia, in the key of C major, with the addition of some sauce piquante à la Henri Herz. This effected, as though apprehensive of discovery, our composer shifts his key, by means of a 6-4, 5-4, and 5-3 on B, into E major, in which disguise he cunningly endows Old England with the Spanish melody, "Home, sweet home," which Mozart, seventy years ago, had already presented to the Eagle of Austria, in the shape of an air with variations. Independent of this singular passion for transferring the tunes of one nation to another, Mr. Ling's Recollections are agreeable, and worthy of being remembered in Great Britain and the Sister Isles—whereof Ireland stands for one, but what land for the other, unless Man, White, Sky, or Dogs, none of whose primitive tunes Mr. Ling has bequeathed to adjacent countries, we have yet to learn. Perhaps Mr. Ling will inform us, by a line (post paid), directed to 22, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden.

"THE SPRITE POLKA."—BRILLIANT PHANTASY—LAURA BARKER.
Wessel & Co.

Like everything we have seen from the pen of its accomplished authoress—who, though an amateur, knows more of the art than many professors of name and standing, not to speak of her sprightly fancy, a quality which it does not belong to teaching or professional status to give—the "Sprite Polka" demands that consideration due to performances in which there is no evidence of vulgar idea, or common-place treatment. It could not be described more properly than by Miss Barker in her own title-page being really a brilliant phantasy, and not merely distinguished by a Ph. instead of an F, but by real thoughts instead of emptiness. It might, indeed, be interpolated, without fear of question, as an air de danse in one of the operas of the illustrious author of the Huguenots and the Prophete, whose manner of composing ballet music Miss Barker has happily caught, without, be it understood, appropriating, or even attempting to imitate his ideas. The "Sprite Polka" is not addressed to mean fingers, but require a deliberate command of the key-board, in all its compass. The signature is five flats; but after a short fantasia, con fuoco, the theme of the introduction makes its appearance in F minor, in a style of vivacious diablerie. It is then carried through a series of natural progressions, in which the feeling of mystery is well sustained, until a sparkling passage of triplets leads to the polka itself, in the key of the signature D flat. The subject—the most prominent feature of which consists in skips of tenths—necessitating the player to take heed where he places his fingers and thumb—is gay and capricious as becomes the scope of the phantasy, which involves no end of imps and elves, not to speak of gnomes and ghouls whose ugliness excludes them from Miss Laura Barker's category of spirits. Another dashing trait de bravoure in triplets here comes to separate the debut from the rentrée of the polka; which, latter, being effectively accomplished, a new and suggestive measure, con fuoco, is struck up alternately in G flat and B flat minor, a capital point being obtained by the pauses, or silences, which separate the phrase of six bars in the major from that of four in the minor. Some well-designed remplissage, terminating with a chromatic scale, F F, restores us to the polka—intercepted shortly by another new motive in B flat minor, of a savage character—which, in its turn, after some pretty coquetry of keys, leaves the left hand alone to deal with a fiery passage of semi-quavers—the avant-courier of a fresh episode in A flat, a bold and passionate melody, accompanied by an arpeggio for the left hand, by no means admitting of careless or sluggish execution. More remplissage are good, because in place, the polka once again pianissimo, varied both in melody and harmony, followed, as before, by bravura, the passage of triplets, dividing, as before, its entry from its re-entry; and lastly, an exceedingly effective and showy coda, in excellent keeping with the whole, and bringing about a climax which must prove equally satisfactory to the performer and hearer, provided the one is able to play and the other to appreciate.

The "Sprite Polka" is dedicated, in words of graceful and sincere compliment, to Mr. Cipriani Potter, from whose experienced teaching Miss Laura Barker has derived her knowledge of the art of composition, and, we believe, her proficiency on the pianoforte.

"THE GRAND MARCH OF ALL NATIONS." J. W. ETHERINGTON.—
J. Etherington, Richmond.

A dashing march in E flat, with a trio in the dominant, of graceful character, and a coda, not the less showy because brief. In this composition a decided inclination for harmony and modulation of the uncommon kind is to be remarked, an inclination which, while here it leads into a bold effect, there conducts to a quagmire. The opening theme of the march is very good, but the first two bars are like the Caliph's march in Macfarren's Sleeper Awakened. The fanfare, which precedes it, would be excellent but for the bare fourth (E, B) which occurs in the second bar. The next subject, in A flat, is also good; but the harmony is too artificial for so simple a tune, and the progression (bars 3-4, line 4, page 2) from the chord of the 6, 4, 3, on B flat, to the 6, 4, on A flat, is forced into the service without adequate results—or, perhaps, with bad results, since it gives an unsatisfactory twist to the melody which, plainly harmonised, would have been unexceptionable. The rentrée of the theme is hardy, and nothing can be nicer in its way than the trio in B flat. The coda, where the subject is introduced in the bass, with a florid accompaniment of triplets, is capital. It would be still more capital if Mr. Etherington would strike out the natural affixed to the A, in the last chord of bar 3, line 3. We have already had the chord, with the A natural, at the beginning of the bar, and its reappearance, after it has once been got rid of by the A flat in the bass, is obtrusive, and spoils the otherwise blameless progression from D flat, beginning in the preceding bar. To conclude, we like the "Grand March of all Nations," and shall feel obliged to the composer, if, by making the proposed changes, he would help us to like it even better. As for the frontispiece, with Britannia in a sepulchre, surmounted by a posse of "the nations," carrying boxes and bundles to the Crystal Palace, each with a pose supposed to be peculiar (for goodness' sake, reader, look at the Frenchman, in the dexter corner of the foreground, with a white waistcoat, and some clock-work!)—as for the frontispiece, that is unique (sui generis), and not to be outdone by any of the pictorial macula that have started from the plethora of 1851. We should have mentioned that the March has an ad libitum accompaniment for flute or violin.

"PEGGOTTY, THE WANDERER," ballad, poetry by WILLIAM MARTIN, Esq.; music by J. W. ETHERINGTON.—Chappell. Also T. Etherington.

The present ballad, being a perfect example of the school to which it belongs—the sentimental Drawing Room—leaves nothing for criticism to advance. Had it been signed W. Vincent Wallace, or Michael W. Balfe, we should not have stopped to inquire into its genuineness—which is paying no small compliment to Mr. Etherington, who, by the way, has brought in his favourite progression, from the seventh upon the supertonic to the six-four on the dominant, with pretty effect, at the end of each verse, and by this little stroke of musicianship has just contrived to separate his very nice song from the common herd of ballads popular. He has also been very lucky in his poet, William Martin, Esq., who has paraphrased one of the sweetest passages in David Copperfield (where little Emily of the bruised heart leans on the shoulder of Peggotty of the mighty love), with uncommon feeling, and in verses that flow without let or hindrance, in rhymes that he who runs may read, so pleasingly trip they on, without stick or stumble. We recommend this ballad as a good stock piece of its kidney.

"MAY GOD PRESERVE OLD ENGLAND."—New National Anthem; written by WILLIAM MARTIN, Esq.; composed by J. W. ETHERINGTON.—J. Etherington, Richmond.

We have already hinted that William Martin, Esq. is a good poet, and we could hardly adduce a better proof of the fact than the verses herein at issue. That such musty sentiments as "Preserve Old England," and "Loyalty be her watchword," and "May true religion arm her," &c. should be newly set agoing, in rhyme, and that in a manner at once hearty, unaffected, and agreeable, is to be noted down in white, with the comment, that a poet who has been able to do this ought by all means to do something much better—whereof, we stake our repute, William Martin, Esq. is fully capable, if he will but spur his energy to the act. Mr. Etherington, too, merits praise for having taken nothing from "God save the Queen" and "Rule Britannia" except the key, B flat, which he had an absolute right to appropriate. His music is in vocal quartet, the theme, a good plain melody, being first given by the soprano, as solo. There are also short incidental solos, for second, soprano or tenor, and duets, for two sopranos, which confer a pleasing variety. The tune throughout is clear and singable, the harmony simple and correct, and the voicing unexceptionable. We have our doubts about the progression into A flat, and back again to the dominant of the original key, which occurs at the bottom of page 1 and at the top of page 4, since, for so homely a topic, the music could hardly have been made too unpretending. Nevertheless, it is evident Mr. Etherington, whatever he composes, is resolved to pop in a little bit, somewhere, which shall go to prove that he, Mr. Etherington, is a musician, and not a pretender—a fact whereof, we beg to assure both Mr. Etherington and our readers we are thoroughly persuaded and convinced.

"GORLITZA"—Polka and Mazurka, for the Pianoforte, by J. H. D'Egville.—R. Cocks and Co.

The polka and mazurka of Mr. D'Egville, although bearing the name Gorlitza (not ga), are totally unlike similar compositions, similarly dubbed, which have reached our table. We are, therefore, now in a condition to record that "Gorlitza" is not a particular tune, but a particular dance—Livonian, if you please, or anything else in that direction, which may suit the purpose better. A "Gorlitza," then, may be written and published without consulting M. Varin, which is something worth knowing. Mr. D'Egville has composed a sparkling mazurka in G, and a still more sparkling polka in B flat, each moving irresistably to the Polish sort of dance, and each courting popularity with an argument so tuneless that popularity is not likely to be chary in granting her patronage. Mr. D'Egville has printed both, without asking permission of M. Varin, and has circulated both, we understand (and are not surprised) profusely, with what consequence it remains for M. Varin to decide.

BEETHOVEN QUARTET SOCIETY.

The inauguration of the seventh season took place on Wednesday evening at the New Beethoven Rooms. The change of locale from the Old Beethoven Rooms is not an improvement. M. Scipion Rousselot continues the representative of the society. His return to the original plan of three quartets, from the early, middle, and latter period of Beethoven's career, is to be applauded, and the engagement of Herr Ernst, to lead, as we hope, the entire series of performances, is a step of equal wisdom.

The programme comprised the quartets in A (No. 5, Op. 18), in E flat (No. 10, Op. 74), and in B flat (No. 13, Op. 130, Posthumous). We like them all, but the last the least. The quartet in A is a gem of simplicity; the one in E flat a deep well of mysterious passion; that in B flat a labyrinth of mingled beauty and unloveliness, clearness and complexity.

Herr Ernst was perfection in all of them. In the first he was playful, tender, and unstudied; in the second he was impassioned, varied and profoundly expressive; in the last he was grand, mysterious, and fitful as the work itself. A better second violin than Mr. H. C. Cooper (one of the first of "firsts") could not have been appointed; a more accomplished master of the viola than Mr. H. Hill does not exist; a more comprehensive Beethovenite than M. Rousselot professes not the violoncello. It was not then astonishing that the quartets were admirably executed, and that the audience, a select one, was stirred to enthusiasm. In the adagio in A flat (of the No. 10)—into which, by the way, that rarest of plagiarists, Mendelssohn, has dipped" (see adagio non troppo in the same key, from the quartet Op. 44, No. 3, in E flat)—Ernst fairly surpassed himself; and ditto in the adagio of the Posthumous in E flat. We never heard the violin give vent to such a full tide of tears and passions; the fourth string, in one passage (No. 10), spoke with the voice of a desperate lover, whose mistress has rejected him with contumely; it might have been Sir Pelleas complaining of the Lady Ettarde (Morte Arthure). Talking of plagiarisms—Spohr has taken a large piece out of the first movement of the A, and placed it in the opening allegro of his second symphony in D minor; and friend Benedict had an eye to one of the movements in a certain characteristic dance in the Gipsy's Warning, written at the request of poor George Wieland. Mentioning violas, we must not forget to say that Mr. Hill played the tenor variation, in the last and least surprising movement of the No. 10, with the utmost grace and fidelity; and, alluding to arpeggios, let us note that we never heard the grand arpeggio trait de bravoure, in the allegro of the same, so dexterously executed, and with such energy, as by Ernst on Wednesday night. The least hearty enjoyment of the evening was derived from the Posthumous quartet, which, with all the skill of the performers, except in some exquisitely beautiful passages, could not be unequivocally understood, and so did not strongly excite the sympathies and admiration of the audience.

The date of the next concert is not announced, but the series will comprise the seventeen quartets. Tea and coffee are served, as usual, in the interval between the second and third pieces.

PROBINCIAL.

LIVERPOOL.—From our own Correspondent.—MR. C. E. HORSLEY's oratorio of David, first produced by our Philharmonic Society, was repeated by them at their hall on Tuesday evening, the 25th inst., on which occasion a crowded audience proved that the interest it excited on its first hearing is unabated. The principals were the Misses Birch, and M. Williams, Mr. Lockey, and Mr. Henry Drayton, who sang the music of Goliath, in place of Mr. Machin. The performance was again most successful. Miss Birch was in capital voice, and never perhaps sang better, or with more feeling. In the duet with Miss Williams, "The Lord preserveth," the voices blended perfectly. Miss Williams exerted herself to the utmost throughout the oratorio, and her efforts were duly appreciated. The great weight of the oratorio fell upon Mr. Lockey, and could hardly have been better supported. Mr. Henry Drayton sang zealously the music of Goliath. Mr. Armstrong, who appeared to such advantage on the first performance of the oratorio, sang with feeling and propriety. The chorus acquitted themselves admirably throughout. The second performance of this oratorio has increased our respect for the composer. Mr. Horsley, as the composer of a large and ambitious work, has been subject to searching criticism, and grave charges of plagiarism; but the delight with which David has been twice listened to by impartial auditories in this town, is at least an argument in favour of its merits.

Henrich Werner, the boy pianist, gave a concert at the concert-hall, Lord Nelson-street, on Monday evening, when he satisfied the audience that report had not overrated his powers. His first performance was a composition of his own, in which several Scotch airs are introduced. This was followed by a duet of Mozart's for two pianofortes, one of which was played by Miss Theresa Jeffreys, a very clever young pianist, daughter of the well-known London publisher. The talents of both were conspicuously brought into notice. Variations by Czerny on Himmel's air, "Alexis," were given with ease and rapidity; but the most effectual performance was Moscheles' "Recollections of Ireland," which Young Werner played from memory. The audience astonished by his performances, gave a vent to their admiration in loud applause. The vocal music introduced to the notice of a Liverpool audience two young ladies, named Jolly, the elder of whom was a contralto voice of sweetness and compass. Mr. Delavanti, an old favourite in Liverpool, suffered so severely from hoarseness as to make criticism unnecessary. Miss Whitnall sang several popular songs in her usual pleasing manner.

The Manchester Shaksperian Society will play at our Theatre Royal, on the 25th of next month, for the benefit of our Eye and Ear Infirmary. The pieces will be, As you like it, and The Review, preceded by a prologue, entitled "Light and Darkness," written expressly for the occasion, by J. B. Rogerson, Esq., a poet known as the author of a book entitled Rhyme, Romance, and Reverie.

J. H. N.

SHREWSBURY.—The first of a series of Classical Chamber Concerts, by Messrs. Hay and Adam, was held in the Music Hall, on Friday evening, the 7th inst., and the company, assembled by private invitation, included most of the respectable inhabitants of the town. The Hall, covered with a carpet, and fitted up with the decorations of a drawing room, presented an elegant appearance. The programme included some of the finest compositions of Beethoven and Haydn. In Beethoven's Quintett for piano, violin, flute, viola, and violoncello, the light and shade was well defined by the performers; the pathos of the slow movement, and the animation of the allegro, afforded a rich treat. Mr. Hayward's violin solo was equal to most things of kind we have heard. The selection from Reisiger's Trio, No. 6, in which Mr. Hyles played with his customary skill, was entitled to praise, and made us wish the whole had been given instead of a part. The second movement from a sonata by Beethoven, for violin and piano, delighted everybody, both by its exquisite beauty, and the manner in which it was executed. Perhaps the most successful performance of the evening was the selection from one of Haydn's Quartetts, by Messrs. Hayward, Bourlay, and two gentlemen amateurs. The concert concluded with a Duo Concertante, for two pianofortes, played by Messrs. Hay and Adams, with great spirit and precision. It was performed at the last Choral Concert, but on this occasion with increased effect. We trust there will be no difficulty in continuing these concerts monthly.

BATH.—On Friday evening, the 21st ult., the members of the Sacred Harmonic Society held their last meeting (for this season) at the Assembly Rooms: C. J. Vigne, Esq., Vice-President, presided. The programme was chosen from Handel, Attwood, Spofforth, and others. The performance gave much gratification, particularly the first chorus, "O the Pleasure of the Plains" (Handel), which was admirably sung. A charming duet, by Mendelssohn, "On yon Streamlet's Yellow Sand," was beautifully given by Mr. and Mrs. Millar, and encored. The first part was terminated by the chorus, "Hither we come," in which Mrs. Pyne gave the solo, "My task is ended," with her usual ability. Mrs. Pyne and Miss Gilbert sang a very pretty duet (MS), by Mr. Bianchi Taylor, cleverly: the piece well merited the unanimous encore it elicited. Dr. Calcott's comic trio, "Aldiborontophoscophornio," was done sufficiently well to excite laughter, which is all the author aimed at. Mr. Millar, Mr. Pyne, and Mr. B. Taylor, were the executants. "On the Banks of Allan Water," harmonized for four voices, was effectively sung by Mrs. Pyne, Messrs. Bell, Pyne, and B. Taylor. The whole concluded with Sir H. Bishop's chorus, "Welcome, welcome, Lady fair," the solo sung by Mrs. Millar, with characteristic effect.

KINGTON.—The fifth and last meeting of the Musical Society for the season was held on Thursday, the 20th ult., when the performance created a lively interest. The performers were all amateur ladies and gentlemen. The programme demonstrated, to a certain extent, the proficiency the members have attained under the directorship of Mr. Ridley, organist of the Parish Church. Among the pieces we may name the Overture to Il Barbiere; the market chorus from Masaniello: the Andante and Allegro from Symphony No. 1, (Beethoven); the overture to L'Italiana in Algeri, (Rossini); a trio of Mozart's, and "God Save the Queen," as a finale. Several of the pieces were repeated at the request of the president. At the conclusion the president congratulated the audience on the termination of a brilliant succession of meetings, and, in the name of the subscribers, thanked the performers for their exertions, and proceeded in a very eulogistic strain to compliment the conductor, the originator of the society, for his liberality in continuing to direct the concerts gratuitously. Three hearty cheers were then given for Mr. Ridley, who immediately came forward in a very appropriate and feeling address, to return thanks, assuring the company that he felt highly gratified that his humble exertions had secured their approbation, but still more so, at the success of the institution—for he conceived that the society was a benefit to the town, in a moral, social, and intellectual point of view.

MANCHESTER.—On Wednesday the 19th ult., there was an undress concert at the Concert Hall, which presented so good a programme that we were surprised it did not attract. The room was not nearly so full as at several of the previous undress concerts. The audience, too, was apathetic,—not one encore was awarded, though the performances, both vocal and instrumental, were all creditable, and some of a superior character. The splendid symphony of Beethoven (Eroica) was most carefully rendered under the able direction of Mr. Charles Hallé; indeed, we were scarcely prepared to hear the arduous undertaking achieved so satisfactorily in all its details. Two solos were given by members of the orchestra. The first was on the violoncello, by Herr Lidel, who played with that skill of which we have before spoken, and was well supported by the band. The second was on the violin by M. Baetens. Both the writing and playing of Mons. Baetens betoken taste, but we have found his performances more satisfactory at the Chamber Concerts of Hallé and others. He was, perhaps, incommoded by the size of the room. The superb march from Mendelssohn's Athalie was given with fine effect, and though in style not so light, and not so popular as the well-known Wedding March, it proved sufficiently attractive to induce a large proportion of the audience to remain until the close. The vocal music was efficiently sustained; Mrs. Wood sang well, but scarcely, as we thought, with her usual power; Mr. Isherwood's singing requires no encomiums from us; and Mrs. Thomas ably sustained the contralto. Mr. Slater's voice cannot be surpassed in this town in its mixing quality, a point of importance in concerted vocal music. The "Ave verum" of Mozart and the quartet from Fidelio were the most successful pieces. In the well known "Over the Dark Blue Waters," from Oberon, the singers appeared to be overpowered by the band. The concert was over at an early hour.

The fascinating Anna Thillon, accompanied by the Irish Mr. Hudson, commenced their second series of performances at the Free-trade Hall, on Tuesday the 25th ult. The lady appeared in much better health than on the occasion of her previous visit, and gave her beautiful melodies with great brilliancy and feeling. Charming, indeed, was her Brounais Melanie, with the French romance, "Une rose bien fleurie;" the dancing girl of Egypt; and the sweet melody, "Where trembling lotus flowers;" whilst the Genius of America ensured her rapturous applause, which rose into an enthusiastic encore, for the parody upon Jenny Lind's favourite song from La Figlia del Reggimento. Mr. Hudson gave point to the humorisms allotted to him. Between the first and second parts, M. Thillon played a fantasia on the violin, in which he exhibited fine taste and delicacy of execution. He was accompanied on the pianoforte, as were all the songs, by Mr. Frederick Hudson. The series of Concerts extends to four, and terminates on Friday.

The benefit of Mrs. Thomas on Monday the 24th ult. was a benefit indeed. The Free-trade Hall was crowded, and a larger number of reserved seats taken than is usual at the Concerts of the People. Besides Mrs. Thomas, Mrs. Sunderland and Mr. James Isherwood were among the additional vocal attractions, whilst Mr. Royal and Mr. H. Walker lent their aid as instrumentalists, the former on the flute, the latter on the concertina. During the evening there were several encores. The concert ended somewhat later than on the regular nights, but few left the hall, packed as it was, before the close of the performance. On Monday, the 31st ult., Mr. Walton took his benefit, and this, we learn, was the last but two of the extra nights. Mr. Walton has long been a valuable assistant in the musical societies of the town and neighbourhood, and his appeal was not forgotten by his friends. A selection from the works of Sir Henry Bishop was the principal attraction.

The last of Mr. Seymour's quartet concerts for the season was given on Thursday evening, the 27th ult., at the Town Hall, Chorlton-on-Medlock, before a select, but not very numerous audience. The performances commenced with a work by an author new to Manchester,—Verhulst, a Dutchman. The quartet, though not of the highest class, was an interesting composition, and had full justice done to it by Messrs. Baetens (first violin), Thomas (second), Seymour (tenor), and Lidel (violinello). A harp fantasia introduced a stranger to us in the person of Miss Kennedy, who played a solo by Bochsa with evident command of the instrument. The second part opened with one of the posthumous works of the lamented Mendelssohn, the quintet in B flat, which was executed with great skill by the parties above-named, with the addition of an amateur who took the second tenor. Mr. Seymour and Mr. Baetens exchanged places, the former taking the first violin and the latter the tenor. The Andante scherzando was encored. The concert concluded with a quartet by Mayseder, in which Mr. Thomas took the first and Mr. Seymour the second violin; it was played throughout with great spirit. Thus, it will be seen, that three gentlemen in turn took the first violin.

Ernst, the unrivalled violinist, played on Thursday, at Mr. Seymour's benefit concert. There is no time for an account now.

ISLINGTON INSTITUTION.—Mr. Pearsall gave a very animated entertainment at the Athenæum Institution, on the 17th ult., and introduced a variety of songs, principally classical, introducing each with either a biographical notice or a criticism of the composition, interspersed with numerous anecdotes. "Comfort ye my people" was given excellently. Haydn's delightful song, "In native worth," drew down the plaudits of the audience, and in the "Death of Nelson" an encore was unanimously demanded. Among the lighter pieces, Dibdin's, "When the Lads of the Village," a pretty little ballad of Attwood's, "Let me Die," on which Charles Horn founded his celebrated "Cherry ripe," and Donizetti's Serenade from Don Pasquale, "Oh Summer Night," were among the best; and, but for the great exertion used by Mr. Pearsall would have called for repetition. We were much gratified in listening to this excellent singer in the character of an entertainer and hail him as an acquisition in this department of the art. The room was well filled although the weather proved most unpropitious. Mr. Jolley accompanied Mr. Pearsall on the pianoforte with taste and judgment.—(From a Correspondent.)

HEREFORD.—After a strict trial of skill, each candidate being first tested in an anthem chosen by himself, then in the daily Choral Service, also in a MS. solo for each kind of voice, composed by the organist, the following were appointed Lay Clerks of Hereford Cathedral on the 20th ult.:—Mr. G. Bickley, of the Cathedral, Lichfield; Mr. Burville, of the Cathedral, Rochester; Mr. Stevens, of the Cathedral, Ely; Mr. Lumley, of the Cathedral, Lincoln; Mr. Taylor, of the Cathedral, Lincoln; Mr. Ward, of the Cathedral, Lincoln. Amongst the candidates, Mr. Metcalfe, a pupil of Dr. Bexfield's, greatly distinguished himself. The Services were Hall and Hine, Morning; Hayes, Evening. Anthems, "God is gone up," Croft; "God is our Hope," Greene. The effect of the choral service in the fine nave of the Cathedral was most beautiful. It is a pity that twelve singers are not to be employed. There were forty candidates. Twelve were selected to compete.

The appointment of Lay Clerks is a novelty at Hereford; the old system was a college of twelve Vicars Choral in orders, four of them being also minor canons.

MDLLE CAROLINE DUPREZ.

(Abridged from the Illustrated London News.)

In the autumn of 1835, Donizetti's Lucia di Lammermoor was first produced at the San Carlo, at Naples, Edgardo being sustained by M. Duprez, for whom the part had been expressly composed, and Lucia by Mdlle. Tacchinardi (now known as Madame Persiani); Signori Cosselli and Porti being Enrico and Bidebent. Soon after the production of this work, Duprez gave a dinner, at which Malibran (who was in the same company at the San Carlo), Mdlle Ungher, Signor Cosselli, and other artists were present. In the midst of the dinner, a little girl some three years of age, without being asked, began to sing the well-known air from Tancredi, "Di tanti palpiti." The guests were astonished at the quality of her voice and her precision. They asked Duprez—for it was his eldest daughter, Caroline, how it was she began to sing in the middle of dinner? He explained that it was her invariable custom to sing "Di tanti palpiti" when there was any particular dish she fancied on the table. Caroline Duprez was born at Florence in 1832, during the period of Duprez's second visit to Italy, where he married a vocalist of that country. From her earliest infancy she was fond of music, and when Duprez, after his career in Italy, returned to Paris in 1837, to make his débüt at the Académie Royale, as Arnoldo in Guillaume Tell, he took especial pains with the musical education of his child. She was always anxious to be present at the Grand Opera, and in vain were her desires checked by her parents. Whilst Duprez took charge of her tuition in singing, she studied harmony and accompaniment under M. A. Lecarpentier, and the piano under Mdlle. Marten. It was principally for his daughter that Duprez wrote his work The Art of Singing. At the age of fourteen years Mdlle. Caroline was enabled to conquer every vocal difficulty, and was then left to her own juvenile inspirations.

After Duprez had quitted the Académie Royale, the scene of his triumphs in Guillaume Tell, La Favorita, La Juive, Les Huguenots, Robert le Diable, Otello, &c., for twelve years, he determined to establish a dramatic singing-school, in order to promulgate the principles of that art of which he had been such an eloquent exponent. For this purpose he selected a certain number of pupils from the Conservatoire, where he was professor of singing; and, after he had trained the most intelligent in his class, he gave them the advantage of dramatic experience, having erected a private theatre at his residence. When he had perfected a company for opera, he left Paris on a tour in the provinces. He was at Nantes, thus occupied with his pupils, when he was joined by his wife and children, who were witnesses of the success of his experiment. Here Mdlle. Caroline's irresistible desire to sing on the stage induced her father to cultivate her talents, with the promise that she should make her débüt in due course. Last year he began a fresh tour with his pupils, six of whom now occupy positions in Paris and London on the operatic boards. Mdlle. Masson, Mdlle. Poinot, and M. Oswald, at the Grand Opera; Mdlle. Felix Miolon, at the Opera Comique; Mdlle. Duprez and M. Balanche, at Her Majesty's Theatre. Mdlle. Caroline Duprez sang for the first time in public at L'Île-Adam, where her father gave a concert for some inhabitants of a village near his country house, who had been burnt out

Her first public appearance was at Geneva, about four months since, in the character of the Princess Eudoxie, in Halévy's Juive. Her preparations for the stage were concluded at Stuttgart (Wurtemberg), Nancy, &c.; and, on the 9th of January last, she made her débüt in Paris, at the Theatre des Italiens, having been engaged by Mr. Lumley, director of that establishment as well as of Her Majesty's Theatre. Her father was the Edgardo, and her success was decided. In the same month she appeared as Adina, in Donizetti's Elisir d'Amore, with Lablache, Signori Ferranti and Calzolari. She took her farewell of the Parisians, on the 10th inst., as Desdemona, in the third act of Rossini's Otello, her father sustaining the part of the Moor. On the 22nd inst. she appeared at Her Majesty's Theatre. It remains to be recorded, that Mdlle. Caroline Duprez is highly accomplished, and that in private life, she shines as an amiable member of a gifted family, thus adding intrinsic worth to professional excellence.

Original Correspondence.

STAGE FASHIONS FOR 1851.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

MR. EDITOR.—It was with great delight that I read the remarks of the bold and adventurous "Dramaticus," on the "dressing" of Macbeth, at the Haymarket. I honour him (Dramaticus, not Macbeth) for his manly indignation; and shall be happy to fight, side by side with him, against existing evils, such as he has pointed out. But, though I thus volunteer a coalition to turn out the present administration, it must not be thought that our politics are the same. Like him, I object to the "person of our Banquo" being "graced" by a railway wrapper. I have no notion of that ill-used warrior, in his defunct state, taking Macbeth's words literally; and, in order to resemble a Russian bear as nearly as possible, approaching, "rugged" up to the eyes, any more than he has. We vote altogether against the iniquitous measure; but, for different reasons. Dramaticus (whom I unhesitatingly brand as a bigotted conservative) objects to it, as an innovation on the good old system of kilts and tartans. I, an uncompromising radical, disapprove of it as not going far enough. It is a timid specimen of whig finality; I am for thorough out-and-out reform. And this brings me to the real subject of my letter. The Haymarket question, may be said literally to have "two sides to it." Let us consider Mr. Webster's share of it settled, for the time, and see about the evil being "removed from over the way."

Why does Mr. Lumley allow the beauty of Lucia di Lammermoor at his establishment to be marred by such glaring incongruities and anachronisms of costume? I noticed, the other evening, that five or six different periods of English history were represented by the dresses of the different characters. Edgardo wore a suit of the time of Charles the First. Bidebent, over an unmeaning black gown (belonging to no age or country whatever), displayed a style of beard and collar, reminding us of the portraits of that celebrated individual, whom old gentlemen delight in speaking of as the "Sweet Swan, who was not for an age, but for all time." Lucy herself, went mad in a white muslin evening dress of the present day; whilst the hearts of the nobility, gentry, and the public generally, gracing her ill-starred nuptials with their presence, sympathised with her sufferings from under the stiff coats and long waistcoats of the early part of the 1st century. Again, Lorenzo the magnificent enacted Enrico (who ought not to be a Scotchman at all, certainly not a Highlander) in a kilt and sash culottes. With the exception of the Jealous Wife, as produced by Mr. Macready (the eminent tragedian wearing a "gent's evening dress" of our own time, in a piece essentially of the last century, civilians being represented in it as wearing swords and drawing them), I do not recollect a parallel case of incorrectness. I have great faith in the old saying, "What is worth doing at all is worth doing well." If we are to have costumes on the stage, let them be correct. People are a vast deal more knowing than they were, and less easily pleased. Our forefathers saw nothing ridiculous in Garrick playing Macbeth in a bag-wig and laced waistcoat. We roar at his portrait in the character, as at a caricature in Punch. Mr. Lumley should observe his age, and endeavour to keep pace with it. Let him once find the importance of the reform I have suggested, and nothing is easier than its accomplishment. What I would have him avoid is, treating the subject in a Toots-ian manner, and saying, "It's of no consequence." London, March 29, 1851. ROBERT B. BROUGH.

MOZART'S SONATAS.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—I shall feel obliged if you will please to inform me if "Mozart's concertos" are ever performed in public without accompaniments, as I see John Cramer has arranged them without accompaniments.

I am, Sir, yours truly,

A SUBSCRIBER.

[We believe, and we hope, that no pianist has ever thought of playing Mozart's concertos in public otherwise than Mozart intended they should be played.—Ed. M. W.]

ENGLISH COMPOSITIONS.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—The thanks of all true musicians are due to you for your noble advocacy of their rights and principles.

It is a remarkable fact, that all the great modern sacred works have been first produced in the provinces. St. Paul, the Last Judgment, Fall of Babylon, the Crucifixion, Elijah, Jerusalem, and David. I believe all these were not first performed at the Sacred Harmonic, or the other large societies, which ought naturally to follow the same course as our operatic directors, and secure at once any work of merit or renown.

The people of England are not wanting in generosity when a new work is performed. David has been well received, and Jerusalem, by our townsman, William Glover, was most cordially welcomed; why, then, are these works not presented by the Sacred Harmonic? The subscribers must surely require some fresh arrangement, instead of ringing the changes upon the Messiah, or the Creation, and others.

Is composition a crime, and talent a distemper, that both are so carefully avoided? Is music to be reckoned with pines, and silks, and tobacco, and figs, which are better from abroad? Are our old ladies to say for ever to subscribers, "you know, we always have had our oratorios and tea and coffee from the continent. It would not only be unfashionable, but interfering with the designs of providence to disturb the arrangement?"

Mind and genius belong to no particular clime. Norway or Greece, England or Italy—all are open to the impress of divinity. "Oh, but you English are such a money-getting, shop-keeping, utilitarian people." If the lands of sun and orange groves, of mountain and avalanche can produce anything more imaginative and ethereal than the "Midsummer Night's Dream," more gigantic and sublime than Milton and Shakspeare, more diversified and musical than Byron, and Shelley, and Moore, and twenty others, I will retire from the argument, and will consent to agree that we are a respectable, cold, solid, heavy, engine-making, shop-keeping people, and nothing more.

Manchester,
April 2nd, 1851.

Your obliged servant,
MENTAL EQUALITY.

THE FLUTE CONTROVERSY.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—My last letter was devoted exclusively to clear up the doubt which must have been created in the minds of your readers from the correspondence of Marsyas, respecting the open and shut keys. I will now endeavour to accomplish a more important object, namely, that of entering minutely into the fundamental principles of the instrument, proving how much of the modern alterations are necessary to constitute a practical flute, as near perfection as we may ever hope to reach. Should my efforts be successful it may possibly be the stepping stone to the establishment of one universal system as formerly, instead of those endless varieties of new fangled flutes with which we have been tutored, and which have thrown the flute playing world into a perfect chaos. After a diligent study of all the works which have appeared on the subject, united to a complete and impartial examination of the instruments themselves, it is quite clear to me, that the whole affair lies in a nutshell, there being but three fundamental principles to be properly carried out, viz., "the size and distance of the holes, united to the bore;" "the adoption of the open or shut keys;" and "the system of fingering," as far as practicable. I will take those subjects separately. First, then, as to the holes. The first work that appeared in London on that subject was called an "Essay on the Boehm Flute," by Mr. Clinton, in which we are informed that the holes of a flute ought to be equal in size and distance, relatively to the conical form of the instrument, so that they shall resemble a series of organ pipes, each of which yields a half tone in an ascending order. That statement has been corroborated since by Messrs. Card, Carte, and Siccama, and the necessity of such an arrangement enforced by a repetition of that very comparison first advanced here by Mr. Clinton. Now although the inventors, one and all, take that as their basis both in theory and practice, it should not be understood that every hole is of exactly the same size, or the same distance apart. I have tested every new flute both in wood and metal, also with conical and cylindrical bores, not one of which have perfect equality in size and distance throughout, but precisely in accordance with Mr. Clinton's first statement, viz., relative equality. It will, however, be evident that in selecting a flute, we have merely to ascertain that the holes are tolerably equal in size and distance, taking care not to pass over any lateral holes covered with keys, such as the hole under the F sharp key on the old flute, as by omitting to notice similar holes many persons have been deceived. Concluding this equal arrangement to be positively necessary merely from the arguments of all the inventors, let us see how far nature demands it. The successive opening of each hole on the flute yields one semitone higher, and as each semitone in music is tolerably equal, so should each opening which produces it, be tolerably equal also, as in the organ pipes; and as the pitch is also influenced by the size of the hole, it follows quality should be observed then as well. Before quitting this part of my subject, I must caution your readers to remember that the size and distance of the holes for the fourteen lowest notes must be subservient to the production of the highest notes or third octave; here is the rock upon which the majority of the inventors have been wrecked; but of this more anon. The tone of the flute is governed by the size of the holes and the skilful arrangement of the bore. A very small hole invariably yields a feeble tone, but as we increase its size, so we increase the powers; and numerous experiments have abundantly proved, that we must have what are commonly termed "large holes," the size harmonizing with that of the bore or interior. The bore can assume but one of two forms, viz., "conical" or "cylindrical," although the latter has been used from time immemorial. I was delighted to hear that Mr. Boehm had removed the defects of his flute by the adoption of the cylinder bore and parabola head, which (as I was informed) equalized all the lowest notes, and rendered the third octave in tune. Eager to possess such an instrument, I lost no time in testing it, but was cruelly disappointed at the result. The lowest C sharp was improved, but the D immediately above it was execrable; so that the equality depended upon the player to subdue the stronger to the level of the weaker. These and similar inequalities in other regions not only in tone but in tune induced me to remain contented with the conical bore. Now although the eminent manufacturers and patentees, Messrs. Rudall and Rose eulogized the cylinder bore, to the condemnation of all others, we find Mr. Clinton says in his treatise, that a properly graduated cone is the best for tone and tune. I might have been induced to doubt his opinion although united to my own, were it not for the following lines from page 22 of Mr. Carte's Sketch of the Flute; "Strenuous efforts have been made by Mr. Rose so as to vary the proportions of the cone, as to correct the defective notes mentioned as having existed in the first of Boehm's flutes; and so successful have been his efforts, that not only are these notes rendered equal to the others, but, so much is the general tone of the instrument improved, that it becomes a matter of opinion whether the wooden flute with parabola and cylinder, or that with this improved conical bore, is now the better." Here then we have an honest avowal from the patentees of the cylinder, that the conical bore is just as good to say the least it. Now that being the case, we are enabled to obtain as good a tone as can be produced without having to pay either for the patentee cylinder or parabola head, and hence that most important element "cheapness" can be regulated by the competition of the manufacturers. We may, therefore, not unreasonably augur that an equal arrangement of the holes, united to a well regulated conical bore, will ultimately become universal, both being indispensable and free to be used by all the manufacturers. In my next I will point out the respective merits of the open and shut keyed systems. Trusting you will deem my observations worthy of insertion.

I remain, sir, your constant reader,
Clerkenwell Green.

INDEX.

"THERE'S A GOOD TIME COMING, BOYS."

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—Will you obligingly decide the following wager in your next paper:—

F. bets W. that the Hutchinson Family were the FIRST that sang the song of "There's a good time coming, Boys," IN PUBLIC—composed by Mr. McKay.

Apologizing for thus troubling you, permit me to subscribe myself yours, obligingly,
M. D. K.

Hanley, April 3rd, 1851.

[Will some kind friend do, what we cannot,—resolve this question for our correspondent.—ED. M. W.]

PROPORTIONS OF A MUSIC ROOM.

(To the Editor of the Musical World.)

SIR,—Will you oblige me by replying to the following queries? It is the intention of the public of this town to build a large room—their extent of ground is 80 feet by 36 feet. What are the proportions best adapted for sound, length, breadth, and height? What sort of roof is the best? Does a hollow or a solid wall best answer for music-rooms?

As the place is to be used for public purposes, it is wished to be made as large as possible.

Your reply will be esteemed a favour by your obedient Servant,
Stockton, March 19, 1851. J. P. JEWSON.

[We do not presume to be authorities in these matters, and think we shall best serve our correspondent's purpose by inserting his queries in our columns, which are open to replies.—ED. M. W.]

MUSIC.

There is a balm that Heaven bestows,
To ease the smart of human woes,
'Tis music Heaven has given.
All other things may earthly be,
And mingled with earth's misery;
But music is from Heaven.

Joys to the joyous it imparts,
In time of sadness soothes the hearts
That are by sorrow riven.
When swelling in the trumpet breath,
It bids the warrior fear not death;
For music is from Heaven.

Is there a man whose stubborn soul
Owns not sweet music's soft controul?
Each holy thought is driven
From his craven heart which ne'er can know
Such bliss as music can bestow—
For music is from Heaven.

CROTCHET.

Dramatic Intelligence.

DRURY LANE.—A novel kind of piece, called The Queen of Spades (from the French of Scribe, by Mr. Bourcicault), has been produced. We shall notice it in our next.

ADELPHI.—The new piece of The Disowned has been withdrawn.

SURREY THEATRE.—The Easter novelty will be a very stirring drama in the Theatre Historique style, by Messrs. Morris Barnett, and Angus B. Reach. The object of the collaborateurs has been to produce a piece in which the strongest efforts will be supported by literary and artistic merit, and the whole set off by a most elaborate and gorgeous mise en scene.

Foreign.

PARIS.—(From our Correspondent.)—Sims Reeves' favour with the Parisian public has increased with each successive hearing. His second performance in Linda di Chamouni created more enthusiasm than the first. The subscribers and visitors to the Salle Ventadour are most anxious to hear him in a new part. Gennaro in Lucrezia Borgia is mentioned as his next. It is much to be lamented that an opportunity was not afforded Mr. Sims Reeves of playing in the Lucia di Lammermoor with Caroline Duprez. By all accounts his Edgardo is his most successful assumption.

It is not often we have to record the appearance of a new and original opera on the Italian stage of Paris; but this was witnessed on Sunday night by the habitués of the Salle Ventadour. This is the first time since the revolution of February that a new Italian opera has been produced in Paris. As far as my recollection goes, no original Italian opera, or at all events none which has kept its ground with the public, has been produced here since 1842, when Donizetti's Don Pasquale came out. I have already informed you that M. Alary, whose airs and romances have long been popular, and who last year aimed at a higher flight in his oratorio of The Redemption, had been employed by Mr. Lumley to produce an opera buffa. I at the same time mentioned that the name of the new opera was to be I Tre Matrimoni; but for some reason the name has been altered to Le Tre Nozze. The story is founded on a tale of love. Two couples of young lovers have agreed to marry, but their plans do not exactly suit the views of their elders, and their happiness is disturbed by the arrival of the Barone Feudatorio d'Acetosa (Signor Lablache), a very rich and very fat candidate for the hand of Louisa (Madame Sontag). Fortunately for the lovers, Vespina, the cameriera of Louisa (Mdlle. Giuliani), has also a lover named Cricca (Signor Ferranti), who, at the request of the lovers, takes the intruder in hand, and the tricks by which he endeavours to, and at last succeeds, in deceiving the intruder, gives rise to a series of amusing comic scenes, which form the staple of the piece. The title of Le Tre Nozze is justified by the conclusion. The old lover, finding that he has lost the daughter, determines not to return without a wife, and so takes the mother. The three marriages accordingly take place, and every one is satisfied.

Lablache is inimitable. There is an admirable scene in the second act, in which Louisa undertakes to give the Baron a lesson in the graces. The peculiarities of Lablache's physique are brought out in strong relief. In order to acquire the aria di Francese, he is paraded about the stage, with his head erect, his toes pointed, and his hat under his arm, till he is ready to drop; and after a lesson in French, which leads to some ludicrous mistakes, he is (when utterly exhausted) obliged to commence a polka. The scene closes with a duet between Lablache and Madame Sontag, which was encored with a warmth seldom witnessed at the Italian Opera of Paris. The finale of the second act is one of the most successful scenes in the opera. From this portion of the opera the applause was incessant, and at the end of the second act there was a loud cry for the performers. Madame Sontag, Lablache, Mdlle. Giuliani, Gardoni, and Ferranti, immediately came forward, and after receiving the compliments of the audience, there was a general cry for the composer. M. Alary was accordingly dragged from behind the scenes by Madame Sontag; and if we may judge from his mode of making his bow, it was his first appearance on any stage. The morceaux which seemed to strike most were the duets between Lablache and Madame Sontag, to which I have alluded above; a sesteto in the third act, in which all the principal performers take part, without orchestral accompaniment; and the rondo finale, in which Madame Sontag revels in those bird-like variations for which she is celebrated. I must not omit to mention an air sung by Mdlle. Ida Bertrand at the commencement of the second act, beginning with the words, "Perche ognun non è al suo posto," which was sung with taste and feeling, and brought down well-merited applause. There is also a drinking song in the third act, sung by Gardoni, accompanied by a chorus, and commencing with the words, "In giro il bicchiere, tocchiamo," full of spirit and joviality. Upon the whole, the new opera is as successful as the friends of the composer could possibly wish. The piece was brought out under considerable disadvantages, at the latter end of a season, and after two general rehearsals. The effect of this haste was clearly visible last night, as neither the orchestra nor the singers were perfect in their parts, and the music consequently suffered. These defects will, however, gradually disappear as the performers become better acquainted with their parts. M. Alary has established his reputation, and we cannot help congratulating Mr. Lumley in having secured his co-operation. The audience was the most brilliant of the season. After the fall of the curtain, M. Alary was called forward a second time.

NEW ORLEANS.—(We copy for the amusement of our readers the following article from the Daily Delta, under the head of "Hints to those who go to Jenny Lind's Concerts," as an amusing example of the decorum which, in a New Orleans point of view, should be observed at concerts and other public entertainments:—) "As a general thing, the audiences at the St. Charles are characterised by great quiet, order, and propriety of conduct. The admirable arrangements and promptitude of Mr. Le Grand Smith, who has general control of the house, cannot be too highly praised. But still there are a few little matters which interfere with the full enjoyment of the music, that rest with the audience, and demand attention and correction on their part. Fortunately, too, they are little peccadilloes, no doubt inadvertent, which are easily avoided. And first we would notice a habit of talking, whispering, and sometimes laughing, on the part of some of the younger portion of the audience, during Miss Lind's singing, which is a great annoyance to those sitting in the neighbourhood. The notes of Miss Lind are too precious to be lost for a small consideration; besides, too, people pay their money to hear her, and they ought to get the worth of it. Small talk—even the interests of courting—ought to be deferred until the interludes. Wit and punmakers ought to restrain their tendencies, and contain themselves until they may display their powers without incommoding others.

"There is another matter which ought to be corrected. The eagerness to applaud often prompts some of the audience to manifest their feelings before the tones of the singer have subsided, thus cutting off the richest of her notes, and spoiling the harmony of the piece. This is inexcusable. There ought to be an ordinance, fining persons who thus violate all property, as well as the rights of others.

"Lastly, we would note a very reprehensible habit, of some persons rising to leave the Theatre before the last piece is concluded, or before it is determined whether the cry of encore will be responded to. In this manner much confusion is created, and the effect of the music greatly marred.

"These are slight matters, but much of the comfort and enjoyments of life consist in an attention to little matters of this sort."

Miscellaneous.

JETTY TREFFZ.—This favourite and charming singer was so indisposed last week that she was obliged to leave M. Jullien and come to London to consult her medical adviser. She was nearly a week confined to her bed, but is now, we are happy to say, convalescent, and immediately joins the great entrepreneur for London and the provinces, (where he is equally the popular idol,) to complete the tournee, which is expected to terminate about the middle of next month. Mdle. Jetty Treffz' place in M. Jullien's troupe was supplied successively by Miss Poole and Miss Bassano.

ERNST.—This great violinist, we are glad to inform our readers, is entirely recovered from his late indisposition, and played at the New Beethoven Quartet Society, on Wednesday evening, with all his usual fire and expression.

M. MASSOL.—This popular French barytone, after a season of unprecedented honours, concluded his engagement at the Academie last week, and has arrived in London. His two last performances were Guillaume Tell in Rossini's opera, and Reuben in the Enfant Prodigue, in both of which his success was triumphant.

CHARLES HALLE comes expressly to London to inaugurate the opening of this memorable season, at the Musical Union, in conjunction with Ernst, Deloffre, Mellon, Hill, and Piatti.

Mrs. JOHN MACFARREN.—This clever and rising professor of the pianoforte, announces a very attractive matinee musicale, at the New Beethoven Rooms, for Saturday the 12th prox. The vocal and instrumental talent includes many of the most eminent names in each department.

HER MAJESTY AND PRINCE ALBERT attended the performances at Drury Lane on Friday evening, and remained throughout the whole of the entertainment.

THE BRASS BAND OF THE 1ST AND 2ND LIFE GUARDS.—Those who had the fortune to be present at Her Majesty's Drawing-room yesterday, may have noticed the style in which the brass bands of the 1st and 2nd Life Guards executed the operatic gems of the great masters. The excellence these bands have attained is striking; and reflects credit on the masters. Another thing which also struck us was, that the configuration of the instruments was peculiar, and that they had valves different to the usual valve instruments. We observed that about 18 instruments of the 2nd Life Guards possessed a peculiar arrangement of the complimentary wind passages, and the new form of valve. The advantages of the new valves are manifest in the trumpet, cornopean, cornetto, French horn, and the trombone. The facility which they give the cornetto players, and the ease with which the most perfect intonation was given to rapid and difficult passages, prove their value. The boon which this invention confers on the lovers of this instrument will soon make it familiar with all amateurs. The advantages of the new valve consists in its securing a free and circular passage for the wind, and that it always remains air tight, not being in the least affected by wear; and it cannot, therefore, get out of order. The invention is patented, and those who are interested will meet with courteous attention by the manufacturer, M. Köhler, of 35, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, where may be seen a most beautiful set of them, intended for the Great Exhibition.—Globe.

Mr. H. BLAGROVE'S QUARTET CONCERTS.—The last of these interesting Concerts took place in St. Martin's Hall, on Tuesday evening, the 25th inst. It commenced with Beethoven's quartet in E minor, No. 8, for two violins, viola, and violoncello, by Messrs. H. Blagrove, Dando, R. Blagrove, and Lucas, which was played with very great effect, especially the Finale. Mr. Lawler sang Handel's, fine song, "Lascia amor" with vigour and expression—we never heard him in better voice. Schubert's serenade, "Oh, see the moon's silver light," was sung by Miss M. Wells, and the violin obligato of Mr. H. Blagrove drew forth unanimous applause. It was encored. Spohr's double quartet in D. minor, No. 1, was a great treat. Each movement was performed with effect, and the lightness and brilliancy of the Scherzo Vivace again called forth an encore. The concertante duet for pianoforte and violin, by Messrs. Salaman and Blagrove, gave general satisfaction; Mr. Salaman executed the pianoforte part brilliantly, and Mr. H. Blagrove played with more than his usual finish. Miss Kearns sang "Porgi amor," very pleasingly. The Misses Wells gave Mendelssohn's beautiful duet, "I would that my love could silently flow," with appropriate quietude, and were deservedly encored. The concert concluded with Mendelssohn's magnificent Otello, for four violins, two violas, and two violoncellos, which was played with remarkable spirit and precision, the various points being taken up with the utmost readiness and aplomb. The grand Finale elicited the loudest applause. Mr. H. Blagrove deserves great credit for selecting so excellent a programme, and for the highly satisfactory manner in which he directed its performance.

MRS. FANNY KEMBLE.—The numerous audiences which attend the Shaksperian "readings" of Mrs. Fanny Kemble, at the St. James's Theatre, and the attention with which they listen to every word as it proceeds from the mouth of the reader, are gratifying signs of the intelligence of the age. Mrs. Kemble couples with a rare appreciation of character, and a most finished elocution, the gift of being able to convey to her hearers the distinctness of all the personages she represents, without any indication beyond a change of manner and voice, and that not such a change as belongs to ordinary mimicry. On Monday night, King John was the play selected, and nothing could have been more accurately represented than the great scene between the King and Hubert, in which the former hints away the life of Arthur. The difference of the two natures was completely set forth. There was the King bent on his purpose, while impressed with its horror, and Hubert, evidently not vicious by nature, weakly and unwillingly yielding to the force of circumstances. It cannot be too often remarked, with regard to these readings, that if, on the one hand, we lose the advantage of stage decoration, we are, on the other, secured against the chance of any part, however subordinate, being badly sustained. Even those scenes in which the stage is supposed to be filled with persons, and which seem most of all to require an appeal to the eye, are rendered perfectly clear by the variety of Mrs. Kemble's delivery.—Times.

MR. LUCAS'S CLASSICAL SOIREES.—The fourth and last of these interesting meetings took place yesterday evening. The great feature was a quintet for pianoforte and wind instruments, by Mr. Henry Leslie, which met with well-deserved success.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—The second performance of Samson at Exeter Hall, on Wednesday evening week, attracted a crowded audience, and went off with the same eclat as its predecessor. The vocalists were as before. The Oratorio is to be repeated next week, for the third time, and is likely to rank henceforth among the most popular, as it ever has ranked among the grandest of Handel's works.

HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS.—Mr. Charles Field gave a musical lecture on Wednesday week, entitled "The British Naval Service and its Commanders." The entertainment was certainly a novel one, and Mr. Field may congratulate himself upon having essayed a new field of didactic vocal amusement. Such an "evening with the Tars of old England" at any of the seaports would make the lecturer's fortune, and we recommend him strongly to have an eager eye towards Portsmouth, Plymouth, and other places verging on the domains of Neptune for his future givings. Mr. Field was assisted by Mrs. Alexander Gibbs (formerly Miss Graddon), Miss Augusta Purcell, Miss Emily Macnamara, Mr. F. Werstemann, Mr. C. Aylwin Field, and Master John Lawrence Field as vocalists.

MR. DANDO'S FIFTH QUARTET CONCERT was held at Crosby

Hall, on Monday evening. We must apologise for not having reached the rooms in time either for Mr. Mellon's Quartet—his first essay of the kind—or for Miss Dolby's two songs. We learned, however, that the Quartet had been highly successful, that the last movement was especially promising, and that the minuet and trio had nearly achieved an encore. As the piece is to be published, we shall soon have an opportunity of becoming better acquainted with it. Mr. Westrop supplied a pretty and graceful pianoforte duet. The specimens of Haydn's and Mozart's quartets were both happy. Haydn's (No. 77) is a celebrated one; although he has certainly written better. The Andante is charming, nor could it have been executed better. The minuet and trio are characteristic; but the finale wants the verve which the old master was accustomed to give in compositions of this kind. A song by Wallace, exceedingly well sung by Miss Thornton, is a very pretty one, and nicely relevant to the words. The room was very well attended.

MR. LUMLEY has gone to Paris to witness the new and successful opera of Signor Alary, produced on Sunday last, at the Italiens, which, we presume, there is some chance of hearing in London.

DUEL BETWEEN TWO OF JULLIEN'S MUSICIANS.—Prior to the commencement of M. Jullien's concert, on Tuesday last, an incident, which might have been attended with tragic consequences, took place. It appears that Herr Sommers, the saxophonist, and M. Grillen, one of the French drummers, had an altercation respecting some pecuniary obligation existing between them. High words ensued, and a duel was decided on to settle the dispute, which might also have "settled" the disputants as well, had fortune willed it so. Pistols were procured, and the seconds, Messrs. Winterbottom, Cioffi, Franks, and Jarrett, quickly measured off twenty paces in one of the passages of the Assembly Rooms. The combatants took their respective positions, and, on a preconcerted signal, both fired. The bullet from one missed its mark, but the other passed close by the neck of his antagonist, carrying away a portion of his coat collar, which was shot through, and striking the wall, some paces distant, deeply indented the brickwork. The seconds now interfered, and each party deeming he had obtained sufficient "satisfaction," as is prescribed by the code of honour, shook hands, and then went into the concert-room, to take their respective parts in the evening's entertainment, with the greatest nonchalance. The audience were profoundly ignorant of what had transpired.—Lincoln Times.

PRINCESS'S.—This theatre was honoured by the attendance of Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and suite on Monday evening.

MR. G. A. OSBORNE.—We are pleased to announce that this talented pianist and composer has entirely recovered from his late indisposition, and has returned to town for the season.

MISS WATSON, a pupil of Mr. T. H. Tomlinson, who made so favorable a debut at one of Mr. Rae's concerts, is advertised to make her second appearance at Mr. Mühlentfeldt's soirée, on Wednesday.

MADAME AND HERR GOFFRIE have announced a concert at the Hanover Square Rooms, for Wednesday evening.

MR. F. WEBER, the pianist and resident organist at the Royal German Chapel, St. James' Palace, has returned to town from Wurtemberg, where he was married on the 4th inst., to Marie, only daughter of the late Mr. Charles, of Hohenlohe, Oehringen.

MR. PRATTEN, principal flautist from M. Jullien's band, has joined the Royal Italian Opera Orchestra.

M. ALEXANDRE BILLET'S CONCERTS.—M. Billet commenced the first of his second series of performances of classical pianoforte music on Tuesday evening. The first part contained some beautiful compositions of Hummel, Weber, and Mendelssohn. The sonata in F minor, op. 20, by Hummel, was performed by M. Billet with delightful expression; the lighter passages appeared as if touched by fairy fingers, sweeping over the keys with magical effect, and the expression imparted to the slow movement declared the master mind, while the execution of the presto was remarkable for force of expression and decision of accent. Weber's Polacca in E major, (L'Hilarite), was indeed a charming performance; delicacy and elasticity of finger were combined with graceful buoyancy of feeling; and the brilliant rapidity and neatness with which the concluding passages were rendered elicited the most enthusiastic applause from the audience. Mendelssohn's Lieder ohne Worte (book seventh). M. Billet played the greater part of the entire book, consisting of six numbers, and thus gave his audience an opportunity of judging of the posthumous works of the master in a complete state. Mozart's sonata in A minor, with which the second part began, was executed with such vigour and expression as brought out in strong relief the many beauties of that magnificent composition. Sterndale Bennett's fanciful caprice, in D minor—a work but little known, we regret to say,—almost carried away the honors of the evening. It was played to perfection. A selection of studies from Cramer, (in C minor), Moscheles, (C major), Steibelt, (F major), Chopin, (F minor), and Potter, (D flat, Pezzo di Bravura), each played with animation and the requisite expression, was an effective climax to the concert. The last but one, by Chopin, was unanimously encored, and repeated. The audience throughout listened with the utmost attention, and gave vent to their satisfaction in frequent and judicious applause; and although the Bravura of Potter was the last piece in the programme, the same compliment was bestowed upon it as upon the study of Chopin; but, this time, M. Billet was too fatigued to comply.

MR. KIALLMARK'S last performance of classical and modern music was given on Monday morning, before a crowded and fashionable audience. Beethoven's grand Trio in B flat, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, was played in a highly artistic manner by Messrs. Kiallmark, Molique, and Hausmann. A madrigalian duett, "Cantando un di," was sung by the Misses Pyne in their best style, and Rode's air, by Miss Louisa Pyne, a brilliant piece of vocalisation, drew forth loud applause. Mr. Hausmann, in his new fantasia for violoncello, on airs from Don Pasquale, excelled himself. His skilful mechanism and delicacy of expression elicited general admiration. Mr. Kiallmark was thoroughly successful in Thalberg's fantasia for the pianoforte, "Mosé in Égypte." Miss E. Birch sang Weber's "Arab Maid" very nicely, and Miss Laura Baxter did as much for Molique's delicious song, "If o'er the boundless sky." Beethoven's grand concertante duet, for violin and pianoforte, was played by Messrs. Molique and Kiallmark with the utmost energy, freedom and taste. The other gentlemen were rewarded with marked applause. Of Signor Regondi's fantasia for the concertina, on airs from Lucia, it is impossible to speak too warmly; he played it as no one but himself could have played it, and received unbounded applause. Miss Pyne also sang Donizetti's "Io non ti posso," and Miss E. Birch, Miss L. Baxter, and Miss Pyne, Spohr's Trio, "Night's lingering shades." Mr. Kiallmark performed his deuxième suite de "Trois Romances," in his usual artistic manner, thus bringing to a close a really interesting concert. Mr. Charles Salaman presided as accompanist at the pianoforte, with his accustomed ability.

SIGNOR PALTONI, the well-known buffo singer, has arrived in town from Dublin, where he has been singing at the Theatre Royal, with Mr. and Mrs. Sims Reeves, and Herr Mengis, with the greatest success, in a series of representations of Italian opera, the speculation of Mr. Beale. The Dublin papers speak in flattering terms of Signor Paltoni, and the Daily Express pays him the high compliment of a comparison with the great Lablache himself.

THE SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY will repeat the performance of Handel's Samson, for the last time, on Wednesday next, the 9th inst.

JENNY LIND IN NEW ORLEANS.—A critic in one of the New Orleans papers, speaking of Jenny Lind's singing "Home, sweet home," goes into ecstasies about her "beautiful verbalization of the lines," and the "sympathy of the audible range of her register, and of the exquisite crispness of her register throughout its whole compass." "These," he adds, "completed his wonderment." And ours.

LONDON SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—Jephtha was given on the 28th ult. to a crowded hall. This oratorio is remarkable for its modern character. The two songs in the first act—"Pour forth no more," and "In gentle Murmurs," with their charming melodies, and florid and graceful accompaniments, might have been written now instead of a century ago, for any signs that they shew of the longevity which they have reached. The most remarkable achievement of the evening was Mr. Lockey's "Deeper and deeper still." Aware, of course, of the comparison to which he would be subjected, he met the test boldly, passed it honourably, and received a loud and just tribute of applause for his exertions. Miss Birch sang charmingly, especially in the recitation and air "Happy they." Miss Kenneth was equally happy in the above-named song "In gentle Murmurs," and Mr. Lawler delivered the opening recitative and air, "Pour forth no more," with his accustomed force and correctness. The choir wanted more rehearsing. The first part of the chorus, "When his loud Voice," one of Handel's grandest achievements, was somewhat marred by a lack of decision in seizing the points and responses. There were some other slips of the same kind, in all, however, not amounting to much more than the exceptions said to be necessary to prove the general excellence of a rule. Mr. Surman conducted with great spirit. Jephtha was the last Oratorio composed by Handel, who, whilst engaged in its composition, was attacked by a disorder in his eyes, which ended in total blindness. The work was commenced on the 21st of January, and finished on the 17th of July, 1751; some additions were afterwards made, which appear to have been concluded on the 15th of August following. It was performed for the first time in the same or the succeeding year. Until this period Handel had always conducted his Oratorios himself; but being incapacitated from doing so, he delegated that duty to Mr. J. C. Smith, the son of his copyist, who afterwards composed several oratorios. Handel, however, attended the performances, and occupying a place near the conductor, assisted in the general direction, besides playing extempore on the organ, between the acts. He was in his 68th year when he produced Jephtha, and continued to direct the performance of his Oratorios for several years afterwards, the last that he attended being on the 6th of April, 1759, only seven days before his death. The words of this Oratorio, were written for Handel by the Rev. Dr. Morell, who rendered Handel the same ill turn in other works. They lived on terms of intimacy for some years, and at his death Handel left the Doctor a legacy of £200. Dr. Maurice Green, in 1737, composed an Oratorio with the same title, written by Dr. John Hoadly, youngest son of Bishop Hoadly; and in 1757, Mr. Stanley, his pupil, and Handel's friend, composed another, to the poetry of Dr. John Free. Both are forgotten.

Mendelssohn's Eljah will be the next performance.

PRINTING BY WATER POWER.—The printing press of a daily paper in Boston, United States, is driven in a manner of which there is no example in any other city in the Republic. Through a two-inch lead pipe, a stream of Chochituate water is introduced into the meter, which only occupies 24 square inches. The fall of Water between the Boston reservoir and this meter is about 100 feet. This two-inch steam stream will discharge 80 gallons of water each minute, and in passing through the meter will give a motive power equal to what is called three-horse power. This is more than sufficient for driving the press. It is less hazardous than a steam-engine, requires no attendance, and is always in readiness.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

WEBER'S PRECIOSA—We shall be obliged to any of our readers who can inform us where the instrumental parts, or the pianoforte score, of Weber's music to Preciosa can be obtained, one of our correspondents from Limerick having applied to us on the subject.

Advertisements.

TO BE LET,

THE WOLVERHAMPTON THEATRE, a new and handsome erection, with two tiers of Boxes.
It will hold 1,400. The usual prices are—Dress Boxes, 3s.; Upper Boxes, 2s.; Pit, 1s.; and Gallery, 6d.
It will remain in the occupancy of Mr. Simpson, the Birmingham Lessee, until the 14th of the present month.
For further particulars, apply to Mr. Tichborne, Hon. Sec., Wolverhampton.

MR. R. S. PRATTEN

HAVING been appointed First Flute of the Royal Italian Opera, begs to acquaint his Pupils and Friends that he intends to reside permanently in town, and will be happy to give instruction as heretofore. Address, 62, Upper Charlotte-street, Fitzroy-square.

MUSIC AND NUMEROUS VALUABLE MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

PUTTICK AND SIMPSON, Auctioneers of Literary Property, will SELL by AUCTION at their Great Room, 191, Piccadilly, on WEDNESDAY, April 9, a Valuable MUSICAL LIBRARY, including the Works of Ancient and Modern Writers; Handel's Works, fine copies of Dr. Arnold's and Dr. Clarke's Editions; Instrumental Music, &c. Also, the Musical Instruments, including six Pianofortes, modern Harp, by Erard; other Harps, by Delveaux, five Violins, five Tenors, four Violoncellos, many of which are of high character, a Double Bass, by Dodd; four large musical boxes, four double action Concertinas, Flutes, Flutinas, Horns, handsome Guitars, &c., &c. Catalogues will be sent on application.

IGNACE GIBSON'S LATEST PIANOFORTE WORKS.

LE LAC	...	Nocturne	2s.
ROSALIE	...	Romance	2s. 6d.
SOUVENIR DE BADE VALSES	...		2s. 6d.
FANTASIA ON ELISIR D'AMORE	...		3s.
CARNIVAL DE VENISE	...		2s. 6d.
CILANT RUSSE	...		2s.

Addison & Hollier, 210, Regent Street.

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY AND THE BRITISH AND INDIAN ARMY.

J. KOHLER, 35, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, begs to direct the attention of Regimental Bands to his New Patent Lever Instruments with the latest improvements, which surpass all others for simplicity of arrangement and purity of tone. Combinations in harmony never before attempted by any Brass Instruments, may now be executed with perfect ease. Regimental Bands supplied with all kinds of Musical Instruments direct from the Manufactory; and as all these Instruments are made under J. KOHLER's own superintendence, they are warranted to withstand the climate of all countries. Efficient Band Masters supplied.

MESSRS. COCKS'

NEW MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

TO VIOLINISTS.—A Treatise on the Structure and Preservation of the Violin, and all other Bow Instruments, together with an Account of the most celebrated Makers, and of the genuine characteristics of their instruments. By J. A. ORRO. Translated from the original, with additions and illustrations, by JOHN BISHOP. 8vo., in boards, 3s., postage free, 3s. 6d.

THE THEORY OF MUSIC.—Corfe's Principles of Harmony and Thorough Bass, 9s.; Mozart's Practical Thorough Bass, 5s.; Dore's ditto, 4s.; Gottfried Weber's celebrated Work on Musical Composition, edited by John Bishop, 31s. 6d.; Albrechtsberger's ditto, 42s.; Cherubini's ditto, 31s. 6d.; Czerney's New School of Practical Composition, translated by John Bishop, 3 vols., folio, each 31s. 6d.; and Hamilton's five Musical Catechisms, each 2s. and 3s.

THE VIOLIN; being an account of that leading Instrument and its most eminent Professors, from its earliest date to the present time. Hints to Amateurs, and Anecdotes, by George Dubourg. 12mo., in cloth boards, 5s., postage free, 5s. 6d.

COCKS' MUSICAL ALMANACK, for 1851. 8vo., 1s.

COCKS' MUSICAL MISCELLANY, for October, November, December, January, February, and March, each 2d.; stamped, 8d.

WARREN'S CHANTERS' HAND-GUIDE. 4to, 5s., or in 34 numbers, 3d. each.

WARREN'S PSALMODY, 24 books, each 2d., or two volumes, 2s. each.

BOYCE'S CATHEDRAL MUSIC, a New Edition, 1800 large folio pages, with Organ or Piano accompaniment. By JOSEPH WARREN. 45s. 6d.

VIOLIN QUARTETS, Quintets, and Trios.—Haydn's complete edition of 53 Quartets, in 4 vols., boards, with Portrait, 126s.; Mozart's complete edition of his 10 Quartets, 42s.; ditto, his 6 Quintets, 42s.; complete edition of Beethoven's 17 Quartets, by Roussetot, 126s.; his Quintets and Trios, edited by ditto, 63s.; also all the Septet Music lately published by Mozani and Hill, &c.

INSTRUCTION BOOKS for the VIOLIN; by Goodban, 10s. 6d.; by Spohr (translated by J. Bishop, and approved by the author), 31s. 6d.; by Campagnoli, translated by ditto, 24s.; by Rode, Baillet, and Kreutzer, 10s. 6d.; Hamilton's Catechism, 1s.; Violin Studies, by Kreutzer, 10s. 6d.; by Rode, 10s. 6d.; by Fiorillo, 8s.; Corelli's 12 Solos, 10s. 6d.; and his 48 Trios, 24s.

FOR THE ORGAN.—Third edition of HAMILTON'S CATECHISM of the ORGAN, with an Historical Introduction, and a list and description of the principal organs in Great Britain, Ireland, Germany, France, and Switzerland, the whole revised, corrected, and much enlarged, by Joseph Warren, 270 pages, price 4s. Also, Warren's very easy Tutor for ditto, 4s.; Rinck's Great School for the Organ, edited by S. Wesley and John Bishop, 36s.; and Mendelssohn's Grand Sonatas for Pedal Organs, 31s. 6d.

HAMILTON'S ORATORIOS, Large Folio Edition, with Pianoforte or Organ Accompaniment, beautifully engraved, newly edited by JOHN BISHOP, and collated with the great Author's Manuscript Scores in the Queen's Library. The Messiah, Israel in Egypt, Samson, and Judas Maccabaeus, each 15s.; Acts and Galatea, 12s.; the Dettingen Te Deum, 12s.; Utrecht ditto, 12s.; Utrecht Jubilate, 10s. 6d.; the four Coronation Anthems, 12s.; the Funeral Anthem, 12s.; and Haydn's Creation, 15s. London: Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington-street, Publishers to the Queen.

N.B.—Cock's Descriptive Catalogue of Standard and Modern Musical Publications, gratis, and postage free.

MR. CHARLES HALLE

BEGS to announce that he will ARRIVE in London FOR THE SEASON, IN THE MIDDLE OF APRIL. All communications are requested to be addressed to MR. CHARLES HALLE, care of Messrs. Erard, Pianoforte Manufactory, 18, Great Marlborough Street.

SIGNOR BOTTESINI,

MUSICAL DIRECTOR OF THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA AT HAVANNA, BEGS to apprise the Musical Profession and the Public that he will arrive in London at the beginning of May, and remain during the entire season.

Letters and applications for engagements to be addressed to Sig. BOTTESINI, Wessel and Co., 229, Regent Street.

CHAULIEU'S PIANOFORTE WORKS,

COMPRISING CLASSICAL, METHODOICAL, and DRAWING-ROOM PIECES, calculated for the improvement of Pianoforte Students, of which, being his last productions, and all his Posthumous Works, Messrs. RUST and STAHL are the Sole Proprietors. Published in Parts at 5s. each, or twelve parts in one vol. at £2 2s.

RUST and STAHL, Pianoforte Makers and Music Publishers, 320, Regent Street, opposite the Royal Polytechnic Institution.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' "VESPER HYMN,"

ARRANGED as a Fantasia for the Pianoforte. The publisher has great pleasure in announcing a new Edition of this admired composition by MR. BRINLEY RICHARDS, and to state that he has added to his Catalogue all the newest works of this popular writer.

"Under this modest title, Mr. Richards presents us with a fantasia of novel form, remarkable for originality of effect. An introduction in F, in which fragments of the melody are displayed in full harmony, alternated with brief ad cello passages, crescendo, leads to an episode, in which the idea of the bell that tolls for vespers is poetically indicated. The well-known tune is then led through a series of variations, or ricercate, or changes, in all of which the traits de bravoure are different, and skillfully contrasted, while the keys of D flat and A flat are judiciously employed in some of them, to relieve the monotony that would otherwise arise from the constant adherence to the original tone. The variations are graceful and showy, increasing in brilliancy up to the climax, which involves a capital rehabilitation of the Thalbergian pattern. Mr. Richards has shown an extended acquaintance with the resources of the clavier in this morceau, and the utmost ingenuity in maintaining an easy variety of style during the continuous repetition of the melody over the space of eight pages. The only fault of "The Vesper Hymn" is its brevity." Musical World.

Charles Olivier, 41, New Bond Street

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

THALBERG	Irish Airs
KUHL	Styriennes
KUHL	Bohemian Air
STREICH	Les Hirondelles
PREAGERS	Moment Joyeux
ROECKEL	Marche Romaine
ROECKEL	Clotilde
RICHARDS	Danish Air
RICHARDS	Moonlight Serenade
MORI	Romanes Sans Paroles.
MÜLLER	Anna Bolena.
MÜLLER	Fragment.
MÜLLER	Third Romance.
BRISSON	L'Arabesque
J. HERZ	La Sylphide

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street.

CARTE'S PATENT FLUTES.

MR. CARTE and Mr. B. WELLS (Professor of the Flute of the Royal Academy of Music) will perform a concertante duet upon two of Carte's Patent Flutes—Mr. Carte upon one of silver, and Mr. Wells upon one of wood, in Mr. Carte's Lecture upon Instrumental Music at Chelmsford on Thursday next. Just published, a brief SKETCH of the Improvements in the Flute, and description of Mr. Carte's two Patent Flutes by H. Carte, Rudall, Rose, and Co., 38, Southampton-street, Strand. Price 1s., or if sent by post, 1s. 6d.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

FOR Improving the Voice, and removing all Affections of the Throat. Strongly recommended to Clergymen, Singers, Actors, Public Speakers, persons subject to relaxed Throats, and to all persons desirous of cultivating their Voice, and ensuring a good and clear articulation. They have also been found highly beneficial to those afflicted with Nervous, Hysterical, or Stomachic Coughs.

To be had in Boxes, at 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each, of every Medicine Vendor in the kingdom. Musical Agents in London, Messrs. Leader & Co., 63, New Bond Street; Wholesale Agents, Messrs. Barclay & Sons, Farringdon Street.

Testimonials of their efficacy are published with each Box, from

Mad. Crisp	Miss Romer	Mr. Harrison	Mr. J. Barnett
Mad. Fowling	Mad. Albertazzi	Mr. Allen	Mr. George Linley
Mad. Angeline Garcia	Miss Cooper	Mr. White	Mr. Rodwell
Mrs. Alfred Shaw	Sig. Lablache	Mr. Wase	Mr. Nelson
Miss Reinforth	Sig. Giubilei	Mr. Kroff	&c., &c.

CRAMER'S STUDIES.

THE first Volume of this work is now published in the upright form newly revised and corrected by the Author, and divided into four parts, price 6s. each. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street.

LEE & COXHEAD'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.MUSIC for the VIOLIN.

THE AMATEUR VIOLINIST—A selection of favorite Airs from the Standard Foreign Operas, arranged expressly for the first position of the Violin, in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY FARMER, with an accompaniment ad lib. for the Piano, second Violin, and Violoncello.

THE VIOLINIST'S ALBUM—a collection of favorite Quadrilles, Waltzes, Polkas, &c., arranged expressly for the first position of the Violin, in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY FARMER, with an Accompaniment ad lib. for the Piano, second Violin, and Violoncello.

N.B.—A New Edition of "Farmer's Violin School." 5s.

MUSIC for the FLUTE.

THE AMATEUR FLUTIST—a selection of favorite Airs from the Standard Foreign Operas, arranged in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY NICHOLSON, with an Accompaniment ad lib. for the Violin, Violoncello, and Pianoforte.

THE FLUTIST'S ALBUM—a collection of favorite Quadrilles, Waltzes, Polkas, &c., arranged in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY NICHOLSON, with an Accompaniment ad lib. for the Piano, Violin, and Violoncello.

MUSIC for the ORGAN or HARMONIUM.

THE AMATEUR ORGANIST—a collection of soft and full Voluntaries, arranged in six Books, 3s. each, by EDWARD TRAVIS.

THE AMATEUR INTERLUDEST—a collection of short interludes to play between the Verses of the Psalms, in one Book, price 4s., by EDWARD TRAVIS and J. P. DYER.

THE AMATEUR PRELUDEST—a collection of Preludes, with the Organ Stops carefully marked, in one Book, price 4s., by EDWARD TRAVIS.

SACRED VOCAL MUSIC.

KELLER'S Collection of ANTHEMS, CHURCH SERVICES, CHANTS, &c., arranged for the Voice and Piano, in six Books, price 3s. each, with six beautiful and appropriate Designs by Brandard, arranged by ALBERT KELLER; the six Books can be had in one Volume, elegantly bound, price 18s.

THE PSALMODIA BRITANNICA—a selection of Psalms and Hymns for the Voice and Organ, in six Books, price 3s. each, arranged by EDWIN FLOOD, and may be had in one Volume, neatly bound, price 18s.

N.B.—A New Edition of "Hark, the Sabbath Bells," by EDWIN FLOOD. Price 2s.

A NEW PIANOFORTE SCHOOL, by ALBERT KELLER,

price 4s.
"We can confidently recommend this Pianoforte Tutor as the best extant: Mr. Keller has adopted the judicious method of arranging the scales and exercises amongst the lessons, by which plan the pupil is taught those essentials without turning to a formal book of scales, &c.,—the fingering is carefully marked without being crowded, and is evidently written by one who has had great experience as a teacher."

Also, "Delices de la Jeunesse," in 12 sets, price 2s. each, written expressly follow the above Tutor, by C. W. Glover.

London: Lee and Coxhead, 48, Albemarle Street, and all Book and Music Sellers. Catalogues gratis.

Just Published,

THE MIDSHIPMAN'S STAR,

COMPOSED by S. Rousselot, sung by Miss Dolby; Redowa brilliant, by Jacques Herz, at Messrs. Rousselot and Co.'s, 66, Conduit-street, Regent-street; where may be obtained also Prospectuses for their cheap new system of Tuning the Pianoforte—at 12s. per annum, once a month; 10s. per three quarters; 8s. per two quarters; and 5s. per one quarter.

CURES FOR THE UNCURED!

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.—Cure of a Red Leg of more than sixty years' standing.—Mr. Barker, of No. 5, Graham's Place, Draypool, near Hull, had ulcers on his leg from the age of 18 until upwards of 80, and although for many years he had sought the first advice in the country, nothing was found to cure them. He often suffered excruciating pain for long periods together, which incapacitated him from attending to his business. He had given up all hopes of getting a cure, when at last he was persuaded to try Holloway's Pills and Ointment, which he did, and however wonderful it may appear, the leg was thoroughly healed by their means, and by continuing to use the Pills alone after his leg was well, he has become in health so hale and hearty as now to be more active than most men of fifty. N.B.—The truth of this extraordinary statement can be vouched for by Mr. J. C. Reinhardt, 22, Market Place, Hull. Feb. 20th, 1850.

The Pills should be used conjointly with the Ointment in the following cases:—

Rad Legs	Coco Bay	Contracted	Lumbago	Scurvy
Bad Breasts	Chiego-foot	Stiff Joints	Piles	Sore-heads
Burns	Chilblains	Euphantais	Rheumatism	Tumours
Bunions	Chapped hands	Fistulas	Scalds	Ulcers
Bite of Mosche	Corns (Soft)	Gout	Sore Nipples	Wounds
toes and Sand	Cancers	Glandular Swellings	Sore-throats	Yaws
Flies			Skin-diseases

Sold by the Proprietor, 344, Strand, (near Temple Bar,) London; and by all respectable Vendors of Patent Medicines throughout the Civilized World in Pots and boxes, at 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each. There is a very considerable saving in taking the larger sizes.

N.B.—Directions for the guidance of Patients are affixed to each Pot or Box.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE. GRAND EXTRA NIGHT.

IT is respectfully announced that a GRAND EXTRA NIGHT will take place on THURSDAY NEXT, APRIL 10th,

Uniting the talents of MADAME FIORENTINI and MDLLE. CAROLINE DUPREZ, SIGNOR CALZOLARI. SIGNOR LORENZO,
F. LABLACHE, and M. POULTIER.

With various Entertainments in the BALLET DEPARTMENT, in which Mdlle. Carlotta Grisi, Madame Petit Stephan, Mdles. Aussandon, Tedeschi, Julien, Lamoureux, Dantoine, and Mdle. Amalia Ferrara, MM. Gosselin, Ehrlich, and Charles will appear.

Application for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets to be made at the Box-office of the Theatre.

MUSICAL UNION.—WILLIS'S ROOMS.

TUESDAY, April 8th, half-past 3. Quartet in F, No. 49, Haydn; Sonata, violin and pianoforte, C minor, Beethoven; Quintet, B flat, (Posthumous), Mendelssohn; Presto Scherzando, F sharp minor, Mendelssohn. Executants—Ernst, Deloffre, Mellon, Hill, Piatti, and Hallé. Members are requested to pay their Subscriptions on or before the day of the concert. Visitors' tickets, half-a-guinea each; to be had only of Cramer and Co., Regent-street. Nominations of new members to be sent in by Saturday, the 5th of April, to J. ELLA, Director.

Artists engaged 1850 have free admission for the present season. The Director regrets to refuse resident artists their usual admissions owing to the increased list of new members.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.

CONDUCTOR, Mr. COSTA.—WEDNESDAY next, Final performance of HANDEL'S SAMSON. Vocalists—Miss Birch, Miss Dolby; Mr. Lockey, Mr. Whitworth, and Mr. H. Phillips. The orchestra, the most extensive available in Exeter Hall, will consist of (including 16 double basses) nearly 700 performers. Tickets, 3s.; reserved seats in area or gallery, 5s.; central area, numbered seats, 10s. 6d. each; at the Society's office, 6, in Exeter-hall; or of Mr. Bowley, 53, Charing-cross.

LONDON SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY,

EXETER HALL.—Conductor, Mr. Surman; Leader, Mr. H. Blagrove. On the Monday in Passion Week, April 15th, 1851, Mendelssohn's Sacred Oratorio, ELIJAH. Principal Vocalists: Miss Birch, Miss Stewart, Miss Dolby, Miss L. Baxter, Mr. Lockey, Mr. Seymour, Mr. Banks, Mr. Maits, and Mr. H. Phillips, with Orchestra of 800 Performers. Organist, Mr. T. Jolley. Tickets, Area, 3s.; Reserved Seats, Area or Western Gallery, 5s.; in the North or South Gallery, 7s.; Central Area, Reserved Seats, numbered, 10s. 6d., to be obtained at the Society's only Office, No. 9, Exeter-hall, and the Principal Musiciansellers.

APOLLONICON CONCERTS.

ROYAL MUSIC HALL, LOWTHER ARCADE, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, Mornings 8, evenings 8; Miss Poole, Miss Messent (evenings), the Misses, Mr. and Master Collins, Mr. Frederick Chatterton's Juvenile Harpists, Mr. Grattan Cooke, Mr. Sedgwick and pupil. Admission 1s.; reserved seats 1s. 6d.; stalls 2s. 6d.

PROGRAMME OF MR. W. STERNDALE BENNETT'S

THIRD AND LAST PERFORMANCE of CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC, will take place on TUESDAY evening, April 8th, at the HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS. To commence at half-past 8. Trio, C minor, Mendelssohn; Selections from the pianoforte works of Bach, Handel, Mendelssohn, and W. S. Bennett; Variations, à quatre mains, Mendelssohn; Sonata Duo in A major, dedicated to Salière; Cantata Non Temere, Mozart; and Two Songs, W. S. Bennett. Instrumentalists—Messrs. Robert Barnett and W. S. Bennett, Herr Ernst, and Signor Piatti. Vocalist—Mrs. Endersohn, pupil of Sir George Smart. Tickets half a guinea each; triple tickets to admit three one guinea. To be had at all the music warehouses; and of Mr. W. S. Bennett, 15, Russell-place, Fitzroy-square.

PROGRAMME OF

M. ALEXANDRE BILLET'S SECOND CONCERT,

ON TUESDAY EVENING, APRIL 15th, to commence at half-past eight o'clock precisely.

PART FIRST.

- | | |
|---|-------------|
| 1. SONATA in A major, Op. 101 | BEETHOVEN. |
| 2. CAPRICE in F sharp minor | MENDELSSOHN |
| 3. PLUS ULTRA, Sonata in A flat Major, Op. 71 | DUSSEK. |

PART SECOND.

- | | |
|--|-----------|
| 4. SONATA in E flat minor | PINTO. |
| 5. LES FANNALLES, Caprice caractéristique No. 2, C major | E. SILAS. |
| 6. SELECTION OF STUDIES—
B flat major, Clementi; G flat major, Chopin; B minor, Henselt; E major, Hiller; C minor, Toccata, Kalchbrenner. | |

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

FIRST NIGHT OF MASANIELLO.

ON TUESDAY next, April 8th, will be performed, for the first time this season, Auber's celebrated Opera, MASANIELLO.

Elvira, ...	MADAME CASTELLAN.
(Her first appearance this season.)
Fenella ...	MADLLE. BALLIN.
(Her first appearance this season.)
Alfonso ...	SIGNOR LUIGI MEI.
Borella ...	SIGNOR ROMMI.
Pietro ...	HERR FORMES.
(His first appearance in that character, and his first appearance this season.)
And
Masanietto ...	SIGNOR TAMBERLIK.
(His first appearance this season.)

The Divertissement incidental to the Opera will be danced by M. Alexandre and Madlle. Louise Tagliani. Composer, Director of the Music, and Conductor, Mr. Costa.

GRAND EXTRA NIGHT.

On Thursday next, April 10th, a Grand Extra Night will be given, on which occasion Auber's Grand Opera, MASANIELLO, will be repeated, with other Entertainments.

The doors will be opened at Half-past Seven, and the performance will commence at Eight o'clock precisely. Boxes and Stalls may be engaged, and full particulars obtained, at the Box Office of the Theatre, and of the principal Music-sellers and Librarians.

MADAME AND HERR GOFFRIE

BEG to announce to their patrons, friends, and pupils, that their ANNUAL GRAND EVENING CONCERT will take place on WEDNESDAY, April the 9th, at HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, with Full Orchestra. Vocalists, Miss Bassano, Mdle. Rummel, Mdle. Theresé Wagner, and Mdle. Lavinia. Herr Stigelli (his first appearance this season), Signor Marchesi, Herr Mengis, Herr Mayerhofer, and Herr Stockhausen. Instrumentalists—Piano, Madame Goffrie and Master Joseph Parker (pupil of Madame Goffrie, his first appearance in public); Harp, Madame Parish Alvars (from Vienna, her first appearance in England); Contra-Basso, Herr Müller, the celebrated Contra-Bassist from Darmstadt, his first appearance in London; Violin, Herr Goffrie. Conductors, Herr Rummel and Herr Goffrie. Tickets to be had of Mr. Goffrie, at 16, Southampton-street, Strand, the principal Music Warehouses, and at Mitchell's Royal Library.

MR. CH. MÜHLENFELDT

HAS the honour to announce that his SECOND AND LAST SOIREE OF CLASSICAL AND MODERN PIANOFORTE PERFORMANCES will take place on WEDNESDAY, the 9th of April, at the New Beethoven Rooms, 27, QUEEN ANN STREET, CAVENTISH SQUARE. Mr. Mühlendorf will be assisted by Herr Ernst, Messrs. Rousset and Lindsay Sloper. Vocalists, Misses Williams, Watson, and Herr Mengis. Tickets Half-a-Guinea each. May be had at the principal Music Warehouses, and of Mr. MÜHLENFELDT, 57, Gloucester Place, Portman Square.

MRS. JOHN MACFARREN

HAS the honour to announce that her first MATINEE MUSICAL will take place under the Patronage of the Right Honorable the Countess of Bedford, at the NEW BEETHOVEN ROOMS, on SATURDAY, 12th of April, 1851, to commence precisely at 2, on which occasion Mr. Cipriani Potter and Mr. W. Sterndale Bennett will perform a duet. Mrs. John Macfarren, and Mr. W. H. Holmes, a duet. Miss Goddard, Mrs. John Macfarren, Mr. W. Dorrell, and Mr. W. H. Holmes, a romance on two Pianofortes. Miss Kate Loder, Mrs. John Macfarren, Mr. Brinley Richards, and Mr. W. C. Macfarren, une Grande Valse a Quatre on two pianofortes. Mr. J. Balsir Chatterton, Harpist to Her Majesty, a Fantasia. Mrs. John Macfarren, a Rondeau of Weber, and a Fantasia of Schu'hoff. Miss Birch will sing, first time, a new song by W. H. Holmes, Miss Dolby, by desire "Many a one laugheth" from the Arabian Nights. Madame and Signor Ferrari, first time, an entirely new duet, by J. A. Macfarren. Signor Nappi, La Tarantella, &c., &c. Tickets, 7s. each. To be had of Mrs. John Macfarren, 16, Stanhope Street, Regent's Park.

MR. EDWARD TURNER

BEGS to announce that his first CONCERT will take place at the HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS on TUESDAY EVENING, 6th MAY, to commence at eight o'clock precisely. Vocalists already engaged—Miss Dolby, Miss Poole, Miss Watson, Mr. Leffler, and Mr. Edward Turner. Pianoforte, M. Alexandre Billet. Further particulars will be duly announced.

Tickets to be had at Messrs. Wessel and Co., 229, Regent Street, corner of Hanover Street, and at the principal Music Warehouses.

Printed and Published, for the Proprietors, by MICHAEL SAMUEL MYERS, of No. 8, Studley Villas, Studley Road, Clapham Road, in the parish of Lambeth, at the office of MYERS and Co., 22, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden, in the parish of St. Paul, where all communications for the Editor are to be addressed, post paid. To be had of G. Purkess, Dean Street, Soho; Allen, Warwick Lane; Vickers, Holywell Street, and at all Booksellers.—Saturday, April 5, 1851.

The Musical World.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

Terms of Subscription, per Annum, 16s.; Half year, 8s.; Three Months, 4s.; payable in advance, to be forwarded by Money Order, to the Publishers, Messrs. Myers & Co., 22, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden.

No. 15.—VOL. XXVI.

SATURDAY, APRIL 12, 1851.

PRICE FOURPENCE.

THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA ORCHESTRA.

WE have received a letter, signed "An admirer of the Royal Italian Opera Orchestra," complaining of a certain paragraph in our report on the opening night of that establishment. We extract the following passage, which will serve the purpose of the writer as well as if we had inserted the whole letter.

"In the first place, Mr. Rowland, now principal double-bass at Her Majesty's Theatre, was never principal double-bass at Covent Garden. In the next place, no bassoon part was introduced into the andante of the overture to Semiramide, except by Rossini, as an accompaniment to the four horns. Your reporter should be more careful for the future. Mr. Costa is not a likely man to allow of any interpolations or changes in the scores of Rossini.

"An admirer of the Royal Italian Opera orchestra."

We are quite aware that Mr. Howell was always, as now, first double-bass at the Royal Italian Opera; and we thoroughly believe that Mr. Costa would not permit alterations in a score of ~~the orchestra~~. Agreeing with the remarks of our correspondent, and thanking him for setting our reporter right on the points in question, we recommend him in his turn to be more careful for the future, of applying hard names to gentlemen who neither wilfully publish mis-statements, nor are (as he intimates in another part of his letter) "entirely ignorant of Italian Opera." That the writer of the article in question was "an amateur," we admit, and that he would more wisely have refrained from touching on technical matters; but since Mr. Rowland was one of the double-basses at Covent Garden last season, and since there is a bassoon part in the andante of the Semiramide overture, his mistakes were not so preposterous as our correspondent would have it believed. Were "An admirer" to undertake the criticism of an operatic performance, he would, in all likelihood, make a much greater "fool of himself" (the language is not our own) than our reporter, who, for the monstrous crime of being "an amateur," has exposed himself in conjunction with the vernacular tongue, to the savage onslaught of our correspondent.

A PROPHET IN HIS OWN COUNTRY.

BOIELDIEU, the French composer, was possibly not a hero in the eyes of his valet-de-chambre, but his countrymen are about to name a street after him. The part of the Boulevards which takes its name after the "Italiens," or rather the part precisely where that pleasantest of theatres, the Opera Comique, rears its laughing flanks, in short, the "Place des Italiens," as the "Place de l'Opera Comique" is improperly styled, is about to be changed—that is, if the voice popular, and the voice critical of the great city of Paris have sufficient influence—to the welcomer and French denomination of the "Place Boieldieu." An unforeseen difficulty, however, presents itself. Cotemporary with Boieldieu, and, indeed, famous before Boieldieu reached his celebrity, was another French composer, whose name was Nicolo—Nicolo Isouard. Nicolo wrote Jocunde, the Rendezvous Bourgeois, Cendrillon (&c. &c. &c), operas that attained in their day very great popularity, and the last of which was only lately found worthy of revival at the Opera Comique, and admired as much as of yore. Nicolo, which is not surprising, has neveux still in existence, who clamourously cry that the honour of dubbing the "Place de l'Opera Comique" with an appropriate name, and French, should devolve upon their aieul, a good composer of his pen, and an honoured name to boot. In some degree their cry has made an impression in influential quarters, and at one moment the admirers, not to speak of the neveux, of the illustrious composer of La dame Blanche, began to tremble for their idol. The question has been mooted in no courteous or measured terms, and at one time there was some fear, or some hope, of a modern controversy, not less furious, bigotted, boiling, and bi-sided than the notorious antagonism, literary and café, of the Gluckists and Piccinnists. The quarrel however, would hardly have been as interesting, since, though Boieldieu may be said to follow close upon the heels of Gluck, and, in one or two particulars, to have his right foot in advance of him, Nicolo Isouard cannot, without an outrage to the courtesy due and so gracefully exercised towards foreigners by the French, be for one instant compared with Piccini, who was an Italian. Luckily, there seems a chance of the affair being settled in the only manner conducive to the ends of justice and the honour of the art of music—need we say, in favour of Adrien Boieldieu?—and Paris will shortly, if events be propitious, and Revolution continue its slumbers, which heaven grant! not only exult in a "Rue Mèhul," a "Rue," or a "Place Gretry" (the "Rue Rossini" is a compliment to an illustrious foreigner) but in a "Place Boieldieu." Finding the direction towards which the agitation of the neveux of Isouard threatened to force the popular feeling, some French musicians of eminence, headed by Auber, (who were he dead, which heaven forefend! might be made to decide the question satisfactorily with his own name, combining the higher qualities of Boieldieu and the sparkling verve of Nicolo in himself) have published a manifesto, or rather a petition, to employ their own designation, addressed to the President of the Municipal Commission of the City of Paris, of which the following is a literal translation :—

"Mons. the President,—For some months past the question of giving a new denomination to the "Place des Italiens," where the theatre of the Opera Comique stands, has been agitated. The name of an illustrious composer, one of the greatest glories of the French school, Boieldieu, the author of La Dame Blanche, was no sooner pronounced, than it appeared to unite the entire sympathies of artists and the public.

"But pretensions have been raised, tending to deprive him of an honour so justly merited. Without wishing to establish ourselves judges of the degrees of merit belonging to the composers who were his contemporaries, whose celebrity it has been attempted to oppose to his, we come forward as fellow composers, as friends, and as admirers of Boieldieu, supplicating the Municipal Commission to take into consideration the immense popularity of the author of the Calife de Bagdad, Ma Tante Aurore, Jour de Paris, Le Petit Chaperon Rouge, and so many other masterpieces.

Since Rouen, his native town, has erected a statue in his honour, would it be just in the city of Paris to decorate with any other name than his the place where the theatre stands of which, during thirty years, he constituted the glory and the fortune?

In the expectation of a decision, the result of which can hardly admit of a doubt, we beseech you, Mons. the President, to accept the expression of our gratitude and our most respectful sentiments.

Signed, AUBER, Adolphe Adam (pupil of Boieldieu), Carrafa, Halévy, Onslow, Ambroise Thomas. [The capitals are our own Ed. M. W.]

Such an expression of sentiment from so high an authority must, we should imagine, inevitably lead to the immediate decision of the question. The "Place de l'Opera Comique" will henceforth, or thenceforth, be denominated "Place Boieldieu," and the justly renowned composer of so many ravishing melodies, and so many grand and finely constructed finales (for an opinion of which consult Carl Maria Von Weber), will by the issue overturn the musty saw, that "no man is a prophet in his own country," although he leave the other and mustier, "no man is a hero to his valet de chambre," still an open question.

Reviews of Music.

"DREAMS"—A Pictorial Ballad.—Written by F. W. N. BAYLEY.
—Composed by EUGENE ROLT.—Rüst and Stahl.

A nice, flowing, and vocal melody, which, although it cannot fail in the first three bars to recall the very popular Balfe's "Light of Other Days," is, thence to the end, as entirely Mr. Eugene Rolt's as it is graceful and expressive, and, let us hasten to add, sentimental, and at the same time, artless and unaffected. There is one point, however, of the melody (in the second page, line 3, bars 1-2) where a great improvement would be effected if the A natural, instead of going to F, went to B flat, with the chord of B flat minor as accompaniment. In the harmony of the ballad there are also several points which might be altered for the better. In the first page, line 3, bar 1, the chord of 6-4 on E would be better the common chord on A. In the second page, line 1, bar 2, the chord of the 6-4 on E requires the chord of the 7th after it, before going to the common chord of A. Line 2, bar 1, of the same page, the chord of the 7th is left unresolved, the E and C that follow requiring the addition of an A in the treble, and an A in the bass. Line 3, bar 1, the chord of the 6-4 on E cannot be followed by that of the 7th on F; instead of the 6-4 it would have been better, again, to take the common chord on A. These faults are so easy of amendment that we feel assured Mr. Rolt will not be offended with our pointing them out for his consideration. By correcting them he will make his ballad of "Dreams" as blameless as it is pretty. Mr. Bayley's words are appropriately dreamy.

"THE ANGEL'S SONG"—ROMANCE FOR PIANOFORTE.—Dedicated to Z. BUCK, Esq., Organist of Norwich Cathedral, by BRINLEY RICHARDS.—R. Cocks & Co.

Longfellow, the poet par excellence of the United States, in one of his quiet and harmonious lyrics, has a passage to this effect :—

"Ye sounds so low and calm,
That in the groves of balm
Seem'd to me like an angel's psalm."

The idea of embodying this in music having occurred to Mr. Brinley Richards—who is not more a musician than a poet—is natural enough; and the manner in which he has represented the dream of Longfellow betrays a peculiar appreciation of that minstrel's numbers. The introduction to the theme, in F, 2-4, allegretto, is simple to a fault, but not the less attractive for that. It is a sort of unfinished wail. The theme is set forth in the same key, 6-8 measure, andantino, "with expression." This, too, is simple as the eye of a needle. The left hand plays the bass, and the two first notes of the melody, in alternation, vaulting, in its passage, over the right, which, in turn, is allotted three parts of a chord, distributed in arpeggio, and a counter-melody, for the most part of sixths, with the theme; and this form is maintained throughout the space of two pages, with a monotony by no means unagreeable, since it is plaintive and appropriate. In the next page, a new theme appears, in the key of D flat. The melody, aiming at tenderness and grace, and attaining both in the centre, is given to the right hand, while a bolder and more animated accompaniment, also in arpeggio, is carefully divided between the two hands. The original theme, accompanied as before, and in the same key, is then resumed, with some slight curtailments and modifications. A cadenza of arpeggios, "veloce," sweeping from the top to the bottom of the treble department of the key-board, now intervenes, after the harmony of the 6-4—as it were a sudden gust of wind, unexpectedly stirring the chords of an Eolian harp—which, interrupted in its turn, by a discord, not anticipated, leads to the reprise of a fragment of the first theme, and the whole concludes with a brilliant distribution of the tonic chord (in arpeggio). This, technically, is a description of the form and substance of the "Angel's Song." To unfold its poetical and harmonious attractions would require a command of numbers like that possessed by Longfellow himself. We shall, therefore, not attempt it. Let it suffice that Mr. Brinley Richards has successfully described the poet's reverie, in the language of sound, which appeals to the ear universal. Some painter, with a vivid brush, should now endeavour to translate Mr. Richards' description on canvas, and so complete the triad, in which numbers, tones, and colours shall be fused into a trinity of art—though separate, one and indivisible.

To go down stairs, from the observatory of metaphor to the rez-de-chaussée of common speech, the "Angel's Song" is not more warmly to be spoken of as a pleasing trifle than as a valuable teaching piece—neither too easy for the initiated, nor too intricate for the "oi polloi."

"SOUVENIR DE LA FILLE DU REGIMENT."—FANTASIE POUR LE VIOLON.—PROSPER SAINTON. Schott & Co.

This brilliant piece, now for the first time published, is one of the most popular which its gifted author is in the habit of playing in public. Dedicated to the great chef d'orchestre, Mr. Costa, much more is naturally expected from it than from an ordinary fantasia, which might be inscribed to any one else; nor will he who purchases a copy at the house of Messrs. Schott be disappointed. M. Sainton's "Souvenir" sets out in rather a melancholy tone, with an introduction in the key of E minor, a sort of agitato reminiscence of one of the popular melodies of Donizetti's popular opera, as though it had been heard in gladness and remembered in grief. The violin then takes up the same theme, un poco più lento, in a more florid style, and after a bold passage of double stopping, modulates into the major, in which key some traits de bravoure of an effective character are introduced, bringing the introduction to a close. The air of the rondo finale, in the key of A, is then allotted to the violin; the first part in double notes, the second in single, and a series of three brilliant variations, well contrasted in style, are constructed upon it. The second variation demands the greatest facility in the art of double stopping, of which M. Sainton, without reference to the present fantasia, is known to be a perfect master. The same difficulty is presented in the third. If performed with the energy of style, and combined ease and certainty of mechanism, so remarkable in the playing of M. Sainton, these variations cannot fail to be heard with pleasure; since, though difficult, they are admirably adapted to display the capabilities of the violin with the utmost possible effect. A few bars of remplissage, for the orchestra, preface the entry, in the key of E, of the popular and entrainant "Rataplan," pitched for the instrument in a bold suite of sixths, for which sorry violinists will not be apt to thank M. Sainton, but the contrary—that is, if sorry violinists should be found with sufficient constitutional courage and mental opaqueness to attempt it, of which we should be sorry as they. The theme delivered with its lively burden, the real "Rataplan," which from the throat of the "Nightingale" was wont to set the pit in a roar, and the boxes, and the galleries (at Her Majesty's Theatre, when Mr. Lumley had cunningly contrived to put salt upon the "Nightingale's" tail, and catch the "Nightingale," and force the "Nightingale," nilled she, willed she, to sing for the delight and wonder and recreation of his abonnement), is dexterously fused into a rapid and sparkling passage of bravura, which brings the Fantasia to a termination in an animated and highly effective manner. In this coda a passage of chords of immense difficulty occurs twice, and at the end a series of harmonies, of which the sorry violinist will have to beware, lest he stumble in the endeavour to get over it. On second thoughts, however, our advice to the sorry violinist is, after all, superfluous, since none of his species are likely to be found sufficiently adventuresome, or sufficiently slightful of his positive position, to essay a fantasia of such pretensions, and from the pen of so accomplished a master of his instrument as M. Prosper Sainton, who, in the present contribution, has added a valuable item to the repertory of bravura pieces for the violin for public performers de la première force. We recommend it urgently to the consideration of Signor Camillo Sivori, who has just the fingers, and has just arrived, and is just expected by Mr. Alcroft for the Promenade Concerts he has just announced, and who would be likely to approach, more nearly than nine fiddlers out of ten, the intentions of the composer.

We should eke have recommended the Fantasia upon the airs from La Fille du Régiment as an admirable exercise for the daily practice of the eager student. Those who have heard it in public can also attest with us that it is a very telling and showy morceau for display, besides being scored for the orchestra with decided ability. The pianoforte arrangement is an able and commodious adaptation of the score, presenting none of those uneven distributions of harmony, and diluent divargations, which so often render such arrangements ungrateful and inefficient, hard to play and harder to hear.

"NAPOLITANA."—Composed and dedicated to Mrs. Robert Cartwright. By the EARL OF BELFAST. Cramer, Beale, and Co.

The accomplished amateur whose name stands affixed to the above composition, to judge from his manner of writing, must be possessed of more than ordinary facility on the instrument. Lord Belfast's "Napolitana" would puzzle nine amateurs out of ten, and many professors to boot. The introduction, with the brilliant passage of triplets chromatic, for the right hand, going against a descending scale chromatic, for the left, is by no means to be mastered à prima vista (as we ourselves experienced), but once dominated, the effect is peculiar, by which we infer, of course, original. The theme of the "Napolitana" is a bona fide tarentella, and a lively, bustling, and vivacious specimen of that most lively, bustling, and vivacious of dances. The harmony is always correct, and occasionally (as for example in bars 5, 6, 7, 8, of page 2) rechereke, not merely well travailed, but graceful and tasty. The great merit of this piece is its continuous animation. It is, as it were, a moto perpetuo; and provided M. Billet, or some other light-fingered pianist (his lordship himself would do) be found to execute it with the required rapidity and decision, it would not be easy for one given to habits saltatory, to remain quiet on his seat. At page 4 there is a very brilliant episode, which leads to the reprise of the first theme, in the minor key, whereby variety is happily obtained. The coda is extremely dashing and showy. We have hinted that the "Napolitana" is not adapted to common fingers; nevertheless, after a little practice, a pianist of some advancement may execute it with tolerable certainty, provided he attend to the important point of accentuation, which, unhappily, is too often neglected by performers in general.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

Auber's Gustave III. was repeated on Saturday for the fourth time with increased eclat. The success attending the first production of a grand French lyric drama at Her Majesty's Theatre appears to have stimulated Mr. Lumley to have recourse again to the repertoire of the Académie. Masaniello was produced on Thursday, with a success far surpassing that of Gustave, and henceforth, we take it, the pure Italian Opera will not be allowed to absorb all the interest of the subscribers and visitors. Verdi must alternate with Halévy, Donizetti with Meyerbeer, and Mozart and Rossini sometimes make way for Auber. The director of Her Majesty's Theatre most judiciously commenced with the two best operas of the best writer in the French School; we say, "has commenced," for we set aside altogether the production of Robert Le Diable, or, more properly, part of Robert Le Diable, got up some four years ago merely for the exhibition of Jenny Lind's vocal and dramatic talents, without any attempt to give completeness or consistency to Meyerbeer's chef d'œuvre; while Halévy's La Tempesta, having been written for Her Majesty's Theatre, comes not within the category of grand operas of the French school, although the composer be a Frenchman. From the manner in which Gustave and Masaniello have been cast and put upon the stage, the intention of the manager is evidently, while providing novelty, to make the best use of his immense resources, which will be found more available in the French than in the Italian Opera. The modern Italian Opera is too often conventionally cut out for soprano, tenor, barytone, and second contralto only. All Verdi's operas, and most of Donizetti's, are written to this pattern. Having been prepared for theatres in which the principals were limited in number, the composers were, to a certain extent, compelled to restrict themselves to particular forms, and distribute all the leading morceaux between three or four singers. For this reason most of Rossini's operas have been banished from the modern Italian stage, and Don Giovanni cannot be performed in more than one or two theatres in all Italy. For a small company, Verdi's scores are excellently adapted. Anybody can fill the inferior parts. In the French opera it is entirely different. The smallest character is of importance, and its just interpretation absolutely necessary to the perfection of the whole. Mr. Lumley has this season an embarras de richesses, and were he to adhere to the old repertoire, many of his artistes would find their engagements sinecures.

Before alluding to the production of Masaniello on Thursday, we must notice the very remarkable success achieved by Mdlle. Caroline Duprez on Tuesday night in Sonnambula. It was generally feared that the part of Amina—one which demanded a great amount of physique and no small power of endurance, to say nothing of the comparisons that must inevitably force themselves upon the mind, without going back to Malibran—would be found too much for the powers of the young and charming artist. And such apprehensions, indeed, were by no means dispelled when Mdlle. Duprez entered on the scene and commenced the recitative "Care compagne e voi." She was evidently conscious of the daring attempt to gather new leaves from the same laurel-tree which had been almost stripped by Jenny Lind and Sontag, and for awhile seemed to shrink, though not to sink, under the consciousness. Nor did she appear to be entirely re-assured in the cavatina "Come per me sereno," although she gathered strength and confidence as she went on. In the duet with Elvino, "Prendi, l'anel ti dono," she sang most delightfully, having regained her self-possession, and took the house by storm by her exquisitely pure singing in the duet which closes the first act. In this morceau Mdle. Duprez was admirably supported by Calzolari in Elvino. A most enthusiastic recall for both singers was the consequence. From this point to the end of the opera the success of Mdle. Duprez was progressive. The whole of the second act displayed the highest poetical intelligence in the acting, and a dramatic feeling and power in the singing not before evinced in the young artist. The "D'un pensiero" was beautifully sung, and the appeals to Elvino delivered with intensity and truthfulness. The curtain fell amid loud and prolonged applause, and Mdle. Duprez had to appear twice to receive the congratulations of her delighted hearers. As the last scene of Sonnambula is the great test of the artist, so it turns out her great triumph or her failure. We have known several singers who progressed bravely and hopefully in the two first acts, but found the last scene a stumbling-block which they could not successfully surmount. On the other hand, it must be confessed that there is much that is favourable to the singer in this scene, from the attractive character of the music and the beauty of the situation. But every new "Sonnambulist" attempts something out of the way, or, at least, not contemplated by the composer, and by that attempt stands or falls. Without some delicious novelties of floritura pianissimi in the recitative, "Oh! se una volta sola"—without some heart-searching passages in the "Ah! non credea mirarti"—without some wonderful displays of feats of fancy in the rondo finale which shall outstrip all preceding efforts—the Amina of the evening is looked upon as having achieved nothing. Malibran used to do this, Persiani was wont to do that; Jenny Lind made an effect here, and Sontag made another there—these words may not be used, but their purport runs in the brain, and memory cannot be paid off with a goodly disposition. We must make comparisons. Analogy is one of the instincts of the mind. The artist who creates a great sensation in Amina, despite these four memories, must have a real and original talent. That Mdle. Caroline Duprez is so gifted, none will have the hardihood to deny after the success of Tuesday night. There were many things in the sleep scene which struck us as especially good. The rigidity of the arms and fixedness of the eyes, were after the conception of Malibran, and opposed to that of her rivals, with whom we have always found fault for redundancy of action in this scene. Both the recitative and prayer were charmingly sung, and produced an unmistakable effect. Some new and appropriate bravura passages were introduced very happily. This constituted an admirable close to a brilliant performance. The audience were unbounded in their enthusiasm, the rondo finale was repeated, and Mdle. Duprez recalled three times. A more decided and legitimate success could not have been achieved.

Elvino is Signor Calzolari's best part. The music is well adapted to his voice, and the love-passion does not transcend his dramatic capabilities. His two duets with Amina were excellent displays of pure Italian vocalization. The universal "Tutto è sciolto" was finely declaimed and pathetically sung.

Signor Coletti made his first appearance this season in Count Rudolpho and met with a very warm reception from all parts of the house. Coletti is a great favourite with the subscribers and frequenters of Her Majesty's Theatre. He sang the "Vi ravviso" with power and meaning, and was of much importance in the concerted pieces. The part, however, is somewhat out of his line, and the acting did not indicate any originality of conception.

Mdlle. Feller made a very pretty Lisa, and gave the music with excellent effect. The aria, "Tutto è gioia," was neatly and accurately sung. Mdle. Feller is entitled in the prospectus a contralto. We are inclined to set down the fair actress as a mezzo soprano. Her upper notes in the aria were clear, unforced, and retained all the quality of the middle voice—a characteristic, we take it, sufficient to distinguish it from a contralto. Mdle. Feller would have pleased us entirely had she exhibited a little more animation in her acting. Even her lady-like person and her expressive countenance could not redeem the nonchalance of her deportment in the first and last finales. We shall be glad to report an amendment in this particular.

After the Opera, a scene from the unequalled ballet of La Esmeralda, introduced Carlotta Grisi in the Truandaise, accompanied by the light M. Charles. This most piquant, original, and characteristic of dances, is, as it were, cut out to exhibit the peculiar grace and fascination of the inimitable artist to perfection. There are no tours de force, but the ethereal movements of the sylph-like danseuse, bring forcibly to the mind of the delighted spectator, Shelley's magnificent simile, from the Ode to a Sky-Lark:—

"Like an unbodied joy, whose race has just begun."

The most ambitious and high-soaring of sculptors might supply his chisel with a series of illustrations of Arethusa fleeing from the pursuit of "Alpheus bold;" only he would have to eschew the arch-pliance of Carlotta's face, and put terror and despair in its stead, since Esmeralda flies in jest from the pursuit of Gringoire, while Arethusa is fearfully earnest in her desire to elude the icy grasp of the King of the Glaciers, who shook Erymanthus with his trident, and opened a chasm where he did not exactly intend, since it let his mistress flow into the arms of the Dorian Sea, and lost her to him in perpetuum. Carlotta was received with enthusiasm—applauded with enthusiasm—and recalled with enthusiasm, which being a thing of course might happily be stereotyped. Carlotta and enthusiasm are, as it were, cause and effect.

After the Divertissement, Coletti appeared in the last act of the Due Foscari. The Doge is one of the popular barytone's most weighty performances, and we do not remember to have heard his voice more powerful, his acting more bearded and emphatic. Signor Coletti was immensely applauded at the end.

The performances concluded with selections from L'Ile des Amours, in which Mdle. Amalia Ferraris was applauded to perfection.

On Thursday night, Auber's Masaniello was produced at this house, for the first time, with great and deserved success. Auber is all the rage now. Who complains? Not we, assuredly. It is odd, however, that the Italian Opera, erst so conceited in its monopoly and monotony, cannot now exist without the aid of the great French and German composers. Masaniello was once popular as a ballet at Her Majesty's Theatre, under the title of Masaniello; it is now likely to be even more popular in its original state, as an opera, under the title of La Muta di Portici—thanks to Mdle. Monti, and M. Massol and Mad. Fiorentini, and Mr. Marshall, and M. Taglioni and Mr. Harris, and Mr. Balfe. We liked the ballet, but we like the opera much better.

Perhaps on no occasion has an opera been produced with more liberality at Her Majesty's Theatre than La Muta di Portici. We do not say that half-a-dozen more rehearsals, under the indefatigable Balfe, would not have made the concerted and choral music go better; but half-a-dozen more rehearsals are not to be had in England, for love or money. Let us, therefore, take what we can get, and be thankful. First, we must cite the cast of the opera, which was as follows:—

Alfonso, Sig. Scotti; Lorenzo, Sig. Mercuriali; Silva, Sig. Balanchi; Masaniello, Sig. Pardini; Pietro, M. Massol; Borella, Sig. Lorenzo; Elvira, Mad. Fiorentini; Fenella, Mdle. Monti.

Let us, as we are in a hurry, take the characters as they stand. Sig. Scotti is a new comer. He has a pretty voice, but small. The music of Alphonso is too high for him, and his singing is but tame at the best. He made no marked impression. Sig. Mercuriali, in the little part of Lorenzo, had no occasion to prove himself worthy of his name. His voice is fuller than Sig. Scotti's, and stronger; but how much of a singer he may be he must show when chance gives him a better opportunity for distinction. Signor Balanchi, as Silva, had nothing to sing, but he sang it very correctly.

Signor Pardini (from the Italian Opera of Berlin) should have been the lion of the evening; but he was not the lion; the lion was a lioness, that roared not, a mute that spoke not, a woman, an angel, of whom more anon. Signor Pardini, however, though not the lion of the evening, turned out to be a very pleasant acquisition for the theatre, and though not equal to the character of Masaniello, persuaded the audience that he was a very good singer, and by no means an indifferent actor. This gentleman's voice is a tenor of fine quality, of even volume throughout the register, not powerful, but mellow, telling, and agreeable. He sang the barcarole with immense spirit, and was encored with acclamations. He gave the duet with Pietro (mutilated as at the Royal Italian Opera—for shame, Balfe!) with equal spirit, and shared with M. Massol another acclamatory encore. At the end of the first act he was obliged to come before the curtain, and this was the meridian of his success. During the third, fourth, and fifth acts his sun went down in the horizon. But it did not entirely set. The encores had fatigued Signor Pardini, and he has not the strength to stand fatigue. The "Sommeil," which he transposed to F, like Signor Tamberlik, was tamely and ineffectively sung. He redeemed himself, however, in the mad scene, with several touches of plaintive singing, which denoted intelligence and feeling. He did not attempt the high C sharp at the end, wherein he showed his wisdom. We repeat, Signor Pardini is not Masaniello, but he is a real acquisition to the theatre. He was applauded liberally and indulgently by the audience.

M. Massol was received with a volley of applause. His Pietro was as frank, as hearty, as vigorous, as truthful, and as fishermanly as ever. It was the true Pietro, not the dark and sophisticate. Pietro is a very good fellow at first, until he gets drunken and envious; then he becomes an arrant rascal. In this way M. Massol acts Pietro, and hence our approval, which is also his good fortune. M. Massol sings the music of Pietro to admiration. His great point, the duet with Masaniello, "Aux armes," was a striking and powerful piece of declamatory vocalism, and the applause and encore were as the applause and encore of yore—vehement and enthusiastic. The wine song in the fifth act was equally forcible in its way, and produced a more than usual effect. In all the concerted music the splendid voice of M. Massol was heard as a strengthener of the melody and a ripener of the harmony. Such a voice is inestimable for the purposes of a composer.

Signor Lorenzo was quaintly mysterious in the part of the fisherman, Borella, which he attitudinized unctuously.

We have said that Madame Fiorentini was the best of Madame Ankastroms. We have now to protest that she is one of the loveliest and most engaging of Elviras. The part is not a grateful one, and we are the more grateful for the charming manner in which Madame Fiorentini plays it. There is something in her fine and clear sounding voice peculiarly suited to Auber's music. In the cavatina, which she vocalized admirably, her upper tones came out with delicious sonority. To the appeal to Fenella (act 4) she imparted the utmost expression. In short Madame Fiorentini was herself in Elvira, to be more than which would be something too much to ask of her.

We have left Mdle. Monti to the last. Mdle. Monti is the lioness of whom we spoke above—or rather woman, or rather angel. She is, they say, a great painter, and speaks German fluently. Of this we know nothing; but we know, from ocular conviction, that she is a great mimist and gesticulates marvellously. Of her person a poet might speak in burning numbers. Being no poets, we can only say, she is "beautiful exceedingly"—which Coleridge has said before us of somebody else, in Christabel. Her features are plastic; that is her feelings mould them into expression and leave nothing in mystery but the singular power with which she can talk without words, make language with her eyes and mouth and arms, more eloquent than were she endowed with twenty tongues "of silver." We never beheld eyes that spoke so plainly. Mdle. Monti comes from Milan. At the Scala, she has been miming for some five or six years, and with such effect that her name has long been celebrated, and her title is "the first mime of Italy." She supports her reputation with ease. Indeed, had we not read the she was the "first mime of Italy," we should have guessed it, from her performance of the part of Fenella, on Thursday night. We have seen nothing to beat it—nothing to equal it, in its particular way. All the scenes in which Fenella is engaged were pictures—moving pictures—irresistible touches of nature, that must have gone to the most inaccessible heart. And yet all was so unobtrusive that a new charm was imparted to the character, which we never remember in any other Fenella—and we have witnessed several. We have no time to enter into details, but must leave them for another occasion. Suffice it that Mdle. Monti's Fenella was a picturesque, a subtle, a poetical, in fine a great piece of acting; it was a cut above pantomime—and there is an end of it. The audience understood much, and applauded much; but the audience did not understand all. Many nice and masterly points escaped them. They must go again, every one of them, and see Mdle. Monti play the part once more. They will thank us for the counsel.

Balfe had been to work zealously, and though he cut the duet, "Aux Armes," and the Market Chorus, he brought out the orchestral, choral, and otherwise concerted music with capital effect. The overture was well played and encored, and the prayer was well played and encored; the latter began in E flat and ended in E flat, which is so rarely the case that we have noted it. The dances were managed to perfection. M. Taglioni had used all his taste and ability in getting them up. We never saw the Guaracha and Bolero done so efficiently. The Costumes, varied according to the groups, were exceedingly pretty, gratefully contrasted, and enhanced the effect of the ensemble. Madlles. Aussundon, Julien, Lamoureux, Esper and Rosa—that quintet of chorographic divinities—all assisted, and the dances thus executed created a furor. The Guaracha was encored. The Tarantella was equally brilliant, Madlle. Ferraris and M. Charles representing the principal couple, with consummate talent, and a brío that carried all before it. Mr. Marshall has been unusually happy with his scenery, and the eruption of Vesuvius was managed in a manner not more striking than original. Mr. Harris never showed himself more a master of his business; the groupings and all the acting of the chorus and subordinates were admirably arranged, and the director himself was always observed, actively taking the lead upon the stage.

To sum up, La Muta di Portici was eminently successful, and deservedly so. The recalls of the principal artists were too numerous to mention.

A grievous disappointment was felt at the non-appearance of Carlotta Grisi, who was prevented, by a severe cold, from giving her favourite pas from Esmeralda. The place of Carlotta cannot be supplied. We trust the incomparable danceuse will have sufficiently recovered to-night to shine—the sun among the stars of the ballet.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The return of Madame Castellan, Signor Tamberlik, and Herr Formes gave the management an opportunity of reviving Masaniello, the masterpiece of Auber (who has created a dozen other masterpieces), of which advantage was taken on Tuesday night. The house was full, and Her Majesty, accompanied by the younger scions of the blood-royal of England, attended the representation.

Masaniello was Signor Tamberlik's first part in this country, and certainly ranks among his very best interpretations. Handsome, manly, and with a well-built frame, he looks the gallant fisherman to the life. The dress becomes him and he becomes the dress. His conception of the character is admirable, and his acting vigorous and picturesque. Since his first appearance at Covent Garden, Signor Tamberlik has not been in better voice than on Tuesday. It was as though he had taken a new lease of his physical house, and was entering upon the first year of its enjoyment. The barcarole was sung with great spirit, the "Sommeil" with incomparable tenderness, and the mad scene in the last act with amazing force and touching pathos. At the end of the latter Signor Tamberlik gave out the famous C sharp "de poitrine" with a volume of tone and a sustained power that electrified the house, and suggested comparisons with the more famous C natural "de poitrine" of M. Duprez (in Guillaume Tell) by no means prejudicial to either, the C sharp of Signor Tamberlik winning the battle against the C natural of M. Duprez by a semitone. We need not enter into any further analysis of Signor Tamberlik's very striking performance, the various beauties of which have often been set forth in detail for the delight and contemplation of our readers, amateur and professional. Suffice it, as we have hinted, it was more glowing, and animated, and impressive than ever, and cast the audience into a train of pleasure and excitement, which exploded in bursts of genuine enthusiasm. The reception of the great tenor, as he sauntered down the windings of the pass to join his companions, in the second act, was hearty and unanimous.

Madame Castellan, the charming, and clever, and thoughtful, and intelligent Madame Castellan was not in her very best voice. She appeared fatigued and unwell. Nevertheless, in the cavatina she sang with a brilliancy that does not fail her in the most trying moments, and in the air of the fourth act (Elvira's petition to Fenella, to save her husband from Pietro and the others) with a grace and sentiment of which no mental or corporeal depression can ever succeed in depriving her. Like Signor Tamberlik, Madame Castellan's reception was that which is only accorded to the most favoured artists.

The Pietro of Herr Formes (seen for the first time in England) was mysterious and elaborate. His conception is to keep the evil side of the character continually presented to the audience. Herr Formes evidently regards Pietro as a man of savage and wicked nature—tout bonnement; not as the creature of circumstance, the victim of debauch, and envy, and hatred (the illegitimate offspring from the loins of envy), and disappointment, and wine, and want of education, in which light it was viewed by M. Massol, his predecessor. Both ideas are open to discussion, although we are inclined to sympathise with the last. Herr Formes, however, makes his notion sufficiently palpable, by appropriate and characteristic gestures and by-play, which occasionally, we think, with deference, are carried to excess. An instance may be cited in the scene of the triumph (act IV.), when Masaniello is made king, and paraded on a horse:—Herr Formes (Pietro), in a corner with a band of malcontents, assumes threatening attitudes and postures during the whole ceremony; and as Masaniello, surrounded by the people, his adorers, makes his way, à cheval, through the pressing and enthusiastic crowd, the supposed Pietro aims furious blows at him with a stiletto, which the adherents of Masaniello cannot help seeing, albeit they treat the convulsions of the would-be assassin with strangely unruffled indifference. In the vocal part of the character, Herr Formes came out like thunder, and the grand duet, "Aux Armes," with Sig. Tamberlik, superbly ejaculated by both performers, was enthusiastically re-demanded; that is, the second movement was encored, and the duet was recommenced and repeated up to this point, the rest being omitted. How such a proceeding can be tolerated at "the classical temple of the opera," as Covent Garden has been so unanimously entitled, we are at a loss to guess; how Signor Tamberlik and Herr Formes can tolerate it; still more strange, how an accomplished musician and composer like Mr. Costa can tolerate it; how Mr. Gye can tolerate it, and finally, how the public can tolerate it—we are puzzled to explain. Our columns are open to any other "admirer of the Royal Italian orchestra" who shall be moved to communicate with us on the subject; since we are really curious to see what line of defence can be taken up in defence of a proceeding which makes a great master like Auber the author of a piece of music without design or form, beginning in one key, ending in another, and coming to a conclusion without a climax. We are curious, we repeat, for instruction on this point. In all the concerted music Herr Formes was boldly efficient. In Masaniello's tent (act IV), when Pietro and the conspirators insist upon the death of Alphonso and Elvira, his acting was full of point and energy. In the drinking song (act V.), wishing to do too much, Herr Formes missed his aim. It is somewhat odd that this highly effective air nearly always falls flat upon the audience. Perhaps it is because it comes so late in the opera.

Mdlle. Ballin, as Fenella, was more active and fervid than graceful and natural. Nearly all the representatives of Fenella are disposed to overdo the part, and thus to render it obtrusive, which was not the author's intention. Auber's most eloquent music, however, carried all before it, and redeemed a multitude of sins committed and omitted. Never was poetical conception of dramatist more poetically musicked by composer. Sig. Luigi Mei does his best with Alphonso, a very ungrateful and uncomfortable part, always in miserable positions and put to sorry subterfuges, while no one feels either sympathy for his misfortunes or admiration for his person. Sig. Soldi, as the confidant of Alphonso, ejaculated the recitative dialogue of the first scene with evident purpose; and Sig. Polonini, in the small part of Borella, was the perfection of the Neapolitan fisherman. But, where was Sig. Rommi, the former representative of this part, and one of the welcomest physiognomies in the establishment? Ubi fuit Rommi?

The band and chorus were as brilliant as usual. The overture and the prayer in the third act were encored, (the only encores, by the way, excepting the duet) and the groupings and other scenic effects preserved the "traditions," and were as picturesque and animated as usual. The dances—the Guaracha, the Bolero, and the Tarentella—were done with great spirit. Mdle Louise Taglioni was the life and soul of them, and exhibited all her accustomed vigour, sprightliness, and entrain. This young lady is invaluable to the theatre, and her improvement is remarkable. Her caro sposo, M. Fuschs (alias Alexandre), is also a meritorious artist, and thoroughly understands his business. His tarantella, with Mdle Taglioni, was irresistible. The only drawback in the ensemble was the mutilation of the Market Chorus, of which we complained last year; all the modulations in the middle were cut out, and the most characteristic features of this most sparkling and picturesque morceau extinguished. The Market Chorus is essentially descriptive, and does not depend on its beautiful melody alone for its effect. Scarcely two minutes of time are saved by the curtailment, which is, nevertheless, important enough to destroy Auber's conception altogether.

After the second act of the opera, Sig. Tamberlik, Herr Formes, and Mdle. Ballin re-appeared, at the unanimous summons of the audience.

On Thursday, the first act of Semiramide with four acts of Masaniello was announced as a "Grand extra night," but, in consequence of Signor Tamberlik's sudden indisposition, the performance was changed, and Semiramide given entire.

PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS.

The third concert took place on Monday. The room was crammed to inconvenience. The programme, full of excellence and variety, though much too long, was as follows:—

PART I.

Overture
Introduction, Quartet and Chorus— Principal voice parts by Miss Louisa Pyne, Miss Williams, Mr. Lockey, and M. Jules Stockhausen	Jessonda.....	Spohr.
Recitative..... { Miss Louisa Pyne (Don Aria, "Non mi dir," { Giovanni)		Mozart.
Concerto in E flat, Op. 76, Violin, composed in 1782. M. Sainton (first time of performance in this country)		Mozart.
Recitative..... { (Il ratto di Proserpina) Aria, "Pago fui,"..... { Miss Williams		Winter.
Overture
Scherzo
Song, with Chorus, "You spotted snakes," Miss L. Pyne and Miss Williams	A Midsum- mer Night's Dream. }	Mendelssohn.
Notturmo, March, and final Cho- rus.....

PART II.

Choral Symphony, No. 9 (in illustration of Schil- ler's "Ode to Joy"), the principal voice parts by Miss L. Pyne, Miss Williams, Mr. Lockey, and M. Jules Stockhausen.....	Beethoven.
---	------------

Conductor—Mr. Costa.

Old Spohr came out like a giant refreshed. His overture, one of the best of overtures dramatic, was finely played and loudly encored. His introduction, in which Brahmin and Bayadere meet in a friendly battle of lamentations for their dead Rajah, dispersed in choruses and quartets of infinite beauty and variety, "went" well, and the audience relished it exceedingly.

With Mendelssohn's music there were some mishaps. The overture was going off "like a shot," when a "slip" in the last chord unhinged the good impression that had been created; and this was not entirely repaired during the scherso, nor during the duet, nor during the notturmo, nor during the march, nor during the final chorus. If one fool may be said to make many in a crowd, one mistake may be equally averred to make many, in the best organized troop of instrumentalists. The gigantic symphony of Beethoven, however, in a great measure atoned for the past. The three instrumental movements were perhaps better executed, on the whole, than on any previous occasion in this country, more especially the allegro maestoso in D minor, which we never remember so intelligible and clear. In the seherzo the French method of curtailment was adopted. The adagio was well played, although there were one or two drawbacks, and among others, the redoubtable cadence in six flats for the third horn—which again caused people to enquire what had become of Mr. Jarrett, who used to play it so well. The choral movement, as usual, left much to be desired, although the principal bass solos were remarkably well sung by Mr. Jules Stockhausen.

Mozart's violin concerto in E flat was played by M. Sainton in first-rate style. This is one of the only two that are published, the others still remaining in M.S. M. Sainton may be congratulated on having, by the revival of this very fine composition, added one to the limited repertoire of violin concertos of the Classical school, which have been hitherto confined to Beethoven in D, Mendelssohn in E minor, and one or two of Spohr's. The sooner M. Sainton comes forward at the Philharmonic with a second of Mozart's (that in G, for example, the other published one), the more grateful will be our amateurs of the fiddle, more especially if he plays it with the same fire and perfection which he imparted to the one in E flat.

Miss Louisa Pyne has wonderfully improved, both in voice and execution. Her singing of Mozart's beautiful air (in the original key, F) was worthy of any vocalist that could be named. Not less charming in her way, was Miss Williams, with the smooth aria of "Winter," which she sang to perfection.

The mistake of this Concert was to place the ninth symphony last, instead of first. The result was a general "move" during the choral finale. The audience were already fatigued with what they had heard. We cannot force it into the heads of the Philharmonic directors, that "enough is as good as a feast."

MUSICAL UNION.

Mr. Ella made a brilliant beginning to the season on Tuesday. The programme was admirable, the executants first-rate, and the audience numerous and highly distinguished for fashion, aristocracy, and mental eminence. The Musical Union has now reached its seventh year, and has made rapid progress, especially within the last few seasons, since its importance as an art-institution has become more fully recognised. By the death of His Royal Highness, the Duke of Cambridge, the office of President became vacant, and has been accepted by the Duke of Leinster, an accomplished amateur and patron of the art of music. The réunion still takes place in Willis's Rooms, the locale selected by Mr. Ella, some five years ago, in place of the rooms in Mortimer Street.

The performances of Tuesday last consisted of Haydn's quartet in F (No. 48), Beethoven's sonata for violin and piano-forte, in C minor, (op. 30), Mendelssohn's Presto Scherzando in F sharp minor, for pianoforte solos, and the same composer's posthumous quintet for stringed instruments, in B flat, (Op. 37).

Haydn's quartet was admirably executed by Ernst, Deloffre, Hill, and Piatti. Beethoven's sonata afforded a great treat to Mr. Ella's subscribers. Ernst and Hallé were joined together in the interpretation of this glorious work, and nothing short of perfection was attained. Ernst was in great force. It was one of his happiest days, and he played like one inspired. Throughout the whole of the sonata and quintet he was listened to with breathless interest, and in every movement he appeared to surpass his previous efforts. In the allegro and finale to the Sonata he played with prodigious fire, whilst the adagio was a perfect display of faultless intonation and the most genuine sentiment. In Beethoven's masterly work Ernst could not possibly have found a more able coadjutor, one who could more thoroughly appreciate, and enter more deeply into the spirit of Beethoven's music, than Charles Hallé. This great pianist shines not more remarkably in the brilliancy of his execution than in his finely classic style and most intimate sympathy with the music he is interpreting. In Mendelssohn's pianoforte solo, Hallé exhibited that exquisite finish, that elasticity of touch, and perfect command of the instrument for which he is so eminently distinguished. His execution of this most charming and irresistible movement was full of fancy, and the delicacy and force he alternately exhibited produced the most striking effect. He was applauded "to the echo" by the noble and learned assembly. The grand feature of the selection was undoubtedly Mendelssohn's posthumous quintet, which has caused so great a stir lately in musical circles. We have already described this work as one of Mendelssohn's most wonderful compositions, when it was performed at Mr. Dando's, in the winter; we thought the same on hearing it at Mr. Lucas's, about a fortnight since; and now Mr. Ella has afforded us the opportunity of being so thoroughly convinced of the justness of our first impressions, that nothing can possibly shake our conviction. Each movement is a master piece. How Ernst played it, and how he always plays Mendelssohn's music, we need not say, nor how zealously and ably he was backed by Deloffre, Hill, Mellon, and Piatti "the unrivalled." We shall not analyse the composition here, an abler pen than that of the writer of this notice being already engaged in the task. Suffice it that its success was triumphant, and that unanimous opinion pronounced it one of the most extraordinary inspirations of its incomparable author.

Thus has Mr. Ella well begun. Let him thus proceed, and he will astonish "the nations" during the month of May.

Original Correspondence.

ANDANTE AND ANDANTINO.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR.—Having called your attention to the confused idea we have of the precise difference between the terms "Andante and Andantino," (to which you kindly replied in your number of March 15th) I take the liberty of forwarding the following extract from the last No. of the Musical Times :—

"MUSICA, BRIGHTON.—We give you the definition of the terms from Marx Allgemeine Musiklehre. 'Andante—going, but walking not running; Andantino—somewhat slower than Andante.' Gottfried Weber defines the latter, Andantino—'this term is a diminutive of Andante.' As a designation of time, it has no distinct well-defined meaning; it may, however, serve as the designation of a small, short Andante."

If I understand your definition correctly, you say "Andantino" is faster than "Andante."

By inserting a few lines on this subject in your valuable columns, you will oblige

Reigate, April 4th, 1851.

Sir, yours, very faithfully,
EDW. THURMAN.

P.S.—"Hamilton," "Bishop," "Kalkbrenner," and a host of others, say that Andantino is slower than Andante.

[We think, though both are slow movements, that andante and andantino have more strictly a relation to character than to time. We will endeavour to make room for an article on the subject —
ED. M. W.]

THE GUITAR—SPANISH AND ENGLISH.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

Kilkhampton, April 8, 1851.

MR. EDITOR,—A friend of mine has recently purchased a guitar, but cannot tell whether it is a Spanish or an English one. May I ask—1. How is he to know whether it is a Spanish or an English guitar? 2. Assuming that it is a Spanish one, whose Instruction Book would you recommend? 3. Assuming that it is an English one, what Instruction book ought he to procure? He will have to learn the guitar himself without the aid of a master—none here can instruct him. An answer will oblige.

Yours truly,

H. W. HOLLAND.

[Our columns are open to a reply, for which, in common with our correspondent, we shall feel obliged to any of our kind friends.
—ED. M. W.]

MAJOR AND MINOR KEYS.

(To the Editor of the Musical World.)

Pimlico, April 9, 1851.

Sir,—I find in one work the following "Table of Signature" marked thus :—

I

MAJOR KEYS.	MINOR KEYS.
C.....	A.....
G. one sharp.....	E. one sharp.
D. two sharps.....	B. two sharps.
A. three sharps.....	F. three sharps.
and so throughout.

In another work :

II.

MAJOR KEYS	MINOR KEYS.
C.....	C. three flats.
G. one sharp.....	G. two flats.
D. two sharps.....	D. one flat.
A. three sharps.....	A.....
and so on throughout.

In the first Table the Relative Minor is given, but no mention of the Minor. In the second table the Minor is given, but no mention of the Relative Minor. It is contended by a party, that there is no occasion to mention Relative Minor, but to call it Minor, as in the first table. From this opinion I differ; and, to decide this question, I have taken upon myself to write to the Editor of the Musical World on the subject, as I contend, that it is requisite for the scholar to have them more fully explained, and that they ought to be placed thus—

MAJOR KEYS.	MINOR.	RELATIVE MINOR.
C.....	C. three flats.....	A.....
G. one sharp.....	G. two flats.....	E. one sharp.
D. two sharps.....	D. flat.....	B. two sharps.
And so on throughout.

But the question I beg to ask, (as they must be laid down in classes for the purpose they are intended for), will it be proper to arrange them thus, which is the way wanted.

C....C. three flats. | C....A. | F....F. four flats. | F....D one flat.

Your obedient servant.

A SUBSCRIBER.

[Open to discussion.—ED. M. W.]

"THERE'S A GOOD TIME COMING, BOYS."

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR.—"There's a Good Time coming" was first sung by the Hutchinson Family. It was also arranged as a song expressly for them, by Mr. G. Simpson, of Hanley (Professor of Music), though not published, the words being the property of Mr. Henry Russell.

Yours, very truly,
H. H.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR.—I cannot take upon myself to decide the wager between F. and W. respecting the fact of the Hutchinson family being the first to sing the above song; but this I can say, that a professor of music at Hanley offered to give me a MS. copy of it, as sung by them, just after they had sung it in the Potteries, and I believe before any other vocalist had taken it up; my impression being that the music and words are held together by the copyright of the latter only. If this will answer the purpose of your correspondent "M. D. K." the information, in the absence of better, is at his service.

P. Q.

WEBER'S PRECIOSA.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

Edinburgh, 7th April, 1851.

SIR.—Please inform your Limerick correspondent that the Pianoforte score, instrumental parts, and full score of Weber's Preciosa are to be had from Schlesinger in Berlin.

I am, Sir, yours most obedient,
D. HAMILTON.

Dramatic Intelligence.

DRURY LANE.—The Queen of Spades is the title of a two-act piece produced at this Theatre, and which has now run some eight or nine nights successfully. It is taken from the Comic Opera, La Dame de Pique, written by Scribe, with Halévy's music, brought out last winter at the Opera Comique, Paris. Dion Bourcicault is the Drury Lane adapter; and, as might have been expected, the new version has lost nothing in point or neatness of expression. The story suffers from want of musical connection. Books indited with a view to illustration by music, are seldom clear enough, or concise enough for the plot of a spoken drama. The omission of details is a great drawback. In its original state, the Dame de Pique was not a very transparent piece; nor, well as the adaptation has been done, do we think it has received much clarification in translating. The main notion is that of a Russian Princess in disguise, who wishes to liberate from the salt mines an officer to whom she is attached. The means by which this is effected has reference to a secret spell over the cards at a gaming-table, by which success is supposed to be ensured. The Princess professes to a knowledge of this secret, and works upon all within her influence, until they become believers in her supernatural powers. At the end, when, after a series of complications, accidents, contretemps, and explanations, the dénouement is en train, it is discovered that the Princess has no power whatever over the cards; that her three fancy cards, the Three of Spades, the Ten of Spades, and the Queen of Spades (why then call the piece The Queen of Spades only?), have no magic in them whatever; and that she took the hint solely from the fact of the Empress Elizabeth always winning at faro on the "Queen of Spades,"—her courtiers being too loyal and too polite to suffer their royal mistress to be chagrined by a loss at cards.

The drama has been well put upon the boards, and is strongly cast, combining among others, the names of Messrs. Anderson, Emery, Walter Lacy, and the Mesdames Fanny Vining, and W. Lacy.

Mr. Anderson plays an inspector in the Salt Mines, whose head becomes turned with a lust for gambling. The part is hardly prominent enough for this gentleman's talents.

Mr. Walter Lacy plays a Governor who tries all sorts of stratagems to obtain the hand of the Princess, but fails in the end. The part is not sufficiently prominent for the talents of so accomplished an artist, who, however, makes it exceedingly effective.

Miss Fanny Vining fails to produce a great effort in the Princess; a part, which in the hands of Madame Ugalde, at the Opera Comique, at Paris, has been considered one of the great hits of the day.

Mrs. Walter Lacy had a subordinate part, which she plays with becoming grace and naïveté.

From its being performed so many nights, The Queen of Spades must be pronounced successful.

HAYMARKET.—The Lady of Lyons has been re-produced at this theatre, with Mr. J. W. Wallack as Claude Melnotte, and Miss Laura Addison as Pauline Deschapelles. Sir Edward Lytton Bulwer wrote this play with an especial eye to Macready's genius, and never was actor more felicitously suited in a part. Had Sir Edward Lytton Bulwer to write his very elegant drama over again, with an especial eye to Mr. J. W. Wallack's peculiar talents, there is no doubt he would have altered it materially. Mr. J. W. Wallack laboured under the great disadvantage of having to put on a suit cut out and sewn up for another artist, and which did not at all fit him. Under such counteracting circumstances, Mr. J. W. Wallack may be said to have acquitted himself with tact and skill. In the first act he was sufficiently light and plastic, and his scenes with his mother betokened a nice feeling for the homely pathetic. In the second act he wanted force and point, although he had some very happy moments. The great scene in the third act hardly rose to the author's intention, not being too earnest nor over impressive. The whole of the last scene was carefully, judiciously, and effectively acted; still we are not inclined to set down Claude Melnotte as one of Mr. J. W. Wallack's best impersonations.

Miss Laura Addison looked more charming than ever in Pauline, and found a character better suited to her pretty capabilities than the horrid towering heroines of Shakspeare. We can assure our readers that their favourite, Laura, made a serious impression on the spectators—too serious, we are afraid, in one instance—and that half the ladies were jealous and envious of her attractions. To criticise Laura as we would criticise other actresses, would not be fair, neither would it be possible. Laura has no parallel, of latitude or longitude, except her sweet self. In her case, indeed, comparisons would be odious. She is a piece of pure nature—Laura nature—a child-woman and woman-child, "a thing of loves and kisses, smiles and tears," as the poet saith, whose genius is unimaginable, whose art is illimitable, whose mind is unfathomable, whose form is unapproachable, whose beauty is intolerable—for who can look on her starry face and endure without languishing?—in short, who has everything finitively "able" about her, which may be summed up in one able word "incomparable,"—thus proving that Laura is no parable. But Laura's Pauline has the further advantage of being original. Her conception would have made the poet blush for his forgetfulness, and lament his having written the play years too soon. Not only the "beauty, youth, clean linen" (Farquhar again), and tenderness of the character, set off Laura's talents to plural advantage, or advantages—it depends upon the construction of the noun of number—but the pride became her, and flashed along her form, from radiant brow to tiny foot, like lightning (sheet, of course,) over a summer sky. In the scene where she discovers Claude's treachery—

"She stood a moment as a Pythoness Stands on her tripod, agonised and full

Of inspiration gathered from distress,
When all the heart-strings, like wild horses pull
The heart asunder—"

We forget the rest. In short, to quote the same nice poet, "She looked a beautiful embodied storm." We never saw rage so prettily assumed, nor astonishment so captivatingly depicted. Laura's look and Laura's silence spoke volumes. That Laura was vehemently and universally applauded throughout, and that Laura was called for at the end of the performance, were things of course.

The rest of the characters were well sustained, especially that of Beauseant, by Mr. Howe, which was a striking bit of acting. We missed poor Mrs. Clifford sadly in Pauline's mother, a character which she made entirely her own.

The Lady of Lyons has been repeated several times, and Laura's Pauline grows more and more mellowed with each performance. Let no one who loves to look upon the beautiful in simplicity, and the truthful in nature, fail to go to the Haymarket and behold Laura Addison in Pauline Deschappelles in the Lady of Lyons.

ADELPHI.—On Thursday evening, after Dion Bourcicault's excellent drama of the Willow Copse, in which the two lead-stars of the Adelphi—Madame Celeste and Miss Woolgar—shine with even more than their wonted lustre, and Mr. S. Emery makes an admirable representative of the villain of the piece—a new farce was produced, called London Fog. It is a bagatelle of the Box versus Cox species. Copal (Mr. Bedford), a ruined artist, enters by mistake, in the obscurity of a London fog, the house of Simple (Mr. Wright), an inexorable creditor. Discovering his error too late to make his escape, he contrives, with the aid of Simple's housekeeper, so to alter the appearance first of the room and then of himself, that Simple, on entering, believes, in his turn, that he has got into the wrong house. Abundance of drollery arises out of this inverted position of the host and his unknown visitor, after which, Simple falls asleep, and the room being restored to its former appearance, the bewildered occupant, on awakening, fancies that he has been in a dream. Mr. Wright played with his usual quiet gusto of humour; but, spite of his exertions, aided by those of Mr. Paul Bedford, the piece had but a lukewarm reception.

OLYMPIC.—Mr. Barnard's neatly written domestic drama, "The Farmer's Story," and the new farce, "Charles King," have been dividing, during the week, the suffrages of very full houses. Mrs. Stirling's rustic humour and domestic pathos in the former piece, are charming; and her broken Frenchified-English in the latter, very telling. We must leave it to the reader or the historian to determine, whether Nell Gwynne was as handsome as Louisa Howard.

Provincial.

LEEDS.—The first general annual meeting of the Leeds Madrigal and Motet Society was held in St. George's School-room, on Wednesday evening, Thomas Charlesworth, Esq., in the chair. A satisfactory report of the societies' proceedings during the first year of its existence was read, and the accounts submitted to the members, from which it appeared that a small balance remained in the treasurer's hands; the present accounts including the expenditure necessary in first forming the society, as advertisements, circulars, &c. The report concluded by inciting the members to increased diligence in attending rehearsals. The following resolutions were then put and carried unanimously.—Moved by Mr. G. Young, seconded by Mr. James Buckton, "That the report which has been read to the meeting be adopted and printed, and circulated among the members of the society." Moved by Mr. France, seconded by Mr. Bradshaw, "That the thanks of the society be given to the committee for their services, and that the four members now retiring agreeably to the rules of the society (namely, Mr. S. Hey, Mr. Kemplay, Mr. Kershaw, and Mr. Hopkinson,) be and are hereby re-elected." Moved by Mr. Shaw, seconded by Mr. Denton, "That the best thanks of the society be given to Mr. Spark, the honorary director, for his very able and gratuitous services during the past year, and that he be requested to continue his valuable aid to the society." Moved by Mr. Moore, seconded by Mr. Kighley, "That the thanks of the society be given to the honorary secretary for his services, and that he be requested to continue the same." Moved by Mr. Buckton, seconded by Mr. Shaw, "That the thanks, of the subscribers be given to the professional members of the society for their assistance and the readiness they have at all times shown to co-operate with them in promoting the interests of the society." A vote of thanks to the chairman having passed, the ordinary meeting for practice took place, and the members separated.

SWANSEA.—We were last (Tuesday) night favoured with a visit from the unrivalled M. Jullien, who gave his concert in the theatre. Of the performance it is sufficient to say that it was worthy of his fame. The audience was a fitting tribute to the genius that presided over this feast of harmony. Not only was the theatre crammed—the front seats in the gallery being filled with box tickets, but the partitions between the side boxes and galleries had to be thrown down. Even this was not sufficient to alleviate the "pressure from without." Above three hundred persons had to be accommodated on the stage, and then it was difficult to procure more than standing room. As an illustration of the interest felt in Wales in M. Jullien's concert, it may be stated that a special train was engaged to convey a large number of persons from Neath and its neighbourhood, who were anxious to be present.—Swansea Herald.

MANCHESTER.

(From our own correspondent.)

There has been very little of any interest to communicate on musical matters here since our last, and that little has been fairly supplied from other sources. On Thursday the 3rd instant, however, there was an attraction of no ordinary kind, which induced us to strain a point to be present and report thereon. We allude to Mr. C. A. Seymour's annual benefit, at our Theatre Royal, where, besides the dramatic performances of the Sheriff of the County and the farce of the Ladies' Club, both played, at the best, respectably, (with the exception of Mrs. Horsman's acting, which was first rate), we had the gifted Ernst to attract us, and to assist his brother violinist at his benefit. We were much pleased to see the theatre so well attended. The dress circle was full to the extreme corner: there was a capital pit and upper circle; the gallery alone being thin. Ernst appeared immediately after the comedy to play his fantasia on Hungarian airs, with variations. He looked exceedingly pale, the result of his recent indisposition, which added to his usually pensive cast of countenance, and imparted mysterious wildness to his playing, that more than ever reminded us of his great antetype—Paganini. Ernst looked, indeed, like a spirit from some other world, come to enchant and delight us in this nether earth—himself being full of mournful thought the while. Nevertheless, Ernst's slender gentlemanly figure and regularly expressive features can in no wise be compared to the gaunt visage, lank flowing hair and ungainly form of his celebrated predecessor, of whom, nevertheless, still we were forcibly (inevitably perhaps) reminded of Paganini. We never heard Ernst to such perfection; his "harmonics" were so neat and pure (and he gave them in great profusion)—his arpeggio, his double, treble, (and almost quadruple) stopping, his alternations of pizzicato with passages col arco, were each and all marvellous, yet so entirely at his command as to appear thrown in merely as graces or ornaments a piacere to his impassioned themes, and that with the greatest ease and nonchalance. Ernst next appeared in Maurer's well-known quartet for four violins, with Messrs. Seymour, Baetens, and Thomas—a remarkable composition in its way, though never before heard in Manchester. It is seldom that four such first fiddles can be heard together in the provinces; and this quartet can only be rendered intelligibly by first rate artists. It was played in the most perfect style by all the executants, listened to with the deepest interest and loudly applauded at the close. After some clever dancing by Miss Annie Payne and Mr. J. Marshall—(the hornpipe of the latter being exceedingly spirited), Herr Lidel came forward with a composition of his own—a fantasia for the violoncello, on Irish airs, introducing melodies familiar to us, from the English words to which Moore and others have adapted them, such as "A Rose tree in full bearing," and "T'o Ladies eyes, a round, boys." We were very much pleased with Herr Lidel's performance, which displayed great command over the instrument, without any vulgar attempts to astonish, and without being long and tedious. Ernst then came on for the last time, with the grotesque and universally popular Carnaval de Venise. He played his own introduction, a melodious and elegant andante, which pleased us as much as anything he did all the evening. A more refined and finished example of pure and legitimate "fiddling" we never listened to. The composition is elegant and appropriate. To record the wonderful metamorphoses to which he subjected the air, in the series of variations, would be to repeat a thrice told tale. Suffice it, he surpassed himself, and many of his variations seemed to us quite new. Of course he played others on responding to the loud and unanimous encore, and these appeared more original, fantastic and difficult than the rest. Altogether Mr. Seymour, the spirited leader of our Theatre Royal orchestra, afforded his friends a very high treat at his annual benefit this year, and we trust the proceeds were as satisfactory to himself as his entertainment to the audience. It was unfortunately the closing night of the gentlemen's Glee Club. Most of the members of that jubilant institute are warm friends of Mr. Seymour, and would all have otherwise attended. The house could not have held very many more, however, and that was a consolation.

It appears from to-day's Guardian that the Glee Club meeting passed off very satisfactorily. There was a large attendance of members and their friends under the presidency of John Potter, Esq., our worthy mayor. The Monday night or Weekly "Concerts for the People," have for some weeks now been a series of bumper nights, we rejoice to say, since each was for the benefit of one or other of our deserving vocalists, or for the choir itself, or for the zealous conductor, Mr. David Ward Banks. Next Monday is to be the last, for the benefit of Mr. Creed Royal, principal flute at the Theatre Royal and Concert Hall. The one last Monday, which was crowded to overflow, was for the benefit of Mr. Pigot, our local John Parry—or rather the local singer of John Parry's songs, for John has given himself up to a wandering life, and cannot be located anywhere. A concert is announced for Monday next at the Mechanics' Institute. Another public or dress concert is announced this month at our Concert Hall, at which Mme. Fiorentini and Signor Calzolari are to appear. We should be glad to hear your opinion of Mrs. Enderssohn, whom we saw, by last week's number, was to appear last night at Sterndale Bennett's last concert of classical pianoforte music. If we are not mistaken we heard her give token of great promise in private, some eighteen months ago, in this city, since which time she has been studying under Sir George Smart. Your accounts of the two Italian Operas will weekly increase in interest, especially to us poor subscribers in the country, who cannot see and hear the performances for ourselves. We have a greater facility, however, this season for securing a seat in a stall or a box for her Majesty's Theatre, Mr. Knowles having entered into an arrangement with Mr. Lumley, by which means he can let a certain portion to parties in Manchester for each performance. Charles Hallé is about to leave us for the season. Our Theatre Royal closes this week, consequently we shall have little interesting to your readers to report for some time to come, and shall be glad to see the space devoted to other matter of immediate interest.

[Our correspondent will find our opinion of Mrs. Enderssohn in a notice of the performance of Elijah, at Mr. Hullah's Monthly Concerts.—ED. M. W.]

HERR STIGELLI, the German tenor, makes, this evening, his first appearance in Robert Le Diable, at the Royal Italian Opera, in Rambaldo, which was made so prominent a character last season by Mario.

MR. STERNDALÉ BENNETT'S SOIREEs.

THE third and last of the present series of classical pianoforte performances took place on Tuesday. The programme was as follows:—

PART I.

TRIO—No. 2, Op. 66, in C minor, pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Mendelssohn), Mr. W. S. Bennett, Herr Ernst, and Signor Piatti.

SELECTIONS—Pianoforte, Mr. W. S. Bennett (J. S. Bach. Handel.) Fugue in E minor (J. S. Bach). Harpsichord Lesson; Allemande; Courante; Air—"The Harmonious Blacksmith," by desire (Handel).

CANTATA—Mrs. Enderssohn, "Non temer" (Mozart). Con Accompagnamento di pianoforte—Mr. W. S. Bennett.

Duo in A major, dedicated to Salieri, pianoforte and violin (Beethoven), Messrs. W. S. Bennett and Herr Ernst.

SECOND PART.

VARIATIONS à quatre Mains, in B flat (Posthumous) (Mendelssohn), Messrs. Robert Barnett and W. S. Bennett.

TWO SONGS—"Cbloris in sickness," "May dew," Mrs. Enderssohn (W. S. Bennett).

SELECTIONS from the Pianoforte Works (W. S. Bennett). Pianoforte, Mr. W. S. Bennett. SCHERZO, in E minor, Op. 27. THREE MUSICAL SKETCHES:—"The Lake," "The Mill Stream," "The Fountain."

The trio went splendidly, as might have been expected, from three of the finest players on their respective instruments now existing—Sterndale Bennett, Heinrich Ernst, and Alfredo Piatti—each, in his way, a giant. The pleasant sonata of Beethoven, by Bennett and Ernst, was given to perfection, and pleased the audience mightily. As for Ernst, he was Ernst; as for Bennett, he was Bennett; as for both together, they were Beethoven. What a difference between this work and the ninth symphony! The selections from Bach and Handel were very happy. The variations on the "Harmonious blacksmith" were encored. They are as effective as any of Herz or Thalberg, and much prettier in the bargain. The variations of Mendelssohn, in E flat, beat all the variations that exist, except one set of Beethoven's, into fits. The piece is as full of variety, fancy, and clear design as the best sonata that could be written. If all variations were like these we should soon become variation-mad; but unfortunately the other is the case. The playing was as irreproachable as it was strikingly effective. Mr. Robert Barnett is one of the most finished pianists of the day, and worthily occupied his place beside the genius of the evening. We should like to hear a batch of duets, some evening, by Bennett and Barnett; they seem, as it were, cut out to play together. We never heard a better ensemble. The duet (which Mr. Bennett played from the MS. copy, with Mendelssohn himself, at his concert in the Hanover Square Rooms, in 1844), produced a marked effect, and the brilliant coda elicited the heartiest applause. The selections from Mr. Bennett's own works for the piano, executed with admirable vigor and expression, by their gifted author, brought the concert and the series to a close with dignity.

The vocal music was delightful. Mrs. Enderssohn sang the "Non temer" exceedingly well, and was accompanied by Mr. Sterndale Bennett in brilliant style. The lady also gave the two lovely songs of the beneficaire (the last of which reminds us, at the end of each couplet, of the bass song in A, from Bach's mass in B minor), with extreme unction. She was much applauded, and the "May Dew" deservedly encored. The room was crowded, and everybody was contented and delighted.

ERNST.

We have not been able to spare room for any lengthened notice of the recent provincial tournee in which this gifted "fiddler" took a prominent part; but to judge from the articles in the local papers which we have received from time to time, he appears to have made a prodigious effect wherever he played. To make up for unintended neglect, we quote below some extracts from two of the articles in the Manchester Guardian, one of the most undoubted provincial authorities on musical subjects. The following is à propos of the first concert given at Manchester:—

"The great feature of the concert, however, was Ernst; and his appearance on the platform was the signal for a tremendous greeting from the audience, many of whom, doubtless, had previously heard him in the same place. For some moments, owing to this manifestation of pleasure, the great violinist was unable to proceed, but after repeatedly bowing his thanks, the violin was raised to its place, and what in common parlance is termed a fiddle, became in the hands of this accomplished executant a means of conveying to the vast multitude around him the most exquisite emotions of pleasure, by rendering, in the sweetest tones, the refined musical ideas of a great artist. Herr Ernst's first solo was on themes from Otello, and introduced several beautiful airs, which, of course, were played with ravishing sweetness. He also took part in a duet for pianoforte and violin; but it was in the celebrated Carnival solo, in the second part, that his wonderful powers of execution were chiefly displayed. He accomplished what appeared to be impossibilities, and wrought his audience up to a pitch of interested excitement rarely equalled in Manchester. The calls of "bravo" and "encore" which greeted the termination of the solo were almost deafening, and on his re-appearance to respond to the demand, he performed a couple of additional variations, if possible more wonderful than their predecessors."

The same writer, in a notice of the second and last concert at Manchester, speaks of Ernst with even still greater enthusiasm:—

"Ernst, thin and pale, in mind intellectual, elevated, spiritual, with that touching tone of melancholy which pervades so many really great musical existences—the great, the unapproachable Ernst, was to us the grand attraction of the concert. His exquisitely charming treatment of the lighter passages in Mayseder's well-known solo, with variations, his fine, expressive enunciation of those which require more thought and feeling, his brilliant execution of the pizzicato and harmonic passages, and his breadth yet clearness of tremolo, were really fascinating, and elicited the loudest plaudits from the numerous and delighted auditory. In the elegy of his own composition, he poured forth deep, thrilling gushes of saddest and most touching music; subordinating every grace, note, trill, and ornament to the funereal character of the theme. In his treatment of the Carnival of Venice he reminds us more powerfully than any other living violinist, of his great prototype, Paganini. There are the same alternations of the mirthful and the sad, the boisterous and the subdued, the frolicsome and the despairing, laughter of maidens, and shrieks of tormented spirits, and all these pervaded by that indescribable yet easily recognized product of genius, which gives strange life and voice to the inanimate instrument."

How far we share the sentiments of our eloquent cotemporary it is scarcely necessary to remind our readers.

Foreign.

LEIPZIG, 28th March.—Mr. Moscheles writes that Madame Kückenmeister Rudersdoff, the celebrated vocalist, purposes visiting London this season, as well as the Leipzig vocal quartet society, consisting of twelve of the best chorus singers of the opera and of the Pauliner-Sing-verein, who will be "consigned to the care" of Mr. Albert Schloss, the well-known concert agent.

Miscellaneous.

MARY-LE-BONE THEATRE.—Mr. Jarrett, the eminent cornist, has announced a series of three Grand Concerts in Passion Week, to consist of sacred and miscellaneous performances, in which some of the most notable vocal and instrumental artists at present in London are engaged to appear. Among others we may name Jetty Treffz, Herr Formes, Signor Stigelli, Signor Marchesi, Mr. F. Bodda, Miss Martha Williams, Mdlle. Rummell, the Misses Cole, Miss Messent, Miss Bassano, Miss Rose Braham, and the double quartet from the famous Berlin choir, as vocalists; and M.M. Alexandre Billet (pianist), Cioffi (trombone), Prospero (serpent-cleide), Lazarus (clarinet), Pratten and Collins (flute), Koenig (cornet-a-piston), Madame Parish Alvars and Chatterton (harp), Lindley Collins (violoncello), Sinton and Viotti Collins (violin), and the Distins (Sax-Horn), as instrumentalists. For further particulars see our advertisement columns.

DISCOVERY OF MUSICAL GEMS BY PAGANINI.—It was said, just before the death of this great musician, that he burned nearly all his MS. compositions. This is not the case; the greater part of them were stolen from him by, it is supposed, some enthusiastic admirer, who, it is hoped, will one day give them to the world. The rest descended to his son. The son has, we learn, just arranged with a music publisher of Paris to bring out nine of the latter. They consist of fantaisies and variations, full of that wild and indescribable charm which the renowned violinist threw into all his original compositions.—Literary Gazette.

MR. AGUILAR'S MATINEE MUSICALE took place on Thursday at his residence, Upper Norton-street, for the purpose of exhibiting the progress of his young pupils to the parents and friends. About a dozen performed select compositions. Those most admired, both as regards musical merits and the talent displayed in their performance, were two "Duettings" by Sterndale Bennett, a Serenade by Osborne, Favarger's "Souvenir d'Andalousie," Schulhoff's "Victoria" (duet), two Lieder ohne Worte by Mendelssohn, and Mr. Aguilar's own composition, entitled "La Fête Villageoise," a Nocturne in F sharp, and an Etude in A minor. Mr. Aguilar's plan of inducing young pupils to perform in society is a good one. It gives them confidence, inspires them with emulation, and is an incentive to diligence.

MADAME AND HERR GOFFRIE'S CONCERT.—The Hanover Square rooms were quite filled on Wednesday evening, at the concert of these artists. The audience had to listen to a rather long programme, consisting of 27 pieces. In Germany four concerts would be required to obtain listeners for so much music, and having something of the teutonic in our blood, as we could not make up our minds to remain till the end, we offer to plead this fact as an excuse for giving an account of the first part only. It is rarely that an orchestra can be collected at a benefit concert. Herr Goffrie nevertheless had secured one, and deserved to be commended for his spirit. The band played the overture to Masaniello in the usual style. Its next employment was in the "Sleep" song (Masaniello), sung in German by Herr Stigelli, with a pathos that elicited an unanimous "da capo." He however substituted a beautiful song by Schubert (in English, "I heard a streamlet gushing"). A lengthy duet from Belisario seemed to make every body weary, although Madlle. Magner and Herr Mayerhofer did all in their power for it. The performance of this kind of music in a concert room is an error, too often observed, however, in singers more experienced than Madlle. Magner and Herr Mayerhofer. Madlle. Lavinia sustained her reputation as a good soprano in the duet from Semiramide, supported by that agreeable and improving basso, Signor Marchesi. Herr Mengis and Mlle. Rummell were prevented by illness from appearing. We always enjoy the singing of Herr Stockhausen. His voice is really musical, and we applaud him for the taste which so often leads him to the songs of the best composers. The pretty romance of Schubert, "Floweret's blooming" ("Lob der Thranen") was much applauded. A great attraction was a solo on the contra basso (with four strings) by Herr Muller, from Darmstadt (now at Her Majesty's theatre). The Adagio, by Mangold, he performed with great expression, more indeed than we thought the instrument capable of rendering.* The beneficiaire executed the Tema con

* We have since heard that Herr Muller's "Scherzo" shewed him an executant of extraordinary power.

Variationi of Beethoven's op. 47 sonata (the "Kreutzer"). Madame Goffrie has read and studied "her Beethoven," and this shewed itself in her performance of that celebrated movement. The violin obligato could not have been handled with more sincere animation than by Herr Goffrie, and the ensemble was most satisfactory. We have little doubt but Madame Goffrie will rapidly strengthen her position amongst us, and be ranked as one of the deserving pianists of London. Her ambition was declared in attempting the last two movements of Chopin's concerto in E minor, with orchestral accompaniments. It was a pity that the great length of the programme necessitated the omission of the first movement. The peculiar turn of Chopin is, however, developed to admiration in the Adagio and Rondo. As is too often the case when rehearsals have been stint, the accompaniments were too predominant throughout. Herr Goffrie seemed to have little command over the obstreperous enthusiasm of his brethren. Madame Parish Alvares (widow of the celebrated English harpist) gratified us by a solo on the harp. Her mechanism is pure, her tone agreeable, and her style unexceptionable—qualities that place Madame Parish Alvares among the best performers on her instrument. This lady is the daughter of Herr Levy, the celebrated horn player of Vienna, with whom she travelled when only twelve years of age, and more than once played before the Emperor of Austria and the Imperial family. M. Rummel accompanied the vocal pieces with great efficiency.

NEW BEETHOVEN ROOMS.—A vocal and instrumental concert—which attracted a full audience—was given here on Friday evening, the 14th inst., under the direction of Messieurs C. De Besnier and Verdavainne. It was the first of a series of three, and was confined to classical music; the second and third are to be devoted to sacred and classic, and modern compositions. The most attractive portion of the programme consisted of Mozart's Quartett in G major, for two violins, alto and bass; and two Quartetts in A major, by Beethoven, for the same instruments; played respectively by Messrs. H. Blagrove, Clementi, R. Blagrove, and Hancock, and executed admirably by the talented "quartett" of professors. Made. Verdavainne elicited much applause by the neat and clever manner in which she played Bach's prelude and fugue in C sharp, and the "Etude Melodique-hommage a Mozart," by Cramer. This lady seems to have studied carefully, and to have a good command of the instrument. In the vocal department, the Prière de Joseph, of Mehul, with the exception of a slip on the part of one of the male voices, was well sung. Signor Bottura gave the "Non piu andrai" creditably. Mos. De Besnier is a tenor of too limited a range for the quartet from Fidelio, in which he took part, assisted by Signor Bottura, and Madmes. Lemaire and Zimmerman. The former lady displayed her contralto voice advantageously in Haydn's aria from the Creation, which she executed with much feeling; and a similar compliment may be accorded Madme. Zimmerman in her aria from Orfeo, "Sposa di Euridice." Altogether the Concert passed off well.

MADAME PARISH ALVARES, the widow of the celebrated harpist, has taken up her permanent residence in London.

DUPREZ'S FIRST PART.—The first part ever played in Italy by the great French tenor was Idreno, in Rossini's Semiramide.

MR. MACREADY has presented Mr. Wilmot, his former stage-manager, with a beautiful silver inkstand.

THE BROTHERS BROUGH have taken Balfe's Bohemian Girl as the subject for their Eastern Burlesque at the Adelphi.

APOLLONICON CONCERTS.—These meetings, which are held every day, on alternate mornings and evenings, at the Lowther Rooms, seem likely to afford a favourite lounge for the amateurs of Westminster and the neighbourhood. The Apollonicon being at present under repair, the instrumental part of the business is confined entirely to the Collins family, assisted by Mr. Grattan Cooke, and one or two more wind instrument players of note. Here Miss Rosina Collins—aided by a handsome face, and a highly effective bow-arm—takes the lead, personally, as well as artistically. The Vocalists are Miss Poole, and Miss Messent. The chief novelty of the week has been a new song by Billelta, a young Italian writer, just come to England. It was delivered by Miss Messent (for whom it has been written) with the simplicity natural to her. We would suggest to the Directors to lessen the number of reserved seats; this part of the room commonly presenting nothing but a dreary blank; while to the eyes of the visitors at the back, the performers are dwarfed from the extreme length of the Hall.

MR. JOHN PARRY (Bardd Alaw), Editor of the "Welch Melodies," late Treasurer of the Royal Society of Musicians, and father of the popular John Parry, Jun., died on Tuesday last, aged 76.

MR. J. HUTCHINS CALLCOTT, a well-known musician, who held an important position in the great house of Cramer, Beale, & Co., died recently.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—The customary annual performance of Handel's Messiah in Passion Week, is announced to take place on Wednesday next.

MR. CHARLES MUHLENFELDT's last Soirée was given in the New Beethoven Rooms, on Wednesday evening. Mr. Muhlenfeldt was assisted in the instrumental part by Messrs. Ernst, Rousselot, and Lindsay Sloper. The Concert commenced with Mendelssohn's first Trio in D minor, which was performed with the utmost spirit and animation. Miss Williams sang Gluck's "Che Faro," in her happiest manner; her full deep-toned voice also produced great effect in a ballad, called "My Childhood's happy hours," which was encored. Herr Mengis sang Mr. Salaman's elaborate canzonet, "I arise from dreams of thee," and Mr. Muhlenfeldt's new song, "The Sea's serenade to the Moon," in a manner that called forth the warmest applause. Miss Watson (Mr. T. H. Tomlinson's pupil) made her second appearance in "Bid me discourse," and justified our previous remark, that she would make progress when she had overcome the nervousness natural to a debutante; her exertions were rewarded by a unanimous encore. Mozart's Andante con variazione in G, was played with brilliant effect by Messrs. Lindsay Sloper and Muhlenfeldt; and a grand Sonata of Beethoven's, for pianoforte and Violin, by Messrs. Muhlenfeldt and Ernst. The great German Violinist was in one of his enthusiastic moods, and brought forth from his instrument sounds that were irresistible. He was ably seconded on the pianoforte by Mr. Muhlenfeldt. Beethoven's "Variations and Finale alla fuga," in E flat, well known to all musicians as the type of the fugged finale to the Eroica symphony, was played by Mr. Muhlenfeldt in a pointed and effective manner. He also introduced several studies by Mendelssohn, Muller, and Chopin's well known study on the black keys (in G flat). The Concert was brought to a conclusion by a Valse Brillante, of his own composition (for two performers on the pianoforte), which was played with graceful lightness and brilliancy by Messrs. Muhlenfeldt and Lindsay Sloper, and much applauded.

MR. SAKH DEEN MAHOMED died at Brighton, on the 24th of February, at the extraordinary age of 102 years, having enjoyed uninterrupted good health, and retained all his faculties unimpaired almost to the last hour of his life; indeed entirely so, until the death of his wife two months ago, since which he gradually drooped, and died without any apparent physical cause. This remarkable person was born at Patna in Hindoostan, in the year 1749. In 1769 he entered the Indian army, and served in the 27th regt. of Native Infantry, in conjunction and under the command of Colonels Leslie, Morgan, Gottard, Tottingham, Grant, Baillie, Majors Roberts, Crabb, and Popham, during the Governorship of Pelham and Hastings, and was present at the taking of forts Chunar, Patectah, Luteefur, Seckrool, Lora, Gochipour, Ramnuggar, and Gwalior in 1780. He came to England in 1784, and brought a letter of introduction to the Right Hon. William Pitt, from the Governor-General Warren Hastings. After various vicissitudes caused by the loss of all he possessed through the failure of a banking firm in Calcutta, he finally established himself in Brighton, as shampooing surgeon, in which profession he acquired a popularity rarely equalled. By his keen observation in the detection of various maladies, and his success in their treatment, with the assistance of the vapour and shampooing bath, a grand and most valuable therapeutic agent, which was first introduced into England by our late lamented friend—and now carried on by his son, at his elegant and commodious establishment, No. 7, Ryder-street, St. James's. During his long career, his assistance was demanded by all classes, even by Royalty itself, George IV. when Prince Regent, as well as during his sovereignty, placing himself several times under his treatment, and it was at his command that Mr. Mahomed arranged the baths in the Pavilion.

William IV. honored him by his patronage, as did also the leading members of the aristocracy of both the past and present generation. The name of Mahomed was popularly associated with Brighton, and he witnessed its progress to an extent that must have far surpassed his best anticipations, when he decided on fixing his abode there. Mr. Mahomed was a very kind hearted man, most benevolently disposed, and was always ready to assist the poor, as well by contributions from his purse, as by extending to them gratuitously all the treatment of his medical art and resources.

Our Scrap Book.

VOCAL EXPRESSION.—The celebrated singers of the 18th century were not less renowned for their power of expression than for the beauty of their mechanical performance. Some things are related of them which appear almost fabulous at the present day. Everybody knows the story of Farinelli, whose touching voice and expression cured the King of Spain, Philip V., of an attack of melancholy, which threatened his reason. The anecdote of Raff, who saved the life of the Princess Belmont, put in jeopardy by a violent fit of grief, by causing her to shed a torrent of tears, also attests the vast power of expression possessed by these singers. Tenesino, a singer of extraordinary merit, forgetting his part, in order to embrace Farinelli, who happened to sing an air with miraculous perfection; La Gabrieli, affected even to the exhibition of the most lively emotion, upon hearing Marchesi sing a cantabile; and Crescentini, causing Napoleon and all his court to shed tears in Romeo and Juliet, are also proofs of the power of expression which these divinities of song possessed. At moments, when Malibran avoided exaggeration, and exhibited true expression, combined with irreproachable execution, she gave an idea of this sort of merit; but the singers whom I have mentioned maintained, during the whole of a part, that perfection which Malibran exhibited only at intervals. In order to sing, it is not enough to possess a fine voice; though this gift of nature is an invaluable advantage, which no degree of skill can possibly supply. But one who possesses the art of regulating his voice with firmness, and understands the management of its powers, sometimes produces a better effect, with an inferior voice, than an ignorant singer can do with a fine one.

Skill, in the mechanical part of singing or playing on instruments, is undoubtedly necessary to the attainment of a good execution; but alone it is not enough. In his sensibility, and in his enthusiasm, an artist finds the most powerful resources for exciting those who hear him. Dexterity may sometimes astonish by its prodigies; but it is the privilege of true expression alone to touch the soul. What I call expression is not that grimacing which consists in twisting the arms, leaning over affectedly, moving the body, and shaking the head; a sort of pantomime of which some musicians make use, but of which they alone are the dupes. True expression is manifested without effort, by the tones of the voice or instrument. The musician who has the sentiment of it, transmits it from his soul, as by enchantment, to his throat, to the end of his fingers, to his bow, string, or finger-board. The quality of his voice, his breathing, his touch, are stamped with it; for him, there are no bad instruments; and, for him, I would almost venture to say, there is no bad music, though he may be more sensible than another to the beauties of composition. We should be mistaken if we supposed that there is no possible expression but that of grief and melancholy. There are tones proper for the expression of every emotion. Talent enables the performer to identify himself with the style of the piece which he is performing, to be simple with its simplicity, vehement with its passion, sparing of ornament in its severity, brilliant with embellishments in the elegant follies of fashion, and always great, even in trifles. There is no need of great or prolonged exertions to excite emotions of different kinds: a single phrase of a cantabile, or the theme of a rondeau, is enough. What do I say? The simplest note, even an appoggiatura, properly placed, a tone, sometimes calls forth bursts of admiration from a whole audience. At the risk of being accused of exaggeration, I will even say that we have an instinct that announces the great artist by the manner in which his bow strikes the string, or his finger the key. I know not what emanation it is which then diffuses itself through the atmosphere, proclaiming the presence of talent; but we are rarely deceived.—Extracted from —; by Aurelian.

HOMAGE TO HAYDN.—When Nelson passed through Vienna he paid Haydn a visit, and begged to have an old pen which he had used in his compositions; and, in return, the "hero of the ocean" presented him with his own watch. The French generals, Murat and Soult, and other distinguished officers, paid a visit to Haydn, in 1805, and he requested them to insert their names in a book. The generals placed a couple of sentinels before his house to prevent the French soldiers from molesting the veteran.

MUSIC.—The wordless language of bodiless spirits, clogged with encumbrance on earth, but fully revealed in heaven. MUSIC—The winds caught and tamed. MUSIC—A flowing stream of poetry, which seems shallow to those who look into it near the margin, but deep to those who look beyond. MUSIC—A cordial distilled from sound.—The Council of Four, from Wallbridge Lunn's Miscellanies—G. Routledge & Co.'s Popular Library.

CHINESE MUSIC.—The drum is indispensable in every procession of any importance; and as the Chinese have not adapted the plan of making it light enough to be slung from the neck, they are obliged to place it in a kind of stand or frame, which is carried by several men, while the drummer follows his instrument on foot. In the head or prow of this litter was placed the little drum, the sharp clicking sound of which was intended as a treble to the large drum. A gong was suspended upon a post near the little drum; while a fourth musician made a most obstreperous din with a large pair of cymbals. The man who beat the little drum seemed to find no extraordinary delight in his occupation; while the swain with the cymbals held them close to the ear of the drummer, as if he meant to requite him for his diligence with a flood of sonorous vibrations poured fresh into his ear.—Extracted from —; by Aurelian.

MILITARY MUSIC FETE.—The arrangements for the Military Musical Festival to be held in June next are now nearly completed, and will employ the greatest number of wind instruments ever congregated in this country; in all nearly 300 performers, including the bands of the 1st Life Guards, 2nd Life Guards, Royal Horse Guards (blue), Grenadier Guards, Coldstream Guards, Scots Fusileer Guards, Royal Artillery, &c. The fete, which is for the benefit of the Consumption Hospital, will, it is expected, be honoured by the presence of Her Majesty and His Royal Highness Prince Albert, &c.

Advertisements.

CRAMER'S STUDIES.

THE first Volume of this work is now published in the upright form newly revised and corrected by the Author, and divided into four parts, price 6s. each. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 301, Regent Street.

Just Published,

THE MIDSHIPMAN'S STAR,

COMPOSED by S. Rousselot, sung by Miss Dolby; Redowa brillante, by Jacques Herz, at Messrs. Rousselot and Co.'s, 66, Conduit-street, Regent-street; where may be obtained also Prospectuses for their cheap new system of Tuning the Pianoforte.—At 12s. per an. num, once a month; 10s. per three quarters 8s. per two quarters; and 5s. per one quarter.

DIATONIC FLUTE.

BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

MR. RICHARDSON will perform a Solo on this Instrument this evening (Saturday) at Drury Lane Theatre; at Mr. Alliercroft's Concerts at the Lyceum Theatre every evening next week; at the Music Hall, Adelaide-street, Strand, on the 16th and 21st; and at Mr. Gray's Concert at Brentford on the 23rd inst. Description of this Flute with Testimonials forwarded free. Manufactory, 138, Fleet Street. A. SICCAM, Patentee.

A MARANTH COMPOSITION CARACTERISTIQUE pour le PIANO, par E. SILAS.—Cramer, Beale, and Co.'s, 301, Regent Street.

MESSRS. COCKS'

NEW MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

TO VIOLINISTS.—A Treatise on the Structure and Preservation of the Violin, and all other Bow Instruments, together with an Account of the most celebrated Makers, and of the genuine characteristics of their instruments. By J. A. ORTO. Translated from the original, with additions and illustrations, by JOHN BESMOR. 8vo., in boards, 3s., postage free, 3s. 6d.

THE THEORY OF MUSIC.—Corfe's Principles of Harmony and Thorough Bass, 5s.; Mozart's Practical Thorough Bass, 5s.; Done's ditto, 4s.; Gottfried Weber's celebrated Work on Musical Composition, edited by John Bishop, 31s. 6d.; Albrechtsberger's ditto, 42s.; Cherubini's ditto, 31s. 6d.; Czerny's New School of Practical Composition, translated by John Bishop, 3 vols., folio, each 31s. 6d.; and Hamilton's five Musical Catechisms, each 2s. and 3s.

THE VIOLIN—being an account of that leading Instrument and its most eminent Professors, from its earliest date to the present time. Hints to Amateurs, and Anecdotes, by George DUBOURG. 12mo., in cloth boards, 5s., postage free, 5s. 6d.

COCKS' MUSICAL ALMANACK, for 1851. 8vo., 1s.

COCKS' MUSICAL MISCELLANY, for October, November, December, January, February, and March, each 2d.; stamped, 3d.

WARREN'S CHANTERS' HAND-GUIDE. 4to, 5s., or in 34 numbers, 3d. each.

WARREN'S PSALMODY, 24 books, each 2d., or two volumes, 2s. each.

BOYCE'S CATHEDRAL MUSIC, a New Edition, 1300 large folio pages, with Organ or Piano accompaniment. By JOSEPH WARREN. 28 6s.

VIOLIN QUARTETS, Quintets, and Trios.—Haydn's complete edition of 83 Quartets, in 4 vols., boards, with Portrait, 126s.; Mozart's complete edition of his 10 Quartets, 42s.; ditto, his 6 Quintets, 42s.; complete edition of Beethoven's 17 Quartets, by Roussetot, 126s.; his Quintets and Trios, edited by ditto, 63s.; also all the Septet Music lately published by Mosoni and Hill, &c.

INSTRUCTION BOOKS for the VIOLIN; by Goodban, 10s. 6d.; by Spohr (translated by J. Bishop, and approved by the author), 31s. 6d.; by Campagnoli, translated by ditto, 24s.; by Rode, Baillet, and Kreutzer, 10s. 6d.; Hamilton's Catechism, 1s. Violin Studies, by Kreutzer, 10s. 6d.; by Rode, 10s. 6d.; by Fiorillo, 8s.; Corbelli's 12 Solos, 10s. 6d.; and his 48 Trios, 24s.

FOR THE ORGAN.—Third edition of HAMILTON'S CATECHISM of the ORGAN, with an Historical Introduction, and a list and description of the principal organs in Great Britain, Ireland, Germany, France, and Switzerland, the whole revised, corrected, and much enlarged, by Joseph Warren, 270 pages, price 4s. Also, Warren's very easy Tutor for ditto, 4s.; Rinck's Great School for the Organ, edited by S. Wesley and John Bishop, 36s.; and Mendelssohn's Grand Sonatas for Pedal Organs, 31s. 6d.

HANDEL'S ORATORIOS, Large Folio Edition, with Pianoforte or Organ Accompaniment, beautifully engraved, newly edited by JOHN BESMOR, and collated with the great Author's Manuscript Scores in the Queen's Library. The Messiah, Israel in Egypt, Samson, and Judas Maccabeus, each 15s.; Aida and Galatea, 12s.; the Dettingen Te Deum, 12s.; Utrecht ditto, 12s.; Utrecht Jubilate, 10s. 6d.; the four Coronation Anthems, 12s.; the Funeral Anthem, 12s.; and Haydn's Creation, 15s. London: Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington-street, Publishers to the Queen.

N.B.—Cock's Descriptive Catalogue of Standard and Modern Musical Publications, gratis, and postage free.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

FOR Improving the Voice, and removing all Affections of the Throat. Strongly recommended to Clergymen, Singers, Actors, Public Speakers, persons subject to relaxed Throats, and to all persons desirous of cultivating their Voices, and ensuring a good and clear articulation. They have also been found highly beneficial to those afflicted with Nervous, Hysterical, or Stomachic Coughs. To be had in Boxes, at 1s. 1d., 3s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each, of every Medicine Vendor in the kingdom.

Testimonials of their efficacy are published with each Box, from

Mad. Orist	Miss Romer	Mr. Harrison	Mr. J. Barnett
Mad. Persiani	Mad. Albertazzi	Mr. Allen	Mr. George Linley
Mad. Eugenie Garcia	Miss Cooper	Mr. White	Mr. Rodwell
Mrs. Alfred Shaw	Sig. Lablache	Mr. Wase	Mr. Nelson
Miss Rainforth	Sig. Giubilei	Mr. Kroff	&c., &c.

HEALTH WHERE IT IS SOUGHT!

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Cure of a disordered Liver and Stomach, when in a most hopeless state.—Extract of a letter from Mr. Matthew Harvey, of Chapel Hall, Airdrie, Scotland, dated the 15th of January, 1850.—To Professor HOLLOWAY, Sir,—Your valuable Pills have been the means, with God's blessing, of restoring me to perfect health, at a time when I thought I was on the brink of the grave. I had consulted several eminent Doctors, who, after doing what they could for me, considered my case hopeless. I had been suffering from a Liver and Stomach complaint of long standing, which during the last two years got so worse, that every one considered my condition as hopeless. I, as a last resource, got a Box of your Pills, which soon gave relief, and by persevering in their use for some weeks, together with rubbing night and morning your Ointment over my chest and stomach, and right side, I have by their means alone got completely cured, and to the astonishment of myself and everybody who knows me.

(Signed) MATTHEW HARVEY.

These celebrated Pills are wonderfully efficacious in the following complaints:—
 Age Consumption of Pervers of all kinds Liver complaints Tumours
 Asthma the Bowels kinds Lumbago Ulcers
 Bilious Com- Consumption Fits Piles Worms of all
 plaints Debility Gout Rheumatism kinds
 Blootches on the Dropsy Head-ache Scrofula or King's Weakness, from Skin Dysentery Indigestion Evil whatever cause
 Bowel complaints Erysipelas Inflammation Sore Throats &c., &c.
 Colic Jaundice Tic-douloureux

Sold at the Establishment of Professor HOLLOWAY, 244, Strand, (near Temple-bar, London, and most all respectable Druggists, and Dealers in Medicines throughout the civilised World at the following prices—1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 36s. each Box. There is a considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.

N.B.—Directions for the guidance of Patients in every Disorder are affixed to each Box.

LEE & COXHEAD'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

A NEW PIANOFORTE SCHOOL, by ALBERT KELLER, price 4s.

"We can confidently recommend this Pianoforte Tutor as the best extant: Mr. Keller has adopted the judicious method of arranging the scales and exercises amongst the lessons, by which plan the pupil is taught those essentials without turning to a formal book of scales, &c.—the fingering is carefully marked without being crowded, and is evidently written by one who has had great experience as a teacher."

Also, "Delices de la Jeunesse," in 12 sets, price 2s. each, written expressly follow the above Tutor, by C. W. Glover.

SACRED VOCAL MUSIC.

KELLER'S Collection of ANTHEMS, CHURCH SERVICES, CHANTS, &c., arranged for the Voice and Piano, in six Books, price 3s. each, with six beautiful and appropriate Designs by Brandard, arranged by ALBERT KELLER; the six Books can be had in one Volume, elegantly bound, price 18s.

The PSALMODIA BRITANNICA—a selection of Psalms and Hymns for the Voice and Organ, in six Books, price 3s. each, arranged by EDWIN FLOOD, and may be had in one Volume, neatly bound, price 18s.

N.B.—A New Edition of "Hark, the Sabbath Bells," by EDWIN FLOOD. Price 2s.

MUSIC for the ORGAN or HARMONIUM.

THE AMATEUR ORGANIST—a collection of soft and full Voluntaries, arranged in six Books, 3s. each, by EDWARD TRAVIS.

THE AMATEUR INTERLUDEST—a collection of short interludes to play between the Verses of the Psalms, in one Book, price 4s., by EDWARD TRAVIS and J. P. DYER.

THE AMATEUR PRELUDEST—a collection of Preludes, with the Organ Stops carefully marked, in one Book, price 4s., by EDWARD TRAVIS.

MUSIC for the FLUTE.

THE AMATEUR FLUTIST—a selection of favorite Airs from the Standard Foreign Operas, arranged in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY NICHOLSON, with an Accompaniment ad lib. for the Violin, Violoncello, and Pianoforte.

The FLUTIST'S ALBUM—a collection of favorite Quadrilles, Waltzes, Polkas, &c., arranged in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY NICHOLSON, with an Accompaniment ad lib. for the Piano, Violin, and Violoncello.

MUSIC for the VIOLIN.

THE AMATEUR VIOLINIST—A selection of favorite Airs from the Standard Foreign Operas, arranged expressly for the first position of the Violin, in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY FARMER, with an accompaniment ad lib. for the Piano, second Violin, and Violoncello.

The VIOLINIST'S ALBUM—a collection of favorite Quadrilles, Waltzes, Polkas, &c., arranged expressly for the first position of the Violin, in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY FARMER, with an Accompaniment ad lib. for the Piano, second Violin, and Violoncello.

N.B.—A New Edition of "Farmer's Violin School." 5s.

London: Lee and Coxhead, 48, Albermarle Street, and all Book and Music Sellers.

Catalogues gratis.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' "VESPER HYMN,"

ARRANGED as a Fantasia for the Pianoforte. The publisher has great pleasure in announcing a new Edition of this admired composition by Mr. BRINLEY RICHARDS, and to state that he has added to his Catalogue all the newest works of this popular writer.

"Under this modest title, Mr. Richards presents us with a fantasia of novel form, remarkable for originality of effect. An introduction in F, in which fragments of the melody are displayed in full harmony, alternated with brief allegro passages, capriccioso, leads to an episode, in which the idea of the bell that tolls for vespers is poetically indicated. The well-known tune is then led through a series of variations, or ricercate, or changes, in all of which the traits de bravoure are different, and skillfully contrasted, while the keys of D flat and A flat are judiciously employed in some of them, to relieve the monotony that would otherwise arise from the constant adherence to the original tone. The variations are graceful and showy, increasing in brilliancy up to the climax, which involves a capital chanson of the Thalbergian pattern. Mr. Richards has shown an extended acquaintance with the resources of the clavier in this morceau, and the utmost ingenuity in maintaining an easy variety of style during the continuous repetition of the melody over the space of eight pages. The only fault of "The Vesper Hymn" is its brevity."—Musical World.

Charles Olivier, 41, New Bond Street

CARTE'S PATENT FLUTES.

MR. CARTE and Mr. B. WELLS (Professor of the Flute of the Royal Academy of Music) will perform a concertante duet upon two of Carte's Patent Flutes—Mr. Carte upon one of silver, and Mr. Wells upon one of wood, in Mr. Carte's Lecture upon Instrumental Music at Chelmsford on Thursday next. Just published, a brief SKETCH of the Improvements in the Flute, and description of Mr. Carte's two Patent Flutes by R. Carte, Rudall, Rose, and Co., 38, Southamp-ton-street, Strand. Price 1s., or if sent by post, 1s. 6d.

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY AND THE BRITISH AND INDIAN ARMY.

J. KOHLER, 35, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, begs to direct the attention of Regimental Bands to his New Patent Lever Instruments with the latest improvements, which surpass all others for simplicity of arrangement and purity of tone. Combinations in harmony never before attempted by any Brass Instruments, may now be executed with perfect ease. Regimental Bands supplied with all kinds of Musical Instruments direct from the Manu-factory; and as all these Instruments are made under J. KOHLER's own superintendence, they are warranted to withstand the climate of all countries. Efficient Band Masters supplied.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

FIRST APPEARANCE OF SIGNOR MARIO.

FIRST NIGHT OF LES HUGUENOTS.

PRODUCTION OF FIDELIO.

THE DIRECTORS have the honor to announce that on TUESDAY, APRIL 22nd, will be performed for the first time this season, Meyerbeer's Grand Opera, LES HUGUENOTS. The principal characters by Madame Grist, Madame Castellani, M^{lle}. Anzani, Herr Formes, Signor Tagliacozzi, Signor Polonini, Signor Meli, Signor Foldi, and Signor Mario.

EXTRA NIGHT.FIDELIO.

On Thursday, April 24th, will be produced for the first time on the Italian Stage in England, Beethoven's celebrated Opera, FIDELIO.
Stalls and Boxes may be secured on application at the Box Office of the Theatre.

ROYAL MARYLEBONE THEATRE.

MR. JARRETT begs to announce that he has taken the above elegant Theatre for a series of THREE GRAND POPULAR VOCAL and INSTRUMENTAL CONCERTS, to be held on the evenings of MONDAY, APRIL 14th; TUESDAY, APRIL 15th; and THURSDAY, APRIL 17th, at the usual

PLAY HOUSE PRICES.

For which he has been so fortunate as to obtain the services of the following eminent Artists:—Misses Bassano, Grauman, Cole, M. Cole, Messent, Rose Braham, M^{lle}. Kummell and, by the kind permission of M. Jullien, the celebrated M^{lle}. Jitty de TREFFZ; Signor Stigelli and Marchesi, M. Jules Stockhausen, Messrs. Frank Boida, Manley, and the unrivalled Bass, HERIT FORMES, the double Quintette from the Berlin Choir; Madame Goffrie, M. Alexandre Billet, Herr Koenig, Signor Cioffi, M. Prospe, M. Pratten, Lazarus, the Distins, Mrs. Parish Alvars, Messrs. F. Linley, and Vio te Collis, and M. SAINTON.
Tickets, Boxes, 2s.; Pit, 1s.; Gallery, 6d.; may be had of MR. JARRETT, 30 Percy-street, at the Theatre, and of the principal Musiciansellers.

MISS HENRIETTE MANN

HAS the honor to inform her Friends and Pupils that she has left town for the Easter recess, and requests that letters and communications intended for her may be directed to the care of Mr. C. Ollivier, Musical Library 41-42, New Bond-street.

SIGNOR BOTTESINI,

MUSICAL DIRECTOR OF THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA AT HAVANNA, BEGS to apprise the Musical Profession and the Public that he will arrive in London at the beginning of May, and remain during the entire Season.

Letters and applications for engagements to be addressed to Sig. BOTTESINI, Wessel and Co., 229, Regent Street.

MADAME SCHWAB

BEGS to announce that her ANNUAL EVENING CONCERT will take place in the ROYAL PRINCESS'S CONCERT ROOMS, on TUESDAY, MAY 13th.
Further Particulars will be duly announced.

MR. D. MAGNUS, PIANISTE,

HAS the honour to announce that his FIRST MATINEE MUSICALE will take place at the NEW BEETHOVEN ROOMS, on SATURDAY, 19th APRIL, to commence precisely at Two, on which occasion he will be assisted by the following eminent artists:—Pianoforte, Mr. Magnus; Violoncello, Mr. Demunck; Harp, Gerhard Taylor; Oboe, Mr. Lavigne Vocalists—tenor, M. Rubini; Baryton, Signor Montelli; Soprani, M^{me}. Sainville, Miss Samuel Saufford Tickets 5s. each; to be had of Mr. D. Magnus, 76, Margaret-street, Cavendish-square, and of Charles Ollivier, Music Publisher, 41 and 42 New Bond-street.

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

THALBERG	...	Irish Airs.
THALBERG	...	Le Prophete.
OSBORNE	...	God Save the Queen.
KUHE	...	Styriennes
KUHE	...	Bohemian Air
MORI	...	Romance Sans Paroles.
MORI	...	Pensée; Pendant L'Absence.
BLUMFENTHAL	...	Consolation.
BRISSON	...	L'Arabesque.
RICHARDS	...	Danish Air.
RICHARDS	...	Moonlight Serenade.
WALLACE	...	Polka de Concert.
ROECKEL	...	Clotilde.
MÜLLER	...	Anna Bolena.
MÜLLER	...	Third Romance.
MÜLLER	...	Fragment.

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street.

QUEEN'S CONCERT ROOMS, HANOVER SQUARE.

MR. EDWARD J. TURNER has the honor to announce to his Patrons and Friends that his FIRST EVENING CONCERT will take place at the above Rooms, on TUESDAY, 6th of MAY, 1851, when he trusts the Entertainments provided will meet with general approbation. Vocalists:—Miss Dolby, Miss Poole, Miss Wata n. Mr. Leffler, Mr. Edward J. Turner; Pianoforte, M. Alexandre Billet; Harp, Herr Carl Oberthir. Harpist to the Grand Duke of Nassau; Bassoon, Herr G. Mayer, first Bassoon to the Grand Duke of Nassau; Flute, Monsieur Camus, first Flute at the I aliens, Paris. Conductor, M. Alexandre Billet. Tickets Seven Shillings each; Reserved Seats, Half-a-Guinea. To be had at the Rooms; of Mr. E. J. TURNER, No. 17, Crown-row, Walworth; Wessell & Co., 229, Regent-street; Praeger, Hanway-street, and at all the principal Music Publishers.

LONDON SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY,

EXETER HALL.—Conductor, Mr. Surman; Leader, Mr. H. Blagrove. On the Monday in Passion Week, April 14th, 1851, Mendelssohn's Sacred Oratorio, ELIJAH. Principal Vocalists: Miss Birch, Miss Stewart, Miss Dolby, Miss L. Baxter, Mr. Locke, Mr. Seymour, Mr. Banks, Mr. Matts, and Mr. H. Phillips, with Orchestra of 800 Performers. Organist, Mr. T. Jolley. Tickets, Area, 3s.; Reserved Seats, Area or Western Gallery, 5s.; in the North or South Gallery, 7s.; Central Area, Reserved Seats, numbered, 10s. 6d., to be obtained at the Society's only Office, No. 9, Exeter-hall, and the Principal Musiciansellers.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.

CONDUCTOR, Mr. COSTA.—ON WEDNESDAY next, 16th April, Handel's MESSIAH. Vocalists—Miss Louisa Pyne, Miss Dolby; Mr. Locke, Mr. Manvers, and Mr. H. Phillips. The orchestra, the most extensive available in Exeter Hall, will consist of (including 16 double basses) nearly 700 performers. Tickets, 3s.; reserved seats in area or gallery, 5s.; central area, numbered seats, 10s. 6d. each; at the Society's office, 6, in Exeter-hall; or of Mr. Bowley, 53, Charing-cross. This performance will not be repeated, but will be shortly followed by Mendelssohn's "Elijah."

BEETHOVEN QUARTETT SOCIETY.

HERR ERNST'S SECOND EVENING PERFORMANCE will take place at 27, QUEEN ANNE STREET, on TUESDAY, APRIL 15th, instead of Wednesday. Quartetts, Beethoven, No. 4 in C minor, first period; No. 7, in F, second period; and No. 16, in A minor (posthumous), third period. Executants—Messrs. Ernst, H. Cooper, H. Hill, and S. Rousselot. Subscriptions and Tickets at Messrs. Rousselot and Co., 66, Conduit-street, Regent-street.

A POLLONICON.

ADDITION OF THE GREAT TUBA MIRALIBIS.—Daily at Two. Mr. Mather's esteemed Illustrations, Juvenile Harpists, Messrs. Sedgwick and Barton concertinas; Tuesdays, Thursdays, Saturdays, evenings at 8. Apollonicon with six Performers. ROSSINI'S STABAT MATER. Miss Poole, Miss Messent, the Misses, Mr. and Master Collins, Mr. Grattan Cooke, and Messrs. Sedgwick and Barton. Royal Music Hall, adjoining Lowther Arcade.

PROGRAMME OFM. ALEXANDRE BILLET'S SECOND CONCERT,

ON TUESDAY EVENING, APRIL 15th, to commence at half-past eight o'clock precisely.

PART FIRST.

- | | |
|---|-------------|
| 1. SONATA in A major, Op. 101 | BEETHOVEN. |
| 2. CAPRICE in F sharp minor | MENDELSSOHN |
| 3. PLUS ULTRA, Sonata in A flat Major, Op. 71 | DUSSEK. |

PART SECOND.

- | | |
|---|-----------|
| 4. SONATA in E flat minor | PINTO. |
| 5. LES FANNALLES, Caprice caracteristique No. 2, C major | E. SILAS. |
| 6. SELECTION OF STUDIES—
B flat major, Clementi; G flat major, Chopin; B minor, Henselt; E major, Hiller; C minor, Toccata, Kalkbrenner. | |

DENT'S IMPROVED WATCHES AND CLOCKS.

E. J. DENT, Watch and Clock Maker, by distinct appointments to the Queen, H.R.H. Prince Albert, and H.I.M. the Emperor of Russia, most respectfully solicits from the public an inspection of his extensive STOCK OF WATCHES and CLOCKS, embracing all the late modern improvements at the most economical charges. Ladies' Gold Watches, with gold dials, jewelled in four holes, 8 guineas; Gentlemen's, with enamelled dials, 10 guineas; Youth's Silver Watches, 4 guineas. Warranted accurate-going Lever Watches, jewelled in four holes 6 guineas.—E. J. Dent, 82, Strand; 34, Cock-pur-street; and 34, Royal Exchange (Clock Tower Area).

Printed and Published, for the Proprietors, by MICHAEL SAMUEL MYERS, of No. 3, Studley Villas, Studley Road, Clapham Road, in the parish of Lambeth, at the office of MYERS and Co., 22, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden, in the parish of St. Paul, where all communications for the Editor are to be addressed, post paid. To be had of G. Purke's, Dean Street, Soho; Allen, Warwick Lane; Vickers, Holywell Street, and at all Booksellers.—Saturday, April 12, 1851.

The Musical World.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

Terms of Subscription, per Annum, 16s.; Half year, 8s.; Three Months, 4s.; payable in advance, to be forwarded by Money Order, to the Publishers, Messrs. Myers & Co., 22, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden.

No. 16.—VOL. XXVI.

SATURDAY, APRIL 19, 1851.

PRICE FOURPENCE.

OUR REVIEWS.

OUR labours in this department of the Musical World having materially increased, we have entered into an engagement with Mr. G. A. Macfarren to review some important and interesting works that have been forwarded to the office. Mr. Macfarren commences in the present number with a critique of Mr. Charles Horsley's David. His articles will always be distinguished by the initials, G. A. M.

SOPHIE CRUVELLI

Our cotemporaries, d'outre manche, are in ecstasies with a new singer who has but now appeared at the Theatre des Italiens, as Dona Sol, in Verdi's Ernani. The new singer, whom the Parisians have assumed unto themselves the honour of christening, was half-baptised in London three years ago. Who could have forgotten the beautiful Cruvelli, with her flashing eyes and ringing voice? Who did not regret to miss her name from the prospectus of 1849? Cruvelli's misfortune was to form one of Mr. Lumley's company during the Jenny Lind furor. The light of all the "stella minora" was extinguished by the solitary effulgence of that shining moon of song. The public were beside themselves, and Mr. Lumley forgot he was the director of Her Majesty's Theatre, remembering only his engagement with the "Nightingale," and its golden harvest. This was unlucky for Cruvelli, who might beau have sung like Malibran, and acted like Rachel; none would have listened to her, none would have done her justice; and though everybody exclaimed, "Qu'elle est belle, la Cruvelli!—comme elle chante bien, comme elle joue bien la Sophie!"—everybody took his box, or his stall, his place numérotée, or his chance of losing his watch, his coat-tails, or his elbows (there being no "elbow-room") on the Lind nights, sumtering leisurely into the house, with free admissions, on the others. The result was natural. Hearing that Jenny Lind was coming again, in 1849, Cruvelli declined to come in 1849; and went roaming instead about the cities of the Rhine. Once upon a time, we were at Cologne (in the autumn of 1850), and at the table d'hôte of the Hotel Royal (where, by the way, in 1845, we first saw Jenny Lind, with a large dog—of which C. K. made "a mem") our attention was directed to two handsome "madchens," dining gracefully upon sour kroust, and uncooked herring, sliced. These were Sophie Cruvelli, and her sister, still taller than herself. At night, she was announced to appear in Norma; but Formes had a concert at Bonn, to which we were pledged, and so we missed hearing Cruvelli in Norma—whereof we were afterwards sorry, hearing that it was a great performance, and created such a deep sensation on the Rhine, that, at supper, many flasks of Geisenheimer, and Rudesheimer, and Johannisberg (not exactly Schloss), were emptied, with champagner to boot, as libations (poured inwards) to "the divine Sophie." The reader, perhaps, knows that Cruvelli is a German; or, if he did not know it two lines higher up, he knows it now, since we have said it.

Our esteemed collaborateur, Henri Panofka, can tell a great many stories about Cruvelli. He knew her when she and her tall sister were both studying under Bordogni, in Paris. Panofka aided Bordogni in his classes, and predicted Sophie's avenir as soon as he heard her voice. Sophie and her sister were passionately fond of "pfannkuchen"—not pancakes, we believe, but a sort of "kisses," innocent kisses, because only in sugar and paste. Cruvelli and her sister were fond of "kisses," and Panofka, aware of their foible, on the day of their début (at a concert of the Gazette Musicale), promised them some "kisses" in the evening, if they sang well. They sang well, and had the "kisses," which Panofka gave freely, loyal to his word, and eager to bestow the recompense on his most attractive protégées; and the lovely sisters ate the "pfannkuchen" for supper. It is also worth recording, that the Cruvellis made their début in a duet composed by Panofka, who himself accompanied them on the pianoforte—a duet called "La barca e pronta," of which Messrs. Boosey and Co. have since sold a great many copies, in Holles-street, there being no M. Varin to set up a claim—and that, afterwards, Sophie gave Rode's air varié, and obtaining great applause, retired, suffused in blushes, which made the bloom upon her cheeks and lips, if possible, more beautifully red—"carnation beautiful."

Of Cruvelli's reception in London, in 1848, and of her various successes, we need not speak. Are they not written in the Musical World—Vol. 23, 1848?

Having lost sight of the charming Sophie for a space of three years, our pleasure was the keener to read the praises that followed her triumphant début a few days since (with Sims Reeves, the Englishman), in Verdi's obstreperous Ernani, at Mr. Lumley's Italian Opera in Paris. We shall, however, quit the subject for the present—loth as we are to leave it—but, next week, we promise our readers a free translation of a memoir, and a critique, of the charming Sophie, from the brilliant pen of our camarade, P. A. Fiorentino, together with other particulars equally interesting, if not accompanied by the wit and fine writing which so eminently distinguish the musical feuilletons of the Constitutionnel.

Meanwhile, the announcement that Mr. Lumley has engaged Cruvelli, and that Cruvelli will shortly arrive in London, ready and eager to renew her acquaintance with her English admirers (which means the Operatic public, to a man and woman), will be read with unmixed gratification. In what opera she will make her debut we know not. Let us hope it may not be in one of Verdi's. It is already pleasant to reflect, that one of her duties will be to strengthen the cast of Don Giovanni.

THE GORLITZA-ÇA.

WE have received a letter from Mr. James Byrn, who accuses us of defending "piracy," because we asked a question about M. Varin. If to ignore the fact of M. Varin's existence amount to a defence of "piracy," we are guilty; but if the contrary, we are not guilty. We never heard of M. Varin until Messrs. Hale sent us a copy of the Gorlitza-ça, from Cheltenham. We were then made aware of him, and of the exclusive right which he possessed in the Gorlitza-ça. As the Gorlitza-ça was sent to us for review, however, we reviewed it. Our review, it appears, did not give satisfaction, which we regret, though, on referring to it, we can find nothing to complain of. In a subsequent notice of a Gorlitza, by Mr. D'Egville of Worcester, we decided that it was not a particular composition, but a particular species of dance, like a polka. The conclusion was natural, since, except in the peculiarity of rhythm there is not the slightest resemblance between Mr. D'Egville's Gorlitza and M. Varin's Gorlitza. Nor have we, in the course of our researches, been able to detect any of the attempted "blinds" against which Mr. Byrn inveighs with such vehemence.

It is worth mentioning that, when lately in Paris, we inquired at the houses of Brandus, Troupenas, and Richault for the Gorlitza, and at each, respectively, we were informed that nothing of the sort was known. This does not say much for the celebrity of M. Varin; although it says quite as much as he deserves, if his talents are to be estimated by the Gorlitza, in F major, which is neither more nor less than a very dull polka. Mr. D'Egville's Gorlitza, in G, though better music, is still a polka; and, until convinced by sounder arguments than those of Mr. Byrn, we shall continue to believe that the term, Gorlitza, is a mere invention to palm off a quantity of rubbish upon the public, which, under the denomination of polka, would have rested in obscurity.

Not being learned in the terpsichorean art we refrain from questioning the existence of a peculiar dance called Gorlitza-ça; and of course we place implicit faith in the assurance of Mr. Byrn, a professor of talent and standing, when he claims the honor of having introduced it in this country. We do not thank him at all for the music of M. Varin, which is the essence of common-place; but we have little doubt that the Gorlitza-ça itself is a lively step and characteristic, as is generally the case with the Slavonic national dances.

We have published Mr. Byrn's letter elsewhere. Our readers may peruse it and deduce their own inferences from the statements it advances. We can print no other communication, however, on the subject, unless as an advertisement. The sale of "1500 copies in a few weeks" is an interesting fact—but to Messrs. Hale, Byrn, and Varin exclusively. We quit the topic, therefore, with a hope that Mr. Byrn will not persist in proclaiming us "defenders of piracy," even though we conclude with a reiteration of the query—who is M. Varin?

Reviews of Music.

"DAVID." A SACRED ORATORIO. The words selected from Scripture, and the music composed by CHARLES EDWARD HORSLEY.—Addison.

David is a work of that class which universal consent ranks as the very highest in musical composition. The composer therefore comes before the world with the boldest pretensions, and careful examination of the oratorio, justifies our asserting that these pretensions are honourably fulfilled, and that Mr. Horsley and the rising English school, of which his talents are decidedly an ornament, are equally advanced by the production. That this composition has faults it would be prejudice on our parts and prejudicial to the author to deny: but these are soon counted—the enumeration of its beauties will be a much longer and a wholly pleasanter duty.

To speak first of what we consider to be faults in Mr. Horsley's oratorios, we must notice to begin, its great length; a length which even the transcendent merit of the Messiah fails to fill up with unceasing interest, and which will always prevent even a musical audience from doing justice at an entire performance to the latter portion of the composer's labours, since the attention cannot but be wearied, if not wholly exhausted, before the work approaches its conclusion, and thus, not only the beauties of the last pieces will be lost upon the hearer, but an unsatisfactory impression of the whole will be left upon him. Next, we object to the subject, which is greatly deficient in dramatic interest, in marked character, and in powerful situations for musical effect. Next, we think there is very serious objection to the words, which, besides that they are for the most part of no very striking interest, are often so quaint or so conversational as to produce an effect nearly bordering upon ludicrous, when given with the emphatic force of musical declamation. We now come to speak of the music. Great exception has been taken to this in a manner equally ungentlemanly, uncritical, ill-natured, and injudicious, on the score of its want of originality. Well,—granted, Mr. Horsley's production bears a certain degree of resemblance in style to music already existing. This is a fault which our composer, young as he is, shares with the greatest masters of his art; the music of Handel has not only a general resemblance in all that constitutes style, in everything but its excellence, to the music of his age, but, many and many a distinct idea is identical with some unquestionable prototype, yet is the greatness of Handel not disparaged; the early writings of Mozart are precisely in the style of the Italian opera composers of his period, and his genius was in the course of its developments evidently modified by the influence of Gluck and Haydn, yet is the greatness of Mozart not disparaged; the early works of Beethoven are so closely modelled on the form and phraseology of Haydn and Mozart, that there are many movements belonging to the first period of this great master's career which might well be supposed to be the productions of one of his great originals, yet is the greatness of Beethoven not disparaged; some of the ablest critics of Spohr trace an analogy between his music and Mozart's, and some of the warmest admirers of Mendelssohn refer to that which is peculiar in him, to his familiarity with Bach, yet is the greatness of Spohr and Mendelssohn not disparaged: from all this it is evident then, that, however originality of style, when free from affectation and wilful eccentricity, is to be admired as a very high if not an essential attribute of true genius, the composer is by no means to be condemned as worthless and inestimable who may be to a certain extent wanting in this quality; and the more especially so when, as is the case with Mr. Horsley, such composer is yet green in experience, and of whom it may be reasonably supposed that his style is still immature and incompletely developed. Since, then, there is quite enough in the present work of real merit to interest the unprejudiced hearer, and highly to gratify the candid examiner, we may fairly give to the young composer the same license that has been assumed by the greatest of his predecessors, confident as we are that, with due encouragement and with fair opportunity to exercise his talents, who has done already thus much, may, will, must, in course of time do very much more and very much better. Our next objection is that the general character of the work is wanting in breadth, grandeur, dignity; there are few places throughout that at all approach that largeness of effect and loftiness of purpose which are, we think, indispensable, to a composition of this class; and, albeit the subject but rarely suggests such a train of thoughts as we feel to be so much wanting in the present work, the composition suffers in its impression upon an audience, and, if we may use the expression, loses cast, or, rather, fails to attain it by the want of which we speak. An obvious fault throughout this oratorio is an absence of clearness of design, definiteness of plan, consistency of construction in the longer movements; and this is a matter to which we most earnestly call Mr. Horsley's attention, for we are certain that whether musical or unmusical, whether able to analyze the development of a musical idea or susceptible only of a general impression from its most striking effects, there is no hearer but is greatly affected in his appreciation of a musical composition by the presence or the absence of the power of construction in the composer. We may next notice some rare but unfortunate irregularities of harmony; one in particular, which, from its frequent repetition, appears not to be the result of carelessness or accident, but of an intentional disregard of the rule that is broken, and which produces always a most unsatisfactory effect: we allude to the practice of taking the common chord of the key note or the first inversion of it after the common chord of second of the scale, a chord of F major for instance after a chord of G minor, than which nothing, to our perception, can more confuse the feeling of key. A more important point of objection to the work as a whole is the too great preponderance of the choral recitative, which, however emphatic when sparingly used, and for some particular point only which requires peculiarly energetic declamation, becomes extremely monotonous when used to the extent in which Mr. Horsley has employed it, and thus loses all the force for which, in judicious hands, it is mostly remarkable. We have next to complain of a certain degree of lugubriousness which prevails in the work, conveying the idea of a kind of morbid affectation of expression in places where the merely narrative character of the words gives nothing to express, and where, if such words must be employed, not to pass over them in the simplest and most unobtrusive manner can only be to make them troublesomely prominent, the music dull, and the effect tedious. One more objection and we believe we shall have catalogued every fault that impartial criticism can find with Mr. Horsley's truly interesting and highly meritorious work, faults which we have thus carefully and distinctly detailed in order to prove the disinterestedness and sincerity of the otherwise unreasonable praise which it will be our pleasure to bestow upon the work; this last fault is the fatiguing and consequently ineffective manner in which much of it is written for the voices; it is not because the contralto and the bass can sing down to G or F, that they are to be kept for movement after movement entirely in the lower part of their compass, the extremes of the voice must, to produce any effect, be used very sparingly, and the want of this most necessary economy of the powers of his executants, is a most unfortunate thing for the general effect of our composer's production.

We will now proceed to make a brief synopsis of the oratorio, offering such remarks upon the several pieces as their various merits suggest.

The overture opens with a slow, majestic movement, in which is introduced a chorale, which recurs later in the overture, and is afterwards introduced, with voices, in the latter part of the oratorio. We are at some loss to divine what can be the composer's intention in the introduction of this chorale, whether to illustrate any particular portion of his subject, or whether merely in accordance with the lately growing fashion of introducing chorales, which we believe to belong especially to the simple service of the Christian Church, in all classes of composition, whether mediæval or ancient, sacred or secular, simple or sublime. We must, then, overlook the intention, if there be any, of its introduction, and regard only the musicianship with which the chorale is treated, and this is very able, both as to the harmony with which it is accompanied, and the effective contrast of what introduces and succeeds it. We know not whether this chorale be of Mr. Horsley's composition, or whether it be one of the numerous Lutheran tunes; whichever it may be, we cannot but think the choice of it is so far injudicious as, the notes of the first phrase being identical with those of a most familiar grandmamma's ditty, this phrase, on those who recollect the resemblance, is likely to produce a somewhat ludicrous effect. The slow movement is followed by an allegro, in the form of a fugue on two subjects, which is admirably worked, and may be considered as a good example of pure counterpoint. This movement which, as well as the former, is in the key of D minor, and its immediate relative, bursts, towards its close, effectively into the major of the same tonic with the recurrence of the chorale; and this is then skillfully worked with the two subjects of the fugue, until the conclusion of the overture. As a composition, and especially as a piece of contrapuntal writing, we are much pleased with this overture. As a prelude to this oratorio, except for the anticipation of the chorale, we see not its pertinency; certain it is that it prepares us for the general character of gloom with which our composer has invested his entire work, but in this particular, it less disposes us for the subject to be treated, than for the especial, and, we think, not quite appropriate feeling with which the subject is treated. It creates, however, a most favourable impression of the extent of Mr. Horsley's musicianly powers; and it prepares us to expect from him quite as great things as the very best portions of the present oratorio.

The oratorio opens with a choral recitative, which tells of the anger of the Lord against Saul, and the grief of Samuel at receiving the announcement. This introduces a long and elaborate chorus, "How are the mighty fallen," in which the declamatory character of the opening, the extensively worked fugal point on the words, "Ye daughters of Israel," and the massive harmony of the passage beginning "God judgeth the righteous," are well contrasted and judiciously relieved each by the other.

We have next an aria for Samuel, written for a bass voice, "O Lord, take away the iniquity," which is beautifully flowing and well in keeping with the devotional character of the words. Except for a few high notes in the last page—and the composer offers us an alternative for these—this song would be much more effective in a higher key; enough, however, of this fault-finding; we have made a distinct though general allusion to all that might have been better in the work before us; to particularise instances would be illiberal and tedious.

The next piece is a duet for soprano and contralto, which is better written for the voices than is the greater part of the work. The melody throughout is clear, continuous, and graceful, and there is one in particular truly charming effect, at the resumption of the subject, from the addition of a counterpoint of semiquavers to the voice parts, which were at first given without accompaniment.

The chorus, "Behold I am against thee," is well conceived, and forms a timely and judicious relief to the smooth, cantabile character of the two preceding movements.

We have then a choral recitative, in which the Lord commands Samuel to seek a king from among the sons of Jesse, the Bethlehemite. This is well relieved by a short solo, of much character, for Samuel, and it contains an excellent effect, produced by the tremolo of the string instruments, in the upper part of their compass, accompanying the recitative of the male chorus, the pitch of which is always below the accompaniment.

The aria for David, "The Lord is my Shepherd," pleases us very greatly; the melody is truly beautiful, and the accompaniment does all that may be to heighten its effect. The conclusion might indeed be improved, as it terminates with a phrase for the weakest part of the tenor voice, and as a very trifling alteration would make this improvement, and as this song is so good as to deserve to be made the best of, we especially recommend Mr. Horsley to consider the matter.

The chorus "He that scattered Israel," must always lose much of the effect that its most fluent melody with its well-sustained accompaniment should produce, from its being in the same key and much of the same character as the preceding song. Considered apart from the context, it is indeed a very charming piece of writing. A point on the words "The Lord hath redeemed Jacob," in which the voices are left much alone, strikes us as being particularly happy.

Next follows a recitative for soprano, in which Samuel demands of Jesse his son, in the course of which the words of Samuel are given in a bass solo. The recurrence to the opening phrase of the song "The Lord is my Shepherd," at the introduction of David to the prophet, helps well to tell the story; and the enunciation of the final words, "Arise, for this is he," by the full chorus is judicious. The chorus, "The spirit of the Lord," grows out of this passage, a very graceful movement to which the interspersed passages of soprano solo form an excellent colouring; but here again we have to regret the likeness of the figure of accompaniment, and other points of resemblance to the last chorus, which from the degree of monotony such similarity produces, frustrate much of the effect that otherwise could not but belong to this movement.

The aria for contralto, "Righteous as thou," is the least striking of the solo pieces to which we have yet come, but the peculiarly happy manner in which is brought about the return to the opening theme in D, the original key, after an episode in F sharp minor, is alone sufficient to make this song interesting.

We next come to a double quartet without accompaniment, in which the choir of female voices is made to alternate with that of the male until the close of the movement, when the two choirs are brought skilfully together. But for its too great length, and but for the excessive lowness of the bass part, we should safely reckon upon this as a sure point for effect whenever the work might be performed.

Another choral recitative tells how the armies of Philistia and of Israel met in array for battle, and how the former sent out Goliath for a champion. This introduces a vigorous and characteristic recitative and aria for Goliath himself, the subject of which latter has been anticipated with dramatic propriety, and with good effect in the symphonies of the preceding solo and choral recitatives. The character of defiance is well maintained in this song, which opens with an appropriate change of feeling, a new period in the history. The song leads into a chorus of considerable dramatic power "Have you seen this man," and this, after being cleverly elaborated to a great, perhaps a too great length, is interrupted by a short solo for David, and the scene concludes with a short resumption of the Israelite chorus in which the enemy's challenge is accepted.

The next piece is a bass song for the High Priest, "Why comest thou down hither," which is marked by great dignity, a character that the stately and excellently continued march of the accompaniment tends much to maintain.

We have now an irregular movement consisting partly of recitative, partly of rhythmical music, in which David is introduced to Saul, offers to undertake the fight with the Philistine, and is received by the king and his party with mistrust of his power to contend against so fierce an antagonist. This introduces David's aria, "Thy servant kept," the opening phrase of which is lovely, and there are many nice points in the course of the song, but we feel it to be unequal, and we think it partakes too much of the pastoral character instead of the air of defiance which the dramatic situation requires; some of the most energetic passages, too, are written so low that no tenor voice can give them with any effect, and thus also, that which we so greatly miss, is made to be still more manifestly wanting. Setting aside dramatic propriety to which we attach great importance, for the sake of musical effect which is of still more consequence, and which depends so very largely upon contrast, the composer should have made this an animated movement in order to relieve the prayer that follows it for the same voice and in the same key, and which having also much sameness of character, cannot produce so good an impression as it would were it more judiciously introduced. Mr. Horsley seems to have forgotten that his hero was a hero, that though a shepherd he was a warrior, and that like all members of a pastoral people he possessed not only the arts of war, but the courage to exercise them. Well, for the prayer itself. This is a most charming air beautifully harmonized and full of devotional feeling; it is given once by the character of David as a solo, and repeated with increased effect by the chorus, when it is judiciously lengthened by an appropriate coda.

We have now a grand duet for David and Goliath "Am I a dog," in which distinctness of character in the different music of the two opponents is not unsuccessfully aimed at. The movement is somewhat long, but it contains many points of interest.

The chorus that follows upon this duet, "Woe to us," is a movement of great power. The long dominant pedal with which it opens, and the agitated character of the accompaniment, together with the division of the choirs of male and female voices prepare the way with good effect for the fortissimo of the whole orchestra in the key of F minor, when the before only muttered griefs of the conquered Philistines burst into wild exclamation. The fugal point on the words "Who shall deliver us," forms a timely relief, but we are not quite satisfied with the course of modulation through which it is carried. The passage beginning "These are the Gods," is well conceived, but we think not harmonised with sufficient reference to principles. Another dominant pedal, to the same words, is quite as effective as that which opens the movement, and introduces well the return to the principal subject. The prolongation of this, the re-entry of the fugal points before alluded to, and the coda of which this is the commencement, are all sure to elicit the admiration of the candid and educated hearer.

Another choral recitative announces the flight of the Philistines, and an invocation of David, "Praise ye the Lord," answered phrase by phrase by the full chorus, has a fine, broad, clear and purely vocal effect. This introduces the concluding chorus of the first part, "Sing unto God," in which the natural freedom of the opening theme is well relieved by many points of close imitation in the progress of a long and elaborately wrought movement. The interest is perhaps not in accordance with the length of this chorus, which, like some of the previous pieces, could it be much compressed, would be greatly advantaged. The want of a power of condensation in the arrangement of his ideas, of conciseness in their development, has been always observable to us in Mr. Horsley's compositions, and it is a want that in this oratorio, which is an assemblage of so many movements, all requiring consistency in themselves no less than coherence with each other, is especially and unfortunately obvious. This chorus, is however, full of merit and it winds up the first part with very great spirit.

The second part opens with a march which is bold and manly, well relieved by a trio of a softer character, and wound up with a vigorous coda. In this last we cannot admire the harmony of a passage in which the bass descends by semitones from E to A, and where the greatest possible confusion of key prevails; the idea is good, but the carrying out of it is, to say the least, unsatisfactory.

A choral recitative, which is interspersed with the opening phrase of the preceding march transposed into a minor key, and which is, to our appreciation, of a mournful character, singularly inappropriate, tells how the Tribes came to pay homage to David. The chorus which this introduces (to the same words as one of Handel's coronation anthems), "The King shall rejoice," is one of the most masterly movements in the whole oratorio; and, which is no little merit fine as it is, is wholly unlike the previous magnificent setting of the same passage of scripture. It opens with a forcible passage of plain counterpoint, which continues till the words, "For thou preventest him." Here commences an admirably worked fugue, which, coming to a close on the fifth of the original key, again introduces the opening theme of the movement. Then follows another fugue to the words, "For thou hast made him most blessed," which is no less ably treated than the preceding. We have then another recurrence of the opening theme, and then the subjects of the two fugues are brought together in the manner of a most skilful contrapuntist. After some very ingeniously close working of these, we have a truly impressive coda consisting of a progression of the broadest and most massive harmony; we may particularize the first inversion of the major supertonic ninth being followed by the second inversion of the major tonic ninth, which last is resolved on the third, having then the root in the bass, as an instance of equal boldness, novelty, and excellence of effect.

The aria which succeeds, "Who am I, O Lord," is the most pretensive, and, not so much on account of its pretensions as of their fulfilment, the most important solo piece in the work. It consists of an expressive andante in B minor, a declamatory recitative, and an allegro of considerable length and much power. The very extensive compass of this song, and the fact that not single notes but long passages in it are better suited for a bass than a tenor, while the rest is decidedly written for a tenor voice, will always prevent its realizing the composer's intentions in performance, and must proportionably hinder its effect.

"The Lord is a God of judgment" is a charmingly melodious chorus, with a flowing accompaniment, well sustained in the manner that Mendelssohn has so often made effective. The episode to the words "Blessed is the man" is in good keeping, the coda is happy, and the whole exceedingly effective.

Another of the almost countless choral recitatives, which serve unfortunately to bedull and so to deaden the work, tells how the Philistines rose against David, how David sought the assistance of heaven, and how the Lord promised to deliver them into the hands of David. This introduces a lovely aria for soprano, "O, love the Lord," in which, besides the great merit of the whole, we may particularize the return to the subject as being a very felicitous point.

The double chorus, "Come, let us cut them off," in which the Philistines sing an agitated theme (the character whereof is well and continuously preserved), and the Israelites a slow and psalmic strain, is clever. In this Mr. Horsley has, like Handel and others of his great predecessors, given the Philistines by far the best of it in respect of the attractiveness, if we may not say the interest of their music, thus illustrating the old figure of the flowery and the thorny paths of vice and virtue. This movement terminates with a half close on G;—then, after a bar's silence, we have the second inversion of a chord of D flat, which, though a chromatic chord belonging to the key of C minor, introduced in this manner has an effect of striking harshness. David has a few bars of recitative while this chord is sustained, and then an augmented sixth on the same bass note leads into the key of C major, a most gratifying relief from the harmonious perplexity in which we have been involved. Here, then, we have the bass solo and chorus "God is the King of all the earth," which, for breadth, for clearness, for simplicity, and for purity, the sum total of all these constituting true grandeur and real beauty, gives us the most unalloyed and unexceptionable pleasure of any movement of which we have yet spoken.

Next we have the scene of David consulting the leaders as to the fetching the ark of the Lord out of the land of Israel,—the fetching the ark "in a new cart,"—and the judgment against Uzza, who "drove the cart," for daring to put his hand upon the ark. This abounds in real beauties. It opens with the chorale introduced in the overture—which, once more, we wish had been better chosen—and then continues, in alternation of recitative and rhythmical movement, for solo voices and for chorus. We are especially struck with a Canto Fermo, first sung by David with a counterpoint of crotchets, and afterwards by the full chorus in simple counterpoint of note against note. This recurs subsequently with equally good effect.

Next follows a quartet, "Behold thou art wroth," which is without accompaniment, but has the pauses at the four closes that occur in it filled up with a long passage for a wind instrument. The effect of these interludes is not quite novel, but it is very good. The whole is a very pleasing piece of smooth harmony, having only the fault of being written too low for the voices.

The aria for contralto, "The Lord shall endure for ever," is very low, and very slow, and very far from being our favourite piece.

We have then a scene similar in its conduct to that of the fetching up of the ark of the Lord, in which David gives his injunction to Zadock and Abiathar to sanctify themselves, and to bring up the covenant. In this, portions of the overture chorale, the Canto Fermo of David, and other matter in the previous scene, are introduced again with good and appropriate effect.

The trio for soprano, alto and tenor, "How amiable are thy tabernacles," would, except for its length, be unexceptionable. Our composer forgets that we may have too much even of a very good thing, and that, however good, what would otherwise be the best of things, ceases to excel in beauty directly it excels in length the just proportion which its character requires.

A short chorus, "So they brought the Ark," and David's solo in continuation of this, "Sing ye to the Lord," bring us to the final chorus, "Give unto the Lord." The opening movement of this, which is of a majestic character, leads into the chorale of the overture, now introduced for the first time with voices, "O praise the Lord." There is considerable ingenuity in the variety of harmony given to this theme at its several introductions in the course of the work, of which it would be difficult to select the most effective: the composer has thus done his utmost to counteract the unfortunate effect of the familiarity of the first phrase of the chorale, which strikes us more and more forcibly every time it recurs. We have then an allegro of great spirit, in the course of which occurs a well worked point of imitation on the words, "Hallelujah, praise the Lord," and finally the chorale is introduced again, accompanied this time with the whole power of the orchestra, and so the Oratorio concludes. From our remarks, it may be gathered that we prefer the second part of this work to the first; and such, indeed, is the case; for though, according to our fallible judgment, this had its failings, and these we have not scrupled to indicate, we think upon the whole it presents much fewer weak points, and is generally written with more freedom, vigour, and mastery of the resources of a musician. It would seem that our composer grew into his subject as he proceeded with it, and that his power increased with the weight of what he had to support.

As a whole, we are fully satisfied that David is a fine work, though we cannot, in justice, describe it as a great one; and it is one which makes us truly proud to be the compatriots of the writer. That Mr. Horsley may continue in the excellent path he has chosen for himself is our hearty wish and earnest recommendation, and, from the analogy of all the great musicians whose example he so honourably emulates, we see no reason for supposing other than, that with further practice in writing and experience in hearing what he writes, and accumulating opinions upon it, he may and will free himself from the trammels of his early studies, and, retaining only the true profit make for himself a decided and individual style which will rescue him from the ignorant, unjust, and injudicious sneers of those would-be critics who possess that dangerous thing, the little knowledge which enables them to grovel in the mud for faults, without giving them the power to look towards heaven for the beautiful light which streams from thence, or to appreciate, or even to feel, the glowing warmth which it so profusely pours upon them. We look forward with hope and pleasure to Mr. Charles Horsley's next important production.

G. A. M.

L'OISEAU MOQUEUR—Valse Brillante, pour le Piano-forte
—A SON ELEVE MDLLE. THOMPSON—PAR EDWARD DEARLE.—
D'Almaine and Co.

We should have liked Mr. Dearle's title-page better thus:—The Mocking Bird—Brilliant Waltz, for the Piano-forte—dedicated to his Pupil, Miss Thompson, by Edward Dearle—Op. — No, there is no "Op." Why Mr. Dearle should appear in a French costume on the cover of his piece,—while the interior, subject and treatment, are so purely English, that we object even to the designation, valse, being applied to it—puzzles us. We are happy to say, however, that this is the only grave objection we have to urge against the composition. L'Oiseau Moqueur Valse ("The Mocking Bird Waltz") is brilliant, sparkling, well accentuated, and showy, without being seriously difficult. There is a touch of George Osborne's Pluie de Perles (why not "Shower of Pearls," O! son of Hibernia?) but the key of E flat being adopted, instead of that of D flat, L'Oiseau Moqueur ("The Mocking Bird") is not so hard to play by a long stretch as the Pluie de Perles ("Shower of Pearls"). Do not suppose, reader, that we accuse Mr. Dearle of having appropriated to himself any phrase, phrases, or parts of phrases, from that well known fantasy—which has had so extraordinary a sale, and for which the English music publishers had to pay £10 each (à rebrousse poil)—on the contrary, Mr. Dearle has done nothing of the kind. His valse (waltz) is his own, from first to last, although in the opening bar there is a feeling of something which immediately brings La Pluie ("The Shower") to the mind's ear; but the mind's ear, after a moment's loan ("Lend me your ear.")—(GHOST), rejects the comparison as "odorous." Professing to admire the whole of Mr. Dearle's valse (waltz),—which, in its way, is a sort of John Bull version of Weber's Invitation pour la valse (minus the invitation and retiring compliment), though we acknowledge there is not a single bar where resemblance may be traced—professing to admire the whole valse (waltz), we enter a preference for the episode in A flat, at page 4, a sort of waltz-march, vigorous, rhythmical, and stirring, with a progression into the relative minor that smacks of the musician—another episode in F major, which, from the imitations in alternate bars, we take to be a poetical illustration of the mocking bird's peculiarity—and a third, in E flat, the same as the second in F, being simply a transposition, which but for the graceful progression into G flat, at page 7, should be struck out incontinent, since, at the end of page 7, Mr. Dearle merely arrives at the same place where he found himself at the middle of page 6 (line 3, bar 4), on the dominant of E flat, to which point, it may be presumed, he directed his steps for the evident purpose of resuming, in the most natural way, his first and principal subject. On second thoughts, however, the progression into G flat (page 7) is again merely a transposition of the progression into A flat (page 5), in the first episode, which induces us to reiterate our suggestion that the episode (in E flat, not in F) should be struck out incontinent. The valse (waltz) would be shortened thereby, and though shortened, improved—since in compactness is strength, and in redundancy weakness; while, as the to-be-excised-episode happens precisely in the same key as the principal subject, and the coda, which is animated and brief, nothing will be lost by the loss of it, but something gained by its omission.

As a teaching piece we heartily recommend L'Oiseau Moqueur ("The Mocking Bird") to all masters and scholars of moderate attainments. He that would shine without a vast deal of preparatory exercise may fall to at once, for here is an excellent means of exhibiting in crowded salon or in petit comité.

"THE AMATEUR PRELUDIST." A COLLECTION OF PRELUDES FOR ORGAN OR HARMONIUM. Composed and selected by EDWARD TRAVIS. Leoni Lee and Coxhead.

The object of this little work, which is published in a very convenient form, is praiseworthy; but the fifty-three examples which Mr. Travis designates as preludes are rather short pieces, or voluntaries, their form being too regular and compact to come properly under the designation of preludes, which should always have the air of impromptus. The amateur who makes use of them will be simply prefacing the piece he is going to play with another piece that is shorter. We presume at least Mr. Travis does not intend his brief examples as specimens of that elaborate kind of movement, complete in all its parts, which Bach, Handel, and Mendelssohn designate "Preludes," but simply as "anteludes," or runnings-over-the-keys previous to beginning the performance, and, consequently, though the "Preludes," which he has "composed and selected," without stating which are his own and which he has borrowed (a somewhat questionable proceeding) have much of the sweetness of harmony, simplicity of melody, and, in some cases, insipidity of Rinck, they do not seem to us to carry out what their title would seem to imply; that is, if our interpretation be accepted; nevertheless, as short and not difficult studies for amateur organists, they may be recommended as excellent of their kind, combining the utile and the dulce. It becomes Mr. Travis, however, as a zealous and loyal British musician and organist, to publish as early as possible, an index whereby the amateur purchaser and the hard critic may be enabled to know which are Mr. Travis's and which are the property of other masters. Until this index appears, he will find no reviewer sufficiently venturesome to analyze the "Preludes" individually, in detail, since it would be very disagreeable to be finding fault with harmonies, counterpoint, form, and what-not, in a piece, supposed to be a composition of Mr. Travis's, but which he, Mr. Travis, might afterwards fling in the face of the reviewer with a triumphant exclamation "Ah, you have been pitching into Mozart," as though the possibility of finding faults in the works of a great master, rendered him, Mr. Travis, unassailable. No, Mr. Travis! As Punch says, "Feathered hipeds of an advanced age are not to be entrapped by the outer husks of corn." Send us your index, in order that we may see what you have selected and what you have composed, and we will criticise your "Amateur Preludist" piece by piece—that is the Second Book, for we have with the First.

"TROIS MORCEAUX DESCRIPTIFS." For the Pianoforte. Composed and dedicated to Sigismond Thalberg, by the EARL OF BELFAST.—Cramer, Beale, & Co.

These are dedicated to a pianist de la première force, and to M. Thalberg, with all humility, we confide the first—Chant plaintif Au Bord de la Mer—in D flat, which utterly eludes our grasp. We have heard it executed, however, in a very finished and effective style, by M. Alexandre Billet, the Russian pianist, at a private soirée, when both the piece and the player obtained the unanimous suffrages of all present, among whom were divers connoisseurs. We liked the Chant, but subsequently attempting it at our own fingers, we totally failed to renew to our satisfaction the effect produced by M. Billet, and abandoned it, incontinent, as hopeless. In short, the first of the three descriptive pieces is only adapted to such pianists as set all difficulties at defiance, of which number are not we. The principal passage, a large and sweeping arpeggio, is gracefully disposed and harmonizes well with the melody.

No. 2, La Fileuse, in F sharp major, is more in our way. The bass, monotono assai (sufficiently monotonous), gives an excellent idea of the rouet à filer, while the canto, dolorous, and plaintive, indicates that the poor fileuse is anything but satisfied with her lot. In the agitato, page six, when the key changes to the minor, her dissatisfaction with her task approaches despair, which despair, we may suppose, at the reprise of the tempo primo and the original key, to be a little alleviated by some passing thought, at page 9, where the effective and unexpected progression to D, assumes even the colour of hope; this, however, by the immediate resumption of the harmony of F sharp, turns out to be but a transient gleam, and—as the fileuse continues filling to the end of the morceau, which terminates with a sentimental shake—a delusion.

In No. 3, L'Insomnie, Lord Belfast again betakes himself to the key of D flat,—and again emulates his illustrious dedicatee, whose peculiar style, in the dispersion of harmonies, wide and rich, he has happily caught. Had this "morceau descriptif" borne the initials of the great Sigismond, we should have been inclined to lay the authorship at his door; from which it may be inferred, that, besides being difficult and well-stretched; it is by no means devoid of sentiment, not to speak of other musical attractions. The poetical idea is good and carried out. The first page, an allegretto agitato, describes sleeplessness, and not inaptly, since the melody is so graceful, and catching, and Italian, that it is very likely to be an enemy to sleep, obstinately singing at the pillow of any one who has heard it en passant, in whose head it is running, and whence to comb it out, with the comb of resolution, is impossible. The next page, a largo in G flat, entitled "Effort pour dormir," is equally engaging, and we are not surprised that in the last bar but two (line 4), his Lordship should have written the words en vain, over against the melody, which is not a likely tune to sleep to, but rather to sing to. In despair at his double unsuccess, his Lordship resumes the first theme in a more agitated and passionate style, prefacing its entrée with a short and fanciful leggiervo of semiquavers in syncope, as it were one of the tiny waggoners of Queen Mab tickling the ear of the unwilling waker with the lash of his web-woven waggon whip. For a time, however, the original theme produces no more effect than at first, until line 3, bar 2, of the last page, up to the end of the following line, where his Lordship introduces a reminiscence of one of the songs in book 2, of Mendelssohn's Lieder ohne worte, which at once accomplishes an assoupissement, or dozing off, that, aided by an enharmonic modulation from D flat to A major, and back again by a diminuendo, accomplishes the desired sommeil, and sends the imaginary player,—not the audience—to sleep.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

La Muta di Portici was repeated on Saturday, and again attracted a crowded and fashionable audience. Her Majesty and Prince Albert, with a party, occupied the Royal Box. Auber's star is in the ascendant, and in good time. When the Grand Opera of the French stage made its way into the Italian theatres represented by Meyerbeer, it was reasonable to hope that Auber would not be long behind. He came, followed by Halevy at one theatre, anticipated by Halevy at the other. Two master-pieces have been produced, and others, we are given to understand, are in prospectu! Besides Gustave and Masaniello, Auber has written Lestocq, Le Cheval de Bronze, and others, equally well fitted for the Italian stage. The sooner they are thought of the better.

With respect to the performance of La Muta on Saturday, it was to be lamented that Signor Pardini, who, on the previous Thursday, in the latter part of the opera, had already exhibited indications of suffering under the prevalent epidemic, was so much worse that after the third act he had to resign his part to M. Poultier. That artist being luckily in the theatre at the time gallantly undertook it at a moment's notice. M. Poultier was for several years the Masaniello of the Academie, and the chief provincial theatres of France, and obtained a high reputation in the character. We cannot however pretend to criticise his performance on Saturday night under the peculiar circumstances that procured us the advantage of witnessing it. He sang the "Somno" with a vast deal of expression, and made redundant use of his falsette. M. Poultier displayed considerable energy and intention in his acting, but, seemed to be deficient in ease, for which there was every excuse. He was most kindly received by the audience and was recalled before the curtain, after the opera, with Madame Fiorentini, Mlle. Monti, and M. Massol.

Mlle. Monti more than confirmed the great impression she made on Thursday. There is but one opinion about this lady—that she emphatically merits the title which introduced her to this country, that of "the greatest mime of Italy."

Mr. Lumley's brief season before Easter has presented features of striking interest. The production of Gustave III. was important, because that opera is one of the best of the greatest living French composer, and significant, because it gave reason to hope for other works from the same pen, and led to the conclusion that the impresario of Her Majesty's Theatre would not for the future restrict himself wholly to the Italian repertoire. Masaniello corroborated this view, and its success further justified the new policy. The debut of Mlle. Caroline Duprez was highly interesting. So much had been said and written about this youthful artist, after her appearance at the Italiens, in Paris, that the greatest expectations were formed in her behalf. Mlle. Duprez did not discredit her renown. Lucia di Lammermoor was judiciously selected for her debut, and nothing could be more unanimous than the public verdict. The season opened with this performance, and Mr. Lumley had thus to congratulate himself upon a "hit" at the very outset of his campaign. Madame Fiorentini made her first appearance as Madame Ankaström in Gustave, with entire success. The beautiful quality of her voice, and the largeness of her style, were advantageously exhibited. This charming singer can hardly fail to prove a valuable acquisition to the theatre. Signor Calzolari appeared on the opening night, as Edgardo. He was indisposed, and failed to do himself justice. Gustave was his second part; the music was too high for him, but the intelligence of the singer could not be concealed. Signor Calzolari is a really intelligent artist. Mlle. Duprez' page in Gustave was infinitely admired. She, nevertheless, received some gentle admonishment for interfering with Auber's music, and for the introduction of the rondo finale from Le Serment, which, nevertheless, it must be acknowledged, excited a furor.

Masaniello, under the title of La Muta di Portici, was produced in a style of splendour and completeness, which eclipsed any thing ever brought out at Her Majesty's Theatre. Signor Pardini made his first appearance in Masaniello. He sang the barcarole amid a torrent of applause, and created a highly favourable impression in the grand duet with Pietro. From this point, however, either his strength failed him from taxing his powers too much in so large a theatre, or from the effect of an incipient cold, and he did not improve his position at the end. That the latter was the case may, we think, be ascertained from the fact that, at the second performance of Masaniello, Signor Pardini was entirely incapacitated from singing. The true merits of the new tenor may, therefore, be said to be yet unknown.

M. Massol's engagement at Her Majesty's Theatre was an act of good policy on the part of Mr. Lumley. In certain parts of the French Opera, and the Italian, we may add, Massol has no rival on the stage at present. The popular barytone made his first appearance in Pietro, one of his most spirited and admirable performances. He was received with immense favour, and achieved a success not to be disputed. Mlle. Monti's success has already been dwelt upon, and need not be repeated here. The admirable mime has appeared twice as Fenella, and twice won the hearts of all who saw her. Two new tenors appeared in Masaniello, without adding much to the vocal strength of the company. Signor Scotti found the music of Alfonso too high. Signor Mercuriali has a strong voice, which may be found useful in subordinate parts.

In the ballet department, the principal novelty was the L'Isle des Amours, which introduced Amalia Ferraris and M. Charles. Carlotta Grisi made her first appearance in the Bal scene of Gustave, and was received with the utmost enthusiasm.

Thus far of Her Majesty's Theatre up to the period of the Easter recess. Next week Lablache makes his first appearance as Dulcamara in the Elisir d'Amore, and Mlle. Caroline Duprez will play Adina, a part in which she obtained so much success in Paris. On Thursday Masaniello will be repeated, and on Saturday Mlle. Alaymo will make her debut in Lucrezia Borgia. Rumour speaks highly of Mlle. Alaymo's beauty, voice, and dramatic powers. Nous verrons.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Roberto il Diavolo was announced for Saturday evening, and the Queen signified her intention of being present. At 7 o'clock a large concourse surrounded the outer doors, which were expected to be opened at that hour, according to usage. Cabs and carriages lined the streets, and the policemen found plenty of occupation in establishing order. The crowd waited with singular patience until half-past 7, when they began to exhibit symptoms of dissatisfaction. The evening was bitter cold, and the ladies had to stand exposed in the open air in thin shoes, and with uncovered heads, for three quarters of an hour. When the doors were at length opened, and the crowds rushed into the theatre, their eyes were greeted by the following placard posted on the walls:—

"It is with extreme regret that the directors are compelled to announce that the illness of Signor Tamberlik was this afternoon so greatly increased as entirely to deprive him of his voice, and it will therefore be impossible to perform the opera of 'Roberto il Diavolo' this evening. The opera of 'Semiramide' will be substituted, in which Madame Grisi and Mademoiselle Angri will perform; the part of Assur will be sung by Signor Salvatori, who, although still suffering most severely from hoarseness and sore throat, has most kindly consented to appear. Under these circumstances, the directors most respectfully request the kind indulgence of the audience.

"Royal Italian Opera, April 12, 1851."

"MEDICAL CERTIFICATE.

"I hereby certify that it is quite impossible for Signor Tamberlik to perform this evening, in consequence of complete loss of voice from a sudden attack of influenza.

"April 12, 1851.

"A. BILLING, M.D."

Great was the surprise and manifest the indignation expressed at the change in the performance, and at its not being announced sooner. Still, although an obvious remedy was at hand, none of the malcontents thought of leaving the theatre. The only blame chargeable against the directors lay in their not having the outer doors opened at the usual time. They could not be made responsible for Signor Tamberlik's illness, nor, seeing that he was so much better in the morning, could they tell that he would not be enabled to sing until it was too late to have new bills printed. The grumblers had but little cause for their grumbling—nevertheless, they made the most of it. The overture was executed amid calls, hisses, and plaudits from all parts of the house, commingled in one discordant sound. Nor did the uproar cease during the entire of the first scene, until Grisi made her appearance and with a look seemed, like Norna of the Fitful Head, to assuage the elemental fury. The opera after this was suffered to proceed in quietude.

One of the grumblers, not satisfied with his share in the din on Saturday, thus gives vent to his grumbling in the Times of Monday:—

"SIR,—Will you allow one of the 'obstreperous demonstrators of ill-humour' of Saturday night a word of excuse? On the Saturday previous I went to see the opera of Semiramide. On Thursday I went to see Masaniello, and not until the crowd in the vestibule of the pit entrance hurried me past the checktakers was it discovered that we were to have Semiramide again. On Saturday I went to see Robert le Diable, and merged into the crowd of the vestibule equally unconscious as before of another repetition of Semiramide. An immense crowd, including ladies in full-dress, uncovered, was kept standing out in the street at the pit entrance half an hour beyond the time advertised for the doors to be opened, and the bill of Robert le Diable was suspended alongside of the entrance the whole time. Of what avail was it for the checktakers politely to intimate to the flow of crowding visitors that the opera was changed? We did not call for Tamberlik, nor for the opera of Roberto. An apology was due to the audience from the stage on account of the want of any notice outside the doors of the theatre. Had it been courteously given, the opera would not have proceeded until the appearance of Grisi in dumb show amid the tumult of the malcontents.

"April 14.

"L. R."

The season before Easter presents but few points for our notice. Grisi's réentrée, and the manifest improvement in her voice since last season, were the principal features. The re-engagement of Angri was justified by the fair artist's increasing popularity and her undoubted talents. Signor Salvatori, on the other hand, proved but an inefficient substitute for Tamburini, whose loss, or we are greatly mistaken, will be seriously felt at the Royal Italian Opera. Signor Salvatori, however, has had a persistent attack of influenza, and may yet prove himself a second Tamburini. Semiramide did not prove as attractive as formerly. Masaniello brought back Tamberlik in all his force, but did not bring back Massol, who seceded to the other house, and made way for Formes. The great German basso created an evident sensation in Pietro, but had his opponents as well as his admirers.

So far the season has not proved very brilliant, and the directors must look to the attractions after Easter to make up for lost time.

Mario has arrived, and will make his first appearance in the Huguenots; and Fidelio is announced for Thursday, May 1st. This looks like making up for lost time.

M. ALEXANDRE BILLET'S CONCERTS.

(From the Times.)

M. Alexandre Billet is still advocating the cause of sterling pianoforte music in the convenient lecture-room of St. Martin's Hall. That his concerts have been well attended is to be hailed as a good sign, since their attraction depends entirely on legitimate causes. Unassisted by vocalists, relying solely on his own capabilities to do justice to the classical compositions of which his programmes are exclusively composed, M. Billet has succeeded in winning a large share of public attention. The number of works, hitherto almost as unknown to the majority of the profession as to the uninitiated laity, which he has revived at his concerts in St. Martin's-hall, would alone attest to their utility. On Tuesday night, at the fifth performance of the present series, almost every piece in the programme was comparatively new, while scarcely one but was associated with some interesting event in the life or artistic career of its composer. The sonata in A, Op. 101, of Beethoven, though one of the most remarkable of his pianoforte works, is scarcely known at all. A lady, for whom Beethoven had a strong predilection, accused him of a general want of "amiability" in his music. Hurt by the insinuation, Beethoven wrote the sonata in question, the opening movement of which is a passionate love-song, as melodious as it is richly harmonized, the rest of the work being in the usual fashion of his latter style; he dedicated it to his fair accuser, and silenced her for ever. The sonata in A flat of Dussek, Op. 71, is connected with a different kind of anecdote. It was originally published in Paris (when Dussek entered into the household of Talleyrand) under the denomination of Le Retour à Paris. About the same time, however, another well known writer for the pianoforte, Woelfl, published a sonata, which, owing to its extreme difficulty, was surnamed Ne Plus Ultra. To the last movement of this sonata—variations on Mozart's "O Dolce concerto"—may be traced the origin of that school which afterwards gave birth to Herz, Thalberg, and the rest of the modern bravura pianists—the "romantics," as they are absurdly styled. Dussek's London publishers, however, having received a copy of the Rétour à Paris, printed it in London, with the title of Plus Ultra, "dedicated to Ne Plus Ultra." And in truth, while many can be found to master the sonata of Woelfl, few but pianists of the first class (and few again of these in the exclusively "brilliant" school) can accomplish the sonata of Dussek, which, moreover, is one of the most striking and original of his compositions. The Caprice of Mendelssohn in F sharp, a prestissimo of incredible difficulty, was originally written in an album; it was an early work, and not intended for publication ; none, however, will complain that its destined obscurity has been counteracted by the enterprise of the foreign publishers who first placed such a masterly work within general reach. The fantasia by the same composer, in the same key, dedicated to his friend, Moscheles, is, in spite of its name, a regular sonata, and one of the finest ever composed for the instrument. These, a very spirited caprice by M. Silas, entitled Les Fannales, and a set of studies from Clementi, Chopin, Hiller, and Kalkbrenner, completed the programme. Scarcely one of them has been heard in public before, although not one but well deserves the distinction. It is hardly less creditable to M. Billet to have introduced them than to have played them in such a manner as to engage the attention, enchain the interest, and gain the hearty applause of a very crowded audience during the whole of his unaided performance. The study of Chopin on the black keys, an extraordinary piece of mechanism, was unanimously encored. The sixth concert is announced for the 29th, when several works by Haydn, Sterndale Bennett, Stephen Heller, &c., never before given in public, will be introduced.

MASSOL.

Although he has betrayed his colors and gone over to the camp of the enemy (style de feux camarades), Massol has been heartily received by the public, who ignorant of the motives which urged him to migrate, see nothing but an old favorite on fresh boards, a well known physiognomy hanging on the cheek of another night, a voice whose vibrations, ever cheerful, agitate a new atmosphere, and beat against other boxes. In his own part of Pietro, Massol has achieved the same triumph before the lamps of "Her Majesty's" as before the footlights of the "Royal Italian." Missed there he is found here, wept in one place he is cheered in another. The public is simply a bon enfant, and pries not into particulars, nor puts its nose behind the scenes. The various organs of public opinion, too, have unanimously held out to Massol the cordial grasp, have tendered the friendly fist. The Herald, eloquent as just, thus apostrophises our Pietro :—

"M. Massol, who was the Pietro of the Royal Italian Opera last season, was the Pietro of last night ; and where was a better to be found ? We look upon the engagement of this gentleman to be an adroit step on the part of the management, for there are few in his peculiar line whose pretensions have been so well and so satisfactorily tried. His singing is totally devoid of the coarsenesses and austerities which but too often belong to the voices of his register, and whatever he undertakes he executes with care and precision. His Pietro wholly differs from that of Formes ; but it has its own merits. In the duet in the second act the general energy which he exhibited while deprecating the thralldom of his country, was immensely effective, not for the loudness of the definition, but for the settled depth of purpose and the vigour of the mental impulse. This display was rewarded with the usual encore. The air in the fifth act was also a demonstration of neat and graceful singing."

The Times more curt is not a bit less hearty :—

"M. Massol was received with acclamations of applause. His Pietro is too well known, as a manly and vigorous performance, to need any description here. Suffice it his voice was in first-rate condition, and he sang the famous duet, 'Aux armes' (with Massaniello), with immense energy and spirit, and obtained an enthusiastic encore. He was also excellent in the drinking song of the last act, to which he imparted unusual point and emphasis. There is nothing calculated in M. Massol's conception of Pietro ; it is simple, straightforward, and natural, and hence it is effective."

Shorter, but sweet, thus sings the Morning Post :—

"M. Massol, who made his debut at her Majesty's Theatre on this occasion in the part of Pietro, was enthusiastically welcomed, and sang throughout the opera with his accustomed verve and dramatic feeling."

The Chronicle finds spirit, finish, grace, and smoothness, all in Massol's singing :—

"The first appearance of M. Massol upon these boards was the third event of the night. This admirable singer is a great addition to the strength of the company. Whatever part he undertakes he executes with the utmost spirit and finish. His Pietro became an important feature in the opera, and he sang with all his habitual grace and smoothness. To the success of the great duet with Pardini he contributed largely, and in the whole of the concerted music his voice was heard with great advantage. We should also mention that his make-up was very picturesque."

The Daily News, who wastes no words in ordinary, wastes none here in particular, but speaks briefly to the purpose :—

"Massol, who performed the part of Pietro, appeared, it will be remembered, last season in that part at the other house. It is a character which, on the Parisian stage, he has made his own, and in which he is acknowledged to be unrivalled."

We cannot find space for any more, or rather we cannot find any more for space, having mislaid all the other papers, except the Athenæum, which, going straight up to the wall in a bound, declares that "Massol is the best Pietro on the stage." Brevity is the soul of wit—and we leave Massol for the nonce to his fortunes until we have to criticise him in another part.

BEETHOVEN QUARTET SOCIETY.

The second meeting took place on Tuesday, and was well attended. The quartets were No. 4, Op. 18, in C minor ; the "Razamoffsky," in F, No. 7, Op. 59 ; and the A minor, No. 16, Op. 131. The executants were Ernst, H. C. Cooper, Hill, and Rousselot.

The performance was admirable, and afforded unqualified pleasure. The quartet in C minor, one of the finest specimens of Beethoven's early style exhibited the grandeur and passionate expression of Ernst's playing to perfection, especially in the first movement. The great violinist was ably supported by his coadjutors, each of whom seemed to project his entire energies and feelings into the performance. The "Razamoffsky" quartet was no less satisfactory. The elaborate details of the allegro were rendered with irreproachable delicacy and precision ; and the adagio again brought Ernst's highest powers into play ; its deep and varied beauties were brought out with wonderful expression. The finale, tantalising and capricious, was executed with infinite point and spirit. The quartet in A minor, one of the most original of the "posthumous" set, and one of the most puzzling to the executants, taxed the four performers to the uttermost. But again their efforts were crowned with success, and again did Ernst come out with twofold force, and triumphantly evince his supremacy as an interpreter of the sublime and pathetic. The canzona in his hands (in spite of its Greek crudities) was transcendent. Such a thanksgiving was worthy such a cure. (Beethoven wrote this movement in gratitude for his recovery from a long and painful illness. Its direction is truly heaven-ward.)

The whole evening was in the highest degree satisfactory. To judge by the full audience, M. Rousselot appears likely to have a prosperous season. We are glad of it.

FRENCH PLAYS.

No one will be sorry to be disappointed, when the disappointment brings the French Plays. Mr. Mitchell has delighted the public for many years, but this year, the first of seven, owing to his unusual silence, was given up in despair, until the appearance of a short prospectus, which is not published while we write, but written on embossed post, and will, probably, be unpublished when we rewrite—since why circulate it twice for once, as though there were a virtue in printer's ink that not existed in the other? This short prospectus gives us long hopes of many a broad laugh during the brief course of days that run between April 28, and the 3rd of May. Better little than nothing, and better late than never.

The theatre will open, as we have hinted, on the 28th of the present month. The first six or eight representations are proposed to be devoted exclusively to comedy and vaudeville; the remainder of the season to pieces from the repertory of the Palais Royal or Theatre Montansier. The company engaged includes Mdle. Judith, from the Theatre Français, Mdle. St. Marc, from the Variétés; Mdle. Bilhaud from the Odeon; Mdle. Figeac, Mdle. Octave, from the Vaudeville; Mdle. Scriwaneck, from the Palais Royal, and Mdle. Aline; M. M. Regnier, Lafont, Levassor, Ravel, and Hyacinthe, all of whom, with the exception of the last, are already known to the London public. On the opening night the new three-act comedy of MM. Scribe and Legouvé, La Bataille des Dames, which has been so successful in Paris, will be produced with Mdles. Judith and St. Marc, and M. M. Lafont and Regnier in the principal parts; to be followed by the last novelty of the Palais Royal, L'Amour and L'Avenglette, in which the lively Mdle. Scriwaneck and the quaint M. Hyacinthe will appear.

During the season, several of the most popular pieces, written expressly for M. Lafont, at the Variétés, will be produced; in which Madlle. St. Marc, who will be remembered in London, in 1846, is to sustain the principal female characters.

In another paragraph it is stated that Madlle. Rachel will make her first appearance on the second of June, but in what theatre the great tragedian will perform, is not mentioned. From the announcement, however, of the subsequent half-promise of Bouffé, and Frederick Lemaitre, we are led to hope for a post season; but at the attraction of Rachel at the time of the Great Exhibition, when all the world is to be in London, will be something quite unprecedented, not to speak of MM. Bouffé and Frederick Lemaitre, the St. James's Theatre will not be large enough, and we trust that the report may be true, that MM. Jullien and Gye have placed the magnificent theatre of Drury Lane at the disposal of Mr. Mitchell, for the representations of the unspeakable actress. Meanwhile, we take leave of Mr. Mitchell and his elegant little theatre in St. James's, with the best wishes for his success. Full accounts of the performances will appear, as usual, from the vivacious and adequate pen of J. DE C.

Foreign.

Paris, Monday, April 14th. (From our own Correspondent.)—The conceit of the French, with their baptême artistique de Paris, is really amusing. They pretend to have discovered the talent of Sophie Cravelli, who two years ago, was acknowledged by the subscribers to Her Majesty's Theatre, by the public, and by the press, as a dramatic vocalist of the first order. Let us, however, leave them to their imaginary eminence, satisfied that they are the most shallow judges of music in musical Europe, in spite of the executive means, and the state-sustained establishments, which should place them in the first rank. Mr. Lumley could not have made a happier hit than in engaging Mdle. Cravelli, who is more beautiful and energetic than ever. Her voice, which I need not describe to you, is in first-rate condition, and if she eschew the music of Verdi as much as lies in her power, it is likely to preserve its strength and freshness for many years, since she has an excellent method and vocalises with the utmost ease. Her début in Paris, as Dona Sol, in the ranting opera of Ernani, on Tuesday, the 8th, was triumphant, and on Thursday, the 10th, she repeated her performance and confirmed her success. Sims Reeves played Ernani, Colini Carlo V., and Scapini Silva, The English tenor was in splendid voice, and rose higher than ever in the good opinion of the abonnés. The opera was rehearsed and got up in a few days, and much credit is due to M. Bonsquet.

St. Louis, March 22.—Jenny Lind has arrived here, and has already given two concerts. The following account of her second concert is abridged from the Missouri Republican of the above date. "The concert room was filled on Wednesday night with an audience more numerous even than that which had occupied it on the previous evening. Nor was it the concert room alone that was filled. The street opposite and lying around the front of the Hall, and the roofs of the lower houses in its vicinity, were crowded, and covered with people. Every where that a chance was promised them of hearing the voice of the fair Swede, the multitude had thronged, and listened, as we afterwards learned, with an attention which emulated that of the more favoured lovers of music who had procured seats in the interior of the Hall. Nor, indeed, was their chance of hearing altogether so bad, inasmuch as Jenny Lind's voice was borne to them, somewhat deadened, of course, yet almost as clear as if they had heard it in an open space. Some of the more delicate ornaments they of course lost, but as they paid nothing for their evening's amusement, we conceive they had no right to complain.

"The Overture to Der Freischütz was better given than we ever heard it at such a distance from New York. It did credit to the baton of Benedict and the lungs, bows, and cat-gut of the orchestra. The Overture to Reissiger's Felsenkühle was also played. Benedict himself gave with Mr. Joseph Burke, a duet of his composition jointly with De Beriot, a pleasant and sparkling piece of music, and admirably played. Indeed, we have no hesitation in classing Benedict the very best pianist we have heard. He has an essentially graceful touch, and plays with a feeling and expression rarely met with. We should have been pleased indeed, to have heard the audience "encore" the charming duet, both on the score of its agreeable melody, and its execution by the author and Mr. Burke. Signor Belletti sang the "Vi Ravviso," from the Sonnambula; "Riccio Barcarole," from the Prigione d'Edinburgo, and a duet on Tyrolean melodies, composed recently by Benedict.

"But let us now speak of Jenny Lind. In the "Quando lascia la Normandia," we felt that we had—warmly as we previously spoke of her—scarcely done her justice. The exquisite finesse of her vocalization, and the charming manner in which she delivered the Romance, chained us to her voice, and when she ceased singing, we felt as if we also had been lifted from the earth and were in our spirit soaring on those fading accents into the realms above. (!) Indeed, whatever we may have previously said must not be taken into consideration in our estimate of the attractions of this extraordinary woman. We attempted, as we believe, to describe her voice, and analyse her style of vocalization. Now, we as frankly confess, that these are indescribable. But much as we were delighted with "Quando lascia," in the "Casta Diva" we were charmed out of ourselves. The applause that followed this was tremendous. Yet, finely as the "Casta Diva" was delivered, in the aria from Lucia all the power and flexibility of her voice seemed called into operation ; and when the last accents failed, we heard but one low murmur of delight around us, until the audience burst out into an explosion of applause. The duet on Tyrolean Melodies, with Signor Belletti, was sweetly rendered. This is an elegant and charming composition, and does great credit to M. Benedict, whom we knew by report from several of his works, but only by report, until we had the present opportunity of judging. We consider him, as far as we have now the means of arriving at a conclusion, as a talented and eminently graceful composer, and one with whom we should have great pleasure in forming a longer and more solid acquaintance, should he ever have the opportunity of presenting us with an entire opera in some of the cities of our more eastern States, or should any manager succeed in inducing him to put the Crusaders or the Brides of Venice in rehearsal. The concert concluded with the gorgeous Coronation March, from Meyerbeer's Prophète, followed by the Bird Song, by Taubert, and a Swedish melody, called the Mountaineer's Song. Both of the last were committed to the lips of Jenny Lind. The Bird Song was given with enchanting naïveté. However, we have said everything we can well say. Our time is running short, and our pen grows wearisome ; we will, therefore, throw it down and quit writing, with the memory still warm in us, and the conviction that Jenny Lind herself must rank as indisputably the most splendid and remarkable vocalist (!) the present day has given birth to. Let us, however, in casting aside the pen remark, that in this evening's concert she will sing the air from Handel's Messiah, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." Who would not wish to hear this from such an interpreter ?

THIRD JENNY LIND CONCERT.—The tickets to Miss Jenny Lind's third concert were this forenoon bringing an average of 5 dollars premium. About two hours after the auction had commenced the premium had ranged from 3 dollars 75. to 4 dollars. The choice front seats had much exceeded this. The auction was carried on briskly, and the enthusiasm appeared to be unabated. A large crowd, as usual, was in attendance.—Missouri Republican, 22nd March.

NEW YORK.—Another speculation of Barnum's. "We learn," says the New York Courier and Enquirer, "from a reliable source, that Mr. Barnum has engaged the 'Bateman children' for two years, to appear entirely in Europe, and that he contracts to pay all their expenses and give them one half the net proceeds of the whole sum of their attraction, guaranteeing this half to amount to 20,000 dollars the first year, and 30,000 the next, making 50,000 dollars (nearly £10,000) in all ; and we think that Mr. B. will make a handsome profit by the speculation. When Jenny Lind beheld these little phenomema, she pronounced them the most wonderful little creatures she had ever seen ; and when the dilettanti of Europe see their astonishing intellectual efforts, when the land of Shakespeare witnesses the beautiful conception and delicate elaboration of the most difficult creations of that immortal bard, none will be surprised at the pains we think it honest to take, in order to keep these gifted spirits from being classed, in stranger lands, along with the mountebanks and impostors who may happen to tread at the same time, the same field of public enterprise."

[Nous verrons. The Batemans may be a family of Thumbs, and, if so, just calculated for "beautifully conceiving," and "delicately elaborating" the "most difficult creations of the immortal bard." Conceiving and elaborating a difficult creation, is profoundly Yankee.]

Provincial.

CAMBRIDGE.—On Thursday last, the Cambridge Cornet Society gave a concert of vocal and instrumental music at the Town-hall, for the benefit of the Royal Albert Benevolent Society. The band, conducted by Mr. J. C. Large, played well. The features of the evening were a flute solo by Mr. C. Sippel, which was encored ; a sonata—pianoforte and violoncello, Messrs. F. Sipple and Amps ; a violin solo by Mr. Ingram ; and a solo on the cornopean by Mr. Large. There were, also, a variety of glees, duets, and songs, by Messrs. Jackman, Baraclough (of the Ely choir), and Mr. Weller and Master Robinson, of Cambridge. The concert was well attended, the admission being low. The audience appeared much gratified ; and, after paying all expenses, there was a clear balance of £10 for the Royal Albert.—Cambridge Press.

LIVERPOOL.—Mr. Hirst has been appointed successor to Mr. W. T. Best as organist to the Philharmonic Society. The competitors were Messrs. Hirst, W. Rogers, and Turvey, who severally performed on the organ before the Committee, on Tuesday last, and all of whom acquitted themselves in a very able manner.

Mr. Jackson's new Oratorio, Isaiah, is to be shortly produced by the Festival Choral Society, where his Deliverance was given with such success some time since.

TODMORDEN.—(From a Correspondent).—The concert of the Harmonic Society took place last Tuesday, when the Hall was well attended. Miss M. B. Marsh (of the Liverpool Concerts), appeared for the first time at these concerts. She possesses a soprano voice of great flexibility ; and in Pacini's "I tuoi frequenti," her taste was remarkable. Mr. Riley has a barytone voice, of great power, which, at present, requires cultivation. "Sleep, gentle lady" (Bishop), "Chief of the windy Morven" (Calleott), and other glees, were executed with skill, by the society, assisted by the above named vocalists. Mr. Charles Greenwood played Thalberg's fantasia on "We're a noddin'," in capital style. J. N. B.

CHELMSTEDT.—MR. CARTE'S LECTURE.—On Thursday evening, Mr. Carte, attended by Mr. Wells, professor of the flute of the Royal Academy, gave a treat to the real lovers of music, but more especially of flute music, at the Institute in this town. Of Mr. Carte's proficiency on the flute it is quite superfluous to add one word to the encomiums which have so frequently and extensively been lavished on him. It is sufficient to say that he is a perfect master of the instrument ; and that, whether we estimate the tone, the taste, or the execution, we are sure of our expectations being gratified. He prefaced his performance on the instrument with a brief history of music from the earliest ages, comparing the ancient with the modern, describing their respective peculiarities, explaining melody and harmony, and making observations on national music, with the comparative effect of vocal and instrumental music. Mr. B. Wells displayed great powers of execution, and brought out a splendid tone from one of Mr. Carte's new flutes in "Rousseau's Dream," with Richardson's variations. His embouchure is good, and though he slurs rather than tips his demi-semi-quavers, every note is distinctly marked even in the most rapid passages. The duet with Mr. Carte, "The last Rose of Summer," followed up by "Garry Owen," was beautifully played, and rapturously encored. The harmony of their notes was complete ; and the crescendo and diminuendo, so indispensable to expression in an adagio, was so admirably managed that "A spirit spoke in every tone they drew."

The improvements which Mr. Carte has made in his new patent flute have removed the acknowledged imperfections of the instrument hitherto in use, and evince that the powers of the patentee in performing are only equalled by his science in constructing the nearest instrumental approach to the human voice. The silver flute is remarkable for a sweet, soft, and liquid tone, and the wooden for great power and brilliancy ; the silver also possesses an exquisitely soft swelling vocal quality, without being deficient in power, while the wood produced such a power and volume as we never heard from a flute before. In the duet the two were beautifully blended, the silver taking the lead, and the wood the second part, and with the admirable execution we have noticed beautifully brought out the characteristics of both. Mr. F. Dawson presided at the piano, and played the accompaniments in his usual style of excellence.—Essex Herald.

Original Correspondence.

THALBERG'S AGE AND BIRTHPLACE.

(To the Editor of the Musical World.)

MR. EDITOR.—A Subscriber would feel obliged by your kindly favouring him, at your earliest convenience, with the Age and birth-place of "Thalberg," the composer. If it is possible, a reply in your next (Saturday, the 19th inst.), will much oblige.

[We shall be obliged to any of our lady subscribers who can and will satisfy our correspondent on these interesting points. We are unfurnished with the required information.—ED. M. W.]

M. VARIN—GORLITZA, GORLITZA—MR. BYRN.

(To the Editor of the Musical World.)

April 16th, 1851.

SIR.—My attention has been drawn to a paragraph in The Musical World of the 22nd of March, headed "La Gorlitzza, M. Varin," which, I trust, in common justice to yourself and others, you will afford me an opportunity to explain, as supposing you were in possession of the real facts of the case when you allowed that paragraph to appear, you, by it, defended those who pirate the musical compositions of others, and I am sure your publication is too respectable to wittingly do anything of the kind. "La Gorlitzza Danse Livonienne," ever so freely translated, "cannot be construed a Polka composed by a Livonian;" the edition referred to "in F is according to the inscription upon its forehead, the only one authorised by M. Varin. As to 'who is M. Varin that should authorise or interdict an edition (in F or any other key) of La Gorlitzza?' he is 'the Frenchman' who composed such music, and the dance to it (and it is not many who are so fortunate twice in a life time), and whether the name of it be spelt with a g, or a z, or whether it be written in the key of F or any other key, the subject is still his. As to 'it is not painfully recherché, 'it has been thought so original and so well adapted to the Dance, that 1,500 copies were sold the first few weeks of publication; directly after which, 5 or 6 other writers copied it, and with the blind of a few bars introduction, or another key, or an accompaniment for another instrument, or a coda, or a few notes of a bar altered, have had the assurance to put their names to such Gorlitzas, to make the public suppose they are the authors of such subjects. Such conduct only has been complained of, and if it does not amount quite to piracy, it is very fine evasion of the law, and moreover such writers must have a high opinion of M. Varin's subject, and a poor opinion of their own brains not to attempt to compose other Gorlitzas, and thus make them as various as Polkas, which all are entitled to do, but not to spoil 1 bar of M. Varin's, and then put their own name as the author.

"The right of copyright appertaining to M. Varin's edition," is the property, entirely and unconditionally, of Messrs. Hale and Son (Cheltenham), I am prepared to prove, whenever or wherever they may think proper to call upon me, as since my attention was drawn to your paragraph (some time after its publication or I should have written to you before), I have sent to Paris for further documents to prove such statement.

Being the introducer into England of M. Varin's Gorlitzza (Music and Dance), I trust will be deemed by you a sufficient apology for my thus troubling you.

I am, Sir,

50, Regent-street, Cheltenham,
And 71, Mortimer-street, Cavendish-sq.

Yours, obediently,

JAMES BYRN.

P.S.—As no one has borrowed the "Cracovia," I need not state more about it, than your Critic must have been very barren of subjects to find fault, when he was obliged to have recourse to the mistake of a poor printer's—putting an E instead of an O.

"I CANNA LEAVE THE HIGHLAND HILLS."

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR.—As you are always willing to answer any question for the benefit of the musical public, I am desirous of knowing whether a song sung for the last year by Henry Phillips, is published, entitled

"I canna leave the Highland Hills," as I have called at various music-sellers, and can learn nothing concerning it; although, I believe it is either published here or in Glasgow. As it has not been advertized nor reviewed, so far as I have seen, though promised long since by Mr. Phillip's to the public, perhaps some of your musical friends may know.

84, Coleshill-street, Pimlico.

Wednesday.

Your obedient servant,

ALLAN MACDONALD.

Miscellaneous.

ALBONI has arrived in Paris, covered with the laurels of her triumphs at Madrid. She is diligently studying her part in Auber's new opera, Corbeille d'Oranges, which is now nearly completed; and from the production of which a great success is anticipated. To Alboni the study of Auber's music must prove a labour of love, the more especially as the great composer has written it with an especial view to her brilliant and varied powers.

JETTY TREFFZ.—The best of lieder-singerinn, as Mendelssohn called this accomplished and popular vocalist, has arrived in town for the season, after her brilliant tournée in the provinces with M. Jullien.

CARLOTTA GRISI.—The lovers of the ballet will be delighted to hear that its veritable queen, having entirely recovered her health, strength, and spirits, will make her rentrée on Tuesday at Her Majesty's Theatre in Les Metamorphoses.

MARIO.—The great tenor arrived early last week from St. Petersburg, and will make his first appearance this season at the Royal Italian Opera as Raoul in the Huguenots.

LABLACHE has arrived in London from Paris, and will appear at Her Majesty's Theatre on Tuesday in his favorite part of Dulcamara in L'Elisir d'Amore.

MDLLE. ALAYMO.—The continental journals speak in high terms of this fair cantatrice, who makes her début at Her Majesty's Theatre on Saturday next, in Lucrezia Borgia. Some of the French papers set her down as a Sicilian Countess, and describe her as being exceedingly handsome, and possessed of great abilities. We shall soon have an opportunity of judging for ourselves.

SIR WALTER SCOTT'S WORKS.—The copyright of Sir Walter Scott's works, with the stock on hand, was submitted for sale, by Mr. Hodgson, at the London Coffee House, and purchased by Mr. Milne, of Edinburgh, writer to the signet, for the sum of £15,000, subject to an agreement to take the printed stock at a valuation of £10,160. The above sale took place under the direction of the executors of the late Mr. Caddell of Edinburgh, and we hear that the property was bought in.

THEODORE LABARRE, the celebrated harp-player, has arrived in London for the season.

CRUVELLI'S LUCREZIA BORGIA.—"The fine scene with Gennaro and Alfonso, where having unwittingly placed her lover in the Duke's power, she wishes to save him, was acted with fine intelligence. The duet and trio were acted and sung with equal effect; and the popular andante "Guai se ti sfugge," was encored. The climax to the scene, when Lucrezia persuades Gennaro to take the antidote, was full of dramatic feeling, and Mdle. Cruvelli was recalled with Gardoni at the fall of the curtain. But the last act was better than all. The whole scene was a display of dramatic energy far surpassing any previous effort of Mdle. Cruvelli on the boards of Her Majesty's Theatre. The phrase, "M'odi, ah m'odi," was delivered with touching pathos, and rapturously encored; and Grisi herself could scarcely have infused a larger amount of passion into the burst of feeling with which Lucrezia deplores the fate of her unhappy Gennaro. In short, Mdle. Cruvelli achieved a complete triumph, and convinced her audience that her charming talent was much better displayed in the tender and graceful music of poor Donizetti than in the rant and fustian of the empty blusterer, Verdi. She was recalled with enthusiasm, at the end, and overwhelmed with plaudits.

[The above is quoted from the Musical World, No. 17, vol. 23, April 22, 1848].

CAROLINA ROSATI, the charming and accomplished danseuse, has arrived in town, and will shortly appear at Her Majesty's Theatre.

LONDON SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—An excellent performance of Mendelssohn's Elijah was given here last Monday to a very full attendance. The principal vocalists were Miss Birch, Miss Dolby, and Miss Baxter; Messrs. Lockey and Phillips. The quartet in the first act, "Cast thy burden on the Lord," was encored, and Miss Dolby delivered the air, "Woe to them," as charmingly as ever. In the second act, which is the finest, Miss Birch gave the opening song, "Hear! ye Israel," with her usual effect. The elaborate and difficult chorus, "Woe unto them," the masterpiece of the work, wanted clearness and precision in the delivery. The delicious and popular trio, "Lift thine eyes," was, as usual, encored. Miss Dolby has made the song, "Rest in the Lord," her own, by her deeply beautiful manner of delivering it. The choir lacked, now and then, a little of their accustomed accuracy. Their performance was, on the whole, highly satisfactory. The next concert (7th May) will consist of "a selection," an experiment which has not been tried by either society.

THE THEATRES IN PASSION WEEK.—The closing of all the Theatres for dramatic purposes did not necessarily exclude other performances during the preceding Easter. Nearly every theatre in London has been devoted to amusements of one kind or another, and we consider it altogether an anomaly to interdict the performance of a play, and allow dramatic, vocal and other entertainments to be given. Surely the government ought to take into their own hands the regulation of all affairs connected with the stage. They manage these things better in France.—At the Haymarket, during the week, Mr. C. H. Adams exhibited his Orrery, and delivered his highly interesting and instructive Lecture on Astronomy.—At the St. James's Mrs. Fanny Kemble continued her Readings of Shakspeare, and attracted large audiences.—Madame Anna Thillon, and Mr. Hudson gave their new "Musical Entertainment" at the Adelphi, which proved a lucrative speculation; the theatre, every night, being crowded; the entertainment, and the charming singing of the captivating Anna Thillon, were more successful than ever.—At the Lyceum Mr. Allcroft gave a series of Promenade Concerts, which proved very attractive, although Signor Sivori, who was announced, did not appear. Sivori's place was supplied by Herr Laub, an excellent violinist from the band of Her Majesty's Theatre. Mr. Allcroft provided a good orchestra, good vocalists, good instrumentalists, and two good conductors (Lavenue and Negri).—Mr. Henry Russell, at the Olympic, provided a new "vocal and pictorial entertainment" entitled the Far West, in which he sang with vociferant energy sundry songs descriptive and condemnatory of the slave trade, which he may, with great propriety, dedicate to the memory of Wilberforce, and to Fowell Buxton. The illustrations were moving.—At the Surrey Theatre concerts were given on Monday and Tuesday, supported by Miss Louisa Pyne, Harrison, Whitworth, and other vocalists, together with a strong battalion of instrumentalists. The remainder of the week was devoted to Mr. Love's Polyphonic Entertainment.—The visitors to the Soho Theatre were entertained with Mr. Darling by his Lectures on Electro-Biology—a very extraordinary performance.—At the Sadler's Wells a concert of an attractive character was given, in which Ernst played, with a goodly array of instrumentalists and a host of vocalists, among which we may name Mdlle. Angri, Mdlle. Rummell, and several Pupils of Mr. Howard Glover.—At the Mary-le-bone Theatre Mr. Jarrett, the eminent horn-player, during three days in the week, Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday, invited his friends and the public to an unusual treat, vocal and instrumental. Never had the good folks in the neighbourhood of St. John's Wood such an opportunity afforded them of hearing such first-rate artists; never had such an array of talent congregated together within the walls of the neat little theatre in Church Street. The vocal corps consisted of Jetty Treffz, Formes, Stigelli, Marchesi, Frank Bodda, Manley, Kieschler, Fraser, the Mesdames Rummell, Rose Braham, Cole and M. Cole, M. O'Connor, Messent, the double quartet from the Berlin choir of Her Majesty's Theatre, and others:—the instrumental, of Alexandre Billet, Sainton, F. Collins, V. Collins, Chatterton, Lazarus, Pratten, Goffrie, Nicholson, Prospero, Rowland, Lovell Phillips, and the Messrs. Distin and Sons. With such an army of artists, and with such a general to command them as Mr. Jarrett, it may be readily supposed that each evening's entertainment was highly spiced and well varied, that the theatre was crowded, and the audience perfectly satisfied. And such was the case, and more, seeing that Jetty Treffz, on Thursday night, excited a furor. It was the first appearance, in London, of the charming and accomplished Teutonian—Jullien's thrush, as she has been called—and her entrée was hailed with every demonstration of delight. She was in admirable voice, sang with indescribable effect, and was encored in everything. Formes, too, created a powerful sensation. The Mary-le-bonians were in such extacies with the tremendous German profound bass that they made him repeat every thing over again. To make mention of all the effective pieces, sung or played, would take up more space than we can afford in a resumé of the entertainments in Passion Week. One thing, however, seemed to create general surprise, which it is necessary to add, and which appears to ourselves unusual and unaccountable, viz., that Mr. Jarrett did not play at his own concert. Mr. Jarrett's performance would constitute a striking feature in any concert, and its omission on the present occasion can only be accounted for on the principle that a general never takes an actual part in an engagement; and, consequently, Mr. Jarrett, as commander of his forces, may stand excused from drawing his weapon in the ranks of the grand vocal and instrumental battles in the theatre, light Marylebone.

PRIZE GLEE.—About four months since, advertisements appeared in some of the London papers, offering a prize of 10 guineas to the composer of the best serious glee. Thirty-six composers sent in, amongst others, Mr. Sparks, of Leeds, who carried several medals, and Mr. Battye, of Huddersfield, who carried the Gresham prize in 1845. Sir Henry Bishop has awarded the prize to Dr. Bexfield, for his glee entitled "The Death of Hector."

HEER GUSTAVE HOLZEL.—The German lied composer and singer, has arrived in London.

GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION, WATERLOO PLACE.—On Thursday morning, we were favored with a private view of a representation of the celebrated "Taj Mehal," which, in addition to the Grand Moving Panorama, accompanied by descriptive detail and appropriate music, portraying the entire route of the Overland Mail to India, will be presented for the first time to the public on Easter Monday, in a series of views from drawings on the spot, for which the proprietors are indebted to the kindness of Captain W. Barnett, the Taj Mehal. This Mausoleum was erected by the Emperor Shah Jehan as the tomb of his wife, Mum Taza Zamanie.—"The most Exalted of the Age." It is built on the Agra side of the river Jumna, three miles and a half from the Fort and Palace of the Great Mogul. The views consist of the gateway called the Kalan Durwasa, as seen from the centre of the spacious gardens; the interior of the building, showing the marble screen and elegant Mosaics round the tomb of the Emperor and his wife, represented as seen in the days of the Great Mogul by light of lamps; the exterior of the building, and one of its detached Mosques, (by moonlight), taken from a sand bank on the opposite side of the river Jumna. The whole is intended to convey a complete idea of this wonder, as it has ever been considered by those who have seen it.

MR. HENRY HAYCRAFT, the well known professor of the piano-forte and singing, of Clifton and Bristol, has arrived in town for the purpose of giving instructions in these important branches of musical education during the present season.

MADAME GRISI AND M. DE MELCY.—By the deed of separation of the celebrated singer Grisi and her husband M. de Melcy he was to have the property of some iron works at Chitieri; but as the revenue arising from them was uncertain, it was further stipulated that the wife should pay him 10,000*fr.* a year as long as she should remain on the stage. For some time past this income has not been paid, and M. de Melcy, on Thursday last, brought an action against his wife for the arrears, amounting to 27,500*fr.* The counsel pleaded that the revolution of February had so injured her in her professional pursuits that she was no longer able to pay so large a sum as 10,000*fr.* a year, and offered, in lieu of the arrears due, to pay a sum of 10,000*fr.* The counsel for M. de Melcy denied the truth of the statement made as to the reduced means of Madame Grisi, and entered into a detail of the sums received by her at different theatres, &c. He mentioned, among other things, that when in Russia she had received very valuable presents in jewels, and in particular a wreath for the head, valued at 30,000 rubles (about 120,000*f.*), which had been purchased by subscription the Emperor himself having subscribed 10,000 rubles. He stated, also, in reply to the advocate of Madame Grisi, who, after having alluded to the abandonment of the Italian Opera by the aristocracy in consequence of the revolution, had described the attempt of his client to find a compensation in London as unfortunate, that she had not been a loser to the extent pretended. On the contrary, he declared that she had realized large sums, and had received not less than 30,000*f.* in England for her assistance at the musical festivals. The Court condemned the defendant to pay the whole sum claimed by M. de Melcy.—Times.

MRS. JOHN MACFARREN'S MATINEE MUSICALE—We were gratified to see a numerous and most elegant audience filling the New Beethoven Rooms on Saturday morning last, to support a very rising and admirable professor. Mrs. John Macfarren is a pianist of great attainments, and richly merits the very warm encouragement she received. Her first performance was a duet of Herz with Mr. W. H. Holmes, in which she evinced a light touch and a distinct and brilliant finger. She next played a Rondeau Brillant, of Weber, which shewed her to possess no less merit in another style. In the second part she chose the Carnaval de Venise, of Schulhoff, and in her rendering of this, we found no less to admire, than in her other performances. She played, also, in Mr. Holmes' quartet for four pianists, "Une Romance de deux Minuets," with Miss Goddard, Mr. W. Dorrell, and the composer, and with Mr. Walter Macfarren in a similar composition of his, which is a most effective concert piece, and cannot fail to become very popular; in this she was coadjuted by Miss Kate Loder, and Mr. Brinley Richards. We had yet further interesting matter for the pianoforte in the duet of Mendelssohn, the original variations in B flat, executed by Mr. Cipriani Potter and Mr. Sterndale Bennett in a manner of first-rate mastery. To complete the list of instrumental pieces, we must name Mr. Balsir Chatterton's solo on the harp, a potpourri of themes of Mendelssohn, which he delivered in a most finished style. Among the vocal pieces were two novelties; a song of Mr. W. H. Holmes, which Miss Birch rendered in her accustomed manner, and which will please no less than two or three other songs of the same composer, we have lately noticed with great pleasure; and a duet for soprano and bass, a class of composition much in request, "Oh, let me take my sounding lyre," which was charmingly sung by Madame and Signora Ferrari. Miss M. Williams' most lovely voice was heard in all its sweetness in the little song of Reissiger. Signor Nappi sang so admirably Rossini's song "La Tarantella," and was so favourably accompanied by Mr. Walter Macfarren as to obtain the only encore of the morning. Miss Dolby sang a German song, an Italian, and an English, thereby proving her facility in language to be great, as her excellencies in her art is perfect; in the first and last songs, especially, "Schwermuth," and "Wishes" she appeared to particular advantage and touched the hearts of all who heard her. Mr. Walter Macfarren accompanied the vocal music like an accomplished musician. The concert was under the patronage of the Countess of Bradford.

Our Scrap Book.

PROPOSED NEW OPERA HOUSE.—It is proposed to erect an opera house in New York, to seat 4,000 people. It will be bounded by four wide streets, and have a front of 197 feet by an average depth of 217 feet. The first tier of boxes and the parquet are entered on a level with the street. Viewed from the front of each retreating behind the one immediately below it, each having its open balcony. A system of ventilating, with warm air in winter, and with air artificially cooled to any required temperature in summer, forms a part of the design. It is proposed, by the use of iron for the stairways and in other parts of the building for which it may be available, and by coating all the stage frame-work with a recently discovered incombustible paint, to render the whole structure nearly fire-proof. The cost of the land and the estimated cost of the building, furnished for use, are between 250,000 and 300,000 dollars. Of this the proprietor is to furnish one half, and hopes to raise the remainder by leasing 250 seats for 99 years for 500 dollars each.—The Builder.

MASANIELLO—(From the Opera Boz.)—Tomaso Anello, better known by his nickname, Masaniello, was the son of a Neapolitan fisherman. He was brought up to his father's business, and at a very early age was distinguished among his companions by his courage, his activity, and his integrity. In 1647 a remarkably obnoxious tax was introduced into Naples, and Anello's wife having been detected in smuggling a small quantity of meal for the support of her children, was not only imprisoned for the offence, but was condemned to pay a large fine, for the discharge of which Anello's furniture was sold. Enraged both on his own and the public account, Masaniello excited his friends to assist him in driving away the officers, and they were soon joined by the populace, who demanded an abolition of the tax. Not only did they gain their point, but they obtained the offer of a pension to their leader Anello, which he nobly refused. These concessions far from restoring order, left the city to the mercy of the mob, and at the instigation of some of the malcontents, Masaniello was induced to issue a command for burning the houses of all persons concerned in levying the tax, which was but too speedily executed. He then required the Spanish viceroy, by whom Naples was governed, to abolish taxes of every kind, and being again successful, placed himself at the head of a vast body of men, and exercised absolute sway. He spent little time in refreshment or repose, gave his orders with judgment, and appeared free from selfish views. Soon, however, he began to govern with more severity, and put to death several persons upon mere suspicion. The viceroy fearing that the French might take advantage of the confusion in Naples, entered into a treaty with Anello, by which he not only granted all that had been demanded, but allowed him to retain his dignity, and the people to remain under arms. Anello now lost his self control. Intoxicated with power, and disordered by constant excitement, he became frantic, and performed all sorts of extravagant actions, till at last he was assassinated by the very populace he had roused, only ten days after his elevation. His corpse was treated with the greatest indignity; but on a temporary rise of provisions it was reclaimed by the rabble, carried through the streets in solemn procession, and magnificently buried. [Masaniello ought (according to history) to wear white trousers on the stage. Ed. M. W.]

IRISH WAR.—The Dublin playgoers have had a riot, and have nearly torn down a theatre, because of a shockingly bad riddle. "Pablo Fanque, the acrobat," advertised the gift of a pony and car to the propounder of the best riddle. There were 1056 competitors, and the prize was awarded to Miss Emma Stanley, for a conundrum so mediocre, that we will not attempt to transcribe it; it is neither good enough nor bad enough for notice. The audience, touched with a sense of national degradation, that out of more than a thousand Irish, not one could make a better piece of wit, broke into such excesses, that a body of police had to be marched into the building, to preserve it from wreck. Miss Stanley, however, accepted the prize, ordered its sale, and gave the produce to the Lord Mayor for distribution in charity.—Daily Express.

M. AMBROISE THOMAS.—The vacant chair of the Institute has been bestowed upon the composer of the Caid and the Songes d'une Nuit d'Ete. M. Thomas has a new opera in rehearsal at the Opera Comique.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

The notice of the second Royal Academy concert is unavoidably postponed till next number.

Advertisements.

SIGNOR BOTTESINI,

MUSICAL DIRECTOR OF THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA AT HAVANA, BEGS to apprise the Musical Profession and the Public that he will arrive in London at the beginning of May, and remain during the entire Season.

Letters and applications for engagements to be addressed to Sig. BOTTESINI, Wesel and Co., 229, Regent Street.

MESSRS. COCKS'

NEW MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

TO VIOLINISTS.—A Treatise on the Structure and Preservation of the Violin, and all other Bow Instruments, together with an Account of the most celebrated Makers, and of the genuine characteristics of their Instruments. By J. A. ORRO. Translated from the original, with additions and illustrations, by JOHN BISHOP. 8vo., in boards, 3s., postage free, 3s. 6d.

THE THEORY OF MUSIC.—Corfe's Principles of Harmony and Thorough Bass, 5s.; Mozart's Practical Thorough Bass, 5s.; Dore's ditto, 4s.; Gottfried Weber's celebrated Work on Musical Composition, edited by John Bishop, 31s. 6d.; Albrechtsberger's ditto, 42s.; Cherubini's ditto, 31s. 6d.; Czerny's New School of Practical Composition, translated by John Bishop, 3 vols., folio, each 51s. 6d.; and Hamilton's Five Musical Catechisms, each 2s. and 3s.

THE VIOLIN; being an account of that leading Instrument and its most eminent Professors, from its earliest date to the present time. Hints to Amateurs, and Anecdotes, by George Dubourg. 12mo., in cloth boards, 5s., postage free, 5s. 6d.

COCKS' MUSICAL ALMANACK, for 1851. 8vo., 1s.

COCKS' MUSICAL MISCELLANY, for October, November, December, January, February, and March, each 2d.; stamped, 3d.

WARREN'S CHANTERS' HAND-GUIDE. 4to, 5s., or in 34 numbers, 2d. each. WARREN'S PSALMODY, 24 books, each 2d., or two volumes, 2s. each.

BOYCE'S CATHEDRAL MUSIC, a New Edition, 1300 large folio pages, with Organ or Piano accompaniment. By JOSEPH WARREN. £26 6s.

VIOLIN QUARTETS, Quintets, and Trios.—Haydn's complete edition of 83 Quartets, in 4 vols., boards, with Portrait, 190s.; Mozart's complete edition of the 10 Quartets, 42s.; ditto, his 6 Quintets, 42s.; complete edition of Beethoven's 17 Quartets, by Rossetti, 120s.; his Quintets and Trios, edited by ditto, 63s.; also all the Sacred Music lately published by Mozatti and Hill, &c.

INSTRUCTION BOOKS for the VIOLIN; by Goodban, 10s. 6d.; by Spohr (translated by J. Bishop, and approved by the author), 31s. 6d.; by Campagnoli, translated by ditto, 24s.; by Rode, Baillet, and Kreutzer, 10s. 6d.; Hamilton's Catechism, 1s. Violin Studies, by Kreutzer, 10s. 6d.; by Rode, 10s. 6d.; by Fiorillo, 8s.; Corbelli's 12 Solos, 10s. 6d.; and his 48 Trios, 24s.

FOR THE ORGAN.—Third edition of HAMILTON'S CATECHISM of the ORGAN, with an Historical Introduction, and a list and description of the principal organs in Great Britain, Ireland, Germany, France, and Switzerland, the whole revised, corrected, and much enlarged, by Joseph Warren. 370 pages, price 4s. Also, Warren's very easy Tutor for ditto, 4s.; Rinck's Great School for the Organ, edited by S. Wesley and John Bishop, 36s.; and Mendelssohn's Grand Sonatas for Pedal Organs, 31s. 6d.

HANDEL'S ORATORIOS, Large Folio Edition, with Piano-forte or Organ Accompaniment, beautifully engraved, newly edited by JOHN BISHOP, and collated with the great Author's Manuscript Scores in the Queen's Library. The Messiah, Israel in Egypt, Samson, and Judas Macabbeus, each 15s.; Aclis and Galatea, 12s.; the Dettingen Te Deum, 12s.; Utrecht Jubilate, 12s.; Utrecht Jubilate, 10s. 6d.; the four Communion Anthems, 12s.; the Funeral Anthem, 12s.; and Haydn's Creation, 15s. London: Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington-street, Publishers to the Queen.

N.B.—Cock's Descriptive Catalogue of Standard and Modern Musical Publications, gratis, and postage free.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

FOR Improving the Voice, and removing all Affections of the Throat. Strongly recommended to Clergymen, Singers, Actors, Public Speakers, persons subject to relaxed Throats, and to all persons desirous of cultivating their Voices, and ensuring a good and clear articulation. They have also been found highly beneficial to those afflicted with Nervous, Hysterical, or Stomachic Coughs.

To be had in Boxes, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each, of every Medicine Vendor in the Kingdom.

Testimonials of their efficacy are published with each Box, from

Med. Grid	Miss Bomer	Mr. Harrison	Mr. J. Barnett
Med. Persiani	Mod. Albertazzi	Mr. Allen	Mr. George Linley
Med. Eugenio Garcia	Miss Cooper	Mr. White	Mr. Rodwell
Mrs. Alfred Shaw	Sig. Labache	Mr. Wase	Mr. Nelson
Miss Rainforth	Sig. Giubilei	Mr. Kroff	&c., &c.

CURES FOR THE UNCURED!

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.—Cure of a Red Leg of more than sixty years' standing.—Mr. Barker, of No. 5, Graham's Place, Drypool, near Hull, had ulcers on his leg from the age of 18 until upwards of 80, and although for many years he had sought the first advice in the country, nothing was found to cure them. He often suffered excruciating pain for long periods together, which incapacitated him from attending to his business. He had given up all hopes of getting a cure, when at last he was persuaded to try Holloway's Pills and Ointment, which he did, and however wonderful it may appear, the leg was thoroughly healed by their means, and by continuing to use the Pills alone after his leg was well, he has become in health so hale and hearty as now to be more active than most men of fifty. N.B.—The truth of this extraordinary statement can be vouched for by Mr. J. C. Reinhardt, 22, Market Place, Hull. Feb. 20th, 1850.

The Pills should be used conjointly with the Ointment in the following cases:—
 Bad Legs Coco Bay Contracted Lumbago Scurvy
 Bad Breasts Chicago-foot Stiff Joints Piles Sore-heads
 Burns Chilblains Elephantiasis Rheumatism Tumours
 Bunions Chapped hands Fistulas Scalds Ulcers
 Bite of Mosche- Corne (Soft) Gout Sore Nipples Wounds toes and Sand- Cancors Glandular Swell- Sore-throats Yaws ings Files ings Skin-diseases

Sold by the Proprietor, 244, Strand, (near Temple Bar), London; and by all respectable Vendors of Patent Medicines throughout the Civilized World in Pots and boxes, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 23s., and 33s. each. There is a very considerable saving in taking the larger sizes.

N.B.—Directions for the guidance of Patients are affixed to each Pot or Box.

LEE & COXHEAD'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

A NEW PIANOFORTE SCHOOL, by ALBERT KELLER, price 4s.

"We can confidently recommend this Pianoforte Tutor as the best extant: Mr. Keller has adopted the judicious method of arranging the scales and exercises amongst the lessons, by which plan the pupil is taught those essentials without turning to a formal book of scales, &c.,—the fingering is carefully marked without being crowded, and is evidently written by one who has had great experience as a teacher." Also, "Delices de la Jeunesse," in 12 sets, price 2s. each, written expressly follow the above Tutor, by C. W. Glover.

SACRED VOCAL MUSIC.

KELLER'S Collection of ANTHEMS, CHURCH SERVICES, CHANTS, &c., arranged for the Voice and Piano, in six Books, price 3s. each, with six beautiful and appropriate Designs by Brandard, arranged by ALBERT KELLER; the six Books can be had in one Volume, elegantly bound, price 18s.

The PSALMODIA BRITANNICA—a selection of Psalms and Hymns for the Voice and Organ, in six Books, price 3s. each, arranged by EDWIN FLOOD, and may be had in one Volume, neatly bound, price 18s.

N.B.—A New Edition of "Hark, the Sabbath Bells," by EDWIN FLOOD. Price 2s.

MUSIC for the ORGAN or HARMONIUM.

THE AMATEUR ORGANIST—a collection of soft and full Voluntaries, arranged in six Books, 3s. each, by EDWARD TRAVIS.

THE AMATEUR INTERLUDEST—a collection of short interludes to play between the Verses of the Psalms, in one Book, price 4s., by EDWARD TRAVIS and J. F. DYER. THE AMATEUR PRELUDEST—a collection of Preludes, with the Organ Stops carefully marked, in one Book, price 4s., by EDWARD TRAVIS.

MUSIC for the FLUTE.

THE AMATEUR FLUTIST—a selection of favorite Airs from the Standard Foreign Opera, arranged in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY NICHOLSON, with an Accompaniment ad lib. for the Violin, Violoncello, and Pianoforte.

THE FLUTIST'S ALBUM—a collection of favorite Quadrilles, Waltzes, Polkas, &c., arranged in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY NICHOLSON, with an Accompaniment ad lib. for the Piano, Violin, and Violoncello.

MUSIC for the VIOLIN.

THE AMATEUR VIOLINIST—A selection of favorite Airs from the Standard Foreign Operas, arranged expressly for the first position of the Violin, in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY FARMER, with an accompaniment ad lib. for the Piano, second Violin, and Violoncello.

THE VIOLINIST'S ALBUM—a collection of favorite Quadrilles, Waltzes, Polkas, &c., arranged expressly for the first position of the Violin, in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY FARMER, with an Accompaniment ad lib. for the Piano, second Violin, and Violoncello.

N.B.—A New Edition of "Farmer's Violin School." 5s.

London: Lee and Coxhead, 48, Abchurch-lane, and all Book and Music Sellers.

Catalogues gratis.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' "VESPER HYMN,"

ARRANGED as a Fantasia for the Pianoforte. The publisher has great pleasure in announcing a new Edition of this admired composition by Mr. BRINLEY RICHARDS, and to state that he has added to his Catalogue all the newest works of this popular writer.

"Under this modest title, Mr. Richards presents us with a fantasia of novel form, remarkable for originality of effect. An introduction in F, in which fragments of the melody are displayed in full harmony, alternated with brief allegro passages, capriccioso, leads to an episode, in which the idea of the bell that tolls for vespers is poetically indicated. The well-known tune is then led through a series of variations, or ricercate, or changes, in all of which the triste de bruno are different, and skillfully contrasted, while the keys of D flat and A flat are judiciously employed in some of them, to relieve the monotony that would otherwise arise from the constant adherence to the original tone. The variations are graceful and showy, increasing in brilliancy up to the climax, which involves a capital cadenza of the Thalbergian pattern. Mr. Richards has shown an extended acquaintance with the resources of the clavier in this morceau, and the utmost ingenuity in maintaining an easy variety of style during the continuous repetition of the melody over the space of eight pages. The only fault of "The Vesper Hymn" is its brevity."—Musical World.

Charles Ollivier, 41, New Bond Street

Just Published,

THE MIDSHIPMAN'S STAR,

COMPOSED by S. Rousselot, sung by Miss Dolby; Redowa brillante, by Jacques Herz, at Messrs. Rousselot and Co.'s, 66, Conduit-street, Regent-street; where may be obtained also Prospectuses for their cheap new system of Tuning the Pianoforte—at 12s. per annum, once a month; 10s. per three quarters 8s. per two quarters; and 5s. per one quarter.

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY AND THE BRITISH AND INDIAN ARMY.

J. KOHLER, 35, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, begs to direct the attention of Regimental Bands to his New Patent Lever Instruments with the latest improvements, which surpass all others for simplicity of arrangement and purity of tone. Combinations in harmony never before attempted by any Brass Instruments, may now be executed with perfect ease. Regimental Bands supplied with all kinds of Musical Instruments direct from the Manufactory; and as all these Instruments are made under J. KOHLER's own superintendence, they are warranted to withstand the climate of all countries. Efficient Band Masters supplied.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

Mlle. DUPREZ AS ADINA.

FIRST APPEARANCE OF SIG. LABLACHE THIS SEASON—
LES METAMORPHOSES.

IT is respectfully announced that on TUESDAY, APRIL 22, will be presented (first time this season) Donizetti's Opera, L'ELISIR D'AMORE.

Adina, Mlle. CAROLINE DUPREZ,
Dr. Dulcamara, SIGNOR LADLACHE,
(His first appearance this season.)

After which, will be presented the admired Ballet, LES METAMORPHOSES, by Mlle. Carlotta Grisi, Mdles. Rosa, Esper, Jullien, Lamoreux, Allegrini, Aussand, Kohlenberg, Pascales, Soldansky, and Soto; MM. Ehrick and Charles.

Applications for Boxes, Stalls and Tickets to be made at the Box-office of the Theatre.

On Saturday, April 26, Mlle. Alaymo will make her first appearance in England in Donizetti's Opera, LUCREZIA BORGIA.

Madame Sontag will make her first appearance this season on Tuesday, April 29, as Maria in Donizetti's admired Opera of LA FIGLIA DEL REGIMENTO.

Alary's Opera, LE TRE NOZZE, recently produced with the greatest success at the Italian Opera, Paris, will speedily be presented.

QUEEN'S CONCERT ROOMS, HANOVER SQUARE.

MR. EDWARD J. TURNER has the honour to announce to his Patrons and Friends that his FIRST EVENING CONCERT will take place at the above Rooms, on TUESDAY, 6th of MAY, 1851, when he trusts the Entertainments provided will meet with general approbation. Vocalists:—Miss Dolby, Miss Poole, Miss Watson, Mr. Leffler, Mr. Edward J. Turner; Pianoforte, M. Alexandre Billet; Harp, Herr Carl Oberthir, Harpist to the Grand Duke of Nassau; Bassoon, Herr G. Mayer, first Bassoon to the Grand Duke of Nassau; Flute, Monsieur Camus, first Flute at the Italiens, Paris. Conductor, M. Alexandre Billet. Tickets, Seven Shillings each; Reserved Seats, Half-a-Guinea. To be had at the Rooms; of Mr. E. J. TURNER, No. 17, Crown-row, Walworth; Wessell & Co., 229, Regent-street; Prowse, Hanway-street, and at all the principal Music Publishers.

BEETHOVEN QUARTETT SOCIETY.

M. SCIPION ROUSSELOT begs to announce that SIGNOR CAMILLO SIVORI will arrive on the 20th inst., and will play for the first time in London since his departure for America, conjointly with M. Sainton, at the FIRST MORNING PERFORMANCE on the 24th, at HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS. Quartets commence at quarter-past five o'clock. Subscription to the Four Morning Performances, One Guinea and a Half. Single Tickets Half a Guinea; at Messrs. Rousselet and Co., 66, Conduit-street, Regent-street.

PROGRAMME OF

M. ALEXANDRE BILLET'S THIRD CONCERT,

ON TUESDAY EVENING, APRIL 29th, to commence at half-past eight o'clock precisely.

PART FIRST.

1. SUITE DE PIÈCES, F minor. HAYDN.
2. CAPRICE in C major. HAYDN.
3. CHARACTERISTIC STÜCKE (Book I. the Temperaments) MENDELSSOHN.

PART SECOND.

4. SONATA in F minor, Op. 13 (Dedicated to Mendelssohn) W. S. BENNETT.
5. CAPRICE in F minor (Le Déserteur) S. HELLM.
6. SELECTION OF STUDIES—
D minor, Mûdie: A flat, Mac'arren; C Minor
Chopin; D flat, Moscheles; F minor (by desire) Mendelssohn.

CRAMER'S STUDIES.

THE first Volume of this work is now published in the upright form newly revised and corrected by the Author, and divided into four parts, price 6s. each. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street.

A MARANTH COMPOSITION CARACTERISTIQUE pour le PIANO, par E. SILAS.—Cramer, Beale, and Co.'s, 201, Regent Street.

SINGING AND PIANO.

MR. HENRY J. HAYCRAFT, Associate of the Royal Academy of Music, and Member of the Conservatorium in Leipzig, has the honour to announce that he has arrived in Town for the Season, and will be happy to receive pupils. 32, Queen's-road, Gloster-gate, Regent's-park.

CARTE'S PATENT FLUTES.

Just published.

A SKETCH of the successive IMPROVEMENTS made in the FLUTE, with a statement of the Principles upon which Flutes are constructed and a comparison between the relative merits of the Ordinary Flute, the Flute of Boehm, and Carte's two new Patent Flutes. By RICHARD CARTE.

Publishers: Rudall, Rose, & Co., 38, Southampton-street, Strand; Addison, 210 Regent-street; Keith and Prowse, 48, Cheapside; and Cocks & Co., 6, New Burlington-street. Price 1s., or if sent by post, 1s. 6d.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

FIRST APPEARANCE OF SIGNOR MARIO.

FIRST NIGHT OF LES HUGUENOTS.

THE DIRECTORS have the honour to announce that on TUESDAY next, APRIL 23rd, Signor Mario will make his first appearance this season, on which occasion will be performed Meyerbeer's celebrated Opera, LES HUGUENOTS. The principal characters by Madame Grisi, Madame Castellan, Mdle. Angri; Herr Formes, Signor Tagliafico, Signor Polonini, Signor Ferrari, Signor Rommi, Signor Mel, Signor Soldi, and Signor Mario.

EXTRA NIGHT.

FIRST NIGHT OF ROBERTO IL DIAVOLO.

On Thursday next, April 24th, will be performed for the first time this season, Meyerbeer's Grand Romantic Opera, ROBERTO IL DIAVOLO; with the following powerful cast:—

Alice,	MADAME GRISI.
Isabella,	MADAME CASTELLAN.
Elena,	MAD. LOUISE TAGLIONI.
Bertramo,	HERR FORMES.
Alberto,	SIGNOR ROMMI.
Eraldo,	SIGNOR POLONINI.
Il Priore,	SIGNOR TAGLIAFICO.
Cavallieri,	SIGNOR MEL, and
Rambaldo,	SIGNOR SOLDI.
(His first appearance at the Royal Italian Opera.)	SIGNOR STIGELLI.

Roberto and SIGNOR TAMBERLIK.

Composer, Director of the Music, and Conductor,—M. R. COSTA.

Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets may be secured on application at the Box Office of the Theatre, and of the principal Music-sellers and Librarians.

Beethoven's Grand Opera FIDELIO will be produced on Thursday, May 1st.

EWER AND CO.'S LATEST PUBLICATIONS.

Mendelssohn's Operetta "Son and Stranger," No. 18, Poeth. Works, the text adapted from the German by H. F. Chorley ... 15s. 0d.
The Overture for Pianoforte, 2 performers ... 4s. 0d.
The Single Pieces to be had separately.
Molique—Six Pieces for Violin and Pianoforte, Op. 41, two Books, each ... 4s. 0d.
Durner, J.—Three Melodies for Violin and Pianoforte, Op. 17 ... 6s. 0d.
Beethoven—Two Quintetts, one Sextett and Septuor in Score, in 1 Vol. ... 10s. 0d.
Horsley, C. E.—Three Songs—the Poet to his Bride, Entreaty, Flowers ... 4s. 0d.
Pianoforte Player, No. 37, Galop Militaire—Ch. Mayer ... 2s. 6d.
" " 38. Romance—Ch. Voss ... 1s. 6d.
" " 39. Romance Italienne—Ch. Mayer ... 1s. 6d.
" " 40. La serenata—J. Sachs ... 2s. 0d.
Orpheon—A collection of 2, 3, and 4 part Songs and Choruses, for the use of Schools, Families, and Choral Societies; to be published at intervals. Nos. 1 and 2 are out; each ... 0s. 6d.
Mainzer's Fifty Melodies for Children ... 1s. 0d.
Do. Music-book for the Young. ... 1s. 0d.

Ewer and Co., Newgate-street.

WESSEL AND CO.'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

CZAPEK—"La Gorlitz" ... 2s. 0d.
MORINE—"Glenalbyn Polkas" ... 2s. 6d.
DAWES—"Woburn Waltzes" ... 3s. 0d.
ETTLING—"La Chanteuse Voilée," Valses ... 3s. 0d.
BARKER (Laura)—"Sprite Polka" ... 3s. 6d.
TALEXY—"Koscusko, Etude Mazurka" ... 2s. 6d.
" "—"Musidora," Polka Mazurka ... 2s. 0d.
" "—"Helena," Premier Nocturne ... 2s. 0d.
VAN MAANEN—"Atherstone Schottisch," Duet ... 3s. 0d.

Wessel and Co., 229, Regent-street.

NEW PIANO FORTE MUSIC.

THALBERG	...	Irish Airs.
THALBERG	...	Le Prophete.
OSBORNE	...	God save the Queen.
KUHE	...	Styriennes.
KUHE	...	Bohemian Air.
MORI	...	Romance Sans Paroles.
MORI	...	Pensée Pendant L'absence.
BLUMENTHAL	...	Consolation.
BRISSEN	...	L'Arabeque.
RICHARDS	...	Danish Air.
RICHARDS	...	Moonlight Serenade.
WALLACE	...	Polka de Concert.
ROECKEL	...	Clotilde.
MÜLLER	...	Anna Bolena.
MÜLLER	...	Third Romance.
MÜLLER	...	Fragment.

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street.

Printed and Published, for the Proprietors, by MICHAEL SAMUEL MYERS, of No. 3, Stridley Villas, Studley Road Clapham Road, in the parish of Lambeth, at the office of MYERS and Co., 22, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden, in the parish of St. Paul, where all communications for the Editor are to be addressed, post paid. To be had of G. Fulkess, Dean Street Soho; Allen, Warwick Lane; Vickers, Holywell Street, and at all Booksellers.—Saturday, April 19, 1851.

The Musical World.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

Terms of Subscription, per Annum, 16s.; Half year, 8s.; Three Months, 4s.; payable in advance, to be forwarded by Money Order, to the Publishers, Messrs. Myers & Co., 22, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden.

No. 17.—VOL. XXVI.

SATURDAY, APRIL 26, 1851.

PRICE FOURPENCE.

BRITISH MUSICIANS IN 1851.

The 1st of May is close at hand, and no evidence yet presents itself of any unusual stir in the world of music. Is this memorable year to pass away, unsignalized by an appropriate demonstration of activity on the part of English musicians? Will the foreigner be allowed to come, and go, with the sneer upon his lip? We are aware of the small esteem in which we are held by our continental brethren. We are conscious that our mission is considered rather shop-keeping than music-making. Our painters have resented the obloquy, by an appeal to Europe. Europe has answered nobly, and the names of Turner, Landseer, and others are famous over the world. But the painters of England can boast of what the musicians of England wholly lack—a literature and an esprit de corps. The one may perhaps be parent to the other; but, yes or no, our musicians possess neither. We own it, to our shame, for, whatever our enemies and detractors may assert, we shall continue to believe that there is an amount of musical talent in this country equal to any contingency. To mention names would be invidious; nor is it needed; those who are informed on the subject can sum up and draw their own conclusions. We have composers of oratorios, operas, symphonies, and all kinds of chamber and vocal music. We have pianists, violinists, and players upon every instrument. We have orchestras, acknowledged by all who have heard them to be first-rate. We have voices (as good as the Italians) and singers, who, in classical music, cannot be excelled. Who denies this denies the truth, in ignorance or in malice. We are accused, however, of having no "school," and without being able to define the term, we are ready to admit it. We have no school then—be it so. But how readily is this accounted for? Unprotected, unprotected, we have neither the patronage of the great nor the support of each other. We have allowed ourselves to be made tools of by those whose interest it is to disunite us, and who have applied the fable of the bundle of sticks to our disadvantage.

We have no institutions, no theatres, no clubs; and we have not the energy, if we had the will, to combine and create them. An English musician thinks and lives for himself alone, caring nothing for his brethren. We do not "row in the same boat," but each divides the waves of life with his own solitary oar, neglectful of the ship of state that should carry us all together; as though in his particular person were concentrated the whole interests of the art, and the hopes, and profit, and glory of the profession. The error is a grievous one, and has led to unanimous dis-brotherhood, antagonism, and selfishness. How, while this endures, can we expect to have a "school?" We have not even a common play-ground, where mutual good feeling might be engendered, and a bright future spring from the morning of union; as the sun from the eastern hemisphere, chasing away envy, jealousy, and hatred, like shadows.

Where are our National Operas, grand and comic? The French have both; we have neither. And yet, in the poor semblances which, from time to time, have sprung up, our composers have not failed to distinguish themselves. The Mountain Sylph and Farinelli, Nourjahad and the Night Dancers, Don Quixote and Charles II, the Bondman and the Maid of Honor, Maritana, and others (not to go back to Aladdin and The Doom Kiss) are not to be despised. On the other hand, that miserable burlesque of unity, the Society of British Musicians, with all its uncounted sins of omission and commission, did something worth remembering. It brought forward a number of instrumental composers and executants, at the head of whom was Sterndale Bennett, and at the rear, men of no contemptible pretensions. With these antecedents it is sad to contemplate our actual condition—one so forlorn and anomalous, that the existence of a fine work, like the oratorio of David, which should be a matter of general pride and felicitation, is treated as a fact of little or no importance by many among us who should know better, or speak with more reserve.

These are gloomy reflections for festival time, and seem ill assorted to the year 1851, which should be a year of plenty and progress, and universal exultation. But they are not out of place. On the contrary, now is the time to make them; now is the time, if ever, to repent and mend our ways. We beseech our musical friends to use their wits, their courage, and their enthusiasm. We beseech them to do something—not stand idle, to be scoffed at. What must foreigners think, who go to Drury-lane Theatre, and see the Enfant Prodigue, the masterpiece of a Frenchman, performed without the music? Will they not vote us barbarians? They will—and who shall blame them? At Drury-lane the operas of Balfe, which have been represented in France, in Belgium, and in Germany, first saw the light; at Drury-lane, then, it is natural the Frenchman, Belgian, and German should repair, who desire to hear English music in England. but what is there to hear? Nothing—except a French grand opera, without the music. Where else can the foreigner go? Nowhere. The English musical drama has no home, and Balfe himself, with all his popularity, might hand about the score of a newly finished opera, without finding a manager or a publisher!

Is this to last? Why it is worse than when Bunn managed Drury-lane Theatre. Then, at least, we had a dozen operas of Balfe, three of Barnett's, one of Macfarren's, one of Wallace's, one of Loder's, one of Lavenu's, and one of Forbes', without reckoning the foreign adaptations. And yet our musicians did nothing but rail against Bunn. Now we have nothing whatever. Our composers, with operas in their portfolios, seek in vain for the means of representing them. What foreign director will be inclined to afford them a chance, when they are not found sufficiently attractive for speculators at home?

It is very easy to talk—we shall be told; but where is the remedy? The answer is not to be improvised. But surely some scheme might be invented and matured. Suppose, for example, about twenty musicians were to club together, and take Drury-lane Theatre (which is to let), for the purpose of bringing out English operas, during the months of June, July, and August, when all the world will be in London. An opera by each of our best acknowledged composers might be produced, with care and completeness. The prices reasonable—as no ballet would be necessary (the ballet being foreign to the purpose, and unapproachable elsewhere)—the undertaking would, we feel convinced, pay well. But there must be no negligence in the preparations. The band must be good, the chorus good, the singers good, the scenery good, and the rehearsals ample. There must be no remissness, no shuffling, no mean shirking of expenses and pains. We can see nothing impossible in the realisation of this scheme. If there cannot be found a number of musicians courageous enough to attempt it, it might be essayed by Mr. Beale or M. Jullien, presuming that we, who are most interested in the matter, rally around them zealously. It cannot be expected that M. Jullien and Mr. Beale would otherwise interfere in what does not naturally concern them. They are speculative and munificent; but their time and their energies are fully occupied.

But let this, or any other plan, be carried into action; we are not particular as to form; we merely insist that something should be done—that the year 1851 should not be allowed to pass away, without the record of a single event in which the honor and advantage of the British musician are concerned. While every other trade and profession is full of activity and hope, why alone should the followers of “the divine art” be silent and indifferent?

M. GOUNOD'S SAPPHO.

Sappho has been produced, and “the new Beethoven” tested. The result has proved, what every one knew before, that M. Emile Augier is a good classical poet, and that Madame Pauline Viardot Garcia is a remarkably clever person. Who has not read the Cigüe, and who has not seen the Prophète? We offer no opinion upon M. Gounod here, for the best of all possible reasons—because we have not heard his music; and although our correspondent, in whom we have great confidence, has sent us an account which differs, in toto, from the glowing apostrophe of the Athenæum (see Paris letter) we shall do him the injustice to be influenced in no respect by what he writes.

We beg his pardon, but the question is one of such importance in our estimation that we shall credit nothing but our own ears.

M. Gounod's Sappho is to be produced at the Royal Italian Opera. Madame Viardot has so stipulated in her engagement, and the director is bound in honour to bring it out. How pleased we shall be if a fine work appears we need hardly say. At the same time we have not the slightest idea that the author of the sacred and dramatic pieces executed at Mr. Hullah's second Monthly Concert, can, at any period of his life, be equal to the composition of a great one. Those fragments afford presumptive evidence that this is impossible. We are compelled, therefore, to regard the eulogy of the Athenæum, on Saturday, as mere enthusiasm. At the same time we beg our readers, on the other hand, to treat the strictures of our Paris correspondent as pure scepticism.

It will be remembered that the Athenæum was the first to discover M. Gounod, or rather the first to discover that Madame Viardot had discovered M. Gounod. How far anticipation jumped with the specimens of his talent with which the English public were edified, we need not insist. Our readers will not forget that we pronounced them “crude and inexperienced efforts.” We can say more. When in Paris, about two years ago, we assisted at one of the meetings of an excellent amateur orchestra, accustomed to assemble, once a week, in the music-room of M. Sax. There we heard a symphony, which, on enquiry, we found to be the composition of M. Gounod. We regret to state now, that this was in no respect better than the sacred and dramatic pieces produced by Mr. Hullah; on the whole, indeed, it was worse. We remember, after the first movement, observing to Berlioz, who was present, that many such symphonies had been rejected by the committee of the Society of British Musicians; and what these must have been may be guessed from the calibre of others that were accepted and performed. Now we cannot be convinced that a musician, (even though not a native of Great Britain) who has composed a symphony, three long sacred pieces, and one long dramatic scene, without discovering a single new idea, without displaying any beyond the most ordinary talent in the handling of outline, detail, and orchestral colouring, in short without shewing himself at all superior to a hundred more who have produced things deservedly forgotten as soon as heard, is a great genius; we cannot be convinced, in the teeth of reason and common sense, in the face of deduction, analogy, and example, that a musician who has thus written indifferent, not to say (which we might say) bad music, can be capable, at any future time, of meriting such extravagant praises as have been bestowed upon Sappho, by the Athenæum—the Athenæum which pronounced David “no composition,” and Mr. W. H. Holmes unworthy a place in the Philharmonic programme—the Athenæum, which (since a Gounod sprang from his imagination, as Pallas from the brain of Jove) has taken to be critical on Mendelssohn—poor Mendelssohn, who cannot now speak in his own defence. We cannot be convinced of it, and we will not credit it. We have really no patience with the half-patronage, half cold-shouldering, now applied to the works of a mighty genius, the extinction of whose life was the darkness of music—a darkness which twenty thousand of M. Gounod's rushlights would fail to re-illumine. We hate controversy, and respect every man who gives his opinion freely and conscientiously; but, Mendelssohn criticised, and Gounod exalted, is somewhat too much for endurance, and we are compelled to lift our voice in strong dissent, that the honour of the art may not be perilled by the circulation of such strange and unsound doctrine. That Mendelssohn was perfect we do not suppose; nor was Mozart; how much less so, then, M. Gounod, not the shadow of a shade of far less men than either!

BOTTESINI.

This greatest of players on that greatest of instruments, the double-bass, so called because it is an octave lower than the violoncello, will arrive in London for the season, on the 1st of May—next Thursday—the day allotted to the opening of the Exhibition of all Nations; the day in which Her Majesty the Queen will go to Covent Garden to hear Fidelio; the day on which Alary's new opera, Le Tre Nozze, will be brought out at Her Majesty's Theatre; the day of days, in short, on which everything will happen to everybody; and it is hoped there will be no "row," and that London will not be set on fire by the "designing foreigners." The 1st of May, then, will be a fine day for Signor Bottesini's arrival, and we hope a lucky day. That he will be one of the "lions" of the season of 1851 can hardly be doubted, since he is a man of original and extraordinary talent. Van Amburgh's taming of a lion, or Petruccio's of a shrew, was not more marvellous than Bottesini's taming of an instrument so unmanageable and big, to the utterance of tones, soft and sweet as a baby's laugh, or the voice of the beloved one whispering the word desired.

SOPHIE CRUVELLI.

[Translated from the "Constitutionnel."]

Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli was born at Bielefeld (some will have it Dusseldorf,) in Prussia. Her family possessed just sufficient property to have married her to an honest bourgeois. But the vivacity, natural esprit, and remarkable disposition which the young girl showed for music and singing, decided her parents to take her to Paris. At Paris she was placed with her sister, five or six years ago, at a boarding house in the Rue de la Pepinière, which I can see from my window. Permarini and Bordogni gave her lessons. The latter, at once perceiving what sort of a pupil he had got, spared no pains with her; he made her practice the soffeggio four hours a day, and set her the most difficult exercises to study. After two years of severe application, and dry labour from which she never recoiled, her professor at last allowed her to sing something besides mere vocal exercises, and her mother came to take her away. She considered, good lady, that her daughter knew enough of music and French to make the happiness of a German menage, and like Lolotte, to cut excellent slices of bread and butter for the children which heaven might be pleased to send her.

But it was now Bordogni's turn to object. He declared it a crime, and a folly, to separate one of such remarkable promise from the art of her predilection, and that, if they left him his pupil for two or three years longer, he would undertake to make her an accomplished singer. To which Madame Cruvelli replied, with rare good sense—"If my daughter devotes herself to the stage, and freely embraces the career of an artist, we may endeavour to submit to further sacrifices; but if merely destined to marry and bring up a family, she has learnt quite enough of soffeggio; her little fortune will be all consumed by her singing lessons. Sophie being consulted, pronounced for the stage. An i was added to her name (qy.—an l and an i, and a w changed to a v), Cruwel, (for she was too candid to change it for another), and shortly after the family set out for Milan.

At the moment of presenting herself to Merelli, the young artist felt buoyed up with hope and courage. "Let me see," said she, "if I have forgotten nothing. Here are my portfolios, my music, and my letters of recommendation—here is a testimonial from Bordogni, who pledges himself for my ability; my engagement is certain." Alas! poor Sophie had left nothing in Paris but her voice. When she opened her lips not a sound came forth; the extinction of voice was absolute and complete. Judge of the despair of the family, thus seeing, like a castle built of cards, the brilliant prospect they had dreamed of fall to pieces. Nothing was left but to return to Bielefeld, without engagement and without money, for what remained of Sophie's little fortune had been absorbed in the travelling expenses. As they were dolefully making their preparations to depart, the servant announced Signor Lamberti, an excellent professor to whom they had been recommended. Lamberti conversed a few moments with Sophie, questioned her about the accident which had happened so inopportunistically, and persuaded her to postpone her departure for a few days, unwilling to believe that, at her age and in such perfect health, it was possible she could have lost her voice irretrievably. It turned out as he imagined; after a short crisis, the voice came back, stronger and more beautiful than before. The high notes had gained additional purity and clearness, the lower ones were mellow and rounder. Lamberti aided her with his advice, and before the end of 1847, Mdlle. Cruvelli made her début at Venice, in the same part, Dona Sol, in which, the other evening, she achieved so brilliant a success. She next performed Norma, and excited a furore. Mr. Lumley (abandoned by his ancient company), was seeking for artists all over Europe, and hearing Mdlle. Cruvelli at Venice, engaged her for the following season. But the dazzling star of Jenny Lind eclipsed all other luminaries; and after the season, Mdlle. Cruvelli quitted London for a tour in Germany, where she gave dramatic performances and concerts, in various towns, winning for herself, in the eyes of the most enlightened and enthusiastic of musical publics, a position of the highest eminence. She sang at the Royal Opera of Berlin, just previous to the revolution. The rebellion was raging in the streets, and there were not a dozen persons in the theatre. This time it was not her voice that had left her; but the theatre was tottering under her feet.

She left Berlin for Trieste, where, during the carnival, she successively played in Attila, Norma, Don Pasquale, Macbeth—in short the entire repertoire, serious and comic, ancient and modern. Last year at Milan, the public of the Scala offered her the most extravagant ovations; and more recently, at Genoa, in spite of a passing cloud that rose between her and the young habitués of the parterre—the consequence of some misunderstanding—she sang in Lucrezia Borgia, Norma, Nabucco, and Attila, with such success, and her performances proved so attractive, that it was impossible to obtain a place without securing it several days in advance. Her last part—in an opera by Sig. Chiaramonte, a Neapolitan composer—added greatly to her fame, and I have some Italian journals before me which speak con elogi strepitosi of the Gondoliere, (such was the title of the opera), and of the young and beautiful prima donna, who excited such veritable transports.

Mdlle. Cruvelli had been taught to dread the public of Paris. She hoped for nothing more than cold and reserved indulgence; how then, must she have been astonished and delighted, in the Salle Ventadour, to hear applause more warm and vociferous than ever greeted her efforts at Venice, Trieste, and Milan! Paris has inscribed Sophie Cruvelli among the names she has adopted with the utmost affection and enthusiasm.

To her voice so powerful and beautiful, her talent as comedian and singer, her passion, her entrain, her feu sacré, Mdlle. Cruvelli adds another quality, which enhances the value of the rest, and confers an invincible prestige; that other quality is youth; she is scarcely more than twenty.

P. A. FIORENTINO.

BEETHOVEN QUARTET SOCIETY.

The first appearance of Signor Camillo Sivori since his return from America, gave especial interest to the third meeting, which took place at the Hanover Square Rooms, on Thursday afternoon. The quartets were No. 6, Op. 18 (in B flat) and No. 9, Op. 59 (in C—"Razumowsky"). There were only two on this occasion, the gap being filled up by Mendelssohn's magnificent quintet in B flat (posthumous). Sig. Sivori led two quartets; M. Sainton the quintet; and Mr. Hill and M. Rousselot occupying their accustomed posts as tenor and violincello. The second tenor, in the quintet, was allotted to Mr. Webb.

Sig. Sivori was received with great enthusiasm, and his playing showed that his transatlantic trip had in no degree impaired the beauties of his style and execution. He excelled in both quartets. The first, one of the simplest of the early set, was rendered with beautiful precision, great delicacy of style, and entire absence of affectation. The "Razumowsky," as its grander dimensions warrant, was delivered with a larger expression and a greater variety of effect. The fugued finale was given with prodigious accuracy, combined with the utmost fire and point. The allegro vivace (the first movement) was remarkable for the clearness with which the details were made to come out ("sortir" is the French and better mode of expression) from the general canvass, and the andante in A minor, abounded in sentiment and passion. Signor Sivori's performances were applauded "to the echo," and his best friends could not have coveted for him a more successful rentrée.

Mendelssohn's quintet, heard for the fourth time in public, (Dando, Lucas, Ella, Rousselot) pleased in proportion to increased familiarity. It was marvellously well executed by M. Sainton (Sig. Sivori taking the second violin), and his coadjutors. Mr. Hill came out beautifully with the first tenor solo, but the "holding-notes" in the andante-scherzando, for the second tenor, should have been a little louder; they were scarcely audible. This delicious movement was welcomed with such a hearty and unanimous encore as we have seldom heard in a concert-room.

M. Rousselot is going on bravely. While he is about Mendelssohn, however, let us suggest that the Posthumous Quartet in F minor has not been heard since last year, and that it will bear hearing again. We trust that all the seventeen quartets will be presented in the course of the season, according to the original plan of the late Mr. Alsager, the founder of the Beethoven Quartet Society. Besides we want to hear them all; and would not miss one of them—not even the little "Posthumous" in F—for "five pound" of the realm.

MR. HULLAH'S MONTHLY CONCERTS.

The sixth concert, at St. Martin's Hall, on Wednesday the 16th inst. presented an attractive programme. Haydn's oratorio, The Passion, or the Words of the Redeemer on the Cross, a work too seldom heard, was on the whole effectively rendered, the solo parts by Mrs. Enderssohn, Miss Williams, Messrs Lockey and Whitworth. A "Tantum ergo," composed in 1847, by Rossini, on the occasion of the restitution to the Catholic religion of the church of St. Francisco at Bologna, a showy and theatrical composition, with many beauties and not much depth, followed, the solos, for two tenors and bass, being taken by Messrs. Lockey, T. Williams and Mr. Whitworth. This was better executed than the Passion. A "Sanctus," "Hosanna," and "Benedictus," by Charles Gounod, which were heard at the second concert, did not improve upon further acquaintance. Beaucoup de bruit, peu de fruit might serve as a motto for all Gounod's church music. Miss Kearns and Mr. Lockey took the solos, which are singularly unvocal and ineffectual. It was quite refreshing to hear the flowing and simply noble Lauda Sion ("Praise Jehovah") of Mendelssohn after the empty noise of M. Gounod. This beautiful work improves on every hearing. It went very well, under the direction of Mr. Hullah, who was the first to introduce it in England, (in 1849 at Exeter Hall,) Mendelssohn having presented him with the score. The solos were very carefully rendered by Mrs. Enderssohn, Miss Williams, Messrs Lockey and Whitworth.

At the seventh concert, besides a new work by Mr. Edward Fitzwilliam, and the Acis and Galatea by Handel, we are promised a great curiosity, in Carissimi's oratorio of Jephtha.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

The after Easter season brought back Lablache in his great part, Dulcamara, in Donzetti's charming opera, L'Élixir d'Amore, and Tuesday night was, in consequence, a carnival with the subscribers and habitués of Her Majesty's Theatre. Lablache's mirth is, as it were, a Niagara, whose torrent produces an incessant roar—a Nile, which in the season of rains, overflows its banks and inundates the plains. The great basso has long been one of the principal favourites of the opera with the London public, and is always welcomed back with the heartiest applause. His entrée on Tuesday night in the car was the signal for a general shout from all parts of the house which made the walls reverberate. Lablache's voice is as grand and powerful as ever, and his acting as unctuous and rich. As a piece of eccentric comedy his Dulcamara is unsurpassed, excepting by his own Doctor Bartolo, which is the very ne plus ultra of humorous acting.

Mademoiselle Caroline Duprez was the Adina, and a more arch, naïve and piquante village coquet could hardly be imagined. The youthful cantatrice already exhibits a decided talent for comedy, and we hope to see her in many more characters of this stamp. Her humour is genial and natural, and her animal spirits overflowing. The rusticity was admirably assumed, without losing a particle of grace or ease. The singing of Mdle. Duprez was no less entitled to commendation. The music is excellently suited to the capabilities of a light and brilliant soprano, and affords abundant opportunity for the display of fortitudo. In the first aria, "Della crudel Isotta," Mdle. Duprez introduced some cadenzas of a most elaborate and fanciful character, which were executed with singular precision and neatness. A passage of triplets, and a descending chromatic scale, must be noted for facility and equality of delivery. The duet with Nemorino, "Chiedi all'aura lusinghiera," was charmingly sung by Mdle. Duprez and Calzolari, and greatly applauded. The popular duo with Dulcamara, "Io son ricco," was encored with boisterous applause. The duet in the second act, "O quanto amore," also with Dulcamara, was no less admirable. Mdle. Duprez made some capital points here. The words—

"La ricetta è il mio visino,
In quest'occhi è l'elisir"— were given with infinite point, and drew down a well-merited round of applause. But the gem of the evening was decidedly the "Prendi; per me sei libero," which Mdle. Duprez sang to perfection. The introductory passages were exceedingly brilliant and appropriate, and the expression infused into the aria was natural and touching. The voice of the young artist, also, was heard to greater advantage, having apparently gained strength and volume. Altogether this was an undeniable accomplishment of art, and Mdle. Duprez obtained a legitimate success, and was applauded to the echo. In brief, we are inclined to set down Mdle. Caroline Duprez' Adina as her best performance, histrionic and vocal; and so the audience appeared to think, for they recalled her at the end of the opera, and received her with the utmost enthusiasm.

Calzolari was in excellent voice, and sang the music of Nemorino in his happiest manner. We have already alluded to the duet between Nemorino and Adina in the first act, and to the effect produced by both artists. To Calzolari's graceful and finished singing much of this effect must be attributed. Not only here, but throughout the entire opera, the talented tenor distinguished himself by his perfect intonation, expressive phrasing, and pure style. The "Una furtiva lagrima" was given with so much feeling and sentiment, as to elicit a rapturous encore. Calzolari, also, acted the part of Nemorino with great spirit and vivacity, although we are inclined to think he made the lover of the fair Adina a little trop rustique.

Coletti appeared, for the first time we believe, in Belcore, and, albeit the part is somewhat too light and the music too florid for him, the performance indicated that carefulness and intelligence which invariably declare themselves in all his attempts.

In some fragments of the Metamorphoses, M. Taglioni's chef d'œuvre, Carlotta Grisi danced and mimed to such veritable perfection that, late as was the hour, we cursed our stars that the whole ballet was not done, more especially the first act, which, as a combination of etherial dancing, and varied by expressive pantomime, is quite unparalleled. Carlotta is looking more charming and sylph-like than ever. The influenza has not hurt her. How could it, indeed? It lays its hands on her but to caress her.

On Thursday Masaniello was repeated, and proved on the whole the best performance of that opera yet given. Signor Pardini, though not entirely recovered from his recent hoarseness, greatly improved in his singing, and was in high favour with the audience during the evening. He sang the barcarole admirably, and was encored, and honoured with a recall. The great duet between Pardini and Massol produced a real furor. Massol was in glorious voice, and sang with more power than ever. The duet was encored with acclamations, and was demanded a third time, but, of course, not complied with. Madame Fiorentini sang very finely throughout. The cavatina, in the first act, appeared to us more decided and energetic than before. It is needless to add anything to our former encomiums on Mdle. Monti, unless it be that in every subsequent performance new beauties are discoverable.

The ballet was as excellent as before. The bolero and guaracha were danced a marveille and encored. The performance passed off with great eclat.

To-night Mdle. Alaymo, or Alaimo—the printers have not yet made up their minds as to the correct orthography—makes her debut in Lucrezia Borgia. The fair artist has obtained a high reputation on the continent as a great dramatic singer. She is also reported as possessed of remarkable personal attractions. Gardoni reappears in Genaro, and Signor Castanova, a new bass, makes his debut in Gazella.

Madame Sontag makes her rentrée, in the Figlia del Reggimento, on Tuesday. Her performance of Maria last year was one of the great hits of the season, and Mr. Lumley has judiciously selected that part for her first appearance this year. On Thursday Alary's new opera, Le Tre Nozze, will be produced, in honour of the inauguration of the Great Exhibition, which takes place that day. This opera had a great success in Paris, owing to the pleasing character of the music and the strong cast of parts, which included Mesdames Sontag, Guiliani, and Ida Bertrand; Lablache, Gardoni, and Ferranti. The same cast is provided for Her Majesty's Theatre.

A full rehearsal of Lucrezia Borgia took place yesterday, and Mdle. Alaimo produced a powerful sensation upon all who heard her. At the end of the first cavatina, the effect of her singing was so great as to elicit three enthusiastic volleys of applause from the orchestra. It is to be hoped that the influenza will keep his fell grip from the throat of the fair debutante, and not interfere with the fair promise of this evening's success.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The first performance of the Huguenots this season, and Mario's rentrée in his celebrated part, Raoul de Nangis, attracted an overflowing audience on Tuesday evening. With two exceptions the cast was the same as last year—omitting the substitution of Mdle. Bertrandi for Angri in the Page, the popular contralto having been seized with an attack of the prevailing epidemic. The exceptions were, Tagliafico in Nevers—Massol, the representative of last year, having left the establishment—and Polonini in St. Bris, Tagliafico having given up that part to play Nevers. Grisi, Castellani, and Formes retained their roles.

Mario was received with immense favour, and began his first song apparently in his finest voice, and we never remember to have heard him sing with more finish, or produce a greater effect; but towards the end of the first act, and more especially in the septuor in the Pré au Clercs scene, in the second, it was but too evident that Mario was not himself, and that the fell tyrant of the Spring, high Sir Influenza, had dealt him a buffet in the regions of the œsophagus, and modified the voice that else would have charmed and enraptured the eager multitudes that hung upon his lips. Knowing this, and feeling this, Mario bore up long and manfully against every encroachment of the enemy; all in vain, Sir Influenza was not to be balked of his prey, but laid his grasp more firmly on Mario's throat with every succeeding effort of the great tenor. As a matter of course, this contretemps threw a damp over the whole performance, and had not Grisi come nobly to the rescue, there is no knowing what might have been the result. As if to make amends for the calamity that so ruthlessly had stricken down the powers of Mario, Grisi came out with a force and a power that literally were overwhelming. Sir Influenza, appeased by her majesty, and conciliated by her beauty, had spared her, nor touched one note of her silver voice. Grisi sang magnificently, and acted more than magnificently, and, could anything have made amends for the loss of Mario, such acting and such singing must have atoned for it. But Mario's loss is not to be supplied nor atoned for, and so Grisi the glorious, the superb, could not altogether fill up the loss of Mario. The performance was, consequently, shorn of much of its ancient splendour, and the lovers of Mario and Meyerbeer had to indulge in speculations for this evening, when the second representation of the Huguenots will be given, and Mario, it is hoped, will have recovered from his indisposition.

Castellan was in better voice than she has been since the first night, and sang with all her wonted sweetness and brilliancy.

Formes, we think, was better even than last year in Marcel. His singing the "Piff Paff" was powerful and impressive, although it failed to elicit an encore. His acting, too, was striking and forcible, although we fancy he exhibited still too great a fondness for the mystic and the subtle—a characteristic of his style. He was very fine in the Pré au Clercs scene, and sang the duet with Valentine splendidly.

The indisposition of Mdlle. Angri led to our making the acquaintance of Mdlle. Bertrandi, a young singer from the Italian Opera at Berlin, who, at a few hours' notice, undertook to play the part of Urbain. As Meyerbeer wrote the part originally for a soprano, the music fell into its proper place. Although indulgence was of course demanded for the young aspirant, very little was needed. She appeared quite at her ease, sang the romance, "Nobil Signor," with charming naïveté, and demonstrated that besides being a very excellent singer and a good musician, she possessed a flexible voice of the most agreeable quality. Mdlle. Bertrandi, of course, omitted the contralto air in A flat, which Meyerbeer composed expressly for Alboni, when that incomparable vocalist first undertook the part of the Page. She was warmly received by the audience, and liberally applauded. A more valuable acquisition could hardly have been made by the theatre, which stood greatly in want of a comprimaria to replace Corbari.

Altogether, the performance of the Huguenots was not so efficient as we have heard at Covent Garden. The chorus was somewhat disorderly. Tagliafico was an admirable substitute for Massol, in Nevers, and Polonini was exceedingly active and intelligent in the part of St. Bris, although his enthusiasm in singing the vocal points, led him occasionally into extremes.

We cannot do better than conclude our notice of the Royal Italian Opera with the following article from a morning cotemporary:—

"Last night Meyerbeer's Roberto il Diavolo was given for the first time this season. The performance made good amends for the disappointment on Saturday week. The cast, with two exceptions, was the same as last year. A new tenor, Signor Stigelli, replaced Mario as Rambaldo, and Signor Rommi succeeded Massol in the small part of the Herald. It was one of those special evenings when everybody is well disposed, everybody zealous and able to do the very best. Such a faultless ensemble has not been previously attained during the present season, and a fairer opportunity could not have presented itself for strangers to judge of what the resources of the theatre are capable. Grisi, who essayed Alice for the first time a year ago, has now perfected her conception of the character, which henceforth may rank among her most admirable assumptions. The last two years will constitute an epoch in the life of this great dramatic singer. After exhausting the Italian repertoire, and successfully appearing, during a long period of time, as absolute prima donna, both in the serious and comic styles, she has tried her talents in a wholly different sphere, and already made herself thorough mistress of two of the most celebrated parts in the school of Grand French Opera. Such facility betokens the universality that pertains alone to genius. Grisi's Alice is as delightful from its prevailing simplicity as for its passion in the higher and more absorbing situations of the drama. The modest peasant, and the great heart of the woman, which beats for the companion of her childhood, are each represented with the utmost truth; and her performance, wholly without artifice, is as genuine and natural as it is impressive. Roberto is decidedly one of the most striking impersonations of Signor Tamberlik; though graceful and effortless, it is a powerful piece of acting, remarkable for its vigour and romantic bearing. Few tenors can supply the stamina required for the music of this part, which is not merely difficult, but arduous, and in many respects ungrateful for the voice. But Signor Tamberlik sings it throughout with remarkable ease, and the ringing quality of his higher notes produces an effect, in many passages, that may be said to belong to himself alone. Passing by certain mannerisms essentially German in their exaggeration, the Bertram of Herr Formes is the real portrait of the demon-knight. In the scenes with Alice and Rambaldo he presents a wholly different exterior from that which marks his relations with Roberto, and while he justifies the suspicion and inward aversion of the peasant-girl, he does nothing to discredit the friendship and attachment of her foster-brother. His grand points are the scene in which he makes the compact with the demons, and the final trio with Alice and Roberto, where Bertram endeavours to make the latter sign the compact, his design being frustrated by the faith and devotion of Alice. The florid music of the Princess Isabella could hardly be vocalized with more brilliant fluency than by Madame Castellan: and the duet with Roberto, in which the popular air "Roberto, O tu che'adoro!" (Robert, toi que j'aime!) occurs as an episode, is delivered by that lady with remarkable feeling and expression.

After the great hit made by Mario in the part of Rambaldo last year, the new tenor, Signor Stigelli, had a difficult task to perform; but he accomplished it with great credit to himself, and was deservedly successful. He sang the romance, "Regnava un di in Normandia," with pointed effect, and the duet with Bertram, in the second act, "Oh che onest'uom," still better. In the latter indeed, he displayed so much spirit, and such an excellent idea of the dramatic situation, that he was recalled before the audience with Herr Formes, at the end. Signor Stigelli has been known in England for two or three years as a concert singer. He is a German by birth, and has sung in most of the theatres in Italy. His voice is a tenore robusto, of fine quality and considerable power. The high notes are good, and he uses them effectively. His singing is artistic and unaffected. A better acquisition could scarcely have been made, since the theatre was eminently in want of a second tenor, and Signor Stigelli is calculated to fill that place most effectively.

"The praise we have accorded to the execution of the opera in general last night leaves us little more to say. There were, however, some points which came out with unusual effect, and among these the unaccompanied trio, "Lo sguardo immobile," for Alice, Roberto, and Bertram, was sung with a truth of intonation and a steadiness of accent by Grisi, Tamberlik and Formes that we have rarely heard surpassed. It was enthusiastically encored. The duet for Roberto and Bertram in the same act, was also a performance of singular energy, and both artists were compelled to re-appear. Madame Castellan was unanimously applauded in "Robert, toi que j'aime;" and the trio for Alice, Roberto, and Bertram, in which, the good triumphing over the evil principle, the climax of the opera is attained, was a worthy conclusion to one of the most efficient representations of Roberto il Diavolo we can remember. The orchestra and chorus, under Mr. Costa, left nothing to desire; while the horrors of the resuscitation of the nuns, in the ruined cloisters, were agreeably relieved by the clever and sprightly dancing of Mademoiselle Louise Taglioni, as the abbess. At the fall of the curtain Madame Grisi, Signor Tamberlik, and Herr Formes were again summoned before the footlights. There was an excellent house."

Dramatic Intelligence.

DRURY LANE.—Schiller's celebrated tragedy, The Robbers has been judiciously brought forward by Mr. Anderson at a time when the influx of the author's countrymen into London will give additional interest to the production, while the deep and notorious enthusiasm of the great dramatist for Shakespere and the poets of this country certainly has not lessened the public curiosity to see this master-piece of the German school.

The Robbers is too well-known to need detail or analysis. The great length of the work, and the inordinate speeches, rendered considerable curtailment necessary; but amply and judiciously as this has been effected, some of the scenes, however, and many of the speeches are still too long. For example, Karl's lament over the innocence of his childhood, finely wrought as it is, has an epic, rather than a dramatic, interest, and fails in its due effect on the stage. The curse and the oath of vengeance on his brother, also uttered over the body of his father, in the last scene, have the same fault of being spun-out and attenuated; while the unceasing and violent appeals to the Deity might judiciously be omitted.

On the other hand, we were disappointed at the omission of the scene, in the fourth act, between the hero and Amelia, which deprives the action of the variety and relief—the want of which are its chief defects. With these drawbacks, the arrangement, performance, and stage effects, were as excellent as could be desired.

Mr. Anderson in Karl has found a character well suited to his bold and manly style. The noble heart, crushed by falsehood and injustice, seeking refuge from its wrongs in crime and outlawry—and at bitter war with itself—was delineated with a force and versatility which were highly creditable to the actor. The scene at the end of the second act—in which Karl desires his comrades to give him up to the officers of the law—is the best in the piece, and was the most effective in the acting. Mr. W. West gave a forcible and picturesque sketch of the small, though not unimportant, part of Rolla. Miss Gilbert's enunciation wants fluency and ease; but she looked well, and upon the whole played with taste and feeling. The forest scenery is beautiful in the extreme, and the stage arrangements are executed with the utmost care and completeness.

HAYMARKET.—The Easter entertainment commenced here with The Lady of Lyons, and finished with a new burlesque by the Brothers Brough, entitled Arline, founded on the Bohemian Girl, Balfe's most popular opera. The notion of constructing a burlesque on an opera is, we believe, novel. It is also good, as it holds forth a double advantage—the music being obnoxious to travestie as well as the plot. The choice of the Brothers Brough on the present occasion was not entirely felicitous. The Bohemian Girl is undoubtedly one of the most popular and well-known of English operas, but the story is not sufficiently peculiar, pointed, nor elevated—the higher the subject, the better the burlesque—and never excited interest enough to fix it indelibly on the public mind, although, thanks to Balfe's music, it had an unprecedented run in England, and still enjoys a high reputation in Germany, and various parts of the Continent. The fortunes of Arline are very pretty fortunes, but not broadly distinguished from the fortunes of Matilda of Hungary, and other heroines of the Bunnish operatic era, which, at that period, were so much in vogue. In taking the Bohemian Girl as the basis of their new burlesque the Brothers Brough were led by the consideration that they had chosen a subject of great interest, and one perfectly familiar to playgoers. We will not quarrel about the first proposition, but we contend that the Brothers Brough have been led into an error in the second. There are few theatrical people who have not a thorough recollection of most of the airs in the Bohemian Girl; a great many who have not the remotest idea of the story. The piece on which an extravaganza is founded, should be as transparent as crystal in the construction, as well as interesting and well known. We have much respect for Mr. Bunn's poetry, and no mean opinion of his dramatic tact, but with all due deference, his book of the Bohemian Girl is not captivating at a first hearing. From such materials, and in the teeth of such impediments, the Brothers Brough, nevertheless, achieved an undoubted success—not such a success, certainly, as that which followed Prince Camaralzaman, Ivanhoe, The Sphinx, and other efforts of their joint pens, but such as must be termed unanimous and hearty.

Mr. Bunn's plot is followed closely. The chief characters are preserved and the principal incidents remain unchanged. Count Arnheim, the heavy bass who did "The heart bow'd down" in the original, becomes a heavy butcher, and is played with extreme unction by Mr. James Bland; Count Florestine retains most of his normal characteristics, and is represented by Mrs. L. S. Buckingham, who exhibits her pretty figure advantageously in a handsome and a becoming costume; Thaddeus, the hero, transmuted into a runaway Pole, who flies his country and the embraces of sheriffs' officers, is acted and sung in a most spirited manner by Miss P. Horton, who introduces to the audience their umquile favorite, "When other lips," with new and striking words; and Arline, the heroine, one of Bunn's most vivifying creations, has found a most lively, and arch, and coquettish, and sweetly vocal representative in the charming Annie Romer. Mr. H. Bedford figures as the Queen of the Gipsies, and presents an unusually small waist (for a man), and a decided notion of burlesque acting. Buckstone officiates as prime minister, alias Devilshoof, alias "the Kinchin," who supplies Her Majesty with subtle and ambitious hints on the art of replenishing her treasury and larder, and has no misgivings as to the mode of procurement. Buckstone is the life and soul of the piece, and has a part admirably written for him: indeed we remember no extravaganza in which he comes out with more decided force and point.

The music introduced from the Bohemian Girl is well selected and amply treated. Of this, however, the Brothers have not made a marked feature, there being but two or three songs, and one chorus given. Balfe's music, we fancy, might have been more copiously administered, and with good effect. Still we must not complain of the musical selection, seeing that we had popular specimens from Rossini, Bellini, Jullien, Bishop, Macfarren, and Brother Jonathan, which afforded abundant opportunity to the authors for displaying their talent in the concoction of pithy and allusive versicles. The hints were pungent and frequent, and had reference to the most popular topics of the day, some of which excited roars of laughter. The dresses and scenery were rich and entirely new, and the mise en scene goodly and well managed.

The whole passed off excellent well, all the performers were called for, and Mr. Buckstone had the honor of announcing the new Bohemian Girl for repetition every evening amid general and generous applause.

PRINCESS' THEATRE.—After the thirty-fourth performance of Mr. Bourcicault's truly beautiful play of Love in a Maze on Monday evening, this establishment gave birth to a new burlesque founded on a tale of Washington Irving, and called The Alhambra—or the Three Beautiful Princesses, the father-ship of which is ascribed to Mr. Albert Smith of funny fame and facetious facility; and we rejoice to announce that the theatre-mother is doing as well as can be expected after giving to the world as healthy and promising an offspring as ever fattened on the milk of human kindness, which flows so freely from the breasts of a holiday audience. The piece had "an honest and noble success,"* and serve it right, and the theatre is nightly crowded with laughing witnesses of its triumph. To describe it would puzzle a conjuror—how then may we (who are only conjurors inasmuch as we conjure our "patient readers," including the "constant" to exercise constancy in their patience, whensoever, as now, a duty of difficulty devolves upon us) hope to accomplish a description without the chance of puzzling that portion of the enlightened British public which reads the Musical World, no less than the accomplishment puzzles ourselves? Echo answers "How?" Therefore it is evident that Echo, the mysterious maiden of the mountains, will not help us, and therefore the task being worth the trial, we emulate the great wizard of any point of the conjuring compass, and enter upon the ultimate analysis of Father Smith's most curious compound of fact and fiction, reason and rhyme, puns and pageantry, zoology, ærostation, incantation, dancing, dialogue, singing and music, (vide Boarding School Prospectus), and "last not least in our dear love," as well wishers of the management, "drawing included." First, then, we have Will'o the Wisp perambulating Brompton-square, and "holding the candle" to a host of devils, impersonated by the corps de ballet, the assembled "Fairies of all Nations." Then we have Mrs. Keeley "in propria persona" going home to No. 18 in the Square aforesaid, pondering on the product of a piece for Easter "like an ex-king, without a Subject." Then we have an incantation replete with repartee and smacking of smartness, which summons Mr. Flexmore in the character of Le Diable Boiteux, and this "crutched friar" introduces to the Manageress (whose wedded state will prevent her from ever being a Missmanager) Mr. W. Irving, as a worthy, more worthy her attention than all the nine worthies of old. Mrs. K. resolves to profit by the introduction, and takes the Tales of the Alhambra with her in doors where Mr. Keeley, impatient, is calling her to supper, prepared to give him a curtain lecture of the most interesting sort. Meantime, Asmodeus performs an aeronautic excursion in a balloon over the Crystal Palace, London, Dover, Calais, &c., &c., till he arrives at the Alhambra. Then we have Mr. Harley as Baba, who sings a comic song, the chief object of which as regards the development of the drama, appeared to be encored—and it attained its end. This end ended, we had a procession, the members whereof were of multiple magnificence and magnificent multiplicity. We are now in the presence of Mr. Wynn as King Mohammed, and of Misses Murray, Carlotta Leclercq, and Mary Keeley, as the three beautiful princesses and daughters of the aforesaid. Then we have a new reading of the first scene of King Lear with his daughters three, wherein Mr. Wynn's imitation of the great tragedian whose recent setting will for many a long day shed its glory on the dramatic art—was equally unlike anything that we have seen before, and inimitable by all who may come after. O genius! how does thy brightness as it reaches its horizon lengthen the shadows of all whom thou leavest behind thee! But this was nothing to do with either the Princess' or the three princesses who hold their "at Home" there, six nights a week. To proceed—a Moorish hero announces that he has taken prisoners three Christian Knights, and that he is perfectly weak from the violence of the encounter, upon which Baba corrects him with the observation that

"Three nights don't make a week."

Mrs. Keeley, Mr. Wigan, and Mr. Keeley then appear as the three Christian Knights, and are straightway condemned to the bowstring, and on their being reprieved, Baba remarks that "Its noose is good news for them." Then the princesses fall in love with the knights, and the knights coincide with their emotion; then the knights are thrown into slavery; then Mr. Flexmore appears as a monkey, and performs many illustrations of the natural history of this animal; then Miss Leclercq performs a duet for feet and voice, the former executing the pedal part, the latter the vocal; then Miss Robinson and Mr. Harley perform a duet, in which both dance and both sing, and this, like the last-named morceau, was eagerly redemanded; then the Spirit of the Fountain (a kind of "cold without" of the supernatural world) delivers to one of the princesses a magic lyre; then Mr. Wigan appears as a shoeblack, and gives an interesting illustration of domestic economy; then there is a Moorish fete, to illustrate which we have a brilliantly effective influx of gas; then Mademoiselle Auriol dances a pas mauresque in her usually delightful manner, and is accordingly encored; then Mr. Flexmore gives an elegant extract from the last Christmas pantomime, in the shape of a pas comique, and here, for the first time in our experience, we wish Mr. Flexmore less, for we thought his performance quite like a discharged housemaid, decidedly "out of place,"—we were in the minority, however, for it was vociferously encored;—then Mrs. Keeley and Miss Leclercq dance the Gorlitz, an illustration of the progress of fashion in the Terpsichorean art; then Mr. Wigan and Mr. Keeley perform many acrobatic feats as The bounding bricks of Babylon—and here this fund of funniments truly attains its climacteric, for it would be purely impossible to transcend the exquisite absurdity of this display. Everything seems to lose its zest after this last prodigy of preposterousness,—the storm in the mountains, the second incantation, the second aeronautic excursion (this time on the magic carpet, from the story of the Peri Banon, in the Arabian Nights), the second condemnation of the bowstring, the revolution, and even the gorgeous galley that transports the three princesses and their champions to Christendom, however exciting and spirit-stirring they might, and doubtless would have been had they been more propitiously posed, were evidently in their present position unfortunately imposed upon the persevering patience of the public. Some considerable excision was obviously necessary to this latter portion of The Alhambra on Monday, and the exciseman having fulfilled his office, we will gage our pen that the spirit of the whole in being thus improved will be above proof for the future. The scenery, for which this piece afforded unusual scope, was eminently effective; the costumes were costly and characteristic; the music was most pertinently chosen from the most applicable tunes in popular familiarity; the overture was a decided work of nature, for it was unquestionably the most artless production we have for a long time witnessed. Of the acting what needs be said, since we have named the names of the operators? Suffice, that each exerted himself according to his wont, and that the admirers of each will rarely find enough to admire in every of them. On the whole, we may sincerely congratulate Mr. Albert Smith on having added another to his countless successes, and we shall for the future look for his Easter absurdity, knowing it to be as indispensable to the religious and social observances of the season, as Hot Cross Buns and Greenwich Fair.

* The expression is from a writer whose influence we respect more than his judgment.

ADELPHI.—The little drama of "Marie Ducange" has been in company with the new Easter piece brought forward here for the holidays, and exhibits some unusually excellent acting of Madame Celeste. The new holiday production is entitled "O'Flannagan and the Fairies," and introduces us to Mr. Hudson as a sort of Irish Teetotaler who, having promised his betrothed bride, on pain of dismissal, that he will leave off drinking and fighting, is induced to go to a fair, where, having got into a fight in defence of an old witch, (his bride elect in disguise), returns home reeling drunk, and is thrown by the fairies into a dream; during which, his propensities leading him into a wine-cellar, he is arrested as a burglar, condemned, and carried in a cart, up in the air, to the place of execution. He is relieved from his painful vision by his bride and his companions, who in their wedding dresses, awaken him to take him to church. Being thus forgiven and made happy, the honest young Irishman once more promises reformation, not without a suspicion on the part of the audience at least, that his amended promise will not turn out to be worth much more than his broken one. The music is selected chiefly from Irish airs. The dresses and scenery have the costliness, and the dances and grouping the taste and variety, which always characterize these productions at the Adelphi. Mr. Hudson plays with his usual rattling vivacity and humour. Among the other performers, Miss Ellen Chaplin the fair-haired, and Miss Kathleen Fitzwilliam the dark-eyed, looked, sung, and played as well as ever. Miss Collins was encored in a pretty Irish melody. The piece has been received by full audiences with the most decided marks of approval.

SADLER'S WELLS.—This theatre re-opened on Monday with "The Merchant of Venice," and the popular extravaganza of "Fortunio," evincing in the production of the latter piece, a change in the policy which has hitherto governed this theatre.

SURREY.—There exist a number of lugubrious-minded individuals, who go about like birds of ill-omen, predicting the speedy decline of the English drama. If we are to attach any credit to what they assert, we must feel horrified at hearing how long the stage has been on its last legs, and our horror can only be surpassed by our amazement that it has managed to stand erect so many years upon such a weak foundation. The public, these gentlemen inform us, will not patronise theatrical amusements now-a-days, and they account for this in all ways except the right one. They inform us that we have no longer a George III, who visits the theatre three or even four times a week—that the race of great actors is extinct—"Ah, Sir, you should have seen John Kemble!"—that the Operas, like a couple of gigantic Upas trees, overshadow the English stage with their poisonous gloom—and lastly, that our present authors cannot write like their predecessors. On this head, these would-be histrionic undertakers, who are so anxious to see the National Drama dead and buried are wrong, most lamentably wrong. Our present authors do write like their predecessors, and unfortunately, too much so. They imitate them servilely in everything, and this is the real cause of their want of success. The public is a good natured monster, but toujours perdrix is too much of a good thing, and somehow or other, it will no more be contented with the same eternal model in a play, than the most amiable lady of our acquaintance would put up with a bonnet always of the same fashion. Plays as well as bonnets must discard the ancient shapes which used to delight our grandmothers, and adopt new ones if they would command the patronage of the present enlightened age.

The fact is one which modern dramatists and managers have not only disregarded but strenuously endeavoured to disprove, with what success, the treasurers of the different metropolitan theatres will be most delighted to testify. A few hardy free-thinkers in art, however, have presumed to imagine that something new would not be so bad, and that poetic beauties, however great intrinsically, are not quite sufficient to form a play of themselves. These hardy levellers have dared to insinuate that a pearl necklace could not very well be manufactured without a string to connect the several beads, and that interest might supply the place for string to the incidents and characters of a drama. According to every principle of art they were of course wrong; but somehow or other, the stupid public does not see the matter in this light, and we should not be surprised if the immense success which attended the production of "The Czarina, or Ivan the Armourer," last Monday night at the Surrey Theatre, were to make a great number of perverts from the true faith.

The authors of this specimen of the new-fangled school had but the same feelings and passions to work on, which have been at the command of every great legitimate author who has sent his manager to ponder over the sublimities of the old school in the classic solitude of the Queen's Bench; but they connected their characters with such a deep and well-sustained chain of interest, that the audience followed scene after scene with breathless anxiety; their curiosity rising with each successive act

"As if increase of appetite had grown By what it fed on," until, at the fall of the curtain, the house rang with long and spontaneous bursts of hearty applause.

The action of the drama passes in Russia, when under the sway of Elizabeth II. (Mrs. Rignold). This princess has an Italian favourite, Cornaro Pitti (Mr. Shepherd), who, like many other favourites, is playing false to his sovereign, since he is carrying on an intrigue with Meta (Miss Fielding), who has been adopted by Ivan (Mr. Creswick), to whom she is betrothed. Cornaro Pitti is influenced, however, by something more than mere love; he has obtained information that Meta is entitled to immense wealth, and this secret is also known to a Jew spy (Mr. Mead), who threatens to divulge it, but asks such a price for his silence that Cornaro stabs him and flies. Ivan happens to be passing, and learns from the Jew the machinations of the Italian against Meta. A very powerfully written scene then follows, in which Ivan threatens to accuse Cornaro, who has returned, of murder. The latter retorts the charges upon him, and as there are no means of proving who is really the assassin, and as Cornaro is aware of the immense power of the favourite, he asserts the latter in burying the Jew's body beneath the ice of the Neva, and the act closes on their mutual vows of vengeance.

In the following acts, the interest still increases. The Empress is informed of Cornaro's perfidy, and, in her first burst of rage, informs Ivan that he may be revenged by accusing Cornaro of having taken part with him in a plot against her life. Ivan, although aware he is signing his own death-warrant as well, consents, and the favourite is condemned to death. As soon as sentence is pronounced, however, the Empress relents; like our own Elizabeth with the unfortunate Essex, she vacillates between her affection and her rage, until the former predominates. In the meanwhile, however, the Populars become impertinent, and cry aloud for at least one victim. A prisoner covered with a black veil is led to execution, but whether Cornaro or Ivan is unknown. At this point the anxiety of every person in the house fully equalled that supposed to be felt by the Dramatis Personæ, until the appearance of Ivan, who rushes in and falls at Meln's feet, gave the audience an opportunity of showing how deeply they had been moved, and how greatly they were pleased.

Such is a short and imperfect outline of this exciting work. The authors, Messrs. Angus B. Reach and Morris Barnett, have shown great skill in the construction of their charpente; as a natural consequence each scene rises out of the preceding one as a necessary consequence, and the attention of the spectator is held enthralled to the conclusion. The dialogue is nervous and concise, and most remarkable for the extreme felicity the authors have shown in adapting it to the various characters.

Where all were so good, it appears almost invidious to mention any particular persons, but we cannot refrain from expressing our gratification at Mr. Creswick's impersonation of Ivan. Last Monday must have convinced him that great characters—great effects—and great triumphs are to be found in what is termed the romantic school, as well as in the pages of what are called our classic dramatists. The scenery was most beautiful—the dresses gorgeous and correct—the dances, processions, and music excellent, and the house densely crowded. In conclusion, we trust that Messrs. Angus Reach and Morris Barnett will persevere as they have begun, and very soon produce another piece equal to The Czarina.

[Lest it should be concluded from certain passages in our reporter's notice, that we prefer the "new" school to the "old," the "romantic" to the "classic," let us make profession of faith to the contrary.—Ed. M. W.]

MARY-LE-BONE.—The Easter novelties here are a new piece called The Stringer, depicting the adventures of a gang of robbers, whose leader, having too much humanity for his trade, protects his victims from the more atrocious violence of his comrades. The piece progresses with interest through a series of robberies—the capture, imprisonment, and escape of the leader—his re-capture, reprieve, and reformation. Then, among the performers, we have Mr. James Johnstone, as effective as ever; Miss Fanny Williams, pretty and graceful; Mrs. Henry Vining and Miss Eliza Travers, the latter with a part unworthy of her, Messrs. Oxberry and Wild, well known for their powers of broad humour. The little farce of The Two Pages followed, but the gods were so clamorous for their Easter offering that we can depose to no more than that Miss Annie Lonsdale, who played the principal part, looked exceedingly well, and seemed to be playing with spirit and naïveté. The new Burlesque presents us with the loves of Bacchus (Miss Fanny Williams) and Ariadne (Miss Eliza Travers), who with Hymen and Mercury, Momus and the drunken Silenus, carry on the dialogue through a series of puns and merry conceits, some of them, to be sure, a little the worse for wear, which will, doubtless, float the piece down the stream of popular favour for the period commonly allotted to the existence of these holiday ephemera.

OLYMPIC.—The Easter piece at this house is formed upon the basis of a popular subject and rejoices in the title of a well known character "Sir Roger de Coverley." As far as scenery and dresses are concerned all is unexceptionable; in fact, it is never otherwise at this theatre, and due credit should always be given to those parties whose attention is directed to those departments in pieces of a description such as this, for any flagrant departure from their truthful character is more apparent than in classical costumes which admit of a greater and more unknown variety. Addison's Spectator is of course the spring from which the writer has taken his materials and although a more fertile and dramatic source might have been found, he has succeeded in adapting the characters for stage effect, and by introducing other personages he has embraced a more enlarged plot than would have been appropriate for the Olympic stage had Addison been strictly adhered to.

We must say at the same time that the subject is not felicitous, the wit somewhat partial and meagre, and if not for the admirable acting of its dramatis personæ the piece would have waxed heavy. In fact curtailment at present is absolutely necessary in order to insure a lengthened run.

As far as possible Addison has been worked, Sir Roger, Will Honeycombe, and the other individuals being adopted; and an underplot of the Gipsy tribe with their vernacular slang, is introduced with startling effects in fighting, burglary, and poisoning together with other low lived peculiarities creating a dramatic effect at the conclusion of sundry scenes which may be called "telling."

Farren as Sir Roger although having little to do or say is highly effective, while Compton and Farren Junr. keep the audience's risible faculties in action. Mr. and Mrs. Leigh[Murray] as the leading gipsies are admirable, and Miss Howard and the other Farren look and act, the one deliciously and the other admirably. Last though not least Mrs. Stirling as the Widow flirts, and chatters, and laughs, and smiles, until the sober are startled with the reality, and the jovial enchanted with her mirth-stirring representation. The house was not so full as we could have wished. H. L.

LUCAS v. BEALE.

This was an action tried before the Lord Chief Justice in which the plaintiff was nonsuited.

Mr. Keating, Q.C., now moved to set aside the nonsuit and for a new trial. The action was brought in assumpsit by the plaintiff as one of 80 performers of the orchestra of Covent Garden Opera, on behalf of himself and the other performers, to recover 1,280*l.*, their arrears of salary, and was brought against Mr. Beale, the manager after Mr. Delafield became insolvent. On behalf of the orchestra the plaintiff wrote to Mr. Beale, saying they would forego their salaries to the end of the season (1849) if the arrears were paid up. To this Mr. Beale assented, and said he would open the "treasury" to pay on a given day. It was objected at the trial that the whole of the persons claiming payment ought to have joined in the action, and that Mr. Lucas was not, therefore the proper plaintiff. It was also objected that Mr. Beale was only acting as the manager and agent of another, and he was not the proper defendant. On the first objection the plaintiff was nonsuited. Mr. Keating now contended that the contract entered into by Mr. Lucas with Mr. Beale might be considered as the contract of Mr. Lucas acting on the part of the whole body of the performers, or as the several contract of each, and that they ought to have another opportunity of trying the case.

The Court were unanimously of opinion that there was no ground for disturbing the nonsuit. Rule refused.

BARNUM AND JENNY LIND.

Q. Why will Barnum and Jenny never fall out?

A. Because he is always for-getting, and she is always for-giving.

Reviews of Music.

"THREE GERMAN MELODIES," FOR THE PIANOFORTE.—Transcribed by IGNAZ TEDESCO. Op. 45.—Wessel & Co.

Although these little pieces are marked Op. 45, the name of the composer is new to us. Herr Tedesco, however, enjoys, we are told, a high reputation abroad as a composer of light and agreeable music for the piano. The "Three German Melodies" are favourable examples of his style. They are neither too difficult nor too easy; the tunes are very pleasing and familiar, and their arrangement in the shape of brief fantasias, is elegant and unpretending. Of the set before us we prefer No. 1., in G flat, "The Cottage," (Das Hütchen) which embodies one of the sweetest and homeliest of the German national melodies, and No. 3, in E flat, "Lorely," which while equally graceful is more brilliant and expressive. No. 2, in B flat, "True Love," is easier and shorter than either of its companions. It possesses less absolute musical interest, but its simplicity is the result of intention, not the offspring of meagre invention.

We recommend these little pieces of Herr Tedesco as something new and acceptable in the shape of teaching music.

SPIRIT OF LOVE, (GEIST DER LIEBE). CANZONE, Composed by CLARINA THALIA MACFARREN—Cramer, Beale, & Co.

This is a very charming, we scruple not to say, a beautiful song, and one of such merit as few lady-composers are in the habit of giving to the world. The poetry tells of the stillness of evening, the rising of the evening star, and the influence of the "Spirit of Love," wherever the pulse of nature beats, in the stream where each wave flows into another wave, in the wood where each leaf locks itself within another leaf; the Spirit is then invoked to lead the chosen one to her betrothed, and the moral of the whole is, that one love-look from the beloved brightens the earth with the splendour of heaven. The general feeling of this poem is fully infused in the music, and the particular rendering of each phrase truthful and poetical. Apart from the expression of the words, to succeed in which is no mean thing, the song has musical points of much interest—such, for instance, as the manner in which the episode in E major is introduced in the third page, and the subsequent return of the original subject in the minor of the same tonic. The melody is essentially vocal, and likely to produce, in the hands of an intelligent singer, a marked effect upon every intelligent audience. We shall look with pleasure for some further examples of Madame Macfarren's talent for composition.

THE GORLITZA. Dedicated to Miss Eleanor Jeffreys. W. GRILLIERS. D'Almaine and Co.

Another Gorlitz (not ca) without the permission of M. Varin. What says Mr. Byrn? Mr. Grilliers, more communicative than his brother Gorlitz-g-makers, has topt his music with a description of the nature of the dance, which we insert with many protestations of gratitude.

Description.—"The Gorlitz is a new and fashionable dance which has lately been introduced in Paris and London by some of the most eminent professors. It is somewhat slow, is danced in couples in the same manner as the Polka, Schottische, &c. It consists of four steps only, one of which is the Polka Mazurka; it can easily be acquired by those who are accustomed to the fashionable dances."

How now, Mr. Byrn?—how now, M. Varin? What say you to "some of the most eminent professors?" Here is a matter for your consideration. Fall to, devour, and may you have a good digestion. Mr. Grilliers, as far as our conception takes us, in the composition of his Gorlitz, which is very sparkling, tuneful, and rhythmic, has not in any way availed himself of the inspiration of M. Varin. There are no "blinds" to shut out the light of originality. And yet, as a piece of dance music, we must confess that we greatly prefer it to the Gorlitz of M. Varin, whose permission has not been asked, and whose bars have not been borrowed. We congratulate Mr. Grilliers on having manufactured a Gorlitz which is catching without being common, and fluent without being fussy.

"THE SONG OF THE BIRD," Words by CARL ROSENBERG, Music by E. J. LODER. Jullien and Co.

Talk of German lieder, here is an English song, a ballad in three couplets, which, whether for the genuine simplicity and freshness of its theme, or the exquisite finish of its accompaniment, may vie, not only with the best of Schubert, or Weber, but what is better, with those still more fine inspirations of Mozart, Beethoven, and Mendelssohn, the real kings of German folk-song. We have seen few short and unambitious lyrics during the last few years more thoroughly adapted to display the talent and expression of a skilful concert vocalist, or move the feelings of an intelligent audience than this little gem, from the pen of one of our most accomplished and fertile musicians. We recommend it especially to tenor singers—English, German, French, and Italian. It would suit Mario, as well as the beautiful song from Elijah, which first introduced him as an English singer to an English public at Birmingham; or it would suit the fougueux Tamberlik in one of his softer moments; or it would do very well for the new and successful tenor, Stigelli, who, by the way, is one of the best lied singers of Germany, and, moreover, speaks English fluently: better than all, perhaps, would it go to the stirring tones of our British Sims Reeves. Nor do we wish to exclude our lady vocalists, whom we need not signalize by name. Bref—if Mr. Loder's "Bird" sing not his song in every chamber where a pianoforte and a voice can be combined we shall be sorry, not for the song itself, but for the singers who shall fail to sing it.

"DAVID,"—A SACRED ORATORIO—BY CHARLES EDWARD HORSLEY. ADDISON.

We have received a letter from the composer of David, which is no less personally gratifying to us, than interesting as an explanation of the intention carried out in a very important feature of the work. The composer's explanation is the best possible comment on his work; and we therefore think it the best justice to Mr. Horsley to print his letter. G. A. M.

"My dear Macfarren,—I should deprive myself of a pleasure if I did not take the earliest opportunity, after an absence of some days from London, of thanking you very heartily for the sincere and candid criticism of David, in the last number of the Musical World. It is at all times refreshing to a musician to find his labours appreciated by those who thoroughly understand his craft, but more especially is it so in these days, when, as it appears to me, certain London critics are bent either upon annihilating the whole race of English composers (unless, indeed, they are content at aiming at no higher standard than is to be found in the composition of glees and madrigals), or else, being influenced by still more unworthy motives, they allow these unenviable feelings to get the better of their judgment.

"Of your praise and censure of my work, I will say nothing except to thank you for both.

"There are, however, two points which require explanation.

"1st. As regards what you call a 'Chorale.' Some years ago I taught the daughter of a Rabbi, and with this gentleman I had many interesting conversations respecting the musical service of the synagogue. He sang me many melodies which were very striking, especially some, which, to me, bore a great resemblance to the Lutheran tunes. Upon enquiring the origin of these he assured me they had been handed down from time immemorial, and by some were supposed to have been used at the dedication of the temple in the time of Solomon. When therefore I came to that part of David in which I attempt to illustrate the carrying of the ark to its appointed place, I thought I was justified in writing a tune which bore some resemblance to what I was told was Jewish music, and hence the origin of this 'Chorale' if it can be so called. To quote a musical authority, I would refer to parts of Elijah and Athalie, which, I think, are constructed on a similar principle.

"As regards the tune itself, I always thought it was my own, until I discovered (some months after I had written it) the first phrase in an old psalm tune called, 'St. Thomas,' in a Psalter dated 1590 or thereabouts, but I was not at all aware until I read your review, that it was at all traceable to any 'Grandmama's ditty.'

"2ndly. I must plead guilty to the harmonic progressions to which you object, as I consider them anything but faults. I will not, however, enter into any discussion on this subject, as our harmony might end in 'unresolved discord.'

"Once more thanking you for your review, and trusting that in my next large work I shall avoid many of the faults I as well as others find in 'David,'

"Believe me, my dear Macfarren,

"Very faithfully yours,

"CHARLES EDWARD HORSLEY.

"G. A. Macfarren, Esq.,

"P.S. You are quite at liberty to make any public use of this letter, if you think it worth while so to do.

"Kensington, April 24th 1851."

Foreign.

NEW ORLEANS.—The True Delta, now that Jenny Lind and Barnum have departed, and there is no more money to be received, has seized the occasion to assert its independence, and peppers the Nightingale in a sum up. In this strain runs his preposterous palaver:—"She possesses power of voice all but unrivalled, a fine knowledge of music, and rare operatic talent; but she wants sincerity, and fails to touch the feelings or touch the passions of her auditory. Her English ballad singing is Opera burlesque; deficient alike in pathos, sentiment, and passion, which we regard quite as much a defect of her vocal organization as of imperfect knowledge of the alien language she essays to employ." Verdi's Due Foscari has been brought out at the Orleans Theatre with Madame Derris and Mons. Genibrel as sujets. The critics declare a preference for Jerusalem. There is some talk of Genibrel being engaged by the great London impresario, Mr. Lumley.

NASHVILLE.—Jenny Lind arrived here en route for New York, with Mr. Benedict, Signor Beletti, and party. The concert at Natchez and Memphis created the greatest enthusiasm. The Talequal Advocate, (a Cherokee paper), writes:—"As we live so far from the public highway, we do not expect the privilege of seeing the Nightingale; but, that the recollection of so great a songstress may not be lost among us, our citizens, Rev. S. Foreman and lady have named their infant daughter, Jenny Lind (wonderful!). We cannot now say that the infantine Jenny will ever equal her namesake in the sweet and delightful art of music. Yet one thing we have heard, that she already makes considerable noise (wonderful!)."

NEW YORK.—Vincent Wallace has just recovered from a severe attack of inflammation of the eyes which threatened him with blindness. Mr. T. D. Jones, a sculptor of repute, has received a commission from a musical amateur here to execute a bust of the popular composer. Maretzek's Italian Opera is shut up, but in its place we are shortly to have a French Vaudeville Company under his management, at the Astor Place establishment. A series of Quartet Concerts, under the direction of Mr. Eisfeld, is taking place at the Hope Chapel. The quartet is composed of Messrs. Noll, Reyer, Eicorn, and Eisfeld. At the second meeting a quintet by Robert Schumann, in which M. Scharfenberg played the pianoforte part, was given. The Alleghaniens, a vocal Quartet Club, has also commenced a series of performances in the same locale. The Hutchinsons are here, but it will be heard with regret, that Abby Hutchinson no longer takes part in the family performances. Plenty of minor concerts are going on, but on the whole, things are dull.

JENNY LIND'S AMERICAN TOUR.—Upon the return of Jenny Lind to New York, or as soon thereafter as possible, the public will be favoured with a description of her tour in the United States and Cuba. The work will be from the pen of Mr. Charles Rosenberg, who has been one of the party, and is pre-eminently qualified for the duty. Mr. Rosenberg was for many years the musical critic of the London Morning Post, and collaborateur in the Musical World, is an able writer, and his personal knowledge of the whole tour, and the whole performances of Jenny Lind, will enable him to give to the publication an interest which none other could invest it with. The work will be issued in the handsomest style of modern printing, with embellishments, and sold for the low price of one dollar.

CHARLESTON.—The Italian Opera here with Parodi as prima donna, supported by Truffi, Forti, Rossi, and Benevenuto, is very successful. The season began with an opera by Verdi, called Ernani, in which the music was very loud.

WASHINGTON.—Madame Anna Bishop has been giving concerts here at Jackson Hall, assisted by Novelli, an Italian bass, and Bayley, a pistonist.

VICKSBURG.—According to the Sentinel of the 25th ult., Jenny Lind appears likely to have a great concert here. The Vicksburghites are enthusiasts, and, it would appear, there be hatters here, since up to the hour of the Sentinel's going to sleep—or rather press—on the 24th ult., "four tickets had been guaranteed in Vicksburg!" for 80 dollars, leaving only 9920 to be deposited.

ST. LOUIS (March 24).—Unpleasant as was the weather which prevailed during the greater part of Saturday, it was far from preventing the public from attending the third concert. The seats had been purchased at a high price, and the purchasers were unwilling to lose their money. The prudent people wrapped themselves up in cloaks and mantles, and deposited themselves in carriages, or in hackney vehicles, for the sake of arriving at the concert. We ourselves arrived late at the Hall, and when we walked to our place, we confess that we felt astonished at the array of beauty which met our eyes. Possibly the bad weather and the clouds had not prepared us to anticipate the presence of so much of feminine loveliness; but very certainly, the brightest eyes and the fairest brows in St. Louis, were beaming with anticipation. The programme was excellent. The two overtures were the Fausto Magico and Fra Diavolo. Signor Belletti sang the aria from Lombardi, "Sciagurata, hai tu creduto," and "Miei Rampolli," from Rossini's Cenerentola, and Rossini's "La Danza." The pieces selected for Jenny herself, were "I know that my Redeemer Liveth," "Qui la Voce," from Bellini's Puritani; the duet "Quanto Amore," taken from the Elisir; "Und ob die Wolke," from Der Freyschutz; the charming ballad, "Take this Lute," by Benedict, and "The Last Rose of Summer." "I know that my Redeemer Liveth," was delivered with a fervor of the most exalted character and gave us a far higher opinion of Jenny Lind than anything we have yet heard. It realized to us the impression we had formed of a great religious songstress. The triumph of the evening was the prayer from Der Freyschutz. Benedict's ballad of "Take this Lute," confirmed the opinion we had previously expressed concerning the abilities of this Master. It is an excessively graceful composition, and led us to wonder that he has not given the American public more of his own music. We presume this may possibly arise from the difficulty which Belletti finds in singing English. At any rate, we are the sufferers. Altogether this was the best of the three Concerts which Jenny Lind has yet given.

The presentation, by the Polyhymnians, to Miss Jenny Lind, of a certificate of honorary membership of their Society, took place last Wednesday. Miss Lind had been advised of the proposed compliment, and at six o'clock in the afternoon, the hour she had fixed, received the committee, consisting of eight members, of the Polyhymnia. Mr. Haven, President of the Society, presented the diploma, or certificate saying, as he did so, that himself and his companions had been deputed by the musical association of which they were members to pay the tribute to her, which her extraordinary powers, and her pre-eminent attainments called for, with many other compliments. The association embraced not only all the musical talent of the city, but many old and respectable merchants, mechanics, and professional men, and some of the highest judicial officers of our city, and had for its object the encouragement and promotion of musical taste in their city, yet he gave utterance to the feelings of every member when he expressed their readiness to go out of the regular course, to pay their acknowledgments to the exemplary charity, praiseworthy benevolence, and the hundred other amiable traits which with Mdle. Lind had become proverbial. In conclusion, he solicited for the Society the most flattering honor it had ever received—the acceptance of the diploma, a mark of the lasting regard and attachment of the persons who offered it. Miss Lind accepted the diploma, and replied with a modest grace that became her quite charmingly. The roll was enveloped in two small white satin flags, the one American and the other Swedish. The committee remained with Miss Lind about half, or three-quarters of an hour in social conversation. Miss Lind was quite warm in her approval of the performances of the society at the serenade, the evening previous.

At the concert of the Polyhymnians, on Friday evening, Miss Lind, accompanied by Messrs. Benedict and Belletti, were received by Mr. Haven, who conducted them to their seats, and who afterwards continued to do the honors throughout the entertainment. Miss Lind seemed pleased with the music, applauding warmly at various times.

At the third concert of Mdle. Lind, the overtures were, the Italiana in Algeri and Zampa. Jenny sung "Ah non giunge," the Gipsy's song from Meyerbeer's Camp of Silesia, the Bird Song, and the Mountaineer's Song. Then there was a ballad from the Brides of Venice, by Benedict—"By the sad sea waves"—and the duet, of which we expressed so warm an opinion a few nights since when it was performed for the first time, by the same master, and in our opinion, remarkably graceful and elegant. Indeed, the more we hear of the music of this writer, the more decidedly do we relish it. He is a remarkably finished and careful composer, and has a right to take his stand by the side of the leading names in the history of music. The ballad gave us an opportunity of testing the excellence of one of the operas to which we alluded, as we believe, in our criticism upon the third concert being taken from the Brides of Venice. It is wonderfully pleasing, and is composed with very evidently a profound and tranquil appreciation of the effect intended to be produced, which we presume, from the words, to have been the feeling of a calm sorrow. As it was sung by Mdle. Jenny Lind, it merited and received the warm and enthusiastic applause of the audience, and would, as we should conceive, eventually be remembered as one of the various charming novelties with which she has made us acquainted. The "Gipsy's Song" was a novelty in St. Louis. It is from the Camp of Silesia, by Meyerbeer, a singularly effective and spirited air. Jenny sang it deliciously, and the applause was warm in the extreme. Suffice it, she rendered it with a taste that fully justifies Meyerbeer in the caprice of withholding it from the public since she has left the stage.

Belletti sung "Nembe Fremete" from Benedict's opera of La Zingara—a cavatina from Don Pasquale, and Tadolini's barcarole "Se la vita vuoi godere." The "Nembi Fremete," which being taken from another of Benedict's operas, La Zingara, gave us the opportunity of judging his merits as a composer on an entirely different ground. It is a vigorous and masterly effusion, written apparently under the full inspiration of the feeling which it was intended to illustrate. Nothing could well have been more forcible than was this aria, or sung with more expression, than by Belletti, and it more than confirmed the opinion which we have previously expressed of its composer. And so farewell to Jenny.

With the exception of the concerts of Miss Jenny Lind, no musical entertainment has been so well attended as the Polyhymnian concerts. The "Nightingale" herself was present at the last, and attracted much attention to the part of the gallery she occupied. The entertainment went off satisfactorily.

Miss Charlotte Cushman has been playing here to crowded houses. She is a great favourite with the St. Louis public, as with every other, and the longer she remains among us the more friends and admirers she will acquire.

Whether we take Mr. Barnum as the readiest man in the world to oblige his friend the public, or as—if we may be allowed the liberty—a financier of masterly abilities, or as the ruling monarch among the caterers to public curiosity, or as an ardent advocate in the cause of temperance, we have reason to rank him among the astounding geniuses of the day. The manner in which his temperance lecture in the St. Louis theatre was received, shows that he is as popular as astonishing. The audience embraced a large portion of our most respectable and enlightened citizens, who received the views of the speaker with evident marks of satisfaction. Mr. Barnum is very practical in his speech, dealing only in sober matters of fact. He spoke of the evils of intemperance; mentioned the impossibility of success in business where a love of ardent spirits had been imbibed; alluded to the many species of misery to which the drunkard subjected himself, and all that were connected with him, and thus went on for one hour or more interspersing his address with numerous illustrative anecdotes.

HAMBURG.—At the Stadt Theatre there will be a very interesting debut next week. Madame Macfarren, well known in London as a singer of merit, and as the wife of the eminent composer, G. A. Macfarren, will make her first appearance as Tancredi in Rossini's celebrated opera of that name.

Original Correspondence.

SIGISMOND THALBERG.

(To the Editor of the Musical World.)

Thalberg is 39 years old, and was born at Genoa, on the 7th of January, 1812.

Edinburgh, 21st April, 1851.

D. HAMILTON.

PRIZE ANTHEMS.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—Some time since I saw it announced that Mr. Surman's Exeter Hall Society had offered Prizes for the composition of Anthems and orchestral accompaniments.

In common with other musical friends, I was much rejoiced at this mark of liberality towards English musicians, and have since been waiting in anxiety the publication of the promised detailed plans.

Can you or any of your readers inform me if such is yet issued, and if so, what arrangements are made for submitting the works to the examination of competent professional advisers; also, whether parties competing for the prizes will, if successful thereby, part with their copyrights in the compositions, or will they be at liberty afterwards to publish them on their own account.

23rd April, 1861.

A CHURCH MUSICIAN.

WORDS FOR MUSIC.

As fading leaves upon a tree,
When winter comes, decay,
So thy inconstant love for me
Exhausted, dies away.

In gaudy fashion's gayest throng
Go—pass thy fleeting hours;
But thou shalt feel a sense of wrong,
The bright sky sometimes lowers.

Upon thy melancholy smile
The wond'ring crowd will gaze,
Surprised to see thee bend awhile,
To sorrow's circling rays.

Then pleasure's cup still deeper drain,
Nor drop the conscious tear,
I will not, spite of thy disdain,
Molest thy brief career.

HERRMANN LANG.

Miscellaneous.

JULLIEN.—The great entrepreneur has returned from the provinces crowned with fresh laurels. The question is universal, now that Jullien is in town, "what will Jullien do during the Great Exhibition?"

A FOSTER DOUBLE BASS.—A genuine double bass, made by the Elder Foster, is advertised for sale at the establishment of Messrs. Duff and Hodgson. Foster, it is said, manufactured only four of these instruments, each of which realised a high price. Whoever is in want of a first-rate double bass has now an opportunity of gratifying his wish. For further particulars see our advertisement columns.

AMERICAN CRITICISM.—A writer in the Missouri Republican, speaking of Jenny Lind's singing of "I know that my Redeemer liveth," says that he "never heard such expression infused into a human song." A human song is new. Further on he adds of another performance of Lind, "it was the finest morsel of singing" he had ever heard. Morsel of singing is good.

Mons. JULES DE GLIMES, the fashionable conductor and professor of singing, has arrived in town from Berlin for the season.

MADAME PARISH ALVARS.—In reply to several correspondents we beg to inform them that this talented Harpiste is re-married to M. Fischer (late of Vienna), but that she continues her professional occupations under the well-known name of Parish Alvars.

SCHILLER'S "ROBBERS."—To the students of German literature no work, probably, is more familiar than this earliest of Schiller's dramatic works. As a specimen of power—rude, undisciplined Titanic power—it stands perhaps unrivalled. The author, when he wrote it, was a mere youth, subject to the rules of a military school so severe that they made him detest all rules whatever, whether they were those of ordinary society or those that regulated the literature patronized by the courts of the day. Hence he was determined to execute a work which, while it was professionally directed against political tyrants, should exhibit, at the same time, a thorough emancipation from those laws of taste which French critics had imposed. Inspired with the notion of a hero who abjured all conventional systems, and conceiving a number of strong incidents which would effectively show forth the central Colossus, Schiller subjected himself to no form beyond that which his matter dictated, and flung upon the paper a huge work, much longer than Shakspeare's longest play, astounding for the force and variety of the characters, and for a diction which, though often bombastic, never ceased to be vigorous. Now the play looked like a melo-drama, presently it assumed the form of an essay; the most startling visible events passed before the eye, the largest questions which affect human nature were discussed; but, however the aspect was changed there was always the appearance of strength of the highest order. The generality of modern critics regard the Robbers as the sort of raw material which subsequent discipline polished into a Wallenstein. But those are not wanting who regard Schiller's earliest period as his best, and admire the rough productions of his youth more than the well-digested works which received the polish of Weimar—Times.

MISS CATHERINE HAYES.—This eminent soprano has just returned to London from Rome, where she was engaged during the Carnival, and where she achieved the most brilliant and constant successes.

HERR REICHARD, the principal tenor at the Court of Vienna, has arrived in London. This artist is equally noted in Vienna as an operatic vocalist Lieder-singer.

MISS BASSANO.—It was incorrectly stated, that during the illness of Mdllé. Jetty Treffz, Miss Poole and Miss Bassano alternately supplied the place of the popular German in M. Jullien's tour; for Miss Bassano was the only substitute, Miss Poole being engaged every night at the Apollonicon concerts.

MISS DURLACHER has returned to town to resume her professional duties.

CAMILLO SIVORI, the celebrated violinist, arrived from Genoa on the 18th instant, two days sooner than he was expected. We are requested to state that, although announced in the bills, he had entered into no engagement whatever to play at the promenade concerts in the Lyceum Theatre.

CORBARI.—A correspondent enquires if it be true that this charming singer is going to join the Royal Italian Opera troupe this season. We cannot inform him precisely; but we believe there is no such good chance in store.

HERR MENTER, a violoncellist of great reputation, from Stuttgart, has arrived in town. This is Herr Menter's first visit to London.

HERR ECKERT.—The Italian Opera in Paris having closed, this well-known composer and musician, who holds a high position in Mr. Lumley's Parisian establishment, has come to London for the season.

NEWLY INVENTED BOW.—We have been favoured with a specimen of a new bow, the invention of Mr. Moat, which is registered as patent. On examination it appears to us that this bow has many advantages over its predecessor, the ancient bow. First the substitution of a metal for the ordinary wooden head, which facilitates the re-hairing, hitherto a difficult and unsatisfactory process. By the metallic head we have a more equal tension of the hairs, and, so to speak, a smoother surface is presented to the catgut. Moreover the handle is altogether constructed on an original plan. There is now a shoulder for the first finger and thumb to rest upon, which gives an unusual and advantageous purchase; in addition to these desirable points, the bow is handsomely got up, and, in spite of its metal top, and added elbow, is very light and portable. We unreservedly approve of the invention, and recommend it to all our fiddling friends, both amateur and professional.

GREGORIAN CHANT.—Dionus, in his life of St. Gregory, says the French and Germans of that age were unable to sing the Gregorian Chant. "Their figures were gigantic, and when they sung, it was rather like thunder than musical tones. Their rude throats, instead of the inflections of pleasing melody, formed such rough sounds as resembled the noise of a cart jolting down a pair of stairs."

CHESTERFIELD—The Assembly room was, on Tuesday evening, the 8th inst., filled by one of the most fashionable audiences ever assembled in Chesterfield;—every part was made available—side seats, orchestra, and even the platform itself—but still several hundreds were unable to gain admission. To Mr. Trimmell the public are indebted for the Messrs. Distin's visit; and the distinguished patronage he has obtained, the celebrity of the artistes, and the excellency of the arrangements combined to produce, as we have stated, "a house more than full." Miss O'Connor was the singer, and Mr. Brown the pianist "accompagnateur." The audience were delighted throughout with the performances of the Messrs. Distin.

Advertisements.

SIGNOR BOTTESINI,

MUSICAL DIRECTOR OF THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA AT HAVANA, BEGS to apprise the Musical Profession and the Public that he will arrive in London at the beginning of May, and remain during the entire Season.

Letters and applications for engagements to be addressed to Sig. BOTTESINI, Wessel and Co., 229, Regent Street.

WESSEL AND CO.'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

CZAPEK—"La Gorlitz"	2s. 0d.
MORINE—"Glenalbyn Polkas"	2s. 0d.
DAWES—"Woburn Waltzes"	3s. 0d.
ETTLING—"La Chanteuse Volée" Valse	3s. 0d.
BARKER (Laura)—"Spritz Polka"	3s. 0d.
TALEXY—"Koscusko, Etude Mazurka"	2s. 0d.
—"Musidora, Polka Mazurka"	2s. 0d.
VAN MAANEN—"Athenstone Schottisch," Duet	3s. 0d.
TEDESCO—"Three German Melodies."
No. 1. "THE COTTAGE."—(Das Hütchen)	2s. 6d.
" 2. "TRUE LOVE."—(Treue Liebe)	2s. 0d.
" 3. "LORELEY."—(Loreley)	3s. 0d.

Wessel and Co., 229, Regent-street.

LEE & COXHEAD'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

A NEW PIANOFORTE SCHOOL, by ALBERT KELLER, price 4s.

"We can confidently recommend this Pianoforte Tutor as the best extant: Mr. Keller has adopted the judicious method of arranging the scales and exercises amongst the lessons, by which plan the pupil is taught those essentials without turning to a formal book of scales, &c.,—the fingering is carefully marked without being crowded, and is evidently written by one who has had great experience as a teacher."

Also, "Delices de la Jeunesse," in 12 sets, price 2s. each, written expressly follow the above Tutor, by C. W. Glover.

SACRED VOCAL MUSIC.

KELLER'S Collection of ANTHEMS, CHURCH SERVICES, CHANTS, &c., arranged for the Voice and Piano, in six Books, price 3s. each, with six beautiful and appropriate Designs by Brandard, arranged by ALBERT KELLER; the six Books can be had in one Volume, elegantly bound, price 18s.

THE PSALMODIA BRITANNICA—a selection of Psalms and Hymns for the Voice and Organ, in six Books, price 3s. each, arranged by EDWIN FLOOD, and may be had in one Volume, neatly bound, price 18s.

N.B.—A New Edition of "Hark, the Sabbath Bells," by EDWIN FLOOD. Price 2s.

MUSIC for the ORGAN or HARMONIUM.

THE AMATEUR ORGANIST—a collection of soft and full Voluntaries, arranged in six Books, 3s. each, by EDWARD TRAVIS.

THE AMATEUR INTERLUDEST—a collection of short interludes to play between the Verses of the Psalms, in one Book, price 4s., by EDWARD TRAVIS and J. P. DYER.

THE AMATEUR PRELUDIST—a collection of Preludes, with the Organ Stops carefully marked, in one Book, price 4s., by EDWARD TRAVIS.

MUSIC for the FLUTE.

THE AMATEUR FLUTIST—a selection of favorite Airs from the Standard Foreign Operas, arranged in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY NICHOLSON, with an Accompaniment ad lib. for the Violin, Violoncello, and Pianoforte.

THE FLUTIST'S ALBUM—a collection of favorite Quadrilles, Waltzes, Polkas, &c., arranged in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY NICHOLSON, with an Accompaniment ad lib. for the Piano, Violin, and Violoncello.

MUSIC for the VIOLIN.

THE AMATEUR VIOLINIST—A selection of favorite Airs from the Standard Foreign Operas, arranged expressly for the first position of the Violin, in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY PARKER, with an accompaniment ad lib. for the Piano, second Violin, and Violoncello.

THE VIOLINIST'S ALBUM—a collection of favorite Quadrilles, Waltzes, Polkas, &c., arranged expressly for the first position of the Violin, in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY PARKER, with an Accompaniment ad lib. for the Piano, second Violin, and Violoncello.

N.B.—A New Edition of "Farmer's Violin School," 5s.

London: Lee and Coxhead, 48, Albemarle Street, and all Book and Music Sellers. Catalogues gratis.

CARTE'S PATENT FLUTES.

Just published,

A SKETCH of the successive IMPROVEMENTS made in the FLUTE, with a statement of the Principles upon which Flutes are constructed and a comparison between the relative merits of the Ordinary Flute, the Flute of Boehm, and Carte's two new Patent Flutes. By RICHARD CARTE.

Publishers: Rudall, Rose, & Co., 28, Southampton-street, Strand; Addison, 210 Regent-street; Keith and Prowse, 48, Cheapside; and Cocks & Co., 6, New Burlington-street. Price 1s., or if sent by post, 1s. 6d.

ROSSINI'S NEW TANTUM ERGO,

PERFORMED at Mr. Hullah's last concert with immense approbation, is just published price 5s. with Piano accompaniment, or 17s. in Score.—"Certainly Rossini has out-Stabated his Stabat in this last work."—Illustrated London News.

T. Boosey and Co., 28, Holles Street.

BEETHOVEN'S FIDELIO.

THE finest and most perfect Edition ever published, is just ready price 15s. in boards, comprising the whole of the Music, with an English and German Text, 3 Overtures, and a memoir of Beethoven. Fidelio forms one of Boosey's celebrated series of Operas which already includes Don Juan (18s.), Figaro (16s.), Der Frieschutz (12s. 6d.), Il Barbiere (16s.), Norma (10s. 6d.), Sonnambula (12s. 6d.), and Lucrezia Borgia (16s.).

T. Boosey and Co., 28, Holles Street.

NEW PIANOFORTE PUBLICATIONS.

PRAEGER	Liebes Verlangen.
PRAEGER	Moment Joyeux.
PRAEGER	Nocturne Romantique.
RICHARDS	Moonlight Serenade.
RICHARDS	Pastorale.
OURY	Valse Brilliant.
HERZ	La Sylphide.
KUHE	Styriennes.

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street.

A GENUINE FOSTER DOUBLE BASS,

ONE of the only four ever made by the Elder Foster, the property of a Gentleman, is for sale; and may be seen at Messrs. Duff and Hodgson's, 65, Oxford Street. Two of these instruments were the property of his late Majesty George the Fourth. The third is in the possession of Sir H. Durrant. One Hundred Guinea each were given for those of his late Majesty; this one is offered for 50 Guineas.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGES

FOR Improving the Voice, and removing all Affections of the Throat. Strongly recommended to Clergymen, Singers, Actors, Public Speakers, persons subject to relaxed Throats, and to all persons desirous of cultivating their Voices, and ensuring a good and clear articulation. They have also been found highly beneficial to those afflicted with Nervous, Hysterical, or Stomachic Coughs. To be had in Boxes, at 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each, of every Medicine Vendor in the kingdom.

Testimonials of their efficacy are published with each Box, from

Mad. Grial	Miss Romer	Mr. Harrison	Mr. J. Barnett
Mad. Persiani	Mad. Albertazzi	Mr. Allen	Mr. George Linley
Mad. Eugenie Garcia	Miss Cooper	Mr. White	Mr. Rodwell
Mrs. Alfred Shaw	Sig. Lablache	Mr. Wess	Mr. Nelson
Miss Rainforth	Sig. Giubilei	Mr. Kroff	&c., &c.

HEALTH WHERE IT IS SOUGHT!

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Cure of a disordered Liver and Stomach, when in a most hopeless state.—Extract of a letter from Mr. Matthew Harvey, of Chapel Hall, Airdrie, Scotland, dated the 15th of January, 1850.—To Professor HOLLOWAY, Sir,—Your valuable Pills have been the means, with God's blessing, of restoring me to perfect health, at a time when I thought I was on the brink of the grave. I had consulted several eminent Doctors, who, after doing what they could for me, considered my case hopeless. I had been suffering from a Liver and Stomach complaint of long standing, which during the last two years got so much worse, that every one considered my condition as hopeless. I, as a last resource, got a Box of your Pills, which soon gave relief, and by persevering in their use for some weeks, together with rubbing night and morning your Ointment over my chest and stomach, and right side, I have by their means alone got completely cured, and to the astonishment of myself and everybody who knows me.

(Signed)

MATTHEW HARVEY.

These celebrated Pills are wonderfully efficacious in the following complaints:—Ague, Constipation of the Bowels, Fevers of all kinds, Liver complaints, Tumours, Asthma, Dropsy, Lunabago, Ulcers, Bilious Complaints, Debility, Fits, Rheumatism, Worms of all kinds, Blotches on the Dropsy, Head-ache, Scrofula or King's Weakness, from whatever cause, Skin, Dysentery, Indigestion, Evil, Sore Throats, &c., &c. Bowel complaints, Erysipelas, Inflammation, Tic Douloureux, Colic, Jaundice, Sore Throats, &c., &c.

Sold at the Establishment of Professor HOLLOWAY, 244, Strand, (near Temple-bar, London, and most all respectable Druggists, and Dealers in Medicines throughout the civilised World, at the following prices—1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box. There is a considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.

N.B.—Directions for the guidance of Patients in every Disorder are affixed to each Box.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

GRAND EXTRA NIGHT.

FIRST NIGHT OF THE NEW OPERA LE TRE NOZZE

IT is respectfully announced that a Grand Extra Night will take place ON THURSDAY NEXT, MAY 1, 1851, when will be presented for the first time in this country, Alari's New Opera Buffa, in Three Acts, produced with the greatest success at the Italian Opera, Paris, entitled,

LE TRE NOZZE.

Luisa	Madame SONTAG.
Vespina	Madame GIULIANA.
La Marchesa di Forli	Mdlle. IDA BERTRAND.
Cavaliere di Villafranca	Signor GARDONI.
Cricca	Signor FERRANTI.
(His first appearance in this Country.) And Il Barone Feudatario d'Acetosia	Signor Lablache.

To be followed by the First Tableau of the admired Ballet, L'ŒUVRE DES AMOURS—Mademoiselle AMALIA FERRARIS, Mdlles. Rosa, Esper, Julien, Lamoureux, Allegrini, Kohlenberg, Dantonie, Pascalis, and M. Charles.

The Performance will commence with the Last Act of Bellini's celebrated Opera, LA SONNAMBULA.

Amina	Mdlle. CAROLINE DUPREZ
Count Rodolphe	Signor COLETTI.
Evino	Signor CALZOLARI.
Director of the Music and Conductor, M. BALFE.

To conclude with the admired Ballet, LES METAMORPHOSES. Mdlle. CARLOTTA GRISI, Mdlles. Rosa, Esper, Julien, Lamoureux, Allegrini, Pascalis, M. Charles, and M. Paul Tagliani.

Applications for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets, to be made at the Box-office of the Theatre. Doors open at Seven, the Opera to commence at Half-past Seven o'clock.

MUSICAL UNION,

WILLIS'S ROOMS, Tuesday, April 29, half-past 3. Double Quartet, D minor, Spohr; Duet, B flat, piano and violoncello, and Lieder ohne Worte, Mendelssohn; Quintet, E flat, Op. 4, Beethoven. Artists—Sinton, Witt, Hill, and Pratt; Deloffre, Watson, Mellon, and Pilet. Piano—Sterndale Bennett. Admission, half a guinea each, to be had at Cramer and Co.'s, 201, Regent-street. All subscriptions yet due to be paid on or before April 29. Extra Matinees will take place on the alternate Thursdays of the usual meetings, to which members only can subscribe and secure reserved seats. Herr Wenter, the celebrated violoncellist at the Court in Munich; Herr Lamb, the extraordinary young violinist, from Prague; and M. Vieuxtemps, are engaged. The programme will include solos and classical music. C. Halle is also re-engaged. J. ELLA.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.

CONDUCTOR, Mr. COSTA.—ON FRIDAY next, 2nd May, Mendelssohn's ELIJAH. Vocalists—Miss Catherine Hayes, Miss E. Birch, Miss Dolby, Miss M. Williams; Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. J. A. Novello, and Herr Formes. The orchestra, the most extensive available in Exeter Hall, will consist of (including 16 double basses) nearly 700 performers. Tickets, 3s.; reserved, 5s.; central area, numbered seats, 10s. 6d. each; at the Society's office, 6, in Exeter-hall; or of Mr. Bowley, 53, Charing-cross.

BY COMMAND.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

THE Subscribers and the Public are respectfully informed that the FOURTH CONCERT will take place on MONDAY NEXT, the 28th instant. Programme:—Overture, Struensee, Meyerbeer; Sinfonia in A, No. 2 (MS.), Mendelssohn; Overture, Der Freischütz, Weber; Sinfonia in C minor, No. 5, Beethoven; Overture, Lodoiska, Cherubini. Vocal performers:—Miss Louisa Pyne, Miss Williams, and M. Jules Stockhausen. Single Tickets, £1 1s.; Double Tickets, £1 10s.; Triple Tickets, £2 5s. To be had at Messrs. Addison and Co.'s, 210, Regent-street.

BEETHOVEN QUARTETT SOCIETY.

HERR ERNST'S THIRD EVENING PERFORMANCE will take place on the 30th inst., at 27, QUEEN ANNE STREET. Quartetts commence at a quarter past eight o'clock. Quartetts, F. Beethoven; No. 1 in F, first period; No. 8 in E minor, second period; No. 12 in E flat, third period. Executants:—Messrs. Ernst, H. Cooper, Hill, and Rousselot. Single Tickets Half a Guinea; to be obtained of Messrs. Rousselot and Co., 66, Conduit-street, Regent-street.

APOLLONION.

ADDITION OF THE GREAT TUBA MIRABILIS.—Daily at Two. Mr. Mather's esteemed Illustrations, Juvenile Harpists, Messrs. Sedgwick and Barton concertinas; Tuesdays, Thursdays, Saturdays, evenings at 8. Apollonion with six Performers. Miss Poole, Miss Messent, the Misses, Mr. and Master Collins, Mr. Gratton Cooke, and Messrs. Sedgwick and Barton. Royal Music Hall, adjoining Lowther Arcade.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

THE DIRECTORS have the honour to announce that on TUESDAY next, APRIL 29th, will be performed for the second time this season, Meyerbeer's Grand Romantic Opera,

ROBERTO IL DIAVOLO.

The principal characters by Madame Grisi, Madame Castellan, Louise Tagliani, Herr Formes, Signor Tagliafico, Signor Polonini, Signor Rommi, Signor Luigi Mel, Signor Soldi, Signor Stigelli and Signor Tamberlik.

EXTRA NIGHT.

LES HUGUENOTS.

THIRD APPEARANCE OF SIGNOR MARIO.

On Thursday next, May 1st, will be performed Meyerbeer's Grand Opera, LES HUGUENOTS. The principal characters by Mdlle. Grisi, Madame Castellan, Madlle. Angri, Madlle. Cott, Herr Formes, Sig. Polonini, Sig. Tagliafico, Sig. Luigi Mel, Sig. Soldi, Sig. Ferrari, Sig. Rommi, and Signor Mario. (His third appearance this season.)

Composer, Director of the Music, and Conductor,—MR. COSTA.

COMMENCE AT EIGHT O'CLOCK.

AUBER'S Grand New Opera,

L'ENFANT PRODIGE,

Is in rehearsal, and will shortly be produced.

Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets to be had at the Box Office of the Theatre.

PROGRAMME OF

M. ALEXANDRE BILLET'S THIRD CONCERT,

ON TUESDAY EVENING, APRIL 29th, to commence at half-past eight o'clock precisely.

PART FIRST.

1. SUITE DE PIÈCES, F minor HANDEL.
2. CAPRICE in C major HAYDN.
3. CHARACTERISTIC STÜCKE (Book I. the Temperaments) MENDELSSOHN.

PART SECOND.

4. SONATA in F minor, Op. 13 (Dedicated to Mendelssohn) W. S. BENNETT.
5. CAPRICE in F minor (le Déserteur) S. HELLES.
6. SELECTION OF STUDIES—
D minor, Modio: A flat, Major: C Minor
Chopin; D flat, Minor: F minor (by desire) Mendelssohn.

QUEEN'S CONCERT ROOMS, HANOVER SQUARE.

MR. EDWARD J. TURNER has the honour to announce to his Patrons and Friends that his FIRST EVENING CONCERT will take place at the above Rooms, on TUESDAY, 6th of MAY, 1851, when he trusts the Entertainments provided will meet with general approbation. Vocalists:—Miss Dolby, Miss Poole, Miss Watson, Mr. Leffler, Mr. Edward J. Turner; Pianoforte, M. Alexandre Billet; Harp, Herr Carl Oberthier, Harpist to the Grand Duke of Nassau; Bassoon, Herr G. Mayer, first Bassoon to the Grand Duke of Nassau; Flute, Monsieur Camus, first Flute at the Italiens, Paris. Conductor, M. Alexandre Billet. Tickets, Seven Shillings each; Reserved Seats, Half-a-Guinea. To be had at the Rooms; of Mr. E. J. TURNER, No. 17, Crown-row, Walworth; WESSEL & Co., 229, Regent-street; Prowse, Hanway-street, and at all the principal Music Publishers.

MISS CATHERINE HAYES'S

GRAND MORNING CONCERT will take place at the HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS on MONDAY, the 19th MAY. Full particulars at Cramer, Beale, and Co.'s, 201, Regent-street.

M. ERNST'S

GRAND EVENING CONCERT will take place at the HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS on MONDAY, JUNE 2nd. Full particulars at Cramer, Beale, and Co.'s, 201, Regent-street, and 67, Conduit-street.

MR. CRIVELLI

BEGS to acquaint his friends and the public that a Third Edition of the "ART OF SINGING," enlarged and newly arranged in the form of a Grammatical System of Rules for the Cultivation of the Voice, may be had at his residence, 71, Upper Norton-street, and at all the principal Music-sellers.
* Soon will be ready, the French and German Translation.

Printed and Published, for the Proprietors, by MICHAEL SAMUEL MYERS, of No. 3, Sandley Villas, Studley Road, Clapham Road, in the parish of Lambeth, at the office of MYERS and Co., 22, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden, in the parish of St. Paul, where all communications for the Editor are to be addressed, post paid. To be had of G. Purkiss, Dean Street, Soho; Allen, Warwick Lane; Vickers, Holywell Street, and at all Booksellers.—Saturday, April 26, 1851.

The Musical World.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

Terms of Subscription, per Annum, 16s.; Half year, 8s.; Three Months, 4s.; payable in advance, to be forwarded by Money Order, to the Publishers, Messrs. Myers & Co., 22, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden.

No. 18.—VOL. XXVII.

SATURDAY, MAY 3, 1851.

PRICE FOURPENCE.

JULES JANIN.

THE prince of feuilletonistes, the celebrated, and spirituel, and kindly, and jovial, and melancholy, and wise, and humane, and satirical, and incomparable J. J., the sun of the Journal des Débats, the pearl of Parisian criticism, the maker of reputations, the destroyer of reputations, the feared, the respected, the beloved, the caressed, the courted of artists and littérati of all denominations—Jules Janin, who created Rachel, and cannot fly from the idol he set up, which, shining in the glory of his early apostrophes, reflects back upon him, malgré lui, its perennial splendour—Jules Janin, who pulled up Frederic from the dust-hole of obscurity, and bade all Paris laugh, as he had bade all Paris weep for Rachel—Jules Janin, the essayist, poet, novelist, historian, theologian, reviewer, philosopher, libriographe, wit, humourist, play-wright, metaphysician—no, not metaphysician, ontosophist—Jules Janin, whom Europe recognises as the incarnate personification of French esprit and French bonhomie, refined by the gloss, and subtlety, and triple edge, and insouciant politeness of Parisian life and manners—Jules Janin, whom not to know argues yourself to be known an ignoramus—Jules Janin, the man of the French press who showed neither cowardice, nor vacillation, nor tottering loyalty, nor homage to the calf-popular, nor hungry desire for place, nor any mean quality of cringe or bully, during the disastrous time of 1848—Jules Janin, who ridiculed Proud-homme, and peppered the “reds,” with the smart artillery of his flashing pen, at the risk of his head, when too many of his countrymen and co-labourers in the field of letters fled their posts, and pitifully hid themselves—Jules Janin, who took to writing politics for the first time when all the political writers of Paris had either cut their opinions or their sticks; who praised Louis Philippe, with words of affection, when Louis Philippe was banished and despoiled; who regarded the dying monarch as an enthusiast the sun that sets—Jules Janin, who made Clarissa popular in a strange language, when its great author was forgotten in the land of his birth—Jules Janin, the pilot of French literature, and French drama, and French ballet, and French anything, except cosmopolitanism, which is anything but French—Jules Janin, who has done all this, and much more; who concentrates all the best characteristics of his countrymen; whose glabrous physiognomy is the ne plus ultra of intelligent good-nature—bref, the original, the inimitable J. J., the type of a great race, who coming

* Lemaitre, whose talents were first discovered and eulogised by Janin.

first has outstept the widest leaps of his successors, and who, when a law was made that every one should sign, said, “I will not sign,” and signed—J. J.—

“And whispering he would ne’er consent, consented.”—

Jules Janin has arrived in London for the crystal season. He was seen, on Thursday, with a Delphine Horace under his left arm, at the Palace in the Park, which doubtless already his fluent pen has lengthily and brilliantly apostrophised, in a feuilleton that shall teach the purse-proud bughers of London the proper light in which to view their own great fair, not the least memorable incident whereof will be his presence, who never until now placed foot on English ground, and only comes to set the world aright about the Great Exhibition of all nations.

Enfin—he has come, this man of tempes and metaphors, this bel esprit, this will-o’-the-wisp of journalism, who leads his readers through a labyrinth of columns, and—when they arrive at the end, to which they are conducted by the fascinating glimmer of his wit—at the moment they think to clutch his meaning, vanishes, the initials, J. J., starting up in his place, to represent alike the vagueness of his object and the spell of his most pleasant and irresistible style. We look forward with extasy to Janin’s first feuilleton on the Crystal Exhibition, which will be a veritable kaleidoscope of prosopopœia—multiple and multiposed. We shall see the truth, flitting over a wall of words and wit, like some light that dances on a dark interior, impelled to fitful motion by influence outside, eccentric and unseen.

To say that Jules Janin has come to London is to say that Jules Janin will be feted and apostrophised. He will be invited everywhere and will go nowhere—without his Flaccus. He who has made drunk the Muses, will now be compelled to drink to the Muses—with Thackeray and Dickens, and Bourcicault and A’Beckett, and Kenney and Jerrold, and Smith, and the wits, and Baylis. They will drink to the Muses—they eight, who, with J. J. make up nine, each one his muse to kiss and quaff to. And each shall write an ode to the Crystal Palace, a May-Day ode—eight odes, and one in French. And after the odes are written, they shall quaff again with “—Changing tongue, and various speech

Together blent.”

And after the odes are read—after each ode—they shall quaff again, each to his muse, nine separate quaffings, one for an ode; and “joy-bells” shall toll, and the nine shall part, each to his separate home, full to the lips of wine and minstrelsy.

Thus will Jules Janin be received, with song and cheer. There shall be "thunder," to respond to the lightning of his wit; but no "small beer," to turn the honey of good fellowship into the gall of acrimonious repartee. Jerrold shall be gentle, Baylis courteous, Bourcicault bashful, Lacy silent, Clem White consecutive, Kenney kindly, Smith "slow," Thackeray benevolent, Tom Taylor tender, Vivier grave, Oxenford sentimental, and all "jolly"—for the honour of J. J. "In vino" is confarrestation comfortable.

J. J. has come; nunc est bibendum; he will stay; nunc est edendum; he will appear at the C. C. and the CAFÉ; nunc est saluandum; Thackeray will put him in a preface, Dickens in a dirge, Smith in a stave; tunc ridendum; Brough in a burlesque; tunc lacrimandum.

In crystal time this prose-apostrophe to the merits of a great critic and greater wit, who never before poised a toe on British earth, who never before drank inspiration from a "London Fog" (the Gallic expression for a Cockney or West-end May-day) may not be found out of column. If it be, we are grieved, since we have no other column to put it in. We are eager to place on record the joy we naturally feel at the advent of Jules Janin, whose parallel is not to be found, unless at the Antipodes, where, to judge from the analysis of our own physical sensations, our fellow creatures should be walking upon the face of the earth, upside down, like flies upon a ceiling—or else "ups and downs" are mere delusions, (which would not be a bad thing, since, then, there would be none in the journey of life.) Wherewith, with many acknowledgments to our brilliant camarade of beyond the "Chops," for having suggested to us so curious a speculation, we bid him adieu for the present—wishing him a jolly time of it, and may he never repent his trip to White (but not perfidious) Albion.

COPYRIGHT.

We are not going into the question of international copyright, but as we have inserted a letter in which some very unequivocal opinions are advanced, we think it as well to say that we have no leaning to either side of the argument as it at present stands for legal discussion.

We can never lean to the notion that a composer should not have a property in his works all over the world; and if there be no international law to that effect, the sooner such a law is made the better. It is very hard upon one who has toiled night and day, for months, perhaps years, in the composition of an opera—that another, who has toiled not at all, shall be enabled to sell it for his own especial profit, without any advantage whatever to the author. The injustice is manifest, and no argument is strong enough to defend it.

Considered in another point of view, the example is injurious in every respect. A nation which can rob other nations of their books and music will neither have the will nor the energy to produce for itself. Take Belgium for example.

Belgium is the greatest thief in Europe; she steals wholesale from France and England, and offers nothing in return. Were she unable to steal from others with impunity, it is possible she might do something to encourage industry at home; but while she can fatten upon piracy, depend upon it she will be always idle.

It is probable that Belgium would not agree to an international copyright with France and England, since the sacrifice would be on her own side. She would abandon a rich booty, and receive little or nothing in exchange. Who ever heard of a Belgian opera or a Belgian book? Yet, doubtless, there are those in Belgium capable of writing both, and ready for the task, were there any chance of a market; and here lies the philosophical view of the question, for her statesmen to consider. The wrong done to France and England is bad enough; but the wrong done to Belgium herself is worse.

We give our vote for an international copyright for two reasons. First, it is plain justice that an author should be able to sell his works all over the world; no plausible sophistry can make it appear that Herr B——, at Leipsic, has any feasible property or right in the opera or novel of Mons. A——, or Mr. K——, in Paris or in London; the question will not bear discussion. Second, if it costs as much to buy a foreign opera as an English, our own musicians would have as good a chance of a bargain as the more favoured producers of the continent.

The question is not one of free trade, since robbing or piracy is not commerce; and if Messrs. Cramer publish an opera of Auber without paying for it, it is mere piracy, and no better, in the moral sense of the position. We do not advocate duties on books and music, but we wish to enforce a respect for the rights of their authors. The cheaper we can buy them the better. That depends on those who have them to sell. We want no protection in the "protectionist" sense of the term, but protection in the purely moral sense, which inculcates that the produce of a man's brain belongs to himself and to no other. What is just here is just all over the world; and it is difficult to imagine by what process of manœuvring a robbery on the property of M. Brandus or Herr Breitkoff can be defended any more than a robbery on that of Messrs. Beale or Mr. D'Almaine. If you print and sell the Prophete or the Enfant Prodigue, without the permission of M. Brandus, you are robbing M. Brandus; and if you perform those operas without the permission of the composers, you are robbing Meyerbeer and Auber—with the miserable plea that they are foreigners and live in France—as though the Straits of Dover could annul the universal recognition of the law that regulates meum and tuum. The error is monstrous, and the sooner it is corrected the better for all the world—for ourselves at home as well as for our friends abroad.

PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS.

The fourth concert, on Monday night, was graced by the presence of Her Majesty, Prince Albert, the Duke of Wellington, &c., and the Hanover Square Rooms were crowded to inconvenience. Her Majesty is an excellent judge of music, although it would appear she objects to solos at the Philharmonic, and among other things was graciously pleased to command the symphony in A major (No. 2) of Mendelssohn, which is not only our own especial favourite but the very pearl of orchestral pieces. Let us, however, give the whole of the Royal Programme, a capital one in its way, though not bristling with novelty:—

PART I.
Overture, Struensee	Meyerbeer.
Aria, "In questa tomba oscura." Miss Williams	Beethoven.
Sinfonia in A, No. 2 (MS.)	Mendelssohn.
Terzetto, "Dei che piangendo imploro" (Maometto) Miss L. Pyne, Miss Williams, and M. Jules Stockhausen	Winter.
Overture, Der Freischütz	Weber.
PART II.
Sinfonia in C Minor, No. 5.	Beethoven.
Recit. { "Caterina, ti pare" } (La Festa della Rose)
Aria, { "Ah no, la rosa è mia" }
Miss Louisa Pyne	Coppola.
Terzetto, "Soave conforto" (Zelmira) Miss L. Pyne, Miss Williams, and Mr. Jules Stockhausen	Rossini.
Overture, Lodoiska	Cherubini.
Conductor, Mr. Costa.

The overture to Struensee is a great favourite with Prince Albert; and so is its composer, Meyerbeer. The Prince is a fast admirer of great men, and the composer of Il Crociato and Robert, and the Huguenots, and the Prophète is one of the greatest men the Prince could fastly admire. The tragedy of Struensee, by Herr Beer (the brother of Meyerbeer), owes much of its celebrity to the incidental music, and the illustrious composer may congratulate himself in having given his brother a "lift," since, unquestionable as are the merits of Struensee, it would not be half so interesting without the music. The overture was played with great "clang" by the Philharmonic band (a little variety in the shape of a piano would have been grateful), and was much better appreciated than on a former occasion when it was "set before the Queen."

Miss Williams sang the solemn air of Beethoven with charming solemnity; but something new from her most musical lips would have been still more welcome. We have heard "In questa tomba oscura" very often. Miss Williams—we tell you that once for all; so now go to your portfolio and "rummage up" some other song. Winter's trio, though placid in character, is somewhat wintry; it was sung well, however, and that was a recompense.

Mendelssohn's symphony was a feast of sound, which the ear drank in, while the imagination revelled in dreams that can never be realized. What is the first movement? An allegro vivace in A major?—that means nothing. No—it is a walk out in the fields on a summer evening, with a fresh breeze, and corn bending, and insects buzzing, and trees rustling, and birds singing, and the blood leaping under the influence of the sun, still warm, though shorn of his scorching beams. What is called "Andante con moto in D minor," is the wail of a breaking heart that breaks with the last note. Molière, the great Molière, when he first heard this unspeakable movement, in England (it is unknown abroad), was affected almost to tears, and declared, in a spirit of kindred poetry, that it was "Mendelssohn writing his own epitaph." The minuet and trio full of grace, the grace that throws a halo over virgin-hood, and the presto saltarello in A minor—the most gorgeous musical picture of an Italian carnival ever painted for the orchestra, and at the same time a masterpiece of contrapuntal ingenuity and contrivance,—are worthy companions to the two preceding movements. On the whole the symphony was better performed on Monday night than on any previous occasion we remember; although we must confess that the allegro was not taken "vivace," nor the saltarello "presto," according to the indications of the composer. The andante was redemanded by the audience, but, as Her Majesty did not give the sign of assent, Mr. Costa proceeded with the minuetto. The A symphony has now become as great a favorite with the subscribers as any of Beethoven's, and its annual repetition is looked forward to as a matter of course.

The Der Freischütz was well played, although great objections were made to the rallentando, introduced in the coda. Mr. Costa, however, cannot be made responsible for what Chelard, Mendelssohn, and other conductors have done before him. Their authority, we believe, was Weber himself, and as the effect is a very good one, we see no reason to doubt it.

The C minor symphony was coarsely executed. There were no pianos from first to last, as a make-shift for which a certain rude energy was not enough. The trio of the scherzo, however, was given for the first time with the proper accent, an innovation for which we are doubtless indebted to Mr. Costa.

The entire omission of solos was a drawback to the concert, and hardly redeemed by the addition of a third overture, although that to Lodoiska is one of Cherubini's best, far too good indeed to be played as a voluntary while the audience were dispersing.

We were not greatly pleased with the vocal music on this occasion, except with Beethoven's song, which Miss Williams sang beautifully. Winter's trio, though nicely written, is somewhat dull, and Rossini's is much better on the stage. The recitative and air of Coppola, sung by Miss L. Pyne, was unworthy the talent of that rising vocalist. After Mozart, Coppola will not do, and Miss Pyne should have known better than to have followed her well deserved success, in "Non mi dir," at a previous concert, with such a trivial clap-clap.

The National Anthem was played on the arrival of her Majesty, who exhibited her accustomed punctuality, and, as usual, remained to the end of the concert.

NORTHAMPTON MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(From a Correspondent).

The event of the past week has been the Musical Festival at the New Corn Exchange. For a time we seemed to have lost our provincial character; and our Market-square, with its line of carriages and crowds of spectators, reminded us of the neighbourhood of Covent Garden. We remember no occurrence of the kind which occasioned similar excitement. The plan of the Festival was as follows:—On Tuesday morning, the Creation; on Tuesday evening, a miscellaneous Concert; and on Wednesday morning, the Messiah. The singers were Miss Birch, Mrs. Enderssohn, Miss Poole, Miss Williams, Mr. Lockey, Mr. Lawler, and Mr. T. Williams. First violin, Messrs. H. Blagrove, Banister, Eames, Rice, Streather, Clementi, Norman, Wickett, Tole, and Hensman; second violins, Messrs. A. Griesbach, W. Blagrove, J. J. Calkin, Holland, Wheatley, Foster, Le Jeune, Rowell, and Weston; viola, Messrs. R. Blagrove, W. Thomas, Waud, E. Westrop, and G. F. Holland; violoncellos, Messrs. Hatton, Reed, J. Calkin, and Pettett; double-basses, Messrs. Howell, Edgar, G. R. Griffiths, and Griffiths; flutes, Messrs. Card, and H. Richardson; oboes, Messrs. A. Nicholson and Crosier; clarinets, Messrs. Boosé and T. Winterbottom; bassoons, Messrs. Larkin and Hardy; horns, Messrs. C. Harper and Standen; trumpets, Messrs. T. Harper, Hambleton, and Ward; trombones, Messrs. Keightly, Whittaker, and Winterbottom; ophicleide, Mr. Lever; drums, Mr. Goodwin. Mr. Charles M'Korkell, conductor.

The orchestra and chorus together included upwards of a hundred performers. From such materials there was ground for anticipating a treat of the highest order; nor were we disappointed. The representation of chaos, with which the Oratorio opens, afforded a foretaste of the strength and quality of the instruments. The chorus, "And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters," terminating in the climax, "And there was light!" was equally effective. The solo performers were worthy of the occasion and of their task. None of them, however, we suspect, were prepared for the noble space in which their powers were to be tried. Miss Birch soon saw its capabilities, and sent her splendid voice, careering triumphantly through it. Mr. Lockey tried it more cautiously, but was speedily at home. Mrs. Enderssohn evidently ventured, puzzled and doubtfully. Her voice faltered in the recitative, "And God said, let the earth," but when she came to the air, "With verdure clad," she too was quite at her ease. The trio and chorus, "The Heavens are telling," found the audience deeply impressed, and at the conclusion of the oratorio the universal feeling was that expectation had been outdone.

Tuesday evening, as we have said, was devoted to a Miscellaneous Concert. "God save the Queen" found an echo in the hearts of those who listened to it. All the strength of the company was clustered together on this occasion. The overture to Fidelio led the way, and was followed by the Rev. R. Greville's glee, "Now the bright morning star," charmingly sung by Mrs. Enderssohn, Miss Poole, Miss M. Williams, Mr. T. Williams, and Mr. Lawler. Mr. Greville, father of our townsmen, the Messrs. Greville, is said to have composed this glee under the combined influence of the "bright morning star" which it celebrates, and the classic poetry of Milton. We presume he was an early riser, and saw "day's harbinger" as he went abroad in the morning, not as he came home. The story goes that he gave the composition to a lady, and that the Glee Club awarded it the prize before Greville was aware that his fair friend had entered it for competition. Miss Birch sang "Qui la voce," and a ballad of Linley's, "I was happier ere I loved you," which last was encored. Miss M. Williams won a similar compliment in Gluck's "Che faro senza Euridice." Mr. Charles M'Korkell, who was greeted with a hearty burst of applause on his first entrance into the orchestra (a welcome which the sacred character of the morning performance had forbidden) executed a picturesque solo of Weber's with the effect of an accomplished artist. His firm touch and brilliant finger told surprisingly in a room where every note has its full value. "The Chough and Crow" concluded the first part. The second part opened with the overture to Zampa.

Mr. Lawler was encored in "Largo al factotum." Indeed the enthusiasm of the audience was at so exalted a pitch, that they were in a mood for encoring everything. Mr. Blagrove's violin solo was a performance in the purest style. A ballad "The lost heart," of Glover's, gained an encore for Miss Poole. The noble and dramatic march from Mendelssohn's Midsummer Night's Dream concluded the concert. Among matters for commendation we may notice the adherence to the programme. The only omission was the madrigal, "Down in a flowery vale," which the repeated encores rendered inevitable. We were glad too to notice that the absurd custom of replying to an encore by singing something totally different was not indulged in on this occasion. Coming out into the square we found it thronged with people, and alive with carriages of all sorts—a striking contrast to its customary sober quietude at so late an hour.

The Messiah of Handel was the concluding performance of the Festival on Wednesday morning. It turned out, too, the most attractive. "Comfort ye my people" was given by Mr. Lockey with great pathos. Throughout the oratorio indeed this gentleman's performance left nothing to be desired; he threw his soul into all he did, and showed that his naturally fine voice had been cultivated with care. The rich tones of Miss M. Williams told deliciously in "He was despised." Of the choruses, it is scarcely possible to speak too highly. "For unto us a child is born" was given with wonderful effect upon the words "Wonderful! Counsellor! the Mighty God! the Everlasting Father!" Handel's own opinion of the manner in which this passage should be uttered may be gathered from what he is said to have desired as part of the means of its utterance—"the roar of cannon on Salisbury Plain." So of the "Hallelujah," the grandeur of which will long leave its echo in the memory. Another of the specialties of the morning was Mr. T. Harper's trumpet obligato—"the trumpet shall sound," a performance which we believe no other player can with prudence undertake at present. Applause during an oratorio is forbidden, but the enjoyment of the audience broke out at the close of the last chorus with an irrepressible burst.

We saw in the room a considerable number of Novello's edition of the Oratorios, in vocal score, and commend them to the notice of visitors on similar occasions, as excellent and very convenient hand-books.

The Festival, so far as those who conducted it were concerned, more than fulfilled its promise. We wish we could add that the public had performed their part equally well. The hall was arranged for the accommodation of 2,000 persons; but we question whether the Messiah, which was best attended, drew together more than half that number. Circumstances, perhaps, may account in part for this. There is no doubt that the absence of Jetty Treffs on a recent occasion, had created disappointment, almost a feeling of distrust. There were melancholy reasons, too, for the absence of several influential families in the neighbourhood. But setting these aside, the undertaking was not patronized as its projectors had a right to expect.

Two-thirds of those who undertook to support it, did not take tickets; yet it was upon the basis of such sanctions that the outlay was incurred. The result is, that the receipts fall short by £200 of the expenditure. We cannot but regret, however, such a return for the spirit, talent, and risk of the projectors. We regret it, too, for the sake of the public, because it cannot but operate as a discouragement to future undertakings, and we had looked to the possession of a hall so calculated for meetings of this kind, as likely to foster the musical taste of our town and neighbourhood. On all sides we hear the highest eulogies of the festival, and the manner in which Mr. M'Korkell has fulfilled his undertaking; but, unfortunately, he has to set against this a serious pecuniary loss.

The arrangements of the Hall, for which Mr. J. Macquire deserves credit, were excellent. There was ready access to every seat, and the various entrances to the different departments ensured an order that was particularly agreeable. We hear, too, the highest commendations of our excellent station-master, Mr. Snape, who facilitated, at the cost of much personal trouble and exertion, the wishes of the committee to the utmost of his power. Since the Festival, Mr. Higgins of the George Hotel, has received a letter from the leader of the chorus, in the name of that body, expressing their sense of the liberal treatment which they received at the various hotels at which they were located. In a word, we know of no complaint except that our Northampton public have not properly estimated an opportunity which is not likely, under the circumstances, to present itself again on the same scale of completeness for years to come.

THE MUSICAL UNION.

(From the Times.)

There was a very full audience on Tuesday afternoon, at the second meeting, and the programme, while undistinguished by any absolute novelty, was exceedingly well chosen. The double quartets are among the most remarkable of Spohr's compositions for the chamber, and although the one in E minor has obtained the largest share of popularity, that in D minor, selected by Mr. Ella for the occasion, is, in our opinion, the best. The theme of the first allegro was evidently suggested by the opening of one of Mozart's symphonies in D; but the whole movement is masterly, and the treatment of the two quartet parties is managed with a fine feeling for variety. The scherzo is spirited and fanciful, its capricious character being charmingly relieved by the graceful melody of the trio. The least striking movement is the larghetto, but even that is full of genuine tune, harmonised with the voluptuous richness that belongs to Spohr. The finale is again a masterpiece, in which two playful and well contrasted subjects are developed with a skill and abundant contrivance which show Spohr to be one of the greatest contrapuntists of his day. The execution was admirable. M. Sainton, whose reading of classical music would alone place him in the foremost rank of violinists, headed the first quartet; and M. Deloffre, a highly intelligent and practised artist, the second. The other violins were MM. Witt and Watson; the tenors, Messrs. Hill and Mellon; the violoncellos, Signor Piatti and M. Pilet. The last full piece was Beethoven's quintet in E flat, Op. 4, an early work of the master, full of freshness and beauty, very much in the manner of Mozart, though more remarkable for an exhaustless flow of melodious ideas than for depth of expression or learned combinations. It was allotted to MM. Sainton and Deloffre (violins), Messrs. Hill and Mellon (tenors), and Signor Piatti (violoncello), whose frequent practice in concert has rendered their quartet playing irreproachable.

The gem of the programme, however, was the "sonata duo" in B flat, of Mendelssohn, for pianoforte and violoncello, by Mr. Sterndale Bennett and Signor Piatti. The two were well met, since each in his way is unrivalled on his particular instrument. The broad and unaffected style of Mr. Bennett, characterised alike by energy, correct taste, and all the requisites to faultless mechanism, gave due prominence to the pianoforte part; while the exquisite tone and phrasing of Signor Piatti in the cantabile passages, and the finished neatness of his execution, did nothing less for the violoncello. The result was a performance of rare excellence, which, while conspicuously displaying the talents of the players, developed the intentions of the composer with unvarnished purity. The audience were delighted, and expressed their pleasure by the warmest applause. Mr. Bennett afterwards gave some of the lieder ohne Worte of Mendelssohn, from the fifth and sixth books, the two first of which (in E minor and G) are rarely heard in public, and were doubly welcome through the medium of such perfect execution. The programme appeared to afford entire satisfaction to all present.

BEETHOVEN QUARTET SOCIETY.

The fourth meeting took place on Wednesday night, at the New Beethoven Rooms. There was a crowded attendance. The programme was highly interesting. Three quartets from the early, middle, and latter periods—a plan which should not be departed from until the whole of the seventeen have been given—constituted the programme. They were No. 1 in F, No. 8 in E minor, and No. 12 in E flat. The performers were Ernst, Cooper, Hill, and Rousselot. Ernst was in great play. The adagio in D minor of the first, and that in E major of the second quartet, both peculiarly suited to Ernst, were magnificently performed. There is no greater charm in the style of this great violinist than the new, but wholly legitimate readings, by means of which he so often confers an unanticipated character upon special passages, without ever violating the unity of the work or the intentions of the composer. Several such readings in both of the adagios, and particularly in the last, a sublime strain of melody, which bears Ernst upon its wings into the loftiest regions of poetry, were introduced with delightful effect, and let us, as it were, deeper into the secrets of Beethoven than we ever went before. The variety of expression of which these long-drawn-out slow movements are capable is almost infinite. They are worlds, in which the spirit of Ernst wanders at will, finding new treasures at every step. The posthumous quartet in E flat contains a first movement, allegro teneramente, in which all the heart of Beethoven seems dissolved in tenderness, the most symmetrical regularity of plan being nevertheless adhered to. This is really enthusiasm made subservient to the rules of art. The other movements are more capricious, though full of beauties, and enchainning the interest to the last. The first of the posthumous quartets, the E flat is also one of the most intricate and difficult. It was, however, magnificently executed. Ernst was never more earnest and impassioned, and never more sparkling with vivacity and animation. Cooper, who plays the first violin as well as he plays the second, was admirable; Hill was still the incomparable tenor; and Rousselot the accomplished musician and faithful exponent of Beethoven. Altogether the performance was the most striking we have heard of this quartet, and was fully appreciated by the audience, who applauded each movement with the utmost ardor.

The Rasamowsky quartet was interrupted by a slight mishap that occurred to Ernst, in the shape of a violent fit of coughing, which compelled him to retire from the room after the slow movement. He soon, however, resumed his post, and the energy with which he played the allegretto showed that the contretemps was not of serious moment.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

What will Mr. Lumley do with all his prime donne? Where find operas enough for them? How find room for them in his repertoire? Already, the week after Easter, three new sopranos have appeared, viz., Caroline Duprez, Alaimo, and Fiorentini—the last named charming artist may be reckoned among the novelties, having only sang a few nights at the latter end of last season—and six, seven, or eight more, are promised. Nine, ten, or eleven prime donne! It looks impossible, but let us name them, nevertheless—Caroline Duprez, Fiorentini, Alaimo, Sontag, Barbiere-Nini, Cruvelli, Ugalde, Stokas, Parodi, Guiliani, Albani! Such a battalion of sopranos was never before congregated together in one theatre. What can be done with them? Balfe has jocosely hinted that by tripling the parts in Don Giovanni a simultaneous employment might be given to the whole of Mr. Lumley's soprano force, which would prove a novelty and a triple source of attraction. This is Balfe's idea:—Donna Anna—Mesdames Cruvelli, Alaimo, and Parodi; Elvira—Mesdames Fiorentini, Caroline Duprez, and Guiliani; Zerlina—Mesdames Sontag, Barbiere-Nini, and Ugalde—to say nothing of the Zerlina—Albani, who will not be tripled or doubled, being unmatched. In pursuance of this plan, the other parts might be tripled also—not so advantageously, we own—with the exception of Leporello, Lablache being great and large enough for any three personifiers of Don Juan's confidential follower. A further use might be made of this arrangement: each of the three artists might sing in a different language, and thus afford three nations, instead of one; the opportunity of enjoying what is going forward in their respective tongues—a desideratum, when London is about to become a new Babel. At present we cannot exactly make out how Mr. Lumley intends to provide for his soprani assoluti, of one of whom, a debutante, it is now our duty to speak, descending from grotesque speculation to simple criticism.

The Lucrezia Borgia was produced on Saturday for the debut of Mdlle. Alaimo, or Alaymo—the difference, as Lord Eldin said on another occasion, being all “in my i”—a young artist, who for the last few years has made a great sensation in Italy. Mdlle. Alaimo comes from Palermo, in Sicily, and, we believe, before Saturday night, never sang out of the Italian States. Of her immediate successes we know nothing, and nothing of her history. Some of the French journals dubbed her a countess; others went into raptures on her beauty; and others pronounced her the great genius of the age, until Cruvelli arrived and became the new idol of their mobile worshipocracy. Mdlle. Alaimo, we understand, is only twenty-one years of age, a period at which, in the history of art, no great singer has reached the culminating point. The talents of the debutante are indeed remarkable, on this consideration, and, in the histrionic art, almost unprecedented. That one so young should have grappled with the passion, grandeur, intensity, and various subtleties of the character of Lucrezia, as successfully as Mdlle. Alaimo on Tuesday night, is an indication of genius. The part of Lucrezia Borgia is in some respects antagonistic to the qualifications of Mdlle. Alaimo. She looks too youthful for the mother of Gennaro, and her person, which is slight and fragile, appears to want weight. Her voice, also, a high soprano, lacks power in the middle and lower register, on which so much effect depends. But Mdlle. Alaimo's intelligence triumphed over all obstructions, and we unhesitatingly pronounce her Lucrezia Borgia a performance of great and striking merit. In awarding this praise we are perhaps speaking under the mark. It must be borne in mind that we are writing after hearing Mdlle. Alaimo a second time in the same part, which makes all the difference. Every allowance should be made for a first appearance; and when we discover, or think we discover, the promise of any thing really great, so eager is the impetus towards superlatives, that our critical optics naturally become magnifiers, and every beauty is glorified into a transcendancy. The second time, the calm critic takes the place of the indulgent enthusiast, and eulogy is qualified by observation and toned down by truth and common sense. Praise then becomes more valuable as it is more just, and less likely to be influenced by first impressions. What we felt when we heard Mdlle. Alaimo the first night in Lucrezia Borgia was by no means lessened, however, on a second hearing and seeing. She has more than confirmed our good opinion—she has progressed in our esteem.

Mdlle. Alaimo's voice, as we have already hinted, is a high soprano. It possesses great power and has a bell-like quality in the upper notes. The middle tones are good, but the lower are deficient in strength. A slight tremulousness lends Mdlle. Alaimo's singing, especially in passages of pathos, a peculiar charm, which we do not remember in any other soprano, although something like the same effect has been produced on us by Rubini and Tamberlik. Altogether the voice of the fair debutante is forcible, flexible, and capable of every variety of expression, and is managed with admirable skill. Mdlle. Alaimo's school is the pure Italian school. Her method is undeniable, her style devoid of affectation.

Of Mdlle. Alaimo's histrionic powers we can speak in higher terms than of her vocal. She is evidently full of mind, and, if she does not feel what she sings and acts, certainly impresses you with the belief that she does—and this is true art. Among the numerous beauties of her Lucrezia we would select the scene with Alfonso in the first act, when, vainly demanding the life of Gennaro, Lucrezia turns upon her husband and threatens him with her vengeance; and the last scene when, poisoned by her own hand, her son expires in her arms. In the first, the measured emphasis of her deprecation, and the cold ironical taunts, were terribly earnest and real. Mdlle. Alaimo took the theme of the duet in this scene slower than we have been accustomed to hear it, and thereby made it doubly impressive. We may mention here that her conception of the character and the execution throughout were perfectly original. The scene with the dying Gennaro was inexpressibly touching, and constituted a fitting climax to one of the very best first performances we have witnessed for years.

Mdlle. Alaimo is of the middle height. She is slight in form and very graceful. Her face is remarkably expressive, her eye full of fire, and her forehead high and intellectual. That the debutante will prove a great acquisition to Her Majesty's Theatre cannot be doubted. We shall be glad to see her in another part, where, perhaps, her powers may be still more advantageously exhibited.

Gardoni made his first appearance in Gennaro, and was welcomed with acclamations. His voice appears to have gained in strength and volume, its original freshness and sympathetic charm being as evident as heretofore. The admirable tenor looked the part of the youthful “capitano” to perfection, and infused more energy than ever into his acting. His last scene was an excellent histrionic effort, and received the warmest plaudits after the death, which Gardoni managed very gracefully.

The Alfonso of Lablache is too well known to need any remarks here. The gigantic basso wore a new dress—the one made for him at Paris—and seemed to take no small delight in exhibiting it to the public. It was a rich and becoming costume. Lablache should not have omitted on both nights the “Vendetta,” which no one can sing like him. It was said he was indisposed, but, to judge from his voice, we should have felt inclined to pronounce him in excellent health and spirits. He sang magnificently on both occasions.

Mdlle. Ida Bertrand made her reentrée in Orsino, a part to which she gave much point and significance last season. She is an excellent artist, and sang both her songs with considerable effect. She was loudly encored in the “Brindisi.”

The chorus of nobles was strengthened by Signors F. Lablache, Scotti, Mercuriali, Lorenzo, Casanova, and others. Signor Casanova appeared for the first time in Don Apostolo Gasella. We are unable to form any estimate of his abilities.

On Saturday the opera was followed by the Metamorphoses, in which the ethereal and incomparable Carlotta was the cynosure of all eyes, and the loadstone of all hearts. On Tuesday it was succeeded by two tableaux from the new and successful ballet L'île des Amours, with Mdlle. Amalia Ferraris as the heroine.

Thursday night proved a night of disappointments to Mr. Lumley in more respects than one. The new opera of Alary, Le tre Nozze, was intended to be given in celebration of the opening of the grand Exhibition, and the highest personage in the realm had signified her intention of being present; but Madame Sontag's sudden illness precluded the possibility of the new opera being produced, and the attraction of novelty was wanting in a certain quarter. But Mr. Lumley was not entirely to be baffled by Fortune on the night of the inauguration of the season. A novelty of a specific nature was provided for the visitors, in the shape of a divertissement, musical and choregraphic, which was merely hinted at in the bills, and intended for a surprise.

Masaniello was the opera, but in consequence of the extreme length of the entertainments, it was found necessary to omit the last act. The practice of giving the works of the great masters in a fragmentary state we always have, and always shall, set our faces against. We consider it neither just, nor politic. On the present occasion, perhaps, it may stand justified, since we know there was no intention of leaving out any of the music at the commencement of the performance. When the fourth act was concluded, from the numerous encores and unavoidable delays between the acts, it was near eleven o'clock, and a duet from the Matrimonio Segreto, the last scene of Sonnambula, and a part of the ballet, Les Metamorphoses, had yet to follow, without reckoning the new divertissement. We cannot help feeling that the "long Thursdays" is founded on a bad system, and will never work well for the establishment, especially if it necessitates the giving, in incomplete shape, the most perfect productions of the theatre.

After the fourth act of Masaniello, the comic duet, from the Matrimonio Segreto, for two basses, was so humourously sung and acted by Lablache, pere et fils, as to call for an enthusiastic encore.

When the curtain next rose, a very splendid picture met the eye of the spectator. The Crystal Palace, fresh from the graphic pencil of Mr. Marshall, shone radiantly in the back ground, glistening with the reflection of a thousand suns. From what point the view was taken we could not ascertain. It seemed as if we the beholders were floating aloft in a balloon and gazing downward on the dazzling scene; or that we had borrowed Primrose-hill for the nonce and placed it on the top of the Knightsbridge Barracks, to accommodate our vision and take in the glorious speculation at one broad glance. But, when the stage was filled by the whole company, operatic and choregraphic, and the costumes of all times and climes flashed upon us in rainbow colors, then indeed might we be said to have been veritably excited and lifted, as it were, out of our usual apathy. In front of the rainbow group we beheld Mesdames Fiorentini, Alaimo, Caroline Duprez, Ida Bertrand, Feller, and another dame—whose pardon we entreat for not recognising—with the Messrs. Lablache, F. Lablache, Coletti, Lorenzo, Pardini (dressed for the last act of Masaniello—a proof there was no intention to "cut" Auber short), Calsolari, Gardoni, and others. Then Balfe gave the signal with his baton, and the whole vocal corps sang the following verses of Barry Cornwall, written expressly for the occasion, to music composed by Balfe expressly for the occasion:

"All hail! Give welcome to this happy day!
War throws his sword and spear and helmet down;
And, wreathed with hawthorn, laughs the Lady May,
And Peace smiles glad beneath her olive crown.
Welcome to Britain's land!
Welcome with heart and hand!
Welcome to all!
When the merry bells ring around,
And the jocund rebecks sound,
To many a youth and many a maid
Dancing in the checker'd shade."

The four first lines were sung to a solemn and measured strain with responses behind by a semi-chorus with organ, which had a very happy effect. Had the audience but had an inkling of the poet's words the effect would have been still better. The national anthem was then introduced—the principal solos taken by Fiorentini and Caroline Duprez—which was rapturously encored; and the last lines of the poem were sung to a very lively, sparkling, and, so to speak, Exhibition tune, which quite exhilarated all present. The vocal cavalry then retired, and the choregraphic infantry came forward, Balfe resigning his post to Nadaud.

The dances were of all nations, and too numerous to describe. Here were especial tarentellas, polkas, mazurkas, galops, polonaises, and a British hornpipe. This last was not at all relished by the grand tier, which considered its dignity compromised by the importation of a native article. The gallery stood up manfully for the pipe; the pit was neuter. The gods prevailed, and achieved an encore.

Amalia Ferraris, the osmium-footed, seconded by M. Charles, of vaulting ambition, danced a peculiar Sicilienne with peculiar point and aplomb; and Carlotta, the usurper and tyrant of hearts and hands, with M. Paul Taglioni, the poetic and agile, footed to perfection in a mixed Russo-Polo-Cossack Mazurka. Carlotta, in her ultramarine jerkin, trimmed with miniver, open at the throat, with a piqued cap of desperation on her head, ermined and feathered, looked a terrible Cossack, capable of committing a thousand murders. Oh! Carlotta! for how many murders will you not stand accountable on the night of the 1st of May, 1851, with that monstrous jacket and that dreadful cap? If you would spare unnumbered hearts, don them never again. Too killing before, by aid of their frightful ministry you become a veritable manslaughterer!

The new divertissement was highly successful, and will no doubt be repeated for some nights.

In the last scene from the Sonnambula, Caroline Duprez warbled to admiration, and produced a marked sensation. The young artist was recalled at the end, and received with acclamations.

A tableau from Les Metamorphoses, concluded one of the longest performances remembered at her Majesty's Theatre. Carlotta Grisi—but no—we cannot venture to speak more of her at present. The effects of the ultramarine jacket and piqued cap must wear away before we can attempt to criticise her performances.

On Tuesday Le Tre Nozze will positively be produced. Madame Sontag makes her first appearance to-night.

Cruvelli has arrived. At her last performance at the Salle Ventadour, one hundred and twenty-six bouquets were thrown on the stage, when the great Teutonian was recalled at the end of Ernani. So says the France Musicale. Who counted them? It has not yet been decided in what opera she is to come out. We hope not Ernani!!

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The Huguenots was repeated on Saturday night, and Mario, having entirely recovered from his indisposition, took his revenge, and made ample amends for the disappointment he occasioned at the first performance. He was in glorious voice and sang as finely as ever. The septuor in the Pré au Clercs scene left no doubt as to the entire restoration of all his powers. A more splendid display, vocal and histrionic, could not well be imagined than that between Grisi and Mario in the grand duet succeeding the "Benediction of the Poignards." The audience was excited to the highest state of enthusiasm, and applauded vociferously and continuously. Both artists were twice recalled and overwhelmed with plaudits.

The performance, nevertheless, did not pass off without a contretemps. Formes had been seized with the epidemic of the season, and, it was apprehended in the early part of the day, that he would be unable to sing at night. The part of Marcel, however, is one which could not well be entrusted to inferior hands, and Formes, even if deprived of half his powers, was considered preferable to any other artist in the theatre who could undertake the character at a moment's notice. But Formes, although evidently labouring under the effects of a severe hoarseness, was not deprived of half his strength, as was abundantly exemplified in the "Piff, paff," and the entire duet in the second act with Valentine, which he sang and acted superbly. A slight falling off in the last scene alone showed that the energetic German basso was not entirely himself.

Notwithstanding this little drawback the Huguenots was given in a highly satisfactory manner. The return of Angrî in Urbain was a decided feature. The fair contralto was in great force and sang with all her wonted animation and vigour, and obtained a hearty encore in the "No, no, no" song, which was written expressly for Alboni, as we have said more than once before. Castellan sang the music of Marguerite with more than usual effect.

The chorus of Catholics and Huguenots in the Pre au Clercs scene, act the second (third of the original version), however, would have been all the better for a few extra rehearsals. Not only did the singers not go together, but they seemed to have lost half their strength, which we can only ascribe to a great part of the chorus not attempting to sing at all. The music is intricate and fragmentary, and demands the utmost nicety and clearness of execution—the stronger reason why it should have obtained sundry rehearsals previous to its being performed in public. On the other hand, an improvement must be noted in the military band on the stage, which is now perfectly in tune with the orchestra.

Roberto il Diavolo was given for the second time on Tuesday. Tamberlik was as admirable as ever in Roberto, and Formes, having entirely recovered, gave the music of Bertram with powerful effect, and acted the part with a superabundance of vigour and passionate energy. Madame Castellan, the most charming of Isabellas, was immensely applauded in both her arias, and Grisi subdued all her dramatic fire and grandeur to lend the part of Alice its native grace and truthfulness. But Grisi shines in every character; from Norma the heroic, to Norina the coquettish.

ERNST AND THE BEETHOVEN QUARTET SOCIETY.

The Morning Post, in a luminous notice of the fourth meeting of Mr. Rousselot's admirable society, thus does justice to the artists-executants, at the head of whom stands the incomparable Ernst:—

We have already spoken of the inimitable ensemble produced by the artists forming "the Beethoven Society" in terms of highest eulogy. In addition to each member being a consummate master of his instrument, the habit of playing together has already produced a reciprocity of feeling, an unity of tone and style, which could scarcely be equalled, certainly not excelled by any body of executants at this moment before the metropolitan public. The directing mind of Herr Ernst, who is the presiding deity of these meetings, has doubtless done much towards the realisation of this admirable result; for the highly poetical temperament of our great German violinist, regulated and inspired by profound study of the great masters, could scarcely fail acting upon such sympathetic natures as those of Mr. Cooper (one of our ablest native violinists), Mr. Hill, (one of the best performers of chamber music in Europe), and M. Rousselot (a musician of learning and refined taste), to lead to the attainment of an executive excellence akin to perfection. Ernst was quite in the "Delphic mood," and we have rarely heard him play so finely. There was electricity in his fingers, they ran like lightning,—the lightning of thought. His violin truly appeared, like Apollo's lyre, to be "strung with poet's sinews;" and deeply did his audience feel the eloquent, soul dissolving music they discoursed.

In speaking of Beethoven's Quartet in F, which the writer pronounces inferior to Mozart's No. 1 in the same key—an opinion we humbly take leave to dispute—he apostrophises Ernst's performance of the Adagio in the following poetical manner:—

"The 'Adagio affettuoso ed appassionata' is an exquisitely pathetic tale of unrequited love. Its tearful, yearning tones, speak to the sympathising heart of a 'sweet want' unsatisfied as yet, perhaps for aye to be so; it is the voice of hope contending with despair. We need not say how Ernst called to life the magic beauties of this movement. The first violin plays a very prominent part in it, and everybody knows how this great artist excels all his contemporaries in the expression of deeply passionate emotions.

Again, further on, in allusion to another Adagio in the Rasamovsky Quartet in E minor, he renders justice to Ernst's manner in executing slow movements:—

"Another, and still greater opportunity was afforded him for the display of his special excellencies, in the wonderful Adagio of the eighth quartet. In this, he rose with his subject, and achieved the loftiest perfection of executive art. The passionate vibration of his tone, in passages of pathos, was such as the finest human voice, inspired by the most soul-felt musical feeling, could scarcely equal, whilst the lighter, and more gentle portions of the movement, he handled with an exquisite delicacy and refined taste, worthy of all praise. He was ably supported throughout by his coadjutors.

With the writer's notions of the posthumous quartet of Beethoven we have nothing to do. We should like to know to what "people" and to what "critics" he alludes in the following phillippic:—

"The twelfth quartet belongs to those which some people set down as 'unintelligible,' simply, because they cannot understand them. Would it not be more becoming in such critics to reflect that it is just possible that Beethoven may have been more profoundly versed in music than they are? Or at least, that it is much more likely they should commit an error in judgment, than a man of Beethoven's lofty genius and powerful intellect should, after 30 years' experience, produce bad works? We have not space at present to enter fully into this great question; but must leave it, as it is, undecided. On a future occasion we shall offer some remarks on the subject.

We are curious to be enlightened on this point, and hope to be instructed on the "future occasion" threatened. For our own parts we find it difficult to believe that any "people," much less "critics," can be found so stupid, and so impudent, as to think, and, thinking, to declare their conviction to the world, that Beethoven ever wrote "bad music," even in the wildest passages of the Posthumous Quartet.

Dramatic Intelligence.

FRENCH PLAYS.—ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—The opening of this theatre is one of those events which we always hail with pleasure; and this was more particularly the case on Thursday night, after a delay which had created apprehensions of our being deprived of our favorite sources of recreation. The "St. James's" is once more the centre of attraction for all who love French comedy, vaudeville, or farce in the original language, without any of those "improvements" (as the adapters are pleased to style them), not unfrequently introduced, by the way, by the original actors themselves. The promised re-appearance on June 2nd of the reatest tragic actress of modern times, the incomparable Rachel, would alone give weight to Mr. Mitchell's prospectus, were not the present company, consisting of Mdles. Judith, St. Marc, and Scriwaneck, and of Messieurs Regnier, Lafont, Hyacinthe, Roger, Tetard, &c., selected with discriminating tact, with reference of the style of pieces now performed at the theatre, which principally consists of light comedy and vaudeville. These actors play together as if they all belonged to the same boards, and had done nothing else during their lives; so that both principal and subordinate parts will be adequately filled, and will present a complete and perfect whole equally satisfactory to the public and to the critic. Thus, under Mr. Mitchell's auspices, we shall have another opportunity of judging how "these things are managed by our neighbours," and at the same time of discovering the great secrets of attraction at the French theatre, both in regard to authors and actors. The fact that no other manager has stepped forward to wrest the sceptre from Mr. Mitchell's grasp during the period of hesitation and doubt, is the best proof of the abilities of that gentleman, and of the general conviction that were he deprived of success, no man could have a shadow of a hope to "arrive." We have little doubt the present year will be prosperous for the enterprising manager of the French theatre; the immense concourse of foreigners who throng to the World's Fair, will be too glad to profit by this neutral ground of recreation, and, in spite of the great attractions of the Italian operas, the English theatres, and the numerous panoramas and exhibitions scattered over the face of London, we feel convinced that the French theatre will preserve a high place in public esteem, and the present locale be found lamentably deficient in space to accommodate this union of nations, all equally desirous of having the master-pieces of the modern French repertoire, and of doing homage to the transcendent genius of the divine Rachel.

On Monday, the French plays commenced under auspices more than usually favorable, and the salle presented a gratifying appearance on the rising of the curtain. The stalls were well filled, the boxes crammed, and the pit unable to contain the numbers who applied for admission. The first piece was a vaudeville, entitled Jobin et Nanette, which has been performed at the Haymarket, or at least forms the groundwork of the successful farce An Alarming Sacrifice. In the French vaudeville there are but two actors, and it consequently required both zeal and talent to bring the intrigue to a satisfactory conclusion. In this, Mdle. Scriwaneck and M. Hyacinthe were quite successful. The story turns on the influence of money in love affairs. The insolence of the village Adonis, when he supposes himself rich, and his subsequent humility, under the influence of love and poverty, were well depicted by M. Hyacinthe, who acted with much humour; and the honest, open-hearted village girl, whose affection is always the same uninfluenced by riches or poverty, was well represented by Mdle. Scriwaneck. The great feature of the evening, however, was Messrs. Scribe and Legouvé's new comedy, entitled Bataille de Dames. This is an importation from the Théâtre Français, where it was produced on the 17th of March; and is still played on alternate nights with Valerie. Few of the pieces attributed to M. Scribe are better written than this; and although it has not pretensions of the highest order, being little more than a cabinet picture, the handling is so exquisite, the language so chaste, the colouring so harmonious, and the incidents so natural, that we care not how often the spirited author of the Camaraderie condescends to such charming trifles as this "Ladies' duel." The writing differs materially from the style of M. Scribe, which is usually terse and epigrammatic, appeals more to the passions than to the heart. Here, however, we recognize the pen of M. Legouvé, who seeks to obtain the sympathy, and captivate the attention by interesting our feelings. We are of opinion that, in this work of the two collaborateurs, the writing is almost exclusively M. Legouvé's, but that the canvas has been furnished by M. Scribe. However this may be, we consider Bataille de Dames as a work of great merit, which may rank among the best pieces of the modern stage. The plot is exceedingly simple, and the incidents are neither new nor striking; but our attention is enchained throughout, and the interest never flags. The period of the plot is immediately after the restoration; rumour is rife with Bonapartist plots, and Henri de Flavigneul (M. Lafont) is concealed, under the disguise of a servant, at the house of a Royalist lady, of the name of La Comtesse d'Autreval (Mdle. Judith). Here the Countess and a niece (Mdle. St. Marc) watch over him, and endeavour to counteract the attempts of the prefect of the department, the Baron de Montrichard (M. Roger) to discover the fugitive. The baroness is on the "shady" side of thirty; the niece is eighteen; both are in love with the hero of the piece, and the hero in love with both, or rather hesitates between the two. The baroness parries all the efforts of the Prefect; the niece betrays her lover through over anxiety to save him; yet the result proves love, as usual, ungrateful, and youth triumphs over womanhood, and timid innocence over worldly prudence. The countess sacrifices her love to the happiness of the younger couple; the Prefect is discomfited; and Gustave de Grignon (M. Regnier), who, a lover of a novel description, by turns extravagantly brave and ludicrously pusillanimous, winds up the piece by appealing to the countess to make a real hero of him by uniting her destiny to his.

Such is the slight outline of this piece, which pleased us more than we can describe, especially the last two acts; the first being a little too long, and containing speeches a little too didactic for the stage, where brevity is the soul of almost everything. The countess and her niece are two kind and excellent creatures, most delicately sketched. These two parts were played with true feminine tact and delicacy by Mdles. Judith and St. Marc. The former lady, new to the London public, is a decided acquisition; the latter we greet and welcome as an old acquaintance. M. Lafont is a favourite of many years standing. Although playing the part of a valet, this accomplished comedian was still the perfect gentleman and finished artist. M. Regnier is now established in the height of the habitués of the St. James's; he fills the stage by himself; he is ubiquitous; the scene in which he is to be shot for another is a master-piece of acting.

L'Amour à l'Aveuglette is a charming little piece, full of smart and witty repartees. It turns on the disadvantage of choosing a lover whom you cannot see. Mdle. Scriwaneck played the part of the short-sighted widow with much archness and vivacity; and M. Fétard and M. Hyacinthe elicited frequent bursts of laughter by the humour which they threw into their parts, both being outrageous stammerers when excited, and unconscious of their respective failings. During the evening the National Anthem was sung by the popular and talented Madame Charton, assisted by a complete chorus. Madame Charton could not but sing beautifully, and her pronunciation was unexceptionable. She looked well, and called up a host of recollections of past enjoyments, which we should be but too happy to renew.

J. de C.
SADLERS WELLS.—Lord Byron's tragedy of "Werner," so seldom heard of elsewhere, has been among the most noted popularities of this theatre. Not only is the action of great interest and the catastrophe ingeniously veiled, but the tragedy has great strength and variety of character. The rough soldier, Gabor, is a master-sketch, and comes out in bold and picturesque contrast to Werner and his son. It needs but a more healthy state of public opinion to place this tragedy among the most effective dramas of the age. The acting is unusually good. We have more than once had occasion to remark the careful re-study manifested by Mr. Phelps on his resumption of parts that have been laid aside for short intervals. This diligent revising process was again visible in his performance of Werner. He gave the Repose of Despair in the early scenes, with impressive effect, and imparted to the passages of passion and energy more than his wonted vigour. He was loudly and justly applauded throughout, and obeyed a vociferous call at the end. The part of Gabor has an admirable representative in Mr. G. Bennett, and that of Ulric a no less excellent impersonator in Mr. Henry Marston.—G.

MARYLEBONE.—The drama of "Our Village," has been revived here for Mr. Wild, who, as an ostler transformed into a sailor, has a part well suited to his broad boisterous humour. He was ably supported by Miss Fanny Williams, with her fair face and pretty feet. Mr. H. Chester commenced an engagement on Monday in the popular farce of "Artful Dodge," and, with Mr. Wild, keeps the audience in excellent humour. The house has been moderately well filled.

APOLLONICON, LOWTHER ARCADE.—The concerts continue to be attractive. The principal vocalists for the evening selections are Miss Messent and Miss Poole. On Thursday evening, the former lady sang Sir H. Bishop's "Tell me, my heart" and the quaint Scottish song, "Wha wauld na fight for Charlie," in both of which she was encored. Miss Poole gave two songs in her most charming style, and was also encored. Miss Rosina Collins, the fairest of violinists, obtained the like honour in a solo. In short, it was the day of the Exhibition, and the audience being in holiday humour, encored everybody. The attendance was good.

Original Correspondence.

GORLITZA.—GORLITZA.

(To the Editor of the Musical World.)

April 21, 1851.

SIR.—I should be the last person to call in question the professional talent of your correspondent, Mr. J. Byrn, but if he would make himself better acquainted with the meaning and application, as well as the legal definition of the word "Copy-right" before he figures again in your columns, either upon this subject or as the reviewer of reviewers, his time will not be ill employed. As to "spoiling a bar" of the composition alluded to, I am inclined to think with you, that "it is not painfully recherché;" and all the merit it can lay claim to is the having introduced a Terpsichorean novelty, a thing that dancing-masters are obliged to seek after, or invent, as well as the contrivers of any other fashion, either in music or millinery. What can be meant by "pirating the compositions of others" I cannot understand, as applied to this "Danse Livonienne," unless in regard to the monopoly of the parties for whom the entire and unconditional property is assumed.

Why, therefore, Mr. Byrn should trouble himself to "send to Paris for further documents to prove such statement," I cannot divine. Does he not know that Copy-right has no "extra territorial" claim; and that every country possesses laws peculiar to itself, and applicable alone to its own subjects, in regard to this as well as every other right? Hence the treaties which have been entered into with some States, and are negotiating with others, to establish the law of international Copy-right with this country. Surely every one knows that France and America, and many other countries, print with impunity all the copy-right literature of this country; and it would be quite a new order of things for M. Varin, having composed, published, and been compensated for, a thing which he had no other view to emolument from than the place, people, and occasion, for which it was written, to find that Messrs. Byrn, Hale and Son had established a British Copy-right for him, merely from the circumstance of the former "being the introducer into England" of a rapid succession of Crotchets, differing somewhat in the measure and style of dancing from the Polka, Schottische, Mazurka, &c. As well might Mr. Byrn try to obtain for M. Varin the electoral franchise by putting him in possession of property which whilst it would confer that right upon a British subject, could not invest a foreigner with it, just because neither birth or residence had entitled him to that privilege. Something is said about English Composers having "a poor opinion of their own brains not to attempt to compose other Gorlitzas, and thus make them as various as Polkas." Were it not for being suspected of making your columns the vehicle for the puff oblique, I could name one or two compositions of great excellence in this style, by English Composers, which owe nothing to M. Varin, but the suggestion as to the measure, my object being entirely to set Mr. Byrn and your readers right on the score of what constitutes copy-right.

I am Sir, yours most obediently,
ONE OF THE CRAFT.

PRIZE ANTHEMS.

(To the Editor of the Musical World.)

SIR,—I perceive in your paper of this date, that a person signing himself "A Church Musician" declares, that he "saw it announced, that Mr. Surman's Exeter Hall Society had offered prizes for the composition of Anthems and Orchestral Accompaniments." He then proceeds to enquire what is become of the promise alluded to. Now this reminds one of the story of a person saying to a Quaker, This is the road to York, is it not? to which the drab coloured man replied, Friend, thou first tellest a lie, and then askest a question. What a "Church Musician" saw announced, or might have seen announced, if he read your paper of the 22nd of February last, was that the Committee of the London Sacred Harmonic Society "have resolved to recommend to the Subscribers, at their next General Meeting, to give two annual prizes for the Composition of Orchestral Anthems." The Committee did not feel authorised to devote the money of the Society to such an object without consulting the wishes of the Subscribers at their General Meeting, and that General Meeting has not yet taken place.

26 April, 1851.

I am, &c.,

F. I. S.

MR. HORSLEY'S "DAVID."

(To the Editor of the Musical World.)

SIR,—Allow me to congratulate you and your readers upon the advent of a most important era as regards criticism in general, and musical criticism in particular.

Your last number contained a masterly critical synopsis of Mr. Horsley's work, written in a liberal yet courageous spirit, by a highly competent individual, who had at once the hardihood and the generosity to append his name.

This, I conceive, to have been done for two reasons—firstly, because Mr. Macfarren knew that his own assumption of the critical office would not be impugned; and, secondly, because he felt that he was about to enact an unprejudiced opinion, against which no suspicion of unfairness could possibly rise in judgment.

This is also as it should be—not only as regards musical criticism, but as regards all criticism.

I am not, Mr. Editor, about to write a dissertation upon the present state of journalism, but merely advert to the well-known fact that it is the facilities offered by the "incognita" system which have ruined many a rising genius, and consigned to oblivion many a work which had else been the admiration of a world.

Mr. Horsley has been fortunate in having obtained a competent criticism of his meritorious work—had it not been for your number of Saturday last, the oratorio of "David," or rather the reputation of its author, might have taken its colour from the criticisms of the daily press, which "damned with faint praise."

Before concluding this, I will advert to one single circumstance only,—which appears to have been lost sight of, namely, that whilst Mr. Horsley has been somewhat unscrupulously accused of plagiarism as regards certain matters of conventionality, the only real appropriation has been that of the subject and its title!—can it be forgotten that the Chevalier Neukohm, so far back as 1830, or 1831, (in the year of the opening of the Birmingham Town Hall) composed a sacred oratorio on the same subject, and bearing the same title? If such be forgotten, it ought not so to be, for the work in question was one of undoubted merit, and if I am not wrong in my belief, was written expressly for the occasion on which it was represented, for the author of these lines was at the side of the illustrious composer, and assisted in the performance. Mr. Horsley's oratorio I believe to be better than that of the great German "amateur" as he has unjustly been termed. But whilst Mr. H. has committed somewhat of a blunder in choosing a subject which had been previously adopted, it does not at all lay under the imputation of plagiarism, in the common acceptance of the word.

You are at liberty to publish my name if you think proper; but unless for especial reasons, I am content to rest in my customary obscurity, and have the honor to remain, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

PHILO-MUSICA.

SIGISMUND THALBERG.

(To the Editor of the Musical World.)

SIR,—In my reply of last week, regarding the birthplace of Thalberg, you have printed Genna, instead of Geneva, the town where he was born. Please to correct this mistake.

Edinburgh, 28th April, 1851.

Yours truly, D. H.

L'ENFANT PRODIGE.

(To the Editor of the Musical World.)

SIR,—Can you inform your readers who are to be the principal performers in the opera of L'Enfant Prodigue, about to be produced at the Royal Italian Opera? Also, whether Sig. Ronconi has arrived yet in London?

Athenæum Club, Pall Mall,
29th April, 1851.

I am Sir,
Your obedient servant,

AN OPERA-GOER.

[The cast is not yet published, but we believe Ronconi will play Massol's part. The "Figaro of Figaros" has not yet arrived in London.—Ed. M. W.]

BRITISH MUSICIANS IN 1851.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—It may seem unnecessary to add anything to the forcible remarks in your leading article of last week relative to the prospects of British Musicians this year; but as you deemed some observations on the subject of English opera which I addressed to you a short time since, worthy of insertion, you will perhaps pardon me for again trespassing on your attention.

With respect to English opera, this is undoubtedly the season, of all others, when something ought to be accomplished. It has, however, fallen into a state of apathy from which it will be difficult to rescue it. Lacking support from the public, enthusiasm has died away among its members, and little hope apparently remains for its reconstruction. The cause of this unfortunate state of apathy has already been alluded to in former articles, and I will not, therefore, pause here to reinvestigate it. What we have principally to do with now, is the fact that English opera is in such a collapsed state, that it requires some powerful stimulus to restore it to vitality.

Is there no remedy? Can we nowhere find the spell that shall rekindle alike enthusiasm and hope on the part of the British musicians, and persuade them to labour in their own cause, and on the part of the public to appreciate and support their exertions?

You urge (and this cannot be too emphatically impressed on all) that whatever is to be done, should be on a scale to command respect. If this can be effected, and English Opera be re-established with becoming dignity, then may not British musicians hopefully turn towards one whose name has rung throughout the world? May they not hope that England is dear to her whose fame it was the first to establish? Was it not England that placed her on that high pinnacle, gazing up to which through the mist of ages succeeding generations shall still revere the name of Jenny Lind, when a mausoleum alone denotes the resting-place of the world's idol?

Jenny Lind once signed a compact to appear on the English lyrical stage. Had she done so, its fate might have been different. Will she now refuse to lend her magic influence to raise the national opera of that country whose pride it has been to spread her renown, and pay homage to her genius and goodness.

Let her follow the generous dictates of her own heart, and she will add another bead to her chaplet by aiding to rebuild the shattered fabric of English opera, and thus, whilst reaping fresh honours for herself, impose a debt of gratitude on British artists by once more affording them a temple for the glorification of their art.

Madlle. Lind will distrust the advice of those counsellors who dissuade her from such a step; and treat the opposition of those who make a market of her talents as it merits. She is bound by close ties to England, and the voice that has so nobly responded where no claim existed, will not be silent at the humble petition of our national Opera in its hour of gloom and despondency.

If Madlle. Lind would for a short time deign to grace the boards of the English lyrical stage, its establishment on a permanent basis would be as good as accomplished. Difficulties would vanish like shadows before the sun, and the long-neglected English opera, replaced in its lost position, again attain the meridian of popular favour; English composers and English artistes, pointing with pride in after ages to the home of their art, would repeat the story as a legend.—The English lyrical drama had ceased to exist, but Jenny Lind came to it, and restored it, thereby raising to herself her most glorious and enduring monument."

I have the honour to be, Sir, &c.,

F. G. B.

Foreign.

HAMBURG.—(From a Correspondent.)—A concert was given on Wednesday by Carl Maria Farkas, a tenor of repute in this free city, which was well attended. The programme consisted of eight pieces, whereof six were vocal and two instrumental. The concert-giver began by giving an air of Verdi with Hungarian words, well executed, but not of the choicest. Otto Goldschmidt, the pianist, followed with a ronde of his own, and a "waltz" of Chopin, the last of which, brilliantly fingered, pleased the audience. Fraulein M. Sulzer then exhibited her capacity in an air by A. Fesca, "Im Thale," which was heard with attention. Another Hungarian lied, "A Virág" (the flowers), from the lips of the concert-giver, Herr Farkas, produced less effect than a German lied, "Die Thrane" (tears), by G. Schmied, with which it was accoupled. The Germans, more especially the Hamburgers, offer an example to your English burghers by which they might profit; they prefer their own music to that of other nations, and are not ashamed of it, and exemplify it in practice.—Q. E. D., but which, I fear, will never be in England. Concertmeister Herrn Joanovits then came before the audience, and much delighted them by a vigorous and correct execution of Vieuxtemps' Concerto in B minor, a work of as much difficulty as merit. The novelty of the concert, not to say the feature, was the first appearance before a Hamburg public of Madame Macfarren, of whose arrival here I spoke in my last. She sang an English national air, "My lodging is on the cold ground." The style of melody and the unaffected manner in which it was sung, could not fail to touch the sympathies of the hearers; and the result was, that Madame Macfarren had to retrace her steps on the platform, in obedience to the unanimous demand. Instead of repeating the national melody, however, she sang the first of Mendelssohn's two songs, known under the name of "Zuleika," and made a still greater impression. The success of Madame Macfarren at the concert has excited general curiosity about her approaching debut at the Stadt Theatre, in Tancred. The concert concluded with the "Regatta Veneziana" and "Tarantella," from Rossini's Soirées Musicales, arranged for the piano-forte by Liszt, played with great sprightliness by Herrn Otto Goldschmidt; and a third Hungarian melody, "A Boldogtött" (the Be-happied), the last performance of Carl Maria Farkas, the successful concert-giver.

MUSIC AT MANCHESTER.

(From the Manchester Guardian.)

A miscellaneous Dress Concert took place on Monday evening, of which the following was the programme:—

PART I.

Eighth Symphony.....(in F).....Beethoven.
Duetto, Miss Dolby and Mr. Whitworth. "Ah! tu non sai".....(Margherita d'Anjou).....Meyerbeer.
Aria, Signor Calzolari....."Il mio tesoro".....Mozart.
Concerto, Mr. Charles Hallé.....(in D minor).....Mendelssohn.
Aria, Madame Fiorentini. "Piano, pianoc anto pio".....(Der Freischütz).....Weber.
Scena, Mr. Whitworth. "Deh! ti ferma".....(Semiramide).....Rossini.
Duetto, Madame Fiorentini and Signor Calzolari. "Ah! morir".....(Ernani).....Verdi.

PART II.

Overture.....(Fingal).....Mendelssohn.
Scena, Miss Dolby. "Aure, deh per pietà" (Giulio Cesare).....Handel.
Aria, Sig Calzolari....."Una furtiva".....(Elisir d'Amore).....Donizetti.
Canzona Spagnola, Madame Fiorentini.....Yradier.
Solo } Mr. Chas. Hallé...{ Nocturne, in D flat.....Chopin
Piano Forte } Study, in A minor.....Thalberg.
Melodie, Mr. Whitworth....."L'Ange Déchu".....Vogel.
A Fire-side Song, Miss Dolby.....Wallace.
Duetto, Madame Fiorentini and Signor Calzolari. "Tornami a dir".....(Don Pasquale).....Donizetti.
Overture.....(Semiramide).....Rossini.
Conductor, Mr. C. Hallé.—Leader, Mr. Seymour.

This was one of the most delightful concerts we have had. Except one or two superfluities in the vocal department, the programme was interesting and varied. In expressing our satisfaction at the improved style of these concerts, we are not disposed to disregard the objections of many subscribers to their frequently too great length, and were glad they had no cause for complaint on this occasion. We still hear, too—even amongst those who would pass for patrons of art as well as leaders of fashion—the introduction of a symphony or classical concerto into the programme of a dress concert condemned, as too heavy or noisy. With this class of objectors we certainly cannot sympathize. No miscellaneous selection can be complete or worthy of an intelligent audience, without one or more of those compositions—which, by the unanimous judgment of professed musicians, and the appreciating sense of enlightened musical understandings, have been proclaimed, and will be handed down to future ages, as masterpieces of immortal genius. To touch upon that arbitrary ruler of society—fashion—a few years ago, we might have done so with diffidence. But a wondrous change has taken place. With the rapid advance of civilization in this country, great progress has been made in the higher branches of art; and a more general knowledge and practice of music has led to the production or regeneration of a higher order of compositions, especially as regards operatic and orchestral works. In support of these views, and to show that classical music has become fashionable, it is only necessary to refer to the repertoire of the Italian operas, or the concerts patronised by all who claim rank or station in London society. We would more signally instance the remarkable circumstance, that on the eventful day of the opening of the Great Exhibition of National Industry, "Fidelio" has been announced at the Italian Opera, and is hailed as an extraordinary attraction. Yet those who complain of the heaviness of one of Beethoven's glorious symphonies, could certainly not appreciate his Fidelio. In thus reiterating what we have but recently advanced, our main object is to point out, or rather assist, a course of management, by which these concerts would become and remain worthy of the community and the means at command. Our independent criticism may at times differ with acknowledged opinions, but we would court rather than supplant individual judgment, the free exercise of which is far preferable to its too frequent subjection to conventional sophistry.

Beethoven's 8th symphony opened the concert, and was well played, though the orchestra did not seem fully at home in the first part. The trumpets were too harsh and loud; in many points, the effect was marred by the excessive vehemence. In the horns, and at times in the reed instruments too, there was a want of precision in the first part, which, however, was less felt as the symphony progressed. The pianissimo of the violins in the finale was charming; and, altogether, the spirit of the music seemed better understood in this than in the other movements, though it was most difficult. The first duet was ineffective. Signor Calzolari sang "Il mio tesoro" with much expression and feeling. His style is chaste and pleasing, his intonation most correct, and he was deservedly encored. The great features of the evening were, however, Mendelssohn's concerto and the scena from Der Freischütz. The former, though comparatively little known, is replete with all the beauty and grandeur of Mendelssohn's genius, and we are sure was never more exquisitely played. Hallé's heart and soul were in it, and the performance throughout was one of the greatest treats we have had for a long time. There was, indeed, something more than usually striking in his conception of this splendid work, and his brilliant execution of the concluding pages was one of the finest things we have heard. The orchestral accompaniment was conducted with great care by Mr. Seymour; and we cannot give higher praise, than to say the whole performance was worthy the composition.

Madame Fiorentini made a most successful début in Weber's inspired and most thrilling aria, which she sang with powerful effect, yet, throughout with such ease and grace, that one almost forgot its great difficulty—a rare merit in this trying scena, which few prima donnas overcome without vast effort. Her voice is, perhaps, more remarkable for power and evenness of tone than sweetness; but her intonation is faultless, and she has great compass. Her whole delivery, indeed, denotes the first-rate artiste, and fully justifies her great reputation. She sang besides a spirited little Spanish canzonet, with such characteristic enthusiasm, that it elicited a warm and unanimous encore. Our great favourite, Miss Dolby, sang the air of Handel; it is a fine piece of musical declamation, but contrasted too much with the rest of the vocal selection. Wallace's song was exceedingly well sung by the charming English vocalist. Mr. Whitworth's best performance was Vogel's fine song; but it is capable of far more expression, and his delivery is much too heavy. However, where so much is excellent, one is made over critical; and, we are free to admit, that even these weaker points would have passed muster at many a previous concert in that room. We have still to mention Hallé's performance of Chopin's Nocturne, and Thalberg's Etude, which be ~~very~~ ^{highly} appreciated. The overture, Fingal, of Mendelssohn, too, ~~was~~ ^{was} admirably well; both the music and performance impressed with each hearing.

PROVINCIAL.

DONCASTER, (April 25).—The concluding concert for the season of the Philharmonic Society took place last Tuesday evening. The entertainment was a fit conclusion to the series. The society has now terminated its second series of concerts. In the first concert we had Mr. Rogers; in the second, Mr. Ellis Roberts; in the third, Mr. Richardson; and in the last, again Mr. Rogers. The vocalists have been, in the first concert, Miss Williams and Mr. Machin; and in the last, Mrs. Alexander Newton and Mr. Bridge Frodsham. If the concerts have been of a superior quality, so, likewise, has at all times the audience been numerous. We shall now enter upon the particulars of the late concert.

The concert opened with Pleyel's Sinfonia No. 18, by the band. Mr. Seale led with ability. Mrs. Alexander Newton next presented herself, and was well received; she holds a high place as a concert singer in the metropolis. Her song "Oh for an Eagle's pinions," by Donizetti, was ably performed; the beautiful quality of her voice was at once appreciated, and the applause well merited. Mr. Bridge Frodsham displayed his talents in a serenade by Schubert. His voice is a high tenor of pleasing quality, if not conspicuous for power; a better has not been heard in Doncaster, in our remembrance, in any concert of the kind. The band performed the "Natalian Waltzer" by Labitzki, a tiresome thing, to which, however, they did justice. "Qui la voce," from I Puritani, was executed by Mrs. Newton in such a manner as to convince the audience of her qualities as a concert singer. She was rewarded with an encore. Mr. Bridge Frodsham sang "My Pretty Jane" in a successful manner, and an encore was the consequence. The last vocal piece of the first part, by Mrs. Newton and Mr. Frodsham, was Rossini's duet, "Amor possente nome." The two voices blended together with excellent effect. Mozart's overture to Figaro was next played by the band. In part second the band essayed its powers in the overture to Clemenza di Tito. Mrs. Alexander Newton appeared to advantage in the ballad "Robin Adair," which she herself accompanied. It was encored, as likewise was Mr. Bridge Frodsham's "Lass of Gowrie." Mr. Rogers' appearance was the signal for a hearty outbreak of feeling, a sign of the great respect in which he is held. He played an air by Felicien David, varied for the pianoforte by Henri Streich—"Les Rhododendres."

Mr. Rogers being encored, again came forward, and played a fantasia, by Thalberg, the Masaniello. Owing to its great length, Mr. Rogers only gave from the "Tarantella" to the end. The applause which followed was well earned. Mrs. Alexander Newton next sang Donizetti's cavatina, "O luce di quest'anima," and was recalled, and Mr. Bridge Frodsham a ballad, by Alcroft, entitled "I love her though her heart be blighted," in good style. The vocalists then sang "Meet me by moonlight alone." Mr. Frodsham then appeared to sing the celebrated "Death of Nelson," by Brahms. Another "gallop" being got through by the band, the concert was brought to a close with "God save the Queen." The concert and the season being now concluded, we must tender our best thanks to the executive committee, directors, and managers, for the honour which they have conferred upon the town, the excellent performances, and the facility they have afforded to all classes to attend them. We hope the managers will continue to support native talent. Confident they will pursue the proper course, we wish them many prosperous seasons.

LIVERPOOL.—Last night Mr. Albert Smith, so well known as one of the most pleasing contributors to our light literature, and the author of a variety of comic works, dramas, burlesques, songs, and monologues, appeared at the Philharmonic-hall, with a new entertainment, entitled "The Overland Mail." The audience were highly delighted, and laughed incessantly at the whimsicalities of their entertainer, who surprised us by his varied talents. Mr. Albert Smith is not only one of the most amusing, but one of the most industrious of men; wherever he goes, whatever he does, he turns to good account—pleasing the public, with profit to himself. He is a modern Proteus, or admirable Crichton—novelist, wit, journalist, dramatist, artist—everything by turns; and now comes forward as a rival to Charles Mathews and John Parry, in a new entertainment, written by himself, which has everywhere drawn crowded audiences, and "put money in his purse." Mr. Albert Smith, two years since, paid a visit to the East, and the result has been an amusing volume of travels, and the entertainment of "The Overland Mail." This consists of humorous descriptions of events and mishaps incident to eastern travel, laughable and satiric descriptions of character, interspersed with piquant anecdotes, and some of the best comic songs we ever heard. Mr. Smith starts from Suez, through the desert, touches at Cairo, travels up the Nile in a Kandja, or Nile boat, calls at the Pyramids, and proceeds to Cairo. The second part of the entertainment describes Malta, Marseilles, the Avignon Railroad, diligence travelling, and the English French town of Boulogne. In Mr. Smith's eyes, the East loses much of its glory; he looked at all in a common-sense manner, which disenchanting him of his youthful dreams, and proved that some of the high-flown descriptions of modern travellers are what is characteristically denominated "booh." Mr. Smith displayed the versatility of his talents by singing his songs in capital style, imitating the peculiarities of his fellow-passengers, and playing on the cornet-a-piston, piano, and a tin violin, purchased from the engineer of a French steamer a merveille. The entertainment is illustrated by some panoramic views, from the pencil of Mr. William Beverley, of the Lyceum Theatre. The glowing skies, vast arid deserts, and picturesque landscapes of Egypt are depicted with vivid truthfulness. The entertainment will be repeated this and the two following evenings. We cannot imagine a more pleasant way of spending two hours than in travelling with Mr. Albert Smith by the "Overland Mail."

BOLTON.—On Monday evening last, the Soho Iron Works band gave a miscellaneous concert in the Temperance Hall, under the patronage of Sir Joshua Walmsley, M.P. and Stephen Blair, Esq. M.P. This was the first given publicly by this band, who are all young men employed at the works, and have a first-rate selection of instruments, both in brass and reed. They are led by Mr. J. King, a young man of good musical taste which may in some degree account for the progress they have made. The first part was opened by the brass band with Anber's overture to Masaniello, which was well executed and warmly applauded. Bellini's quartet, "Lisa," sung by Miss Ryalls, Miss Burgoyne, and Mr. Ryalls (Mr. Wray presiding at the piano forte), was not very effective. Mr. Ryalls met with an encore in the ballad, "The maid of Kildare." The cavatina, "Sweetly o'er my senses," sung by Miss Burgoyne, was applauded, although too much for her compass. A fantasia on the pianoforte by Thalberg was given by Mons. Wehli with much brilliancy, and met with a loud encore. Mr. W. B. Wray gave a song characteristic of Negro life. He too met with an encore, upon which he amused the company with "Uncle Ned." Mr. King followed with a solo on the cornet-a-piston, in which he displayed much talent. Mr. Ryalls in "They won't let me out," was again encored; and after Mendelssohn's beautiful duet "I would that my love," the first part concluded with the Royal Polka quadrilles, by the reed band. The second part passed off equally well, concluding with the national anthem, sung by the principals, Mons. Wehli accompanying on the pianoforte. There has been long felt a want of musical opportunity for the middle and working classes of Bolton. Let it be hoped that this experiment may lead to a scheme for the promotion of musical taste among the people.—Manchester Examiner.

PORTSEA.—Herr Goffrie, violinist of the Royal Italian Opera Band, gave a concert at the Queen's Rooms, on Wednesday evening week, under the patronage of the Mayor of Portsmouth, Admiral Sir Thomas Bladen and Lady Capel, Lord Frederick and Lady Fitzclarence, Rear Admiral Prescott and Lord George Lennox. The talented violinist was assisted by Mdle. Lavinia, pupil of Emanuel Garia, and Signor Marchesi as vocalists, and Mdme. Goffrie as pianist. The concert was excellent and well-varied. Popular pieces, single and double, were the order of the day, or rather night, and all was done, which could be done, to gratify those present. Signor Marchesi, who has a capital barytone voice, gave several pieces with decided effect, of which we may mention, "Non Più Andrai" and "Largo al Factotum," as the best. Mdle. Lavinia, with a pleasing soprano voice, was much liked. She essayed more than one style, and sang Balfe's music as well as Rossini's. Herr Goffrie played De Beriot's Andante and Rondo Russe; a fantasia on Lucrezia Borgia; and with Madame Goffrie, sundry duets for violin and piano. Herr Goffrie produced an undeniable sensation, and obtained great applause. Madame Goffrie was no less applauded in her share of the concert. There were also two quartets of Haydn's given. The performances were highly interesting.

Miscellaneous.

ERNST.—This celebrated violin-player has returned to town from a short tour in the provinces.

HERB BOEHM.—This celebrated improver of flutes, on principles of acoustics, is in London. He is employed as a commissioner from abroad, to look after certain interests at the Great Exhibition.

MISS HELEN FAWCET has been performing at the Theatre Royal, Manchester, during the past week, with great success.

MADAME BISCACIANI, the talented vocalist, has arrived in, London.

MADAME CHANTON.—The accomplished actress and vocalist of the Opera Comique, is in town for the season.

M. CHARLES OBERTHUR, the well-known composer for the harp, has just been appointed Harpist to Her Royal Highness, the Duchess of Nassau.

HERB PAUER, a composer and pianist of distinguished talent; from Vienna, has arrived in London.

HERB RAKEMANN, a German pianist of acknowledged talent, who was in England seven years ago, has arrived in London, from New York.

THEODORE KULLAK.—This popular composer and celebrated pianist is expected from Vienna, in the month of June.

MR. E. J. TURNER'S CONCERT.—This event is announced to come off on Tuesday next, at the Hanover Square Rooms, when Mr. Turner will make his first bow in public. This gentleman is a pupil of Mr. Clement White, and report speaks favourably of his vocal talents. He will be assisted in his concert by the Misses Watson, Poole, Dolby, and Mr. Leffler, as vocalists; and by M. Camus (flute), Herr Oberthur (harp), and M. Billet (piano), as instrumentalists.

EXETER HALL.—Mendelssohn's Elijah was performed last night by the Members of the Sacred Harmonic Society. The principal vocalists were Miss Catherine Hayes, Sims Reeves, and Herr Formes. We shall render a full account in our next.

THE GREAT EXHIBITION.—The four judges appointed to decide on the merits of the musical instruments are Sir Henry Bishop, Sir George Smart, Mr. Sterndale Bennett, and Dr. Henry Wilde.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A review of the publications forwarded by Messrs. Cocks, and Mr. Siccama, and a notice of M. Barret's "Complete Method for the Oboe," are in type, and will appear next week.

GENEBREL.—We are unable to answer the question of a correspondent, who signs himself, "An Admirer of Genebrel," as to the precise date of the anticipated arrival of this obscure celebrity. Perhaps he had better apply at the Box-office of Her Majesty's Theatre, where he will find Mr. Nugent, the most intelligent and obliging of Sbeers.

Advertisements.

M. ERNST'S

GRAND EVENING CONCERT will take place at the HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS on MONDAY, JUNE 2nd. Full particulars at Cramer, Beale, and Co.'s, 201, Regent-street, and 67, Conduit-street.

CORNOPEANS, OPHEICLEIDES, SAX TUBAS, &C.

J. J. HATTE, Musical Instrument Maker to Her Majesty's J. Army and Navy, sells Sax Tubas—E flat tenor, £2 15s.; B flat Alto, £3 3s.; B flat Bass, £6; Contra Bass, £8. Cornopeans, 30s., £2 10s., £2 10s. Courtois Model, £3 10s. and £4 4s.; Basson Model (3 Sax valves), £4 10s. and £5 5s., New Transposing, £4 4s. Ophicleides, (11 keys and tuning slide), £3 10s. Trombones, Trumpets, Horns, Drums, Cymbals, &c., new and second hand, equally cheap. Eight-keyed Cocoa Concert Flutes, with tuning slide, patent head, and German silver cup keys, from £1 1s. Clarionets, six keys 15s.; extra keys in proportion. Good Violin Bows, from 2s. HATTE's celebrated Roman and Anglo-Roman Strings. Send postage stamps and try a first at 2d.

Orders accompanied by post-office orders, made payable to JOSEPH HATTE, 76, Leadenhall Street, London.

UNDER THE MOST DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE.

DR. BLACK'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.

DR. WILLIAM BLACK, of No. 49, Moorgate Street, opposite the Bank of England, London, Physician and Member of the Royal College of Surgeons, wishes to acquaint the Public that his Pills and Ointment are sovereign remedies for the undermentioned disorders. It will also be necessary to use the Ointment as well as the Pills in some cases.

The above celebrated Pills are sold in Boxes at 1s. 1d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. per Box. The Anodyne Ointment is sold in Boxes at 1s. 6d., 2s., and 5s. per Box. By sending the amount either in Postage Stamps or by Post-Office Order payable to William Black, the wishes of the Patient shall be at once complied with.

Indigestion, Nervousness, Boils, Erysipelas, Lowness of Spirits, Bilious affections, Bad Legs, Apoplexy, Ring Worm, Want of Appetite, Abscesses, Swimming in the head, Piles and Fistulas, Jaundice, Pains in the Side, Inflammation, Liver Complaints, Sickness of the Stomach, Colic, Scrofula, Bowel Complaints, Lumbago, Tic-Doloureux, Spasms, Gout, Dropsy.

These excellent Pills and Ointment have cured some thousands of persons, both in England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales, and numerous testimonials from some of the first of the Nobility and Gentry in the world, which are too numerous to publish; can be seen by calling on Dr. Black at his own Private Medical Establishment.

Kenton Hall, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 15th December, 1850.

DEAR SIR,—Permit me to say, that I have been so much pleased with your excellent Pills that they have cured me of a direful malady, which I have been suffering from the last ten years, and have been under some of the first medical men in the country, none of which could do me any good, until I was persuaded by my friend, Colonel Campbell, to try your Pills; and I am happy to say that I am quite cured from my disease, and as it is not my intention to be without a box of your Pills, I will thank you to send me one of your large Boxes, for which I enclose you a small cheque on my London bankers, the Royal British Bank.

I am, Sir, yours, most respectfully, JOHN KEY, Knt.

P.S.—I shall do myself the honour of calling at your house the first time I am in London, to thank you personally; and you have full authority to make use of this testimonial.

J. K.

Stanton, near Derby, 5th March, 1851.

SIR,—Will you receive the thanks of a poor man and his wife and family for the wonderful cure that your Ointment has made on my legs. I am happy to say that I am able to go to my work again, at the Stanton Iron Works; which has saved myself and wife going into the Workhouse, and which God will bless you for. Before I heard of the many cures that your Ointment and Pills had made, I was under the Parish Surgeon for nine months, but he could afford me but little relief. I have told my fellow workmen of the wonderful cure, four boxes of your Ointment have done for me, and think it my duty to recommend to my fellow-countrymen and workmen, your invaluable poor-man's Ointment.

I am, honoured Sir, your very humble servant,
GEORGE KIRK.

To Dr. Black.

Wells Castle, Scotland, March 1st, 1851.

Captain Elliott presents his respectful compliments to Dr. Black, and wishes Dr. B. to receive his best wishes and thanks for entirely removing, with Dr. B.'s invaluable Pills and Ointment, a Cancer that Captain E. has been suffering the most excruciating pain from, for nearly ten years, until he was induced through seeing an advertisement of Dr. Black's, to apply for a box of Pills and Ointment, and after continuing with it for a few weeks, found the greatest relief and benefit, and eventually had this so-called incurable disease entirely eradicated with the Pills and Ointment of Dr. Black.

St. George's Road, Southwark, April 1851.

SIR,—I am happy to inform you that through taking a few boxes of your Pills, that it has entirely removed a nervous debility, which I had been suffering from for some time, and I hope never to be without a box of your excellent Pills.

I have the honour to be, Sir, Yours faithfully,

W. Black, Esq., M.D., &c., &c.

THOMAS TRIBE, Lieut., R.N.

Rectory, Higham Ferrers, 14th April, 1851.

SIR,—I beg most respectfully to inform you that your Pills have removed some dreadful pains in my head, which I have been subject to for the last twenty years, and could not find any other medicine that would remove this complaint until I took your Pills, which I am proud to say has freed me from pain which I was subject to daily.

To Dr. Black.

I remain, dear Sir, yours with profound respect,
GEORGE DOVE, D.D.

Christ's College, Oxford, April 1st, 1851.

DR. BLACK, SIR.—Since using your Pills and Ointment, I find that my appetite of which I had hitherto a very great want of, is quite restored, and the application of your valuable Ointment has not only removed a bad Ulcer, that I have had for some few years, but where I have applied it in other parts, the skin is quite smoothed.

Your faithful servant, W. WATKINS.

DEAR SIR,—I must feel grateful for the very great benefit that your Pills have done me, for until I took your Pills, I was troubled with a swimming in the head, and lowness of spirits which I am relieved from in consequence of taking your Pills.

I am, dear Sir, yours respect uly, ANNE JOHNSTON.

Middle Temple, 10th April, 1851.

SIR,—I am pleased to say that your Pills have cured me of Asthma, which I have been suffering from for nine years.

Believe me to remain, my dear Sir, yours truly,

William Black, M.D.

J. WATSON.

SCHOTT AND CO.'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

- PIANO SOLOS.
- Brisson, F. Op. 34, Les Porcherons. Fantaisie.
 Berguslier, F. La Chantaise voilée. Valse élégante.
 Choquet, L. Mlle. La Manille. Grande Valse brillante.
 Coria, A. Réverie. Morceaux de Salon.
 Gottschalk, L. M. Op. 11, La Chantaise voilée. Sérénade.
 Lepersentier, A. " 147, Le Mancenillier. Fantaisie.
 Reattien, H. " 134, No. 1, 2. Deux Fantaisies sur deux Romances De Paul Henrion.
 Talczy, A. " 35, Les Monténégrins. Fantaisie.
 Thomas, Amb. Le Song d'une nuit d'été. Ouverture.
- PIANO DUET, TWO PERFORMERS.
 Morceau élégant sur des airs Allemands favoris.
 No. 1, Kriegers Lust by Gungl.
 To be continued.
- DUETS FOR PIANO AND VIOLIN.
 Le Prophète.
 Les Porcherons. Ouverture.
- VIOLIN WITH ACCOMPANIMENT FOR THE PIANO OR ORCHESTRA.
 La Fille du Regiment. Fantaisie.
- VIOLONCELLO WITH ACCOMPANIMENT FOR THE PIANO, QUARTETT, OR ORCHESTRA.
 Op. 10, Souvenir de la Suisse.
 " 11, Fantaisie burlesque.
 Schott and Co., 29, St. James's Street.

NEW PIANOFORTE PUBLICATIONS.

- FRAEGER Lieber Verlangen.
 FRAEGER Moment Joyeux.
 FRAEGER Nocturne Romantique.
 RICHARDS Moonlight Serenade.
 RICHARDS Pastorale.
 OUKY Valse Brillant.
 HERZ La Sylphide.
 KUHE Styriennes.
 Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street.

LEE & COXHEAD'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

MUSIC for the VIOLIN.

THE AMATEUR VIOLINIST—A selection of favorite Airs from the Standard Foreign Operas, arranged expressly for the first position of the Violin, in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY FARMER, with an accompaniment ad lib. for the Piano, second Violin, and Violoncello.

THE VIOLINIST'S ALBUM—a collection of favorite Quadrilles, Waltzes, Polkas, &c., arranged expressly for the first position of the Violin, in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY FARMER, with an Accompaniment ad lib. for the Piano, second Violin, and Violoncello.

N.B.—A New Edition of "Farmer's Violin School." 5s.

MUSIC for the FLUTE.

THE AMATEUR FLUTIST—a selection of favorite Airs from the Standard Foreign Operas, arranged in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY NICHOLSON, with an Accompaniment ad lib. for the Violin, Violoncello, and Pianoforte.

THE FLUTIST'S ALBUM—a collection of favorite Quadrilles, Waltzes, Polkas, &c., arranged in sets, price 1s. each, by HENRY NICHOLSON, with an Accompaniment ad lib. for the Piano, Violin, and Violoncello.

MUSIC for the ORGAN or HARMONIUM.

THE AMATEUR ORGANIST—a collection of soft and full Voluntaries, arranged in six Books, 3s. each, by EDWARD TRAVIS.

THE AMATEUR INTERLUDIST—a collection of short interludes to play between the Verses of the Psalms, in one Book, price 4s., by EDWARD TRAVIS and J. P. DYER.

THE AMATEUR PRELUDIST—a collection of Preludes, with the Organ Stops carefully marked, in one Book, price 4s., by EDWARD TRAVIS.

SACRED VOCAL MUSIC.

KELLER'S Collection of ANTHEMS, CHURCH SERVICES, CHANTS, &c., arranged for the Voice and Piano, in six Books, price 3s. each, with six beautiful and appropriate Designs by Brandard, arranged by ALBERT KELLER; the six Books can be had in one Volume, elegantly bound, price 18s.

THE PSALMODIA BRITANNICA—a selection of Psalms and Hymns for the Voice and Organ, in six Books, price 3s. each, arranged by EDWIN FLOOD, and may be had in one Volume, neatly bound, price 18s.

N.B.—A New Edition of "Hark, the Sabbath Bells," by EDWIN FLOOD. Price 2s.

A NEW PIANOFORTE SCHOOL, by ALBERT KELLER, price 4s.

"We can confidently recommend this Pianoforte Tutor as the best extant: Mr. Keller has adopted the judicious method of arranging the scales and exercises amongst the lessons, by which plan the pupil is taught those essentials without turning to a formal book of scales, &c.,—the fingering is carefully marked without being crowded, and is evidently written by one who has had great experience as a teacher."

Also, "Delices de la Jeunesse," in 12 sets, price 2s. each, written expressly to follow the above Tutor, by C. W. Glover.

London: Lee and Coxhead, 43, Albemarle Street, and all Book and Music Sellers.
 Catalogues gratis.

WESSEL AND CO.'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

- CZAPEK—"La Gorlitz" 2s. 0d.
MORINE—"Glenalbyn Polkas" 2s. 6d.
DAWE—"Woburn Waltzes" 3s. 0d.
ETTLING—"La Chantaise Voilée," Valses 3s. 0d.
BARKER (Laura)—"Sprits Polka" 3s. 6d.
TALEXY—"Kosciusko, Etude Masurka 2s. 6d.
 "—"Musidora," Polka Masurka 2s. 0d.
 "—"Helena," Premier Nocturne 2s. 0d.
VAN MAANEN—"Atherstone Schottisch," Duet 3s. 0d.
TEDESCO. Three German Melodies.
 No. 1. "THE COTTAGE."—(Das Hüttchen) 2s. 6d.
 " 2. "TRUE LOVE."—(Treue Liebe) 2s. 0d.
 " 3. "LORELEY."—(Loreley) 3s. 0d.
 Wessel and Co., 229, Regent-street.

CARTE'S PATENT FLUTES.

Just published,

A SKETCH of the successive IMPROVEMENTS made in the FLUTE, with a statement of the Principles upon which Flutes are constructed and a comparison between the relative merits of the Ordinary Flute, the Flute of Boehm, and Carte's two new Patent Flutes. By RICHARD CARTE.

Publishers: Rudall, Rose, & Co., 38, Southampton-street, Strand; Addison, 210 Regent-street; Keith and Prowse, 48, Cheapside; and Cocks & Co., 6, New Burlington-street. Price 1s., or if sent by post, 1s. 6d.

MR. CRIVELLI

BEGS to acquaint his friends and the public that a Third Edition of the "ART OF SINGING," enlarged and newly arranged in the form of a Grammatical System of Rules for the Cultivation of the Voice, may be had at his residence, 71, Upper Norton-street, and at all the principal Music-sellers.

* Soon will be ready, the French and German Translation.

SIGNOR BOTTESINI,

MUSICAL DIRECTOR OF THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA AT HAVANA,

BEGS to apprise the Musical Profession and the Public that he will arrive in London at the beginning of May, and remain during the entire Season.

Letters and applications for engagements to be addressed to Sig. BOTTESINI, Wessel and Co., 229, Regent Street.

MISS CATHERINE HAYES'S

GRAND MORNING CONCERT will take place at the HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS on MONDAY, the 19th MAY. Full particulars at Cramer, Beale, and Co.'s, 201, Regent-street.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGES

FOR Improving the Voice, and removing all Affections of the Throat. Strongly recommended to Clergymen, Singers, Actors, Public Speakers, persons subject to relaxed Throats, and to all persons desirous of cultivating their Voices, and ensuring a good and clear articulation. They have also been found highly beneficial to those afflicted with Nervous, Hysterical, or Stomachic Coughs.

To be had in Boxes, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 0d., and 4s. 6d. each, of every Medicine Vendor in the kingdom.

Testimonials of their efficacy are published with each Box, from

Mad. Grisi	Miss Romer	Mr. Harrison	Mr. J. Barnett
Mad. Persiani	Mad. Albertazzi	Mr. Allen	Mr. George Linley
Mad. Eugénie Garcia	Miss Cooper	Mr. White	Mr. Rodwell
Mrs. Alfred Shaw	Sig. Lablache	Mr. Wass	Mr. Nelson
Miss Rainforth	Sig. Giubilei	Mr. Kroff	&c., &c.

CURES FOR THE UNCURED!

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.—Cure of a Bad Leg of more than sixty years' standing.—Mr. Barker, of No. 5, Graham's Place, Draypool, near Hull, had ulcers on his leg from the age of 18 until upwards of 80, and although for many years he had sought the first advice in the country, nothing was found to cure them. He often suffered excruciating pain for long periods together, which incapacitated him from attending to his business. He had given up all hopes of getting a cure, when at last he was persuaded to try Holloway's Pills and Ointment, which he did, and however wonderful it may appear, the leg was thoroughly healed by their means, and by continuing to use the Pills alone after his leg was well, he has become in health so hale and hearty as now to be more active than most men of fifty. N.B.—The truth of this extraordinary statement can be vouched for by Mr. J. C. Reinhardt, 22, Market Place, Hull. Feb. 20th, 1850.

The Pills should be used conjointly with the Ointment in the following cases:—
 Bad Legs, Coco Bay, Contracted and Lumbago, Scurvy
 Bad Breasts, Chicago-foot, Stiff Joints, Piles, Sore-heads
 Burns, Chilblains, Elephantiasis, Rheumatism, Tumours
 Bunions, Chapped hands, Fistulas, Scalds, Ulcers
 Bites of Mosquitoes, Corns (Soft), Gout, Sore Nipples, Wounds
 Toes and Sand-Canes, Glandular Swellings, Sore-throats, Yaws
 Fleshy Skin-diseases

Sold by the Proprietor, 244, Strand, (near Temple Bar), London; and by all respectable Vendors of Patent Medicines throughout the Civilized World, in Pots and boxes, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 0d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each. There is a very considerable saving in taking the larger sizes.

N.B.—Directions for the guidance of Patients are affixed to each Pot or Box.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.LE TRE NOZZE.*GRAND EXTRA NIGHT.

IT is respectfully announced that a Grand Extra Night will take place ON THURSDAY NEXT, MAY 8, 1851, when will be presented Alari's New Opera Buffa, in Three Acts, produced with the greatest success at the Italian Opera, Paris, entitled,

LE TRE NOZZE.

Luisa	Madame SONTAG.
Vespina	Madame GIULIANA.
La Marchesa di Forli	Mdlle. IDA BERTRAND.
Il Cavaliere di Villafranca	Signor GARDONI.
Crioca	Signor FERRANTI.

And

Il Barone Feudatario d'Acetosa

Signor LABLACHE.

With various entertainments in the Ballet department, in which

Mdlle. CARLOTTA GRISI, Mdlle. AMALIA FERRARIS,

Mdles. Rosa, Esper, Julien, Lamoureux, Allegri, Aussandon, Pascals, Kohlenberg, Dantonio, Soto, MM. Charles, Ehrick, and Paul Tagliani will appear.

Applications for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets, to be made at the Box-office of the Theatre. Doors open at Seven, the Opera to commence at Half-past Seven o'clock.

MR. AGUILAR

RESPECTFULLY announces that his Annual Concert will take place at the Hanover Square Rooms on Wednesday evening, May 28th, 1851. Vocalists—Miss Birch, Miss Dolby, Miss Messent, Madlle. Graumann, Herr Stigelli, Signor Marchesi, and Herr Formes. Violin, Herr Ernst; Contrabasso, Signor Botticini; Pianoforte, Mr. Aguilar. The Orchestra, selected from the Royal Italian Opera, will be complete in every department. Leader, Mr. Willy; Conductors, Messrs. Anachuez and Schimon. Among other pieces, will be performed for the first time in England, Mr. Aguilar's Symphony in E minor.

Tickets seven shillings each, Reserved Seats, half a guinea. To be procured at Messrs. Cramer, Beale and Co., 301, Regent Street; Messrs. Wessel and Co., 229, Regent Street, corner of Hanover Street; and at the residence of Mr. Aguilar, No. 68, Upper Norton Street, Portland Road.

QUEEN'S CONCERT ROOMS, HANOVER SQUARE.

MR. EDWARD J. TURNER has the honour to announce to his Patrons and Friends that his FIRST EVENING CONCERT will take place at the above Rooms, on TUESDAY, 6th of MAY, 1851, when he trusts the Entertainments provided will meet with general approbation. Vocalists:—Miss Dolby, Miss Poole, Miss Watson, Mr. Leifer, Mr. Edward J. Turner; Pianoforte, M. Alexandre Billet; Harp, Herr Carl Oberthir, Harpist to the Grand Duke of Nassau; Bassoon, Herr G. Mayer, first Bassoon to the Grand Duke of Nassau; Flute, Monsieur Camus, first Flute at the Italiens, Paris. Conductor, M. Alexandre Billet. Tickets, Seven Shillings each; Reserved Seats, Half-a-Guinea. To be had at the Rooms; of Mr. E. J. TURNER, No. 17, Crown-row, Walworth; Wessel & Co., 229, Regent-street; Prowse, Hanway-street, and at all the principal Music Publishers.

MUSICAL UNION.

EXTRA CONCERTS—Tuesday, May 6, half-past 3:—Quartet, in G, Mozart; solo violoncello, Herr Menter (from the Court of Munich); trio, in D minor, Mendelssohn; solo violin, Herr Laub (from the Conservatoire in Prague); morceaux pour le piano, Herr Halle. Members on giving the numbers of their tickets at the door admitted at 7s. each; strangers can procure admissions, half-a-guinea each, at Cramer and Co.'s, where parties of six only can secure, for 2 guineas, a sofa with reserved places. The circle, as usual, is kept for the families of the Committee. J. ELLA.

MESSRS. DE BESNIER AND VERDAVAINNE

RESPECTFULLY announce that the SECOND of their SERIES OF THREE CONCERTS OF CLASSIC, SACRED, and MODERN MUSIC will take place at the BEETHOVEN ROOMS, 27, Queen Anne-street, Cavendish-square, on FRIDAY, MAY 9th. Madame Verdavainne will, on this occasion, play Weber's Concert Stuck and Beethoven's Favorite andante. Vocalists:—Mesdames Zimmermann and Lemaire, Messrs. de Besnier and Bottura. Instrumentalists:—Madame Verdavainne, Messrs. H. and R. Blagrove, Clementi, Hancock and Hausmann; Conductor—Herr Anachuez. Tickets, Half-a-Guinea; may be had of M. Verdavainne, 57, George-street, Portman-square, and De Besnier, 2, Upper Spring-street, Portman-square.

NEW BEETHOVEN ROOMS,

27, QUEEN ANNE STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE.

HERR MOLIQUE respectfully announces that his FIRST CONCERT OF CHAMBER MUSIC (being the first of a Series of three) will take place on WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 7th, at the above rooms, on which occasion he will be assisted by the following eminent Artists:—Madlle. Johansen (the celebrated Soprano from Denmark), Madlle. Molique; Herr Stigelli, Herr Menter (first Violoncellist at the court in Munich), Signor Piatini, Mr. Mellon, and Herr Schmidt. To commence at half-past eight o'clock. The second concert will take place May 31st, the third and last June 4th. Subscription to the Series, One Guinea; Single Ticket (to admit to any one concert) Half-a-Guinea each; to be had of Messrs. Cramer and Co., Regent-street, Ewer and Co., Newgate-street, and of Herr Molique, 9, Houghton-place, Amptill-square.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.THIRD NIGHT OF ROBERTO IL DIAVOLO.*GRISI, TAMBERLIK, CASTELLAN, STIGELLI, FORMES.

ON TUESDAY next, MAY 6th, will be performed for the third time this Season, Meyerbeer's Grand Romantic Opera, ROBERTO IL DIAVOLO.

The principal characters by Madame Grisi, Madame Castellan, Mdlle. Louise Tagliani, Herr Formes, Signor Tagliafico, Signor Polonini, Signor Rommi, Signor Mei, Signor Soldi, Signor Stigelli, and Signor Tamberlik.

EXTRA NIGHT.First Night of LA DONNA DEL LAGO,

Mario, Grisi, Angrì, Tamberlik. First appearance of Signor Bianchi. On THURSDAY NEXT, MAY 8th, a Grand Extra Night will take place, when will be performed for the first time this season, Rossini's Grand Opera, LA DONNA DEL LAGO.

Elena, Madame Grisi; Albina, Madlle. Cotti; Malcolm Graeme, Madlle. Angrì; Douglas, Signor Bianchi, (His first appearance in England); Serano, Signor Soldi; Rodrigo Dhu, Signor Tamberlik; and Giacomo V., Signor Mario. Ladies of Scotland, Chiefs, Warriors of Clan Alpine, Hunters, Royal Guards, Shepherds, Shepherdesses, &c., by the Chorus of 90 voices, and numerous auxiliaries. The Grand Finale of the first act, representing the gathering of the Scottish clans, will be executed by two military bands in addition to the usual orchestra.

The music of the Chief Bards on this occasion, will be sung by the following artists who have kindly volunteered their services in order to give additional effect to the ensemble. Signor Tagliafico, Mei, Soldi, Rommi, Gregorio, Ferrari, Rache, and Polonini.

Composer, Director of the Music, and Conductor,—MR. COSTA.

COMMENCE AT EIGHT O'CLOCK.

Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets to be had at the Box Office of the Theatre.

BEETHOVEN QUARTETT SOCIETY.

MR. SCIPION ROUSSELOT begs to announce that the SECOND MORNING PERFORMANCE will take place on FRIDAY, May 9, at 3 o'clock. Instrumentalists:—Messrs. Camillo Sivori, Saindon, Hill, and Roussetot. Vocalists:—Mesdames Rummel and Graumann. Herr Carl Wolf, tenor from the Imperial Opera of Vienna (his first appearance in London), and Herr Holzell. Subscription and single tickets at Messrs. Roussetot and Co.'s, 66, Conduit Street, Regent Street.

APOLLONICON.

ADDITION OF THE GREAT TUBA MIRABILIS.—Daily at Two. Mr. Mather's esteemed Illustrations, Juvenile Harpists, Messrs. Sedgwick and Barton conordinas; Tuesdays, Thursdays, Saturdays, evenings at 8. Apollonicon with six performers. Miss Poole, Miss Messent, the Misses, Mr. and Master Collins, Mr. Grattan Cooke, and Messrs. Sedgwick and Barton. Royal Music Hall, adjoining Lowther Arcade.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

THE Patrons of, and Subscribers to, this Charity are respectfully informed that the SOCIETY'S ANNUAL BENEFIT CONCERT will take place in the HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS, on WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 7, when Haydn's splendid Oratorio, "The Creation," will be performed. The Public Rehearsal will take place on Monday morning, May 5. Conductor, Mr. William Sterndale Bennett.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.

